

On Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Butler introduced Mr. Garnett to one of the largest audiences known in Louisville. The Centre St. M. E. Church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Every seat, nook, and isle was filled. He spoke one hour and forty-five minutes, during which time he elicited tremendous applause from both white and colored people.

At the conclusion of his lecture, he eulogized the death of our lamented President, Abraham Lincoln, and concluded by reciting one of Whittier's Poems, suited to the occasion. He took his seat amid thunders of applause.

A very large collection was now taken up. Old men and women, young men and ladies, boys and girls, all rushed up to the table with their greenbacks and currency. Mr. Garnett made one or two remarks to the people in Louisville, which seemed to carry them home with lighter hearts than when they came. It was this: "Friends, you need not fear the people of America driving or exterminating you from the United States. There are more white people would cry than colored. They are not going to let you go. All will be right after awhile. You know it is better to work for Mr. Cash than Mr. Lash. A black man looks better now to the white man than he used to do. He looks taller, brighter, and more like a man. The more money you make, the lighter your skin will be. The more land and houses you get, the straighter your hair will be. With these, and a number of other spicy remarks, Mr. Garnett treated his audience.

On Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Butler introduced Mr. Garnett to one of the largest audiences known in Louisville. The Centre St. M. E. Church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Every seat, nook, and isle was filled. He spoke one hour and forty-five minutes, during which time he elicited tremendous applause from both white and colored people.

At the conclusion of his lecture, he eulogized the death of our lamented President, Abraham Lincoln, and concluded by reciting one of Whittier's Poems, suited to the occasion. He took his seat amid thunders of applause.

A very large collection was now taken up. Old men and women, young men and ladies, boys and girls, all rushed up to the table with their greenbacks and currency. Mr. Garnett made one or two remarks to the people in Louisville, which seemed to carry them home with lighter hearts than when they came. It was this: "Friends, you need not fear the people of America driving or exterminating you from the United States. There are more white people would cry than colored. They are not going to let you go. All will be right after awhile. You know it is better to work for Mr. Cash than Mr. Lash. A black man looks better now to the white than he used to do. He looks taller, brighter, and more like a man. The more money you make, the lighter your skin will be. The more land and houses you get, the straighter your hair will be. With these, and a number of other spicy remarks, Mr. Garnett treated his audience.