

University of Virginia
Libraries

ALD-STKS
BX 9183
.S55
1941

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Revised and Enlarged Edition

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA LIBRARY

X030335181

EGBERT WATSON SMITH

THE AUTHOR

Few ministers have had a richer background of experience out of which to write than the Reverend Egbert Watson Smith, D.D., one of the most gifted and widely known ministers in America today. Member of a brilliant and distinguished family of ministers, professors, and college presidents, Dr. Smith has excelled as preacher, administrator, author, and lecturer during his more than fifty years of active service in the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Beginning as a superintendent of home missions and evangelist for the Synod of North Carolina, Dr. Smith early in life grew to know and love people. After successful pastorates in two of the most influential congregations in the South, he was pressed into service as Executive Secretary of the Committee of Foreign Missions in the Presbyterian Church, U. S., during an exceedingly critical period in their work. Here his extraordinary energy, his unusual ability to make friends, his comprehensive knowledge of foreign problems gleaned from repeated visits to the fields, his persuasiveness, eloquence, and courageous leadership contributed to bringing the Presbyterian Church, U. S., to its high-water mark in the number of missionaries on the field and the amount of money spent on foreign work. Upon his voluntary resignation as Executive Secretary after twenty-two years of active service, his Church declined to be deprived completely of his

1952
Rev. A. J. Freese

Theology

THE INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED STUDIES OF WORLD RELIGIONS

*Presented to the Library
by*

The Reverend A. G. Crescenzo D.D.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

The Creed OF Presbyterians

REVISED EDITION

by

REV. EGBERT WATSON SMITH, D.D.

John Knox Press

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

ALD

BX

9183

.S55

1941

Revised Edition

Copyright, 1941, by John Knox Press, Richmond, Va.

Printed in U. S. A.

6667 - (1) - 1437

To the Memory of my Father
The Reverend J. Henry Smith, D.D. from whose lips I learned and in whose life I beheld the beauty and power of Calvinism
I Dedicate this Book

CONTENTS

	PAGE
I. THE CREED OUTLINED	13
II. THE CREED FORMULATED	29
III. THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS	53
IV. THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS (Contd.)	115
V. THE CREED ILLUSTRATED	147
VI. THE CREED CATHOLIC	169
VII. THE CREED'S FUTURE	183

P R E F A C E

T O T H E R E V I S E D E D I T I O N

NO ONE was more surprised than I at the welcome accorded this little book forty years ago and the immense circulation it has had. At the publisher's request I have revised it, adding two chapters, giving a fuller statement of the creed's essentials, bringing its history down to date, and making many minor changes.

- This is not another essay on "The Five Points." Such treatises have their place and value; but they present our system, and only the anti-Arminian part of it at that, in its bones. They furnish no adequate conception of that divinely vital and exuberant Calvinism, the creator of the modern world, the mother of heroes, saints, and martyrs in number without number, which history, judging the tree by its fruits, crowns as the greatest creed of Christendom.

This creed, its nature, history, and sanctions, is my theme.

A timely theme it is for these tempestuous days. Of the Calvinists the great historian Froude said, "They were crushed down, but they rose again. They were splintered and torn, but no power could bend or melt them." Was that spirit ever more needed than now, when freedom of thought and of conscience is being attacked with an openness, a cruelty, a backing of political and military power, unknown since the days of the Roman emperors?

P R E F A C E

The reader who illustrates the perseverance of the saints by perusing this book to its close, will be able, I trust, to answer that question which for nearly four centuries has contributed so greatly to the gaiety of ecclesiastical debate, "Is Calvinism dead?"

T H E A U T H O R

Nashville, Tennessee

March 10, 1941

I

THE CREED OUTLINED

"In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."—

EPHESIANS 1:11.

I

THE CREED OUTLINED

OUR PRESBYTERIAN belief is known as Calvinism, after the name of the latest of its three greatest exponents, Paul in the first century, Augustine in the fourth and fifth, and Calvin in the sixteenth.

The core of our system of belief consists of those doctrines which are held in common with the great evangelical churches and incorporated in the historic evangelical creeds: the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Atonement, the New Birth, Salvation by Grace through Faith, the Great Commission, the Second Coming, the Judgment. Even in those minor articles of faith that divide believers, such as infant baptism and the mode of baptism, we are in line with the overwhelming majority of the evangelical world. It is hardly too much to say that if, from the articles of belief of the various churches, one were to select only such as are held by the whole or the largest part of evangelical Christendom, the select creed so formed would correspond almost doctrine for doctrine with the creed of Presbyterians.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Let us gladly realize that the points on which the evangelical churches differ are small compared with those in which they agree. Let us joyfully participate in and do our best to further that growing sense of the unity of all believers in Christ which is one of the happiest features of our modern Christian consciousness. In fact the differences in the week-to-week preaching of the various denominations are differences not so much in substance of doctrine as in emphasis and point of view.

But the emphasis and point of view are far from unimportant. They deeply influence the believer's character, comfort, stability, courage, fruitfulness. They go far to shape and color his Christian experience and to determine the type of Christian into which he will develop.

Instead of dealing with abstract propositions, which are notoriously dry, let us study the doctrinal attitude and emphasis that we moderns call "Presbyterian" as we see them personalized in the greatest Christian of all history, the apostle Paul.

Background of eternal love

Let us note for one thing that Paul viewed his Christian experience against an infinite background of divine love. This is the Presbyterian doctrine of Predestination or Eternal

THE CREED OUTLINED

Election. By this we mean that Paul looked upon his Christian experience not as an absolute beginning but as the fruitage of a pre-existing love of God, in the light of which it stood explained and glorified.

Any artist will tell us that a lake or a castle painted without a background appears flat, superficial, trivial. It is the background of wood or sky or mountain that gives it dignity, proportion, and truth to nature. The traveler in England may look at her Abbey, her Parliament Houses, her Tower, her cathedrals and monuments and battlefields, but, if he knows nothing of English history, he sees them with blind eyes. To be seen aright, they must be looked at against the background of England's mighty past, out of which they sprang, and in whose light alone they can be understood and appreciated.

As in nature and national life, so it is in spiritual life. The life of God in the soul Paul always saw against that infinite background of divine love out of which it came, in whose light alone it could be appreciated, the contemplation of which never failed to thrill Paul's heart with a rapture of adoring gratitude.

How does he begin his letter to the Ephesians? "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself.”¹

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

187 200 To the Thessalonians he writes: “We are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.”²

200 200 To Timothy he writes: “Who [God] hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.”³

200 200 Our religious life is no mushroom growth of a day. It roots back into a past eternity. I remember as vividly as if it were yesterday the spot where I stood years ago when this Scripture teaching first became real to me; when there broke on my mind the amazing truth that, be-

¹ Eph. 1:3-5.

² II Thess. 2:13.

³ II Tim. 1:9.

THE CREED OUTLINED

fore creation's dawn, before the morning stars sang together or the sons of God shouted for joy, away back "in the beginning," God had a thought of me, and that thought was love. Before He found a place for the universe in His hand He had found a place for me in His heart. As He says in Jeremiah, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." [✓]

Let us note again that Paul had a victorious confidence in the constancy of this divine love. This is our Presbyterian doctrine of Final Perseverance. By this we mean that Paul believed with his whole heart that God's love for him was not only from everlasting but to everlasting. Having yielded himself to the mighty current of that love, he never doubted whither it would bear him. Listen to him: "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." [✓]

"Absent from the body, and . . . present with the Lord."⁶ ^{acc}

⁴ Jer. 31:3.

⁵ II Cor. 5:1.

⁶ II Cor. 5:8.

Divine
constancy

(2)

(Divine love is constant)

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Looking death in the face, he calmly says:
“Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day.”⁷

This joyful conviction of the unchanging steadfastness of the divine love he labors to impart to his fellow Christians. To the Philippians he writes: “Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.”⁸

To the Romans he writes: “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.”⁹

*Sovereignty
and providence*

(3)

Let us note again that Paul magnified the sovereign, all-embracing, all-controlling purpose of God.

⁷ II Tim. 4:8.

⁸ Phil. 1:6.

⁹ Rom. 8:35, 37-39.

THE CREED OUTLINED

How are the affairs of men and the universe governed? To this stupendous question Paul answers, "According to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." ¹⁰ This divine purpose embraces and controls what? "All things," says Paul, or, as our Catechism words it, "whatsoever comes to pass." ✓ see

Paul's creed is not that "whatever must be, must be," but that whatever God has decreed and purposed shall be. The one expression attributes the course of events to a blind mechanical necessity, the other to the intelligent purpose of a personal God. The one is fatalism, the other is the Presbyterian doctrine of Divine Sovereignty, Foreordination, Providence. ✓ see

The Bible does not say, "Whatever must be, must be." It says: "That that is determined shall be done." ¹¹ It says again: "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." ¹² Both in Scripture and in our Standards the glorious truth stands clear that our human lives and our sensitive human hearts are held, not in the iron cogwheels of a vast and see ¹⁰ Eph. 1:11.

¹¹ Dan. 11:36.

¹² Isa. 14:24.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

pitiless Fate, not in the whirling loom of a crazy Chance, but in the almighty hands of an infinitely good and wise God.

512 "We know," says Paul, "that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."¹³ And that purpose of good to us for which all things work together, is just this, to make us Christlike. So Paul declares in the next sentence, "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son."¹⁴ In other words, to us who are "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus,"¹⁵ the divine providence is simply our Father's training school, in which every event, both great and small, is an appointed lesson, set for us by the hand of infinite love, to bring out in us more and more the beautiful image of our Redeemer.

The return to Calvinism

Highly significant it is, as we shall see more fully in Chapter VII, that in both Europe and America today articles are increasingly appearing and lectures being delivered on the return to Calvinism. Such a return, in its chief emphasis, is the Barthian theology which just now is so ¹³ Rom. 8:28.

¹⁴ Rom. 8:29.

¹⁵ Gal. 3:26.

THE CREED OUTLINED

deeply influencing the religious thought of all Christendom. The reason is clear. In a world so largely given over to rampant greed, ruthless militarism, recrudescing paganism, international lawlessness, heartless suppression of freedom of thought and speech and conscience, pitiless oppression of the weak by the strong, a world of cruelty, confusion, uncertainty in the political, social, and economic realms, a world of more widespread suffering, anxiety, and fear than our fathers knew—in such a world the optimistic liberalism and the gay humanism of recent years are utterly discredited. Men are seeing how true is Calvinism's stern but Scriptural account of man's depravity, his sinful, fallen nature, total in the sense that no part of his nature is untainted by sin. Groping and bewildered, they are realizing that the only deity that meets the world's needs is the God of Calvinism.

Did we believe that so potent and fearful a thing as sin had broken into the originally holy order of the universe in defiance of God's purpose, and is rioting in defiance of His power, we might well surrender ourselves to terror and despair. Unspeakably comforting and strengthening is the Scriptural teaching of our Standards that beneath all this wild tossing and lashing of evil purposes and agencies there lies, in mighty and controlling embrace, a divine purpose that governs them all. Over sin, as over all else, God reigns supreme.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Foreordi-nation and free (agency)
4 Will

220

But does not this divine purpose, so prominent in Paul's mind and creed, do away with human freedom or the necessity of human effort? No. The reconciliation of the two which our finite minds cannot explain in our theories we can plainly see in God's practice. A striking illustration we find in Paul's own experience. On his voyage to Caesar at Rome, the vessel is caught in a violent storm and driven helpless and half-sinking before the unceasing fury of the tempest. The angel of God says to Paul: "Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar: and lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee."¹⁶ Here is divine foreordination—all shall be saved. Shortly after, as the sailors are secretly preparing to escape in the boat from the doomed ship, Paul says to the centurion and soldiers: "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved."¹⁷ Here is free agency and the efficiency of second causes, liberty in the midst of certainty, a human will that CAN. The soldiers cut

¹⁶ Acts 27:24.

