O, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good.—Ps. cxviii : 1.

Every duty which God requires of his creatures is perfectly reasonable. As moral and accountable beings, we are the subjects of the Divine government; our homage, and our obedience to God's authority and law, are righteous and reasonable demands. As dependent creatures, receiving every good and perfect gift from his kind and bountiful hand, gratitude and thanksgiving should flow from every heart, and burden the utterances of every tongue. To-day, in nineteen of these United States, in accordance with a time-honored usage, the people, by the Governors of their respective States, have been invited to lay aside the cares and business of life, to think of the manifold blessings of Divine Providence, and at their homes and Christian sanctuaries, to offer fervent prayer and grateful acknowledgements to our Heavenly Father, for his abundant goodness and plenteous mercy.

We are assembled this morning under peculiar circumstances: far from our peaceful, happy homes, and in the midst of all the dreadful realities of civil war. Responding with glad hearts to the proclamation of our honored Governor, we have marched from our homes on the tented field, stacked our arms, and in this house of God, we would pay our vows unto the Lord, and adore with thanksgiving his great and holy name.

Individually, we are the constant recipients of Divine favors, for, in God we live, move, and have all the blessings, which render existence such a privilege, such a boon. The great expounder of the constitution, nearing to life's last mile stone, appreciating the blessings of life, exclaimed, "I still live." In the midst of death and its harbingers on the battle fields and in the hospital, we are all of us here, alive, before God. Life, health, and reason, are divine favors inestimable in value, and indispensable for the enjoyment of life; these we have shared in rich profusion. Our days and nights have been crowned with never ceasing bestowments of Divine goodness. Our time has not been spent bed-riden, and sorely afflicted, our reason has not been dethroned, the vacant stare of the idiot is not seen in our countenances, nor the ravings of the maniac leard from our lips. What a blessing is a sound mind in a healthy body. Think of it, my hearers, appreciate its worth, and with humble, grateful hearts, give thanks unto the Lord your God.

Call to remembrance, also, the moral and spiritual blessings we have personally enjoyed. What power, unseen but real, has preserved you from the degrading dominion of those lusts and passions that war against the soul? Why has not habitual drunkenness dragged you down beneath its iron heel, brutalized your humanity, crushed your mental faculties, and hurried you into a drunkard's dishonored grave? While others have fallen, you have maintained your ground against this monster foe. God helped you to stand, and to the integrity of your moral principles, and the fear of God, you owe this deliverance. Then thankfully acknowledge his goodness, and anew pledge fidelity at the altars of temperance.

While the libertine, trampling on the law of moral purity, the debauchee reveling in guilty pleasure, the gambler gloating over his ungodly spoils, have yielded to the destroyer, God has enabled you to stand unscathed; your moral courage has resisted temptation; you are this day monuments of God's preserving care. Young men, beware of the seductions of vice; beware of vile and polluting conversation, of books and pamphlets that are vice-engendering, lust-inflaming, and soul-destroying. Keep your minds and hearts pure; trifle not with temptation; set your face like flint against the thoughts of sin. Licentiousness has brought to the dust, diseased and dishonored, thousands of manly forms, carried misery and woe to many an innocent and bleeding heart. Beware, then, of the "strange woman which flattereth with her words, which forsaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God; for her house inclineth unto death. None that go into her return again, neither take they hold on the paths of life.”

The soldier, free from vicious habits, fortified with good principles, devoted to moral and intellectual improvement, holds in his own hand a God-given passport to respect, usefulness and honor, wherever he goes. Napoleon, from his rank and file, gathered up Generals, Field Marshals and Kings. Your country will not fail to recognize and appreciate the moral, the intellectual, and the heroic claims of her gallant sons. Then amid the difficulties and trials of camp life, Joseph-like, maintain your moral purity unstained, avoid the snares of guilty pleasures, turn away from the gambling table and the gilded saloon; devote assiduously your time and talents to military duty, moral and mental culture; then God will enrich you with all the treasures of his love, shield you with his arm, guide you with his eye, and in the camp or on the battle field, with you all will be well.

In our social and domestic blessings, we find abundant reasons for thanksgiving. Never before, on such a day, have we looked at our homes and our loved ones there, with such emotions of interest and gratitude. Here we are surrounded with homes desolated, society loosened in all its ties, upheaved with mutual distrusts and bitter animosities—the sad work of secession. In our distant homes beyond the Father of Waters, the prairies of Illinois, and the hills of Indiana, in the valleys of the Miami, the Scioto, and the Muskingum, all is peace and harmony, No rebel hordes, in the madness of treason, pillage and destroy. As the shield of Divine Providence is over our homes, our families and friends, while our beloved Commonwealth is blessed with peace and plenty in all her borders, let us joyously and gratefully give thanks to the Lord our God, and serve him all our days.

In this day of our national peril, while armed treason is lifted up to destroy the life of a nation, to subvert law and order, to break up the tried foundations of civil government—to stay its accursed blows, to crush its malignant power, is a duty, an honor and a privilege, for which every loyal heart should give devout thanksgiving to the Ruler of nations. Did not the fathers of our nationality thank God for their high calling in behalf of human freedom, vindicated on every battle field of the Revolution? They, by sacrifices that we have read of but never experienced, laid broad and deep the foundations of a free government, and eighty-five years of trial has proved it to be the best the world ever saw. The men of '76 laid the corner stones of our free institutions, ordained of God, and the men of '93 reared the well compacted and glorious edifice. The world has gazed upon it with astonishment and hope. In 1861, all civilized nations beheld with horror a bold attempt to destroy it—to raze its holy foundations, and build on its ruins a "Confederacy," founded on human slavery as its chief corner stone. Is it duty to save your life from the assassin? Is it a privilege to aid in arresting the lurid flames sweeping over your dwelling? So, in the preservation of your Government, which God has founded, and favored for eighty-five years with his approving smiles, it is our duty to pray that "God would arise and scatter its enemies, and bring them down," and to gird on the sword in his name, and as his agents to crush the foe; and thus restore the Union, maintain the supremacy of law, and bring peace in all our borders. We should thank God that he has given us a strong arm and a willing heart to strike our manly blows in this second war of independence. We are defending the principles, the actions, and the success of the men of '76. If truth and right were on their side on the battle-fields of the Revolution, they are equally on our side in the struggles of '61.

What an enormous crime is secession! An attempt to destroy national life when millions, tens of millions, through it are enjoying life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. In ill-fated Mexico, with its internal feuds and guerrilla wars, its anarchy and barbarism, we can see the ripe fruits of secession. There, where life, property, and liberty are in constant jeopardy, could you give thanks to God as you can to-day under the protection of the star-spangled banner? Then, as you regard the rule of law, and the operations of a just government, stand manfully in the breach, and smite the ambitious demagogues, the unprin-cipléd adventurers, now engaged in the work of destruction.

To-day, with the great heart of loyalty in all its pulsations beating in perfect harmony to put down this wicked rebellion, so broad in its dimensions, and disastrous in its purposes, let us give thanks to Almighty God, that in this great conflict we have not only right on our side, but might. Our resources to carry on this war of self-preservation are abundant. In the loyal States, to say nothing of the Union men, like spirits in prison, under the galling power of the double-dyed despotism called the "Confederate States,"—we have near 20,000,000 that have never bowed the knee to this political Baal, which is worshiped by traitors and their sympathizers. These 20,000,000 believe in the Divineness of human governments, and that the temple of our freedom is not to be undermined at pleasure, and a free people hopelessly crushed in its ruins. We have 3,800,000 fighting men, worthy of their sires and their brethren now in the field, out of which the grand army of deliverance may be formed. Already 500,000 men, brave and true, are in arms, and on the field. A million more, in the spirit of the freedom-loving Bohemians, are ready to follow Tiska's drum whenever it beats. Our own beloved, honored Ohio, has already sent out to the battle-fields of right against wrong, 61,000 of her valiant sons. She has sent twenty-three gallant regiments to Virginia, to rescue the Old Dominion from the grasp of the destroyer. Eighteen regiments are in Kentucky, glorious old Kentucky, repelling the invaders of her soil; and in Missouri, two of her regiments have stood before the sweeping tides of rebellion and ruin. After this first fruit of loyalty to the Union, and confidence in the government—this sacred offering on the altar of patriotism—she has a reserve of 400,000 of her sons, that she can send to the rescue. Ohio weeps over her gallant Lowe, and all her brave troops that fell on the battle-fields of Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri. Robbed of her worthy sons that are cold in death, or treated as felons in loathsome prisons, she will not withhold her treasures of men and money. All her energies, all her resources, will promptly respond to the call of our country in every time of need, and let our hearts rebound with thanksgiving to the God of our fathers, that our great Commonwealth is so highly distinguished.

The amount of subsistence for the support of our vast armies is truly wonderful, and demands our grateful recognition and humble thanks. Our enemies look at their hoarded cotton; they can convert it to no available use; there is nothing to eat or to wear in it. This King Cotton—their all and in all—their strong deliverer—their bribe to the nations of Europe—is virtually in chains, helpless and hopeless. But what of the grain and provisions of the West, the commerce of the Atlantic coast, and the manufactories of the East? Like mighty giants aroused, they are advancing to the contest. We can feed our five hundred thousand noble soldiers with abundance of the choicest food, and send an immense surplus to feed the famishing millions of France and England. And this supply of food is a bond that these nations shall keep the peace with the United States—a security against foreign interference—an assurance that we shall do our own work in our own way, none molesting or making us afraid.

The clothing needed by our army we shall soon be able to supply. The wool crop of the United States, in 1857, was 18,000,000 pounds, and our hills are still covered with flocks, so that the 15,000,000 yards of cloth needed annually can be manufactured. Thus, in the providence of God, we can feed and clothe our vast army. The nation is not impoverished by this righteous war. The producing and consuming is among ourselves. The balance of trade is in our favor, and the precious materials are reaching our shores from almost every part of the civilized world. We need send no bogus financial agents to the capitalists of England to obtain money or stolen property, as rebel financiers are wont to do. The nation is really strengthened in its material interests and vitality by this demonstration of strength in self-preservation. A national debt will be a light burden, compared with the dismemberment of the Union, and the subversion of the constitution. Money invested in the national loan will bind the people to a common interest in maintaining the integrity and perpetuity of the general government.

In the prosecution of this war, we have suffered some reverses. These have been mercies in disguise, trials of our confidence in the justness of our cause and the integrity of our purposes, for which we find reasons for thanksgiving. Our defeats have humbled our pride, taught us lessons of wisdom, and really made us stronger. They have aroused and consolidated our military power, as nothing but such momentary defeat could do. The barren victories of our enemies at Bull's Run and Lexington have not settled the question that the Union is to be dissolved, and a new dynasty erected on its crumbling ruins. But they have gathered an army, with a young leader, on the banks of the Potomac, whose advance will soon be felt at Richmond and Nashville. They have sent forth an armada that has leveled to the dust the strong holds of rebellion in the very center of its strength—the pledge that ere long the starry banner shall wave on the battlement of Moultrie and Sumter; and they are now marshalling on the banks of the Mississippi a force, which, blessed of God, is destined to plant the old emblem of our nationality over the Crescent City, and the plains of Texas.

As a regiment, the Thirty-ninth O. V. Infantry has shared largely in the benefactions of Divine Providence. The God of the armies of Israel has been our sun and shield. General good health has blessed our ranks. Only ten of our number have died. The maintenance of good order and sound discipline has elevated our regimental character, and given us a reputation worthy of reliable and gentlemanly soldiers. Let the morale of our regiment be sacredly maintained; yea, let our standard of moral and military excellence be elevated higher and higher, so that no honored parent, no loving wife, or affectionate child, shall be sorrow-smitten or disgraced by our conduct, or our fate. The division and separation of our regiment, a necessary evil from which we have all suffered, is soon to end, and a pleasant reunion is at hand; and the Thirty-ninth, reunited, shall go forth under her gallant leader wherever duty may call. True to each other, our country and our God, in trials and triumphs, in joy and in sorrow, we shall aid our comrades in arms till victory shall rest on our banner, and our Government vindicated and sustained—the Union indivisible now and forever.

I add one other cause of our thanksgiving. While we see around us the blighting curse of secession, on once happy homes—on the altars of religion, the temples of learning and the marts of trade—our loved Ohio is blessed with peace in all her borders. Her 2,360,000 of inhabitants have their sanctuaries opened for the worship of God. Over 12,000 school-houses echo the sweet hum of our children quietly pursuing their education. Our fields have teemed with an abundant harvest; the din of industry is heard in our shops, and all departments of business give signs of activity and thrift. The majesty of law gives security to our homes; social life is not embittered by mutual feuds and rankling animosities. While we are re-establishing law and order, maintaining the Government in Missouri, we can rest assured that no Jeff. Davis nor Claib. Jackson, with hearts and hands steeped in the black guilt of treason, is driving the plow-share of destruction over our happy firesides, stealing our property, and filling our State with weeping, lamentation and woe. These that are dependent on us, are not only protected, but they will not suffer from want. Peace and plenty bless our distant homes. No accursed rebellion has brought gaunt famine to stare them in the face. Starvation prices are not there; the necessaries and comforts of life abound, and none of our loved ones need suffer for the necessaries of life.

Enjoying the blessings of a benignant, just and free Government, and now in the day of its peril, called to defend it from powerful and inveterate foes, let patriotism and religion nerve you for the conflict. As a soldier, maintain the position and character of a true gentleman; exemplify the stern bravery of a gallant hero, combined with the virtues of true goodness. Always act under the authority of enlightened convictions of the good and true; cheerfully obey your superiors; study your duty and do it with pleasure; honor the law in all its requirements. While you serve your Government, let prompt, constant and cheerful obedience be your thank offering. In this warfare against lawlessness, stand up for the majesty of the law and its supremacy. In every thing be regulated by its authority; never let lawlessness stamp with its black stains the fair record of your soldier life. Give to God the homage of your heart; believe and study his holy word ; rest on his gracious promises ; delight in his holy law, and lay hold on eternal life, the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

MORAL AND RELIGIOUS ASPECT OF THE REGIMENT.

A thousand men in a military camp, gathered from almost as many different families, with every shade of character and every grade of culture, present a heterogeneous mass, and a peculiar field for philanthropic and religious labors. From the best analysis of the moral and spiritual condition of our men, it appears that a very large number seldom attended divine worship before they entered the service, yet the religious element had considerable strength in the ranks of the 39th. The Chaplain has always met a cordial reception by officers and men. The circulation of good books and tracts has been a means of usefulness. The public worship of God on the Sabbath has been regularly maintained and well attended. The social religious meetings have been sustained, and afforded the opportunity of cultivating personal acquaintance and brotherly affection. Our Soldiers' Sabbath School, on the Bible class plan, has been vigorously and, we hope, profitably sustained. The evening religious service at dress parade has been continued to the present time. A religious organization, called the "Christian Brotherhood of the 39th," its motto, "One in Christ," its object, "to live for Christ," has been formed, and near one hundred names enrolled. A camp library of 50 volumes in the Chaplain's quarters, is appreciated and used by many of the men. We feel that the moral influence of these various means of instruction and religious improvement is felt through the camp. Yet, we mourn over the prevalence of immorality and vice. We find it difficult to bring divine truth home to the intellect and heart of those who in early youth had no moral and religious training, and adult depravity is too often repellant to our best efforts to reach the heart. The general conduct of our men has been good. Discipline and good order have marked our encampment, and the character of our regiment has stood fair and respectable wherever we have been, and we hope for constant improvement in our moral, intellectual and spiritual condition; so that, when we have faithfully served our country in this time of its peril, we shall return to our homes, like the soldiers of Oliver Cromwell, better men than when we left.

The preservation of our soldiers from the demoralization of camp life, requires the aid of the officers, by precept and example—of good books—the faithful discharge of pastoral duty by the chaplain, and the Christianizing and strengthening of good principles and a pure life, by the correspondence of loved ones at home. These agencies and the blessing of God will save our noble army from the vice and sins that degrade and ruin the bodies and souls of men for time and eternity.

HISTORY.

The Thirty-ninth O. V., U. S. A. Infantry, was formed as an Independent Regiment, by Col. John Groesbeck, under the authority of the Secretary of War, on the 8th of July, 1861, at Camp Colerain, 14 miles north of Cincinnati. Here, by Lieut. Walker, U. S. A., the regiment was sworn into the service of the United States, and on the 1st of August, marched through Cincinnati to Camp Dennison. In this Camp we were pleasantly situated, uniformed, equipped, and armed with the rifle musket. Our time was delightfully employed in acquiring the knowledge of drill, the manual of arms, and learning the realities of camp life and duty. Aug. 17th, we received marching orders for St. Louis, Mo. Rations for two days were carefully prepared and deposited in our new haversacks, and early on the morning of the 18th, we slung our knapsacks, and were off for the war. Our reception in Cincinnati was very enthusiastic, and thousands of admiring friends were gladdened by our soldierly appearance and gentlemanly conduct. A thousand brave hearts were cheered and strengthened by this approbation and sympathy so warmly expressed by the Queen City. We embarked on two steamboats, amid the shouts of manly voices, and the waving of cambric in the fair hands of true-hearted ladies. At the patriotic town of Lawrenceburgh, our arrival was hailed by the people en masse; men, women and children did us honor, and supplied our wants.

We reached St. Louis on the 20th. No shouts of welcome greeted our arrival; no stars and stripes were waving in the streets. Orderly and steadily led by our gallant officers, we marched four miles, and pitched our tents near the State Fair ground—the first encampment of Ohio troops in Missouri. Here our officers and men devoted their time assiduously to regimental and battalion drill. Our only mission on the soil of a sister State, cursed with rebellion, was the maintenance of the authority of law, and the honor of the star-spangled banner.

In a few days, our drilling and dress parades, and the religious service of reading the Scriptures and prayer, by the Chaplain, in front of the regiment, attracted large crowds of spectators from the city, and hundreds returned to their homes with improved views of the character, discipline and conduct of the “invaders” of their soil. We made many friends, and honored our noble State. The grog-shops erected around our camp threatened to do us an injury. But Col. Groesbeck at once and efficiently demonstrated his purpose, then and always, to suppress the traffic in intoxicating drinks, and we suffered no material damage from these strong allies of secession.

As we marched through St. Louis on the 6th of September, under orders for Mexico, on the North Missouri Railroad, a wonderful change was observed. The Union men of the city openly avowed their loyalty, and no saddening gloom overhung the people. Pulsations of sympathy with the government and its supporters, were now felt in unmistakable throbbings.

We reached Mexico on the 8th, having left Co. K., Capt. Rhoads, at Benton Barracks, in charge of our property and the sick. Now dates the beginning of the unfortunate separation of our regiment—a necessity deplored by the Colonel, his officers, and all the men. The enemy made good their escape before our arrival; no rebel soldiers or bridge burners could be found.