¹⁷ Acts 27:31.

THE CREED OUTLINED

the boat adrift, the vessel is wrecked, but all escape safe to land. Here are two undeniable facts: "All shall be saved," "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." Here are two co-operating factors, divine foreordination and human free agency. It was God's purpose to save all lives on the ship. It was Paul's purpose to use the human means within his reach. God has a purpose and is at work. Paul has a purpose and is at work. And the result of the forces correlated and co-working is the saving of all on board, the exact fulfillment of the pre-announced "purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." (Eph. 1:11.)¹⁸

And that leads us directly to the fact that Paul had an ineffable sense, not only of the divine immanence, but of the divine transcendence, of the infinite goodness and greatness of God. Said Professor George P. Fisher, of Yale University: "A profound sense of the exaltation of God is the keynote of Calvinism." It was the keynote of Paul's religion.

Exaltation of God

5

Paul had found from experience what every thinker has discovered, that if one thinks far enough along any line he comes to a mystery. Think of God, and you come to the mystery of the Trinity. Think of Jesus Christ, and you come to the mystery of the Incarnation. Think of human conduct, and you face the mystery of how to reconcile the certain fact of divine sovereignty with the equally certain fact of free agency. Look out on the orderings of Providence, and you see dark mysteries of inequality and apparent injustice. Think back along human history and you arrive at that initial mystery into which every other mystery in religion roots back, of why God permitted sin to enter the world. What is true of religion is equally true of science and philosophy. In these realms also, think far enough in any direction, and you reach insoluble mystery. Says a contemporary scientist: "At the present day the scientific universe is more mysterious than it has ever been before in the history of thought." And why all these mysteries? Because the finite is encompassed on every side by the infinite, which must forever outreach the utmost grasp and measure of the finite.

2:10

¹⁸ Pitzer, Predestination, God's Working Plan of His Universe, page 12.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

To these surrounding and challenging mysteries Paul had one triumphant answer. That answer was "God." Paul knew that in that infinite mind and heart lay the holy and loving solution of every problem and the holy and loving explanation of every mystery. A rejoicing sense of the absolute goodness, wisdom, and all-sufficiency of God was the heart of Paul's religion, as it is the heart of Calvinism.

THE CREED OUTLINED

In those profound ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters of Romans, Paul contemplates some of the darkest mysteries of the divine dealing. But the survey, instead of raising doubts of God, furnishes but fresh cause for adoring wonder and brings him to his knees crying: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? . . . For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen." ¹⁹

The Presbyterian Church follows Paul in laying this tremendous emphasis on the divine love, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. With uplifted radiant face she cries, "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." ²⁰

¹⁹ Rom. 11:33, 34, 36.

²⁰ Ps. 97:1.

For further light on the essentials of our creed, see Chapter III, section 1, and Chapter V.

II

THE CREED FORMULATED

“Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.”—

I THESSALONIANS 5:21.

II

THE CREED FORMULATED

THE DOCTRINAL STANDARDS of our church are three: the Westminster Shorter Catechism, the Westminster Larger Catechism, and the Westminster Confession of Faith. They are not three creeds. They are three statements, varying in form, fullness, and purpose, of one and the same creed. Each is complete in itself. Each contains all the essential truths of Scripture. Each is a complete epitome of the Calvinistic system. Whoever intelligently accepts the teachings of the Shorter Catechism is a true Calvinist. Should he extend his studies to the Larger Catechism and the Confession of Faith he would find in them the same system of doctrine with which the briefer statements of the Shorter Catechism had already acquainted him.

*Our
doctrinal
Standards*

Her doctrinal system the Presbyterian Church accentuates. She is pronouncedly and pre-eminently a doctrinal church. Yet the acceptance of her Standards she never requires of any applicant for admission to her fold. Her only condition of church membership is a credible profession of faith in Christ. Calvinistic and

The Standards and church membership

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Arminian believers in Christ she welcomes with equal heartiness. Her door of entrance is wide as the gate of heaven.

The Standards and office-bearers

But of her office-bearers she requires doctrinal soundness. The question asked them at ordination is, "Do you sincerely receive and adopt the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms of our church as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures?" This formula of subscription is liberal. It binds only to "all the essential and necessary articles."¹ "The use of the words 'system of doctrine' in the terms of subscription precludes the idea of the necessary acceptance of every statement in the Standards by the subscribers, but involves the acceptance of so much as is vital to the system as a whole."²

*Name and
era*

Our doctrinal formularies are known as the Westminster Standards because the famous Assembly of divines that framed them held their sessions in England's great Abbey of Westminster. Their labors extended over five and a half years, during which time they held nearly twelve hundred sessions. They met in 1643, at a period in the world's history when the human intellect, for reasons known to scholars, appears to have reached the zenith of its power. The era of the Westminster Assembly was the era of Shakespeare,³ whose work stands matchless among the creations of the human imagination. It was the era of the translators of the English Bible, whose version remains the unapproachable model of the world's prose. It was the era of Francis Bacon, the author of the most epoch-making work in the history of human philosophy. In its own realm of theology, the work of the Westminster divines, for comprehensive grasp of Scripture truth, for clearness, compactness, and power of statement, is worthy a place beside these three other products of the human intellect at its flood tide.

¹ Adopting Act of 1729.

² Southern General Assembly's answer to overture of inquiry. Minutes of 1898, p. 223.

THE CREED FORMULATED

The Westminster Assembly was a representative body, called by the English Parliament, made up of one hundred and twenty-one divines, eleven lords, twenty commoners, from all the counties of England and the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, with seven Commissioners from Scotland. Many of them jeopardized their livings by accepting the Parliament's appointment, and after the Restoration cheerfully sacri-

Personnel

³ Collier dates the close of the Elizabethan Era at 1659, Saintsbury and Thomas Arnold at 1660.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

222
ficed their earthly all for conscience' sake. It was an elect assembly. On every side were men conspicuous for learning, eloquence, and piety; professors not only of the sacred but also of the secular sciences; Deans, Masters, and Heads of Colleges, Vice-Chancellors in the great Universities. Their Moderator was Dr. Twisse, scholar and theologian of continental fame, whose ruling passion may be inferred from his death-bed utterance, "Now, at length, I shall have leisure to follow my studies to all eternity."

Nor were they scholars and theologians alone. Amongst them were thinkers of various types— orators, statesmen, hymnists, saints—men in every way qualified to voice the deepest religious convictions and embody in symbols and institutions the intense life of that marvelous spiritual revival which produced "statesmen like Hampden, soldiers like Cromwell, poets like Milton, preachers like Howe, theologians like Owen, dreamers like Bunyan, hymnists like Watts, commentators like Henry, saints like Baxter."

"A cloud of witnesses"
Milton, though not a member of the Assembly, pronounced it a "select assembly," "of so much piety and wisdom," a "learned and memorable synod," in which "piety, learning, and prudence were housed."

THE CREED FORMULATED

The famous saint and scholar, Richard Baxter, author of The Saints' Everlasting Rest, had every reason to be impartial. He wrote: "The divines there congregated were men of eminent learning, godliness, ministerial abilities, and fidelity; and being not worthy to be one of them myself, I may the more freely speak the truth, which I know, even in the face of malice and envy, that as far as I am able to judge by the information of all history of that kind, and by any other evidences left us, the Christian world, since the days of the Apostles, had never a synod of more excellent divines."

Philip Schaff, the great church historian, pronounced the above a "just tribute" to the Westminster Assembly, and said: "Whether we look at the extent or ability of its labors, or its influence upon future generations, it stands first among Protestant Councils."

The celebrated Dean Stanley, of the English Episcopal Church, declared that of all Protestant confessions the Westminster Confession "exhibits far more depth of theological insight than any other."

Dr. Curry, the eminent editor for years of the Methodist Advocate of New York, in an editorial on creeds, calls "the Westminster Confession the ablest, clearest, and most comprehensive system of Christian doctrine ever framed—a wonderful monument of the intellectual greatness of its framers.”

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

The Assembly had to assist them in their work all the creeds of past ages, from the Apostles' Creed, formed in the early centuries, down to the noble Confessions and Catechisms of the Reformation period. The great Reformers, coming with fresh and eager eyes to the study of the newly opened Bible, and taking that alone as their rule of faith, were all Calvinists in theology. For the same reason the people and the Church of England were Calvinistic. “The Bible,” says the historian Green, “was, as yet, the one book which was familiar to every Englishman, and everywhere its words, as they fell on ears which custom had not deadened to their force and beauty, kindled a startling enthusiasm. The whole moral effect which is produced nowadays by the religious newspaper, the tract, the essay, the missionary report, the sermon, was then produced by the Bible alone; and its effect in this way, however dispassionately we examine it, was simply amazing. The whole nation became a church. The problems of life and death, whose questionings found no answer in the higher minds of Shakespeare's day, pressed for an answer not only from noble and scholar, but from farmer and shopkeeper in the age that followed him. The answer they found was almost of necessity a Calvinistic answer." ✂

THE CREED FORMULATED

The work before the Assembly, therefore, was not the creation of a new system, but the formulation of doctrines already familiar, precious, and baptized in the blood of a hundred thousand martyrs. Its task was to give to the accepted Bible system of truth a complete, impregnable statement, to serve as a bulwark against error, as a basis of ecclesiastical fellowship and co-operation, and as a safe and effective instrument for the religious instruction of the people of God and their children.

The Assembly's task

The popular notion that the Westminster Standards consist of dry abstract dogmas, with little or no bearing upon life and duty, is a mistake. Their ethical quality is prominent and all-pervading. With them, as with the Bible, truth is in order to godliness. Nearly one half of the Confession and more than one half of both Catechisms deal directly with the practical "duty which God requires of man." That God's

Ethical quality

* History of the English People (American Publishers' Corporation), vol. III, p. 405.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

holy law covers every part and particle of our lives, and that to Him we must forever be accountable for our obedience or disobedience thereto, rolls like a sublime and conscience-stirring music through all the work of the Westminster divines. No other creed in existence has an article or chapter on the Divine Law comparable to that of the Confession, and nowhere else in Christian symbolism can be found such an unfolding of the heart-searching claims of that law as is given in the exposition by the two Catechisms of the Ten Commandments.

Spiritual vitality

Whoever would understand the believer's relation to Christ and the various stages of genuine Christian experience will find in chapters xi to xviii of the Confession a presentation of that great theme unmatched by any other creed in Christendom, compact yet complete, profound yet crystallinely clear, constituting the true doctrine of the Christian life as held substantially by evangelical Christendom and the subject matter of the best evangelical preaching of this and every preceding age. No reference is made in our Standards to any antagonistic opinion held by any evangelical communion. Their tone is irenic. They were born, not of controversy, but of consecration. Framed "when the church was still under the happy influence of a marvelous revival, when the Word of God was felt as a living, quickening, transforming power, and preached not as a tradition, but as the very power and wisdom of God"; and "by men of ripe scholarship and devoted piety, who have remained our models of earnest preaching and our guides in practical godliness, even unto this day,"⁵ they read as if every paragraph had been written in the consciousness of God's presence. Strikingly unlike many modern milk-and-water treatises on religion they undoubtedly are. Their primary appeal is not to the emotions but to the intellect. Their chief purpose is to define truth, not to apply it. Their proper function is not that of a sermon or a prayer, but of a test, a testimony, a textbook. Yet so packed and throbbing are they with the vital truths of God's Word, such stress they place on personal union to Christ as the explanation of our being made partakers of the benefits of redemption, such space and prominence they give to the claims of God's moral law, that they are admirably fitted to be, as for two hundred and ninety years they have been, the spiritual food of stalwart souls, the nurse of ⁵ A. F. Mitchell, Minutes of the Sessions of the Westminster Assembly of Divines, Introduction, p. LXXV.

THE CREED FORMULATED

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

a supremely massive and masculine type of piety.

First characteristic, thoroughness

I

The Catechisms

There are three things which, in addition to their character, genius, and learning, must ever commend the Westminster Assembly to our confidence. First, the care and thoroughness with which they performed their work.

Consider, for example, the labor expended upon the Catechisms. Catechism-making was no new work to the members of that Assembly. Theirs was an age exercised and trained beyond any previous or succeeding age in the construction of doctrinal manuals. For a hundred years Luther, Calvin, Ursinus, and a score more of the brightest intellects of the Reformation had been devoting their best energies to the production of catechisms for the instruction of the people. Fourteen of the members of the Assembly were themselves authors of excellent and widely useful catechisms. All the ripe fruits and long training, therefore, of the most catechetical century in the world's history the Assembly had as a basis and preparation for its work.

Striving after perfection

Early in the sessions of the Assembly a committee of known proficient in such work was appointed to begin the undertaking. They made their report, but it was not accepted by the Assembly. New members were added to the committee. After much deliberation a second report was submitted. Still the Assembly was not satisfied. The committee was again changed. After long labor a third report was presented. For three months the Assembly had this catechism under review and discussion. It was approved almost to the end, when again the Assembly became dissatisfied and determined to make a fourth effort to secure something still nearer perfect. The committee was reconstituted with a large addition of new members, and was instructed to prepare two catechisms, one larger for advanced students, and another 'more easie and short for new beginners.' But spite of past labors nearly two years more of alternate report and revision were required before the last of the Catechisms was completed to the satisfaction of the Assembly. The Larger was completed first. The Shorter was not only the last of the Catechisms, it was the last finished work of the Assembly. In it the Westminster divines achieved their greatest triumph. It is the consummate flower of all their labors.

THE CREED FORMULATED

Thus for five years committees of the Assembly, and the Assembly itself, labored upon these two little books, subjecting every sentence, every word to the most minute and searching scrutiny. It is not too much to say that there is probably not another catechism in the world on which one tenth of the time and labor and ability and learning was expended that were employed in the production of these two with which God has so highly blessed our church. They are the work not of one man, as Luther's and Calvin's; nor of two men, as the Heidelberg Catechism was; nor of four, as was the Catechism of the Church of Rome; but they are the product of five years of the most earnest and careful deliberations of the whole Westminster Assembly.⁶

The Westminster vs. other catechisms

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

*The
mirror of Scripture*

Equal thought and care were bestowed upon the Confession. Every statement, every alteration suggested, was examined through years of concentrated study till the entire Assembly was of one mind and fully agreed as to both doctrine and expression. All that training the most complete and thorough, learning the most profound and extensive, intellect the most acute and searching, co-operation the most wide and helpful, labor the most intense and protracted, could do to make our Standards the perfect mirror of Scripture truth, was done.

⁶ Strickler, Nature and Value of the Catechisms.

THE CREED FORMULATED

A second leading characteristic of the Westminster Assembly was their prayerful dependence upon God for light and guidance.

Second characteristic, prayerfulness

Two traditions have come down to us, which, while of disputed authenticity, yet represent truly the spirit of prayer that pervaded the Assembly.

II

On one occasion the famous John Selden, an encyclopedic scholar and brilliant orator, addressed the Assembly to prove that excommunication was a function not of the spiritual but of the civil authority. It was a vital question involving the spiritual independence of the Church. The issue turned on the interpretation of Matt. 18: 15-17. Selden's speech was subtle and powerful. It displayed a vast acquaintance with patristic and rabbinical lore. At its close the Assembly seemed to hesitate. The saintly Samuel Rutherford, who was a member, turned to George Gillespie, the youngest man in the body, and said, "Rise, George; rise up, man, and defend the right of the Lord Jesus to govern by His own laws the Church He has purchased with His blood." Thus adjured, Gillespie arose, and delivered a speech whose effect perhaps has never been surpassed. Selden's argument he utterly annihilated, proving by seven distinct lines of reasoning, all purely Scriptural, that the passage in Matthew was not civil but spiritual in its import. At the conclusion of his argument Selden exclaimed, "That young man by his single speech has swept away the labors of ten years of my life." While Selden was speaking a friend had observed Gillespie apparently making notes upon the paper before him. When examined the notes proved to be only this prayer: "More light, Lord! More light, Lord!"

"More light, Lord!"

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

"What is God?"

According to a familiar tradition, the Shorter Catechism's incomparable definition of God was literally born of prayer. To that great question, "What is God?" the Catechism Committee had found themselves unable to construct a satisfactory answer. The question had been referred to the Committee of the Whole. They, too, had failed. Then one of the members was called on to lead in special prayer for divine enlightenment. Rising, he thus began: "O God, who art a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in Thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth." When this matchless invocation fell upon their ears the Assembly felt at once that it was God's own answer, given in prayer and to prayer, descriptive of Himself.

THE CREED FORMULATED

Not only did the Assembly both as a body and as individuals habitually look to God for special guidance in special difficulties, not only were the daily sessions opened and closed with prayer, but regularly every month throughout the five and a half years of its labors all business was suspended that an entire day might be given to fasting and prayer. It seems almost incredible to us that they should have remained in continuous devotional worship from morning till evening, wrestling with God often for two hours together in unbroken supplication; but in those times when all the interests of Christ's Kingdom seemed to be at stake, men realized their need of divine help, and when once at the throne of grace knew not how to come away till the blessing was obtained. It is probably not an exaggeration to say with Dr. C. A. Briggs that "such a band of preaching and praying ministers as gathered in the Westminster Assembly the world had never seen before." No body of men ever felt more profoundly their dependence upon God, or sought more earnestly and habitually the guidance of His Spirit.

Wrestling in prayer

The third most striking characteristic of the Westminster Assembly was their loyalty to Scripture.

Third characteristic, loyalty to Scripture

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

The Bible and nothing but the Bible

The first topic of which the Confession of Faith treats is the divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Word of God. In its forefront stands this declaration: "The Supreme Judge, by which all controversies of religion are to be determined, and all decrees of councils, opinions of ancient writers, doctrines of men, and private spirits, are to be examined, and in whose sentence we are to rest, can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture."⁷

Every member was required to take the following vow, which was read afresh every Monday morning that its solemn influence might be constantly felt: "I do seriously promise and vow, in the presence of Almighty God, that in this Assembly whereof I am a member, I will maintain nothing in point of doctrine but what I believe to be most agreeable to the Word of God."

One of the cardinal regulations of the Assembly was in these words: "What any man undertakes to prove as necessary, he shall make good out of Scripture."

*The Standards
and philosophy*

The Westminster divines were consummate masters of philosophy. They were familiar with the great schools of human thought from Plato and Aristotle down to Bacon and Descartes. But in framing these Standards their one and only aim was to express the mind of Scripture. In their whole system of doctrine no tinge of human philosophy is apparent. Said Dr. Fisher of Yale University: "One prime characteristic of Calvin's system is the steadfast consistent adoption of the Bible as the sole standard of doctrine."⁸ So in our Standards there is not a paragraph that affords a hint of what philosophical school the Assembly favored. Even those questions where Scripture and philosophy intermingle were determined by the Assembly always and exclusively on Biblical grounds.

⁷ Chapter I, section 10.

THE CREED FORMULATED

And herein appears the divine wisdom by which they were guided. Human philosophies are ever changing. A system founded upon them must soon appear to totter, and to need amendment or reconstruction. "But . . . the word of God . . . liveth and abideth for ever."⁹ The structure which is built exclusively upon this is, like it, permanent. "In this," declares a great Presbyterian theologian, "we find the chief glory

The unchanging foundation

⁸ The Reformation, p. 199.

⁹ I Pet. 1:23.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

and value of our Standards.”¹⁰ For this reason they will need radical change only when the Bible needs it.

The offense of the Word

There are hard sayings in our Standards because there are hard sayings in the Bible. Some doctrines for which the Presbyterian Church stands are among the “things hard to be understood”¹¹ of which “our beloved brother Paul” wrote. “This is an hard saying; who can hear it?”¹² So said many in Christ’s day of Christ’s teaching. They were offended. They walked no more with Him. Like many in our own day, they demanded a religion “more Christian than Christianity and more Christlike than Christ.” Just so the unflinching Scripturalness of our creed, its faithful mirroring of the mind of Christ revealed by His Spirit in His Word, is the reason why it never has been, is not, and never will be popular with the rationalistic and unregenerate world. “The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God.”¹³ The offense of the Word is as undying as the offense of the Cross.

¹⁰ Memorial of Westminster Assembly, p. 94.

¹¹ II Pet. 3:16.

¹² John 6:60.

¹³ I Cor. 2:14.

THE CREED FORMULATED

Every statement of essential Calvinistic doctrine in our Standards the Bible substantiates by equally bold and bald statements of its own. Yet the former is the chosen object of attack. The reason is plain. In a Christian land, where the Scriptures are widely revered, it is cheaper and safer to assault the Presbyterian Standards than to assault the Bible. Hence it is that the Presbyterian Church has always sustained the brunt of the fight for the integrity of God's truth. "We gratefully acknowledge," said the Wesleyan Methodist Conference in its address to the Presbyterian Alliance, "the faithful and unfaltering testimony which your Church has borne throughout her entire history on behalf of the divine inspiration and authority of the Word of God." Said the Baptist Association in its greeting to the same body: "The Presbyterian Church has been the magnificent defender of the Word of God throughout the ages." Above all others, she has borne, bears now, and will continue to bear, on her name the odium, and upon her person the blows, provoked by and aimed against the Word of God. Humbly yet proudly she can say to her Lord, "The reproaches of them that reproached Thee fell on me."

*Chief
champion and martyr*

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Revision Let no Presbyterian be alarmed over proposed or accomplished revisions of the doctrinal Standards of our Church. In regard to marriage with a deceased wife's sister and the duties of civil magistrates, the Confession was twice revised many years ago.

In the Presbyterian
Church,
U. S. A. In 1902-03 the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America added two chapters to the Confession, "Of the Holy Spirit" and "Of the Love of God and Missions," in order to "express more fully the doctrine of the Church concerning the Holy Spirit, Missions, and the love of God for all men."