On the 12th, ordered by Gen. Pope, Col. Groesbeck and Major Noyes proceeded to Macon; from thence, Col. G. and Maj. N. started with Co.'s A, B, D and I, for Platte bridge, recently burned by the rebels, and some forty innocent lives lost by the wreck of the train. From thence, Gen. Pope detailed Major N., with Co.'s A and I, 40 of Capt. Vanbergen's Hussars, one piece of artillery, and the Sixteenth Illinois Regiment, Col. Smith, in pursuit of a rebel force under Gen. Patten, some 1,500 strong, who were marching to cross the river at Liberty Landing, to join the Confederate army under Price. The enemy made good their flight, and our men returned to St. Joseph. Col. Groesbeck, with Co.'s B and E, were ordered by Gen. Pope to take possession of St. Joseph, where Col. G. issued a proclamation, placing the city under martial law, and appointing Capt. Fell Provost Marshal. Hence, Col. G. was ordered to Chillicothe, where he remained five weeks, in command of the post. Thence, on the 6th of November, he was ordered to Macon, Mo., having with him Co.'s A, B, E, I and K.

Lieut.-Col. Gilbert left Utica Sept. 17th, with Co.'s C, D, F, G and H, with nine Companies of the Twenty-seventh O. V., Col. Fuller, a force in all of 1,100 men, without cavalry or artillery, Brig. Gen. Sturges in command, to reinforce Col. Mulligan at Lexington. They left at noon on a forced march of 55 miles in 32 hours. They were within nine miles of Lexington. Here a "contraband" informed them that some 6,000 rebels—infantry, cavalry and artillery—had crossed the river, and were in ambush awaiting our advance; and that they had seized the ferry boats, within four miles of Lexington, at daylight the 20th. The information given by the colored man was found to be perfectly reliable. Gen. Sturgis at once diverged to the right, escaped the enemy, reached

Richmond at noon, rested, and dined on the crumbs found in their haversacks. At 6 P. M. they reached Camden, camped on a hill; they were then 9 miles from Lexington, and could see the Stars and Stripes still flying over the besieged ramparts, and could hear the Cannonading, but it was utterly impossible to render relief to the beleagured. On the 20th, by steam boat they left for Kansas City, reaching their destination at sun-set. Their escape from an enemy five or six times their number, was a providential deliverance, reflecting honor on the gallant General and his brave men.

On the 15th of October, Gen. Strugis in command, the brigade, consisting of five companies, C, D, G, F, and H, of the 39th, Lieut. Col. Gilbert and Major Noyes in command, the 27th O. V., Col. Fuller, Col. Nugent's Missouri Regiment, a battery of artillery, and a small force of cavalry, marched to join Major Gen. Fremont.

At this date, Dec. 4th, this detachment of our Regiment is at Sedalia, and Col. Groesbeck with the five companies at Macon, are ordered by Gen Prentiss to St. Joseph, now threatened by a strong force of the enemy. We sling our knapsacks and take a special train for St. Jo., and the field.

This movement prolongs our separation from our comrades—a necessity regretted by us all. When the Thirty-ninth was ordered to North Missouri, on the 6th of September, it was not contemplated that it should be so divided, and separated. When our mission to capture and disperse the hordes of marauders who burnt railroad bridges, persecuted and pillaged Union men, was accomplished, we were to return. The Thirty-ninth did its duty nobly in this direction, secured safety to all trains on the railroads, and arrested the progress of lawlessness. Why a part has been continued on the northern field, and a part has been sent to the south, is a mystery not to be solved, but regretted by the gallant regiment and all its friends in our loved Ohio.

December 5th, under Gen. Prentiss, the five Companies of the Thirty-ninth, Col. Groesbeck, and parts of the Illinois Sixteenth, Missouri Sixth, with cavalry and artillery, total force, 1,700 men, left St. Joseph, and marched through the counties north of the Missouri River, through Liberty, Richmond and Carrollton, taking many prisoners and destroying the ferry boats along the river. The enemy fled before us, but the moral effect of the expedition was eminently successful. On the 19th, we encamped on Grand River, near Chillicothe, having marched near 200 miles. On the 21st, we reached Palmyra, Mo., where we are to remain until our Regiment is united by the welcome arrival of our comrades from Syracuse, Mo., from whom we have been so long separated.