At the same time it added also to the Confession the following:

"Declaratory Statement"

"While the ordination vow of ministers, ruling elders, and deacons, as set forth in the Form of Government, requires the reception and adoption of the Confession of Faith only as containing the System of Doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures, nevertheless, seeing that the desire has been formally expressed for a disavowal by the Church of certain inferences drawn from statements in the Confession of Faith, and also for a declaration of certain aspects of revealed truth which appear at the present time to call for more explicit statement, therefore the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America does authoritatively declare as follows:

THE CREED FORMULATED

"First, With reference to Chapter III of the Confession of Faith: that concerning those who are saved in Christ, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine of his love to all mankind, his gift of his Son to be the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, and his readiness to bestow his saving grace on all who seek it. That concerning those who perish, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine that God desires not the death of any sinner, but has provided in Christ a salvation sufficient for all, adapted to all, and freely offered in the gospel to all; that men are fully responsible for their treatment of God's gracious offer; that his decree hinders no man from accepting that offer; and that no man is condemned except on the ground of his sin.

"Second, With reference to Chapter X, Section 3, of the Confession of Faith, that it is not to be regarded as teaching that any who die in infancy are lost. We believe that all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace, and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who works when and where and how he pleases."

Other slight changes were made involving no reconstruction of the Confessional system of doctrine. In regard to these additions and changes made in 1902-03 the Committee in charge of the inquiry touching revision reported that "the returns from the Presbyteries indicate plainly that no change is desired which would in any way impair the integrity of the system of doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith."

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

*In the Presbyterian
Church,
U. S.*

The Presbyterian Church in the United States in 1900 directed that in future editions of the Confession the following statement be printed as a footnote to Chapter X, Sec. 3: "The language of the Confession cannot by any fair interpretation be construed as teaching that any of those who die in infancy are lost." In 1938-39 it adopted eleven changes in the Confession and one in the Larger Catechism. In 1940-42 it has under consideration the addition to the Confession of two chapters, "Of the Holy Spirit" and "Of the Gospel," to give fuller expression to the church's doctrine on these subjects, and the addition of the word love to Question 4 of the Shorter Catechism.

None of the additions and changes adopted or proposed by either of the above mentioned churches does or will impair in any degree our Calvinistic system. No Presbyterian, therefore, need be concerned for the integrity of that historic and Scriptural creed on which and for which his church has stood from the beginning and will surely stand to the end.

III

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

“By their fruits ye shall know them.”—MATTHEW 7:20.

III

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

WE PROPOSE now to submit the doctrinal system incorporated in, though far older than, the Westminster Standards, to a simple yet decisive test, a test endorsed by the common sense of mankind and the authority of Christ, the test of practical results. In his celebrated essay on Calvinism Froude says: "The practical effect of a belief is the real test of its soundness." In His Sermon on the Mount our Lord declares, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."² As a fruit-bearer, as a character-builder, as a purifying and uplifting force in the life of men and nations, how does Calvinism rank with other doctrinal systems? We reply, it stands foremost of them all.

The decisive test

I

The superior moral power of Calvinism we should infer, even without the aid of history, from the inherent character and tendency of its teaching.

It is a system distinguished supereminently by its exaltation of God. Someone has truly said,

*Calvinism
and God*

¹ Short Studies on Great Subjects, p. 11.

² Matt. 7:16.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

“The value of a religion depends on the truth and the sufficiency of its idea of God.” Start with a little god and we have a little religion, inadequate to human needs. A great religion demands a great God, for we are entirely dependent on Him—as creatures, for our natural life; as believers, for our spiritual life. The root principle of Calvinism is the confession of God’s absolute sovereignty. Not one special attribute of God, His love or justice, His holiness or equity, but God Himself as such, in the unity of all His attributes and the perfection of His entire being, is the point of departure for the thinking and acting of the Calvinist. The glory of the Lord God Almighty is its unifying, all-pervading aim. Not bare sovereignty, arbitrary will, naked power, but a personal God of grace, the God revealed in Christ, is the God of Calvinism. It adores Him as the Absolute and Ever-Blessed Sovereign, infinitely worthy of love, worship, and obedience, “who doth uphold, direct, dispose, and govern all creatures, actions, and things, from the greatest even to the least, . . . to the praise of the glory of His wisdom, power, justice, goodness and mercy.”⁸ The keynote of the whole system is struck in the first question of the Shorter Catechism: "What is the chief end of man? Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy Him forever." ⁴ "Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done" is the threefold petition which expresses the heart of Calvinism. As one has said, "In all place, in all time, from eternity to eternity, Calvinism sees God."

⁸ Confession of Faith, chap. V, sec. 1.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

From its absorbed and adoring view of God comes Calvinism's conscientiousness, its deep and dominant sense of duty and responsibility. The Ever-Blessed is the Ever-Present God, under whose eye, in whose fellowship, for whose glory, and subject to whose review, the whole of human life is to be lived. In it all God's hand is seen. It must all be made subservient to His holy will. In politics, science, art, industry, social life, no less than in the realm of grace, He is Sovereign. Everywhere, no matter how wide and varied his activities, the Calvinist is conscious of being in his Father's presence and about his

*Calvinism
and duty*

⁴ Said Thomas Carlyle in speaking against materialism: "The older I grow—and I now stand upon the brink of eternity—the more comes back to me the first sentence in the Catechism which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper its meaning becomes: 'What is the chief end of man? To glorify God and to enjoy Him forever.' "

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Father's business. Said Professor Fiske of Harvard, "Calvinism leaves the individual man alone in the presence of his God."⁵ Beyond all example, it intensifies man's individuality. In a clear and overpowering light it shows his responsibility to God and his relation to eternity. Its aim is not sensation but conviction. Feeling or no feeling, at the soul's unspeakable peril, God's command must be obeyed; God's will must be done. Not, is it pleasant, or popular, or profitable; but, is it right? Is it what God would have me do? This is Calvinism's first question.

The Calvinist program

"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."⁶ This is the Calvinistic program, illustrated in Paul, saying with his heart in his voice, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"; in Calvin, of whom Jules Michelet says, "He felt and lived like a man before whom the whole earth disappears, and who tunes his last psalm, his whole eye fixed upon the eye of God"; in Knox, of whom Carlyle says, "The fixed centre of all his thoughts and actions was to do the will of God and tremble at nothing"; in the Puritans, whose diligence in searching the Scriptures, Green says, "sprang

⁵ The Beginnings of New England, p. 58.

⁶ 1 Cor. 10:31.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

from their earnestness to discover a Divine will which in all things, great or small, they might implicitly obey," in whom, Taine tells us, "conscience only spoke," and in whose eyes "God and duty were but one"; in the Calvinists in general, whose "system," says Henry Ward Beecher, has "no equal in intensifying to the last degree ideas of moral excellence and purity," and whose superiority to men of other creeds, says James Russell Lowell, lies "in the prevalent sense of duty, in high ideals, in inflexible principles, in living

"'As ever in their great Taskmaster's eye.'"

From its supreme exaltation of God springs logically and Scripturally Calvinism's doctrine of sin and grace.

In proportion as God is great and glorious Calvinism recognizes the sin of man to be heinous and fatal. Its enormity and ill desert are beyond man's calculation or conception.⁷ It is

*Calvinism
and sin*

⁷ "Recently a distinguished preacher of the Methodist Church remarked to me that he thought the doctrine of entire sanctification as taught by its recent advocates bore a much closer affinity to Calvinism than to Arminianism. 'How do you account for the fact,' I asked, 'that it spread so readily among the Methodist churches, and can get no foothold in Presbyterian churches?' He replied that he had tried to explain the fact and had been unable. Whereupon I suggested that if the people were once indoctrinated with the Calvinistic recreancy to his supreme relation. It is rebellion against the rightful authority of the Greatest and Best of beings. It is self-separation and estrangement from the Source of Truth and Life. Impenitent man is guilty, lost, "dead in trespasses and sins." Left to himself his condition is one of hopeless condemnation and misery. Thus Calvinism drags down all pride and carnal security and prostrates man at the foot of the cross, a suppliant for mercy.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

*Calvinism
and grace*

In answer to his suppliant cry,⁸ it reveals a salvation which is all of grace,⁹ the free gift of idea of the utterly loathsome and deadly nature of sin, they could never be convinced that it was possible to get rid of it by any such easy and sudden process as that offered by the holiness brethren. He admitted that this was probably the true explanation. Undoubtedly Calvinism brands sin with a deeper infamy than any other school of theology. By as much as it emphasizes the hatefulness of sin, by so much does it emphasize the love of God, of which sinners are the object." (R. C. Reed, The Gospel as Taught by Calvin, p. 129.)

We supplement Dr. Reed's explanation with the remark that people who have been rightly taught in childhood "what is required" and "what is forbidden" in the Decalogue will ever after be slow to believe that any "mere man, since the fall, is able, perfectly in this life, to keep the commandments of God."

⁸ "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."—Rom. 10:13.

⁹ "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

God's love and mercy in Christ.¹⁰ In His hands are all its blessings placed, the Spirit of life, pardon and justifying righteousness, sanctifying, establishing, comforting, glorifying grace, resurrection, and eternal life, and from those pierced hands are all received. From first to last salvation is "of the Lord," of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things, that His may be the glory evermore. No inch of ground is left for human boasting.¹¹ The sinner does not save himself. It is God that saves him with a salvation free,¹² present,¹³ complete,¹⁴ and everlasting.¹⁵ He embraces the sinner in the arms of unchanging love.¹⁶ He secures him by the bonds of an ever-

Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."—Eph. 2:8, 9, 10.

¹⁰ "God; who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."—II Tim. 1:8, 9.

¹¹ "Where is boasting then? It is excluded."—Rom. 3:27.

¹² "The gift of God is eternal life."—Rom. 6:23.

¹³ "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—John 6:47.

¹⁴ "Ye are complete in him."—Col. 2:10.

¹⁵ "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish."
—John 10:28.

¹⁶ "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8:38, 39.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

lasting covenant.¹⁷ He gives him an inalienable place in the family of God.¹⁸ He sets before him an unclouded prospect of final victory and eternal joy.¹⁹ He guarantees that all things shall work together for his good.²⁰ He shows him his name in the Book of Life, and reveals to him that he was chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world that he should be holy and without blame before Him in love.²¹ Upon his

¹⁷ "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."—Isa. 54:10.

¹⁸ "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."
—1 John 3:2.

¹⁹ "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Wherein ye greatly rejoice."—1 Pet. 1:4, 5, 6.

²⁰ "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. 8:28-30.

²¹ "He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself."—Eph. 1:4, 5.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

mind there breaks the amazing truth that before creation's dawn, before the morning stars sang together, or ever the sons of God shouted for joy, away back "in the beginning," God had a thought of him, and that thought was love.²² Before He found a place for the universe in His hand, He had found a place for him in His heart.²³

Thus, while Calvinism abases man as a sinner, it glorifies him in Christ as a believer, lifts him to inconceivable exaltation, commands the universe for him. His feet plucked from the horrible pit and planted on the Eternal Rock, his heart thrilled with an adoring gratitude, his soul conscious of a divine love that will never forsake him and a divine energy that in him and through him is working out eternal purposes of good,²⁴ he is girded with invincible strength. In a nobler sense than Napoleon ever dreamed, he knows himself to be a "man of destiny." Alone among men he may be, but only more consciously allied

"More than conqueror"

²² "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God has from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."—II Thess. 2:13.

²³ "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee."—Jer. 31:3.

²⁴ "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. 2:13.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

with God. Danger may meet him, but without God's permission it cannot touch him. Death may threaten, but he is immortal till his work is done. Feeble his strength and fruitless his efforts may appear, but put forth in accordance with God's command they are the predestined means to the predestined end. Hence to his work and warfare he goes forth shielded by a panoply more invulnerable, and nerved by a courage more unconquerable, than any other faith could bestow.

II

The actual fruits of Calvinism, as set forth in history, are precisely what we should expect from the character of its doctrines.

Unequaled array of martyrs

Calvinism has nerved more men and women to die for Christ, with thanksgiving in their hearts and psalms upon their lips, than any other creed. Its unequaled array of martyrs is one of its crowns of glory. As the Methodist Conference said, in its address to the Presbyterian Alliance of 1896: "Your Church has furnished the memorable and inspiring spectacle, not simply of a solitary heroic soul here and there, but of generations of faithful souls ready for the sake of Christ and His truth to go cheerfully to prison and to death. This rare honor you rightly esteem as the most precious part of your priceless heritage." In those centuries, when spiritual tyranny was numbering its victims by the hundreds of thousands; when in England, Scotland, Switzerland, Holland, France, men had to recant their faith or seal their testimony with their blood, nearly all the martyrs were Calvinists. Says a careful writer: "There is no other system of religion in the world which has such a glorious array of martyrs to the faith. Almost every man and woman who walked to the flames rather than deny the faith or leave a stain on conscience was the devout follower not only and first of all of the Son of God, but also of that minister of God who made Geneva the light of Europe, John Calvin."²⁵

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The heroic moral energy inspired by Calvinism has been the admiration of historians. Motley, the famous historian of the Dutch Republic, himself allied in no way with Calvinism, declares that "the doctrine of predestination, the consciousness of being chosen soldiers of Christ, inspired the Puritans (Calvinists) who founded the commonwealths of England, of Holland, and of America, with a contempt of toil, danger, and death, which enabled them to accomplish

"Things almost supernatural"

²⁵ McFetridge, Calvinism in History, p. 113.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

things almost supernatural.”²⁶ Its effect he describes as “that sublime enthusiasm which on either side the ocean ever confronted tyranny with dauntless front, and welcomed death on battlefield, scaffold or rack with perfect composure.”²⁷

“Highest glories of the human conscience”

John Morley, the eminent English author and statesman, being the adherent of no religious creed, cannot be suspected of theological bias. “Calvinism,” he says, “has inspired incomparable energy, concentration, resolution.” “It has exalted its votaries to a pitch of heroic moral energy that has never been surpassed.” “They have exhibited an active courage, a resolute endurance, a cheerful self-restraint, an exulting self-sacrifice, that men count among the highest glories of the human conscience.”²⁸

Froude

James Anthony Froude was one of England’s most gifted historians and men of letters. He occupied the Chair of History at Oxford, England’s greatest university. The ignorant attacks upon Calvinism excited in him the scholar’s just impatience. Against the inferences and misrepresentations of prejudice he set the verdict of ²⁶ The United Netherlands, vol. iv, p. 548.

²⁷ Ibid.

²⁸ “Oliver Cromwell,” The Century Magazine, December, 1899.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

history. From partisan logic he appealed to facts. Himself not theologically committed in any way as regards Calvinism, his impartiality is as far above suspicion as his ability and learning are beyond question.

“I am going to ask you,” says Froude, “to consider, if Calvinism be, as we are told, fatal to morality, how it came to pass that the first symptom of its operation, wherever it established itself, was to obliterate the distinction between sins and crimes, and to make the moral law the rule of life for States as well as persons? I shall ask you, again, why, if it be a creed of intellectual servitude, it was able to inspire and maintain the bravest efforts ever made to break the yoke of unjust authority? When all else has failed; when patriotism has covered its face, and human courage has broken down; when intellect has yielded, as Gibbon says, ‘with a smile or a sigh,’ content to philosophize in the closet or abroad worship with the vulgar; when emotion, and sentiment, and tender imaginative piety have become the handmaids of superstition, and have dreamt themselves into forgetfulness that there is any difference between lies and truth, the slavish form of belief called Calvinism, in one or other of its many forms, has borne ever an appeal to facts*

*The

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

inflexible front to illusion and mendacity, and has preferred rather to be ground to powder like flint than to bend before violence or melt under enervating temptation.”²⁹

“The Calvinists,” says Froude, “abhorred, as no body of men ever more abhorred, all conscious mendacity, all impurity, all moral wrong of every kind so far as they could recognize it. Whatever exists at this moment in England and Scotland of conscientious fear of doing evil is the remnant of the convictions which were branded by the Calvinists into the people’s hearts.”³⁰

Type of character

As illustrating the type of character produced by Calvinism, Froude names William the Silent, Luther,³¹ Knox, Andrew Melville, the Regent Murray, Coligny, Cromwell, Milton, Bunyan. “These were men,” he says, “possessed of all the qualities which give nobility and grandeur to human nature—men whose life was as upright as their intellect was commanding and their public aims untainted with selfishness; unalterably just where duty required them to be stern, but with the tenderness of a woman in their hearts; frank, true, cheerful, humorous, as unlike ²⁹ Short Studies on Great Subjects, p. 13.

³⁰ Ibid., p. 50.

³¹ Luther’s doctrine of divine grace, sovereignty, and predestination was thoroughly Calvinistic.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

sour fanatics as it is possible to imagine any one, and able in some way to sound the keynote to which every brave and faithful heart in Europe instinctively vibrated.”⁸²

With these deliberate statements of Oxford's great Professor of History, compare the representations of those popular professional storytellers, whose only weapon is caricature, and in whose novels the Calvinistic characters are nearly all oddities, cranks, fanatics, fools, or savages. History vs. fiction

For the enlightenment of the critics of Calvinism, Froude adds, “Grapes do not grow on bramble-bushes. Illustrious natures do not form themselves on narrow and cruel theories. Where we find a heroic life appearing as the uniform fruit of a particular mode of opinion, it is childish to argue in the face of fact that the result ought to have been different.”⁸³ Prejudice vs. fact

As a complement to the masculine illustrations cited by Froude of the Calvinistic character, we quote the following from Dr. L. P. Bowen: “Calvinism has moulded God's own type of womanhood; worth without vanity, self-sacrifice without self-righteousness, zealous service with- Calvinistic womanhood

⁸² Short Studies on Great Subjects, p. 14.

⁸³ Ibid., p. 14.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

out immodesty, strong convictions without effrontery, human loveliness heightened and softened by heavenly-mindedness." "The world has never known," says an able modern scholar, "a higher type of robust and sturdy manhood, nor a gentler, purer, or more lovable womanhood, than have prevailed among those peoples who have imbibed the principles of the Calvinistic creed, with its commingled elements of granitic strength and stability, and of supreme, because divine, tenderness and grace." ⁸⁴

"The best models"

To the unequalled excellence of the Calvinistic type of character, the Encyclopædia Britannica ⁸⁵ bears unwilling witness. In its prejudiced article on "Predestination" it "feels bound in justice to make this remark," that Calvinists have been "the highest honor of their own ages and the best models for imitation for every succeeding age."

"Monumental marble"

Said Henry Ward Beecher, in one of the sermons of his prime: "Men may talk as much as they please against the Calvinists and Puritans and Presbyterians, but you will find when they want to make an investment they have no objection to Calvinism or Puritanism or Presbyterianism. They know that where these systems prevail, where the doctrine of men's obligation to God and man is taught and practiced, there their capital may be safely invested." "They tell us," he continues, "that Calvinism plies men with hammer and with chisel. It does; and the result is monumental marble. Other systems leave men soft and dirty; Calvinism makes them of white marble, to endure forever."

⁸⁴ Wilson, Theology of Modern Literature, p. 278.

⁸⁵ Early edition, quoted in Smyth's Ecclesiastical Republicanism, p. 310.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The vast knowledge and piercing insight of Thomas Carlyle none will dispute. His mature conclusion, after a lifetime of historical and biographical study, was that "Calvinism had produced in all countries in which it really dominated a definite type of character and conception of morals which was the noblest that had yet appeared in the world."⁸⁶

*"Noblest
in the world"*

A review of the peoples and communities whose character Calvinism has molded will attest the truth of Carlyle's conclusion.

IN ENGLAND

Consider that noble body of English Calvinists whose insistence upon a purer form of worship and a purer life won for them the nickname,

The English Puritans

⁸⁶ W. E. H. Lecky, The Map of Life (1900), p. 51.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Puritans, "perhaps the most remarkable body of men," says Macaulay, "which the world has ever produced."³⁷ Out of their "impassioned Calvinism," as Taine describes their faith, sprang their adoring love and reverence for God. Sovereign in right and in fact He was to them. "To know Him, to serve Him, to enjoy Him," says Macaulay, "was with them the great end of existence."³⁸

"This was all their care,
'To stand approved in sight of God, tho' worlds Judged them perverse."

"Their theory of life," says Bayne, "was that man's chief end is not to amuse or to be amused, not to create or experience sensation, but to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever."³⁹ They were men of "celestial purpose, of hallowed imagination, of faith in the Unseen, the Eternal, the Divine."

*The Puritan
conscience*

Unsympathetic and prejudiced as Taine was, a skeptic in religion, though a genius in letters and the greatest historian of English literature, he cannot but wonder at the elevation and energy of the Puritan conscience. "Strict in every ³⁷ Essay on Milton.

³⁸ Ibid.

³⁹ English Puritanism, Introduction, p. 65.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

duty," he describes it "attentive to the least requirements; disdaining the equivocations of worldly morality, inexhaustible in patience, courage, sacrifice; enthroning purity on the domestic hearth, truth in the tribunal, probity in the counting-house, and labor in the workshop."⁴⁰ In his History of the English People, Green marks with admiration their "implicit obedience to the divine will alone," their "moral grandeur," their "manly purity."

Army life is notoriously a school of vice. It is the crucial test of morals and religion. But the Puritan army has been the wonder of the world as well for its moral purity as its invincible valor. Says Taine, "a perfect Christian made a perfect soldier." Through all that army breathed the martyr spirit of their creed. Of their own accord they put their lives in jeopardy for the liberties and religion of England. Oliver Cromwell, their leader, Goldwin Smith pronounces "the greatest single force ever directed to a moral purpose." "Upon the solid rock of Calvinistic faith," says Morley, "Cromwell had established himself."⁴¹ Upon the same rock his soldiers had planted

*The Puritan
army*

⁴⁰ History of English Literature (Alden), vol. 1, p. 473.

⁴¹ "Oliver Cromwell," The Century Magazine, December, 1899.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

themselves. The result was an army whose equal for purity and heroism the world has never seen.

*"Quit you like men,
be strong"*

"It never found," says Macaulay, "either in the British Islands or on the Continent, an enemy who could stand its onset. In England, Scotland, Ireland, Flanders, the Puritan warriors, often surrounded by difficulties, sometimes contending against threefold odds, not only never failed to conquer but never failed to destroy and break in pieces whatever force was opposed to them. They at length came to regard the day of battle as a day of certain triumph, and marched against the most renowned battalions of Europe with disdainful confidence. Even the banished Cavaliers felt an emotion of national pride when they saw a brigade of their countrymen, outnumbered by foes and abandoned by friends, drive before it in headlong rout the finest infantry of Spain, and force a passage into a counterscarp which had just been pronounced impregnable by the ablest of the Marshals of France."⁴²

*Chief
distinction*

"But that which chiefly distinguished the army of Cromwell from other armies," says Macaulay, "was the austere morality and the fear of God ⁴² History of England, vol. 1, p. 119.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

which pervaded all ranks. It is acknowledged by the most zealous Royalists that, in that singular camp, no oath was heard, no drunkenness or gambling was seen, and that, during the long dominion of the soldiery, the property of the peaceable citizens and the honor of woman were held sacred. No servant girl complained of the rough gallantry of the redcoats. Not an ounce of plate was taken from the shops of the goldsmiths.”⁴³ Says Taine: “They raised the national morality, as they had saved the national liberty.”⁴⁴

But a sterner test than that of war awaited the Calvinistic warriors, and a yet nobler proof they were to give of the unrivaled strength of a Calvinistic manhood. The Protectorate having come to an end, the army was dissolved. The old veterans were turned loose to shift for themselves amid the myriad temptations of that seventeenth century England, where beggary was a recognized and popular profession, where the police machinery even of the metropolis was “utterly contemptible,”⁴⁵ and where theft and robbery offered to every able-bodied man a safe

“Tried with fire”

⁴³ History of England, vol. 1, p. 119.

⁴⁴ History of English Literature (Alden), vol. 1, p. 482.

⁴⁵ History of England, vol. 1, p. 329.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

and easy means of support. But though disbanded suddenly, and without resources, "they did not bring," says Taine, "a single recruit to the vagabonds and bandits." ⁴⁶ "Fifty thousand veterans," says Macaulay, "accustomed to the profession of arms, were at once thrown on the world: and experience seemed to warrant the belief that this change would produce much misery and crime, that the discharged veterans would be seen begging in every street, or that they would be driven by hunger to pillage. But no such result followed. In a few months there remained not a trace that the most formidable army in the world had just been absorbed into the mass of the community. The Royalists themselves confessed that in every department of honest industry the discarded warriors prospered beyond other men, that none was charged with any theft or robbery, that none was heard to ask an alms, and that if a baker, a mason, or a waggoner attracted notice by his diligence and sobriety, he was in all probability one of Oliver's old soldiers." ⁴⁷

"Coming forth as gold"

Historical demonstration

The above remarkable narrative, which from first to last we have sketched as far as possible in ⁴⁶ History of English Literature (Alden), vol. 1, p. 482.

⁴⁷ History of England, vol. 1, p. 147.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

the very words of eminent and trustworthy authors, is a striking demonstration from history of the supreme character-making power of Calvinism. The picture here presented of the character of the Puritans is in accord with later historical investigations. Of the two admirable lives of Cromwell issued in 1900, an able reviewer says: "In both authors the Puritan character stands out towering above the age that gave it birth, and an inspiration and an ideal to all ages that follow after." Says Georgia Harkness, "Calvinistic doctrine, Calvinistic plainness of living, Calvinistic devotion to duty, Calvinistic simplicity of worship, Calvinistic loyalty to the Bible, Calvinistic reliance upon God, Calvinistic love of liberty—all these were common to the various strains we group together and call Puritan. Without Calvin, there would have been no Puritanism."⁴⁸

But in producing the Puritans, Calvinism has not only proved its power, it has laid the modern world under what Macaulay rightly terms "inestimable obligations,"⁴⁹ Those English Calvinists did not labor and die for themselves alone.

⁴⁸ John Calvin: The Man and His Ethics (1931), p. 256. Harper & Brothers, publishers.

⁴⁹ Essay on Milton.

"Inestimable obligations"

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

They stood in the breach for all succeeding generations.

Human liberty Said Professor John Fiske, the profoundest philosopher as he was the finest literary artist among the historical writers of America: "It is not too much to say that in the seventeenth century the entire political future of mankind was staked upon the questions that were at issue in England. Had it not been for the Puritans, political liberty would probably have disappeared from the world. If ever there were men who laid down their lives in the cause of all mankind, it was those grim old Ironsides, whose watch-words were texts of Holy Writ, whose battle-cries were hymns of praise."⁵⁰

Since the Genevan reformer was "incontestably the father of the English Puritans,"⁵¹ no man can deny the justice of Fiske's conclusion that "it would be hard to overrate the debt which mankind owe to Calvin."

Anglo-Saxon Protestantism But political liberty is only a part of our Puritan heritage. Says Bancroft: "That the English people became Protestant is due to the Puritans."⁵² The significance of this fact is beyond ⁵⁰ The Beginnings of New England, pp. 37, 51.

⁵¹ Dyer, Modern Europe, vol. II, p. 130.

⁵² History of the United States, vol. I, p. 289.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

computation. English Protestantism, with its open Bible, its spiritual and intellectual freedom, meant the Protestantism not only of the American colonies, but of that virile and multiplying race which for three and a half centuries has been carrying the Anglo-Saxon language, religion, and institutions into all the world.

As the Puritans saved England to Protestantism, so the Calvinists in general saved Protestantism to the world. "Whatever was the cause," says Froude, "the Calvinists were the only fighting Protestants. It was they whose faith gave them courage to stand up for the Reformation, and but for them the Reformation would have been crushed."

A third "inestimable obligation" we should never forget. Says Green: "Home, as we conceive it now, was the creation of the Puritan."⁵⁸ In an age when woman was the slave, the idol, or the toy of man; when adultery was a jest and indecency a fashion; when even in the domestic circle the worst vices were practiced, then it was that Calvinism, by its moral purity, its sanctification of the marriage covenant as the symbol of the believer's relation to Christ, its belief in the

The Christian home

⁵⁸ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 414.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

sublime possibilities of every individual, woman and child as well as man, created out of a corrupt society that shrine of affection, that school of virtue, that radiant centre of every holy influence, the Christian home.

Summary Of such beneficent and lasting products of Puritanism, Lowell might well have been thinking when he declared that "the embodiment in human institutions of truths uttered by the Son of man eighteen centuries ago was to be mainly the work of Puritan thought and Puritan self-devotion."⁵⁴ Surely it should stop the mouths of the detractors of Calvinism to remember that from men of that creed we inherit, as the fruit of their blood and toil, their prayers and teachings, our civil liberty, our Protestant faith, our Christian homes.

*Calvinism
and Christian
civilization* The thoughtful reader, noting that these three blessings lie at the root of all that is best and greatest in the modern world, may be startled at the implied claim that our present Christian civilization is but the fruitage of Calvinism. Yet it is even so. The historian Green, of the Episcopal Church of England, states both the fact and its explanation when he deliberately declares:

⁵⁴ Lowell's Prose Works, vol. II, p. 2.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

"It is in Calvinism that the modern world strikes its roots; for it was Calvinism that first revealed the worth and dignity of man." ⁵⁵

IN HOLLAND

Another glorious chapter in the history of Calvinism and humanity, though written in blood, is the record of the long struggle of the Hollanders for civil and religious freedom against the gigantic power of Spain. For eighty years the strongest nation in the world labored with all its might to crush well-nigh the smallest, and failed. Says Douglas Campbell, in his massive and masterly work, The Puritan in Holland, England, and America: "The Puritans of Holland battled for their liberties during four fifths of a century, facing not alone the bravest and best-trained soldiers of the age, but flames, the gibbet, flood, siege, pestilence, and famine. Every atrocity that religious fanaticism could invent, every horror that ever followed in the train of war, swept over and desolated their land." ⁵⁶ Holland was made a spectacle to all nations by her sufferings, and surpassed all other Christian communities in the number and steadfastness of

A bright and bloody chapter

⁵⁵ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 114.

⁵⁶ Vol. I, p. 133.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

her martyrs.⁵⁷ The Duke of Alva boasted that within the short space of five years he had delivered 18,600 heretics to the executioner. "The scaffold," says Motley, "had its daily victims, but did not make a single convert. . . . There were men who dared and suffered as much as men can dare and suffer in this world, and for the noblest cause that can inspire humanity." His pages picture to us "the heroism with which men took each other by the hand and walked into the flames, or with which women sang a song of triumph while the grave-digger was shovelling the earth upon their living faces."

A thrilling example

In the siege of Leyden we have a thrilling example of their sufferings and heroism. Three months after the commencement of the siege the food supply was exhausted. A fearful famine began to rage. For seven weeks the inhabitants had no bread to eat and multitudes perished of hunger. On the heels of the famine came the plague or black death, which carried off a third part of the citizens. The apparently doomed survivors subsisted on dogs and cats. To the summons to surrender, they replied: "As long as you hear the mew of a cat or the bark of a dog you may know that the city holds out. And when all have perished but ourselves, we will devour our left arms, retaining our right to defend our women, our liberty, and our religion against the foreign tyrant." When at last relief came they were almost starved to death. They could scarcely drag themselves along. Yet all to a man staggered or crawled as best they could to the house of prayer. There on their knees they gave thanks to God. But when they tried to utter their gratitude in psalms of praise they were almost voiceless, for there was no strength left in them, and the tones of their song died away in grateful sobbing and weeping.

⁵⁷ The Universal Cyclopaedia, article "Calvinism."

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

In that awful and protracted struggle, which Campbell pronounces "a war unparalleled in the history of arms," the Dutch patriots had their feet planted on that rock on which Cromwell and his Ironsides in the next century established themselves—"the solid rock of Calvinistic faith." "Calvinism," says Bancroft, himself ecclesiastically allied in no way with that faith, "inspired Holland with a heroic enthusiasm." None but "zealous Calvinists," as Campbell calls them, could have suffered and endured and fought and wrought as they did. "In the moral warfare for freedom," says Bancroft, "their creed

"In hoc vince"

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

was a part of their army and their most faithful ally in the battle.”⁵⁸ This it was, as Motley has already told us, that “inspired them with a contempt for toil, danger, and death which enabled them to accomplish things almost supernatural.”

*William
the Silent*

The illustrious Dutch leader, William the Silent, Prince of Orange, though reared in another faith, was forced by the intensity of his trials and the immensity of his responsibilities to flee to Calvinism for rest and refuge. In its great Scripture doctrines of the divine sovereignty and government his suffering soul found peace and strength. He became a devout Calvinist; and “from this time forth,” says Motley, “he began calmly to rely upon God’s Providence in all the emergencies of his eventful life.”⁵⁹

*Calvinistic
morality*

The Calvinistic conscience was as much in evidence among the Dutch as among the English Puritans. Says an Italian contemporary, “They hold adultery in horror.” “They dispensed exact justice,” says Campbell, “to poor and rich alike, cared for the unfortunate, and frowned on idleness and vice.” “No one ever questioned their integrity. Public honesty is of later growth than that of individuals, men in a body often performing acts which singly they would condemn; but even here Holland has no superior in history. Throughout her long war with Spain, the national credit stood unimpaired. The towns, when besieged, issued bonds which often were sold at a large discount, and men were found who, as in later times among ourselves, urged that the purchasers should only receive the money they had paid. No such counsels, however, prevailed in a single instance. The debts of the towns, like those of the State, were invariably paid in full.”⁶⁰

⁵⁸ History of the United States, vol. 1, p. 464.

⁵⁹ Rise of the Dutch Republic, vol. 1, p. 699.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

Of the results to civilization and humanity of that momentous conflict, which, in the strength of their creed, the Dutch Calvinists fought and won, we shall submit three brief summaries, each by an acknowledged master of historical learning. Results

Says Campbell: “Out from this war of eighty years’ duration emerged a republic, for two centuries the greatest in the world, a republic which was the instructor of the world in art, and whose corner-stone was religious toleration for all mankind.”⁶¹ Campbell’s statement

The above solid historical fact effectually disposes of the theory that Calvinism makes men A theory exploded

⁶⁰ The Puritan in Holland, England, and America, vol. 1, pp. 87, 171.

⁶¹ Ibid., p. 133.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

haters of art or persecutors of their fellows. Whatever share Calvinists have had in the mistakes and superstitions of their age and race cannot be charged to their theological tenets. The Calvinistic zeal of the Dutch is beyond question, yet they burned no witches, they led the world in art, and before William Penn was born, taught and practiced the widest religious toleration. "In freedom of conscience," says Bancroft, "they were the light of the world."⁸² The true father of modern religious liberty was the immortal Dutch Calvinist, William the Silent.

Motley's verdict

Motley's deliberate verdict is as follows: "Few strides more gigantic have been taken in the march of humanity than those by which a parcel of outlying provinces in the north of Europe exchanged slavery to a foreign despotism and to the Holy Inquisition for the position of a self-governing commonwealth, in the front rank of contemporary powers, and in many respects the foremost of the world. It is impossible to calculate the amount of benefit rendered to civilization by the example of the Dutch Republic."⁸³

⁸² History of the United States, vol. x, p. 58.

⁸³ The United Netherlands, vol. iv, p. 549.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The following is Bancroft's estimate of what Calvinistic Holland has done for the world: "Of all the branches of the Germanic family that nation has endured the most and wrought the most in favor of liberty of conscience, liberty of commerce, and liberty in the State. For three generations the best interests of mankind were abandoned to its keeping; and to uphold the highest objects of spiritual life, its merchants, land holders, and traders so teemed with heroes and martyrs that they tired out brute force, and tyranny, and death itself, and from war educed life and hope for coming ages." ⁶⁴ Bancroft's estimate

Here, then, from history, we have another demonstration of the unequalled energizing and ennobling power of Calvinism. Above all the other doctrinal systems known to man, history crowns Calvinism as the creed of saints and heroes. To its divine vitality and fruitfulness the modern world owes a debt of gratitude, which slowly in recent years it is beginning to recognize, but can never pay. Another demonstration

IN FRANCE

In France the Calvinists were called Huguenots. The character of the Huguenots the world The Huguenots

⁶⁴ History of the United States, vol. x, p. 58.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

knows. Their moral purity and heroism, whether persecuted at home or exiled abroad, has been the wonder of both friend and foe. "Their history," says the Encyclopædia Britannica,⁶⁵ "is a standing marvel, illustrating the abiding power of strong religious convictions." "The account of their endurance," it declares, "is amongst the most remarkable and heroic records of religious history." According to the great historian Lecky, himself a cold-blooded rationalist, the Huguenots were "the most solid, the most modest, the most virtuous, the most generally enlightened element in the French nation."⁶⁶

The furious persecution that raged against them, of which the massacre of St. Bartholomew was a part and a sample, destroyed or exiled hundreds of thousands of Huguenots. The loss to France was irreparable. "It prepared the way," says Lecky, "for the inevitable degradation of the national character and removed the last serious bulwark that might have broken the force of that torrent of skepticism and vice, which, a century later, laid prostrate in merited ruin, both the altar and the throne."

⁶⁵ Article "Huguenots," in early edition.

⁶⁶ England in the Eighteenth Century, vol. 1, pp. 264, 265.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

"Looking back," says an able writer, "at their sufferings, at the purity, self-denial, honesty, and industry of their lives, and at the devotion with which they adhered to religious duty and the worship of God, we cannot fail to regard them as amongst the truest, greatest, and worthiest heroes of their age. In France they were the only men who were willing to die rather than forsake the worship of God according to the Scriptures and conscience."⁶⁷

To be "honest as a Huguenot" became a proverb, signalizing the highest reach of integrity. This quality, which is essential in the merchant who deals with foreigners whom he never sees, so characterized the business transactions of the Huguenots that the foreign trade of the country fell almost entirely into their hands.⁶⁸

The eminent English writer, Samuel Smiles, known to thousands of Americans as the author of Self-Help, states that while the Huguenots were stigmatized in the contemporary literature of their enemies as "heretics," "atheists," "blasphemers," "monsters vomited forth of hell," not one word is to be found in these writings in im-

"Honest as a Huguenot"

Eloquent silence

⁶⁷ McFetridge, Calvinism in History, p. 122.

⁶⁸ Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 134.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

peachment of their morality and integrity. "The silence of their enemies on this point," says Smiles, "is perhaps the most eloquent testimony in their favor."⁶⁶

The tree known by its fruits

In a footnote, Smiles makes a comment which is of especial interest, coming from a man so distinguished for accuracy and sound judgment, and who, so far as we can learn, was committed in no way to the cause of Calvinism. "What the Puritan was in England," he says, "and the Covenanter in Scotland, that the Huguenot was in France; and that the system of Calvin should have developed precisely the same kind of men in these three several countries affords a remarkable illustration of the power of religious training in the formation of character."⁷⁰ Puritans, Huguenots, Covenanters! What a record and roll call! What other creed in Christendom can show such a marvelous fruitage of purity and heroism as these historic names represent?

What made the Huguenots to differ from the rest of French Christendom? They were of the same country, the same race, the same natural traits and peculiarities, oftentimes of the same ⁶⁶ Smiles, The Huguenots, p. 134.

⁷⁰ Ibid., p. 134, note.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

household. What made the difference? Let history answer: "the system of Calvin."

Near the middle of the seventeenth century a Roman Catholic Bishop and teacher of theology, named Jansen, published an exposition of the works of St. Augustine, the greatest of the Church fathers. Augustine's doctrines of sin, sovereignty, predestination, and free grace, were the same as those taught eleven centuries later by Calvin, and four centuries earlier, as we believe, by Paul. To quote a common saying, Paul begat Augustine, and Augustine begat Calvin.

*Jansen's
Augustine*

Jansen's book was prohibited by a decree of the Inquisition, and condemned as heretical by the Pope. But it found its way into many hands. Especially at Port Royal, a Roman Catholic community and religious retreat not far from Paris, it was ardently studied and its doctrines warmly embraced. Immediately Port Royal became a theological storm-centre, the object of Jesuit hate and intrigue. After years of vicissitude and trial it was at last suppressed by the Papal power, but not till Calvinism had borne its characteristic fruit, and made Port Royal the synonym to succeeding ages of purity and intelligence.

The Port Royal Calvinists

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Renan's testimony

Ernest Renan, the well-known author, scholar, scientist, and Member of the French Academy, was himself a rationalist, yet he calls St. Cyran, the Jansenist leader of the Port Royal school of thought, "the Calvin who took in hand the cause of God, to restore the faith of St. Paul and Augustine." "This school," he says, "was unequaled in the greatness of the characters it formed. Nowhere else have been seen so many brave and loyal spirits devoted absolutely to their ideal of righteousness. Port Royal rises in the midst of the seventeenth century like a triumphal column, a temple to manliness and truth."⁷¹

IN NEW ENGLAND

The New England Puritans

The sterling character of the Calvinists who settled New England has become a proverb. Puritans they were in fact as well as name. They reared their children to fear God, obey their parents, speak the truth, and practice industry and temperance. "One might dwell there from year to year," said a contemporary writer, "and not see a drunkard, or hear an oath, or meet a beggar." The consequence was universal health. The average duration of life in New England as compared with Europe was doubled. Of all who ⁷¹ Studies in Religious History and Criticism, pp. 424, 425.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

were born into the world more than two in ten, full four in nineteen, attained the age of seventy. Of those who lived beyond ninety the proportion as compared with European tables of longevity was still more remarkable.⁷²

Their religion was their life. It governed all their thoughts and relations. Beasts as well as men felt its influence. Cruelty to animals was a civil offense. In the humanity of their criminal laws they were two centuries ahead of their times.⁷³ In all their records Bancroft could find no example of divorce, an evidence of that Calvinistic conscience which, as Taine has told us, "enthroned purity on the domestic hearth."

The mistakes and failings which they shared in common with their age are as nothing in comparison with their virtues. "Their transient persecutions in America," says Bancroft, "were in self-defense, and were no more than a train of mists hovering of an autumn morning over the channel of a fine river that diffused freshness and fertility wherever it wound."⁷⁴

The Puritans of New England are a characteristic example of the Calvinistic spirit of intelli-

Failings vs. virtues

*Calvinism
and free inquiry*

⁷² History of the United States, vol. 1, p. 467.

⁷³ Ibid., p. 465.

⁷⁴ Ibid., p. 464.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

gence and free inquiry. "Of all contemporary sects," says Bancroft, "they were the most free from credulity." ⁷⁵ The Pilgrim Fathers he pronounces "Calvinists in their faith according to the strictest system," and says of them, "they renounced all attachment to human authority and reserved an entire and perpetual liberty of forming their principles and practice from the light that inquiry might shed upon their minds." ⁷⁶ In this they but obeyed the impulse of their creed and the example of their spiritual father, Calvin, whom the same author describes as "pushing free inquiry to its utmost verge, and yet valuing inquiry solely as the means of arriving at fixed conclusions." ⁷⁷ It was in Calvinistic Holland, according to Smiles, that freedom of inquiry found its chief European centre. ⁷⁸

Intellectual superiority

In his famous and profound work, the History of Civilization, Buckle, himself the adherent of no religious creed, remarks upon "the inquisitive spirit which has always accompanied Calvinism." ⁷⁹ "The professors of Calvinism," he says, "are more likely to acquire habits of independent ⁷⁵ History of the United States, vol. 1, p. 463.

⁷⁶ Ibid., p. 300.

⁷⁷ Miscellanies, p. 407.

⁷⁸ The Huguenots, p. 177.

⁷⁹ Vol. 1, p. 614.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

thinking than those of Arminianism.”⁸⁰ This would seem a safe inference from an admitted historical fact which Buckle thus states: “The most profound thinkers have been on the Calvinistic side; and it is interesting to observe that this superiority of thought on the part of the Calvinists existed from the beginning.”⁸¹ Regarding the grounds of the divine choice, Matthew Arnold, the trained student of life and history whose sympathies were not with Calvinism, frankly says: “In rebutting the Arminian theory, the Calvinists are in accordance with historical truth and with the real march of human affairs.”⁸² The historian Froude, himself held by no trammels of sect or party, unhesitatingly affirms that “Calvinism is nearer to the facts, facts which no casuistry can explain away.”⁸³ We quote in this connection the acknowledgment of an able and distinguished leader of American Methodism. Says Dr. Curry: “We concede to the Calvinistic churches the honor of having all along directed the best thinking of the country.”

This historic and habitual superiority of Calvinists in the realm of intellect is no accident. It How explained

⁸⁰ Ibid., p. 613.

⁸¹ Ibid., p. 613, note.

⁸² St. Paul and Protestantism, p. 21.

⁸³ Short Studies on Great Subjects, pp. 11, 12.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

is the fruit of their creed. Even Ralph Waldo Emerson admits and admires the "mental concentration and force" inspired by Calvinism, and lauds the effect upon "character and intellect" of its "determination of thought on the eternal world." Calvinism possesses the mind with themes the most vital and majestic, "which soar into the immeasurable blue and open to thought celestial gates." It gives foundation, consecration, inspiration to human thought by its sublime doctrine of the unity, stability, and order of all things in God. The history of things heavenly and earthly, spiritual and material, past, present, and to come, is a great whole in which the Divine Will fulfills itself in its wisdom, power, and goodness, all things coming from God and returning to Him in the majesty of an imperial plan, formed before the foundation of the world, whose unfolding is Universal Providence, and whose goal and consummation is that

"One far-off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

*Most satisfying
and stimulating*

In this great and ennobling conception which takes us behind all that is phenomenal and bids us look at the eternities before and after our little day, every problem in theology, science, and philosophy finds its appropriate place, and to man's thinking faculty presents its inspiring challenge. Intellectually, Calvinism is at once the most satisfying and the most stimulating of creeds. It grapples with every difficulty. "It goes to the very root," says Morley, "of man's relations with the scheme of universal things."⁸² Matthew Arnold has truly said that while "Arminianism, in the practical man's fashion, is apt to scrape the surface of things only," the Calvinist's "seriousness, force, and fervency" are begotten of "Calvinism's perpetual conversance with deep things and with the Bible."⁸³ It makes us feel the pulsation of eternity in every moment of time. The believer in the Calvinistic system is no child playing with sandheaps on the seashore. He walks among hills and mountains. The themes of thought around him tower upward, Alps on Alps. His mental stature rises with his surroundings. He becomes a thoughtful being, communing with sublimities.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The elevation of the entire man sought and wrought by Calvinism is both cause and effect of the stress it has ever laid upon intelligence and education. Holding that man's chief end is to

*Intelligence
and education*

⁸² "Oliver Cromwell," The Century Magazine, December, 1899.

⁸³ St. Paul and Protestantism, pp. 21, 26.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

glorify God, it seeks the development and training of the whole manhood, intellectual as well as spiritual, as faculty for the attainment of this divinely appointed end. It is natural, therefore, that Calvinism's greatest expounder should have been also the greatest educational benefactor of the modern world. "We boast," says Bancroft, "of our common schools; Calvin was the father of popular education, the inventor of the system of free schools."⁸⁴ "Wherever Calvinism gained dominion," he says again, "it invoked intelligence for the people and in every parish planted the common school."⁸⁵

"It dreads no skeptic's puny hands,
While near the school the church-spire stands;
Nor fears the blinded bigot's rule
While near the church-spire stands the school."

*The heart of
Calvinism*

To the heroic survivors of the memorable siege of Leyden, William the Silent offered as a reward of their patriotism a reduction of taxes or the establishment of a school of learning. They chose the latter. That was the origin of the University of Leyden, renowned throughout the whole world, whose three-hundredth anniversary sixty-five years ago was celebrated with befitting solemnities. It stands a monument of that Calvinistic love of learning which, putting mind above money, has inspired countless generations of God-fearing Calvinists to pinch themselves to the bone to educate their children. "That any being with capacity for knowledge should die ignorant, this I call a tragedy." In this thrilling dictum of Carlyle, giving the word knowledge its highest reach and noblest purpose, throbs the heart of Calvinism.

⁸⁴ Miscellanies, p. 406.

⁸⁵ History of the United States, vol. II, p. 463.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

IN SCOTLAND

The best possible place to study the effects of a particular system of religion is a country in which for generations that system has had full sway and a free hand. To know the practical fruits of Roman Catholicism we should examine some country like Spain or Brazil, where for centuries Romanism was the one religion, unhelped and unhindered by other systems. There is one land in which Calvinism has long been practically the one religion. That land is Scotland.

The best studying ground

When Calvinism reached the Scotch people, they were vassals of the Romish church, priest-ridden, ignorant, wretched, degraded in body,

*The Scotch before
Calvinism*

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

mind, and morals. Buckle describes them as "filthy in their persons and in their homes," "poor and miserable," "excessively ignorant and excessively superstitious," "with superstition engrained into their characters." ⁸⁶

"The last shall be first"

Marvellous was the transformation when the great doctrines learned by Knox from the Bible in Scotland and more thoroughly at Geneva while sitting at the feet of Calvin, flashed in upon their minds. It was like the sun rising at midnight. Says Carlyle: "This that Knox did for his nation we may really call a resurrection as from death." "John Knox," says Froude, "was the one man without whom Scotland as the modern world has known it, would have had no existence." ⁸⁷ Knox made Calvinism the religion of Scotland, and Calvinism made Scotland the moral standard for the world. It is certainly a significant fact that in that country where there is the most of Calvinism there should be the least of crime; that of all the peoples of the world today that nation which is confessedly the most moral is also the most thoroughly Calvinistic; that in that land where Calvinism has had su-

⁸⁶ History of Civilization, vol. II, pp. 140, 145, 153.

⁸⁷ History of England, vol. X, p. 454.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

premost sway individual and national morality has reached its loftiest level.

Henry M. Stanley, the famous explorer, was one of the shrewdest judges of men. His insight into character and acuteness of observation were the means again and again of saving his own life and that of his men amid the wilds of heathenism. His travels brought him into close personal contact with missionaries of every church and nationality. Though no Scotsman himself, Stanley pronounced Scottish missionaries the best and most successful in the world; and their superiority he attributed to that supreme devotion to duty taught them in their Calvinistic homes.⁸⁸ Stanley's testimony

Stanley's testimony to the pre-eminent power and success of the missionaries trained by Calvinism reminds us of a similar tribute by the great historian D'Aubigné. "Luther," he says, "transformed princes into heroes of the faith; the reformation of Calvin was addressed particularly to the people, among whom it raised up martyrs until the time came when it was to send forth the spiritual conquerors of the world." "Spiritual conquerors of the world"

⁸⁸ For an exquisite and inspiring picture, drawn from life, of a Scottish Calvinistic home, see appendix to this chapter.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

it, transformations unknown to former times. And still at this very day, and now perhaps more than ever, it imparts to the men who accept it a spirit of power which makes them chosen instruments fitted to propagate truth, morality, and civilization to the ends of the earth."⁸⁹

Intellectual pre-eminence

Another significant fact. Scotland leads the world not only in the average morality, but also in the average intelligence of its people. This was to have been expected. Calvinism, as we have seen, elevates the whole man. The study of its comprehensive and logical system of doctrine is itself an unsurpassed mental discipline and stimulus. "The effect of familiarity with the Shorter Catechism upon the intellectual character of the Scottish peasantry," says Morley, "is one of the accepted commonplaces of history."⁹⁰ "In every branch of knowledge," says Buckle, "this once poor and ignorant people produced original and successful thinkers. What makes this the more remarkable is its complete contrast to their former state."⁹¹ Says Professor Fiske: "One need not fear contradiction in saying that no other people in modern times, in proportion ⁸⁹ Reformation in the Time of Calvin, vol. 1, preface, p. x.

⁹⁰ "Oliver Cromwell," The Century Magazine, February, 1900.

⁹¹ History of Civilization, vol. II, p. 253.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

to their numbers, have achieved so much in all departments of human activity as the people of Scotland have achieved. It would be superfluous to mention the pre-eminence of Scotland in the industrial arts, or to recount the glorious names in philosophy, in history, in poetry and romance, and in every department of science which have made Scotland illustrious for all future time."⁹² Professor Fiske proceeds to remark upon the patent fact that "this magnificent intellectual fruition" is the outcome of "Calvinistic orthodoxy."

Here then is a matter of profound significance, Summation that that land whose previous degradation was notorious, and which for three and a half centuries has been of all lands the most intensely and exclusively Calvinistic, today surpasses every other nation on the globe in both the intellectual and the moral glory of its people.

America has never produced a man of wider information, or more varied and brilliant gifts, than James Russell Lowell, the renowned diplomat, essayist, and poet. Lowell's connection from childhood was with a religious body not Calvinistic; yet he says: "If the Calvinistic churches Lowell's testimony

⁹² Beginnings of New England, p. 152.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

are to be judged by the results of their teaching upon character and conduct, as seen in Scotland and New England, then these churches are entitled to the highest praise. For the superiority is not solely in morality and intelligence, but in the prevalent sense of duty, in high ideals and inflexible principles, and, in short, in the consciousness of the spiritual world that is an eternal now with believers. After due allowance made for time-servers and hypocrites, I think there are among the Calvinists more godly men, each living 'As ever in his great Taskmaster's eye,' than in any other branch of the Christian Church."⁹⁸

*Review
and conclusion*

We have not space to pursue this branch of our subject further, though we have but dipped into it here and there. We have endeavored to try Calvinism by Christ's own test of fruitfulness, of practical results. We have examined its workings in many countries and amid conditions the most diverse and adverse. We have conducted the investigation under the guidance, not of Calvinistic partisans, but of authors and observers of world-wide reputation for ability and learning, whose prepossessions in almost every case would naturally be rather against than for Cal-

⁹⁸ Quoted by the Reformed Church Messenger, 1896, from a published sketch of Lowell.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

vinism. The conclusion to which they lead us represents the impartial verdict of history. That conclusion is, that as a character-builder, as a purifying, energizing, uplifting force in the life of men and nations, Calvinism stands supreme among the religious systems of the world. And further, since truth is in order to godliness, and the tree is to be judged by its fruit, we have here the historical demonstration that the Calvinistic is the truest creed of Christendom.

This tree, to adapt another's eloquent paragraph,⁹⁴ may have, to prejudiced eyes, a rough bark, a gnarled stem, and boughs twisted often into knotted shapes of ungraceful strength. But, remember, it is not a willow wand of yesterday. These boughs have wrestled with the storms of a thousand years; this stem has been wreathed with the red lightning and scarred by the thunderbolt; and all over its rough rind are the marks of the battle-axe and the bullet. This old oak has not the pliant grace and silky softness of a greenhouse plant, but it has a majesty above grace, and a grandeur beyond beauty. Its roots may be strangely contorted, but some of them are rich with the blood of glorious battlefields, some of ⁹⁴ T. Verner Moore, Power and Claims of a Calvinistic Literature, p. 35.

The old oak

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

them are clasped around the stakes of martyrs; some of them hidden in solitary cells and lonely libraries, where deep thinkers have mused and prayed, as in some apocalyptic Patmos; and its great tap-root runs back, until it twines in living and loving embrace around the cross of Calvary. Its boughs may be gnarled, but they hang clad with all that is richest and strongest in the civilization and Christianity of human history.

APPENDIX

A Scottish Presbyterian Home

We have never heard or read a sermon on family religion that impressed us more deeply than the following simple narrative of the religious home life of a humble Scottish family. It is taken from the first chapter of the autobiography of John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides:⁹⁵

“And so began in his early life that blessed custom of Family Prayer, morning and evening; which my father practised probably without one single omission till he lay on his deathbed, seventy-seven years of age; when, even to the last day of his life, a portion of Scripture was ⁹⁵ John G. Paton, Missionary to the New Hebrides, An Autobiography. Edited by his brother. Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

read, and his voice was heard softly joining in the Psalm, and his lips breathed the morning and evening Prayer, falling in sweet benediction on the heads of all his children, far away many of them over all the earth, but all meeting him there at the Throne of Grace. None of us can remember that any day ever passed unhallowed thus; no hurry for market, no rush to business, no arrival of friends or guests, no trouble or sorrow, no joy or excitement, ever prevented at least our kneeling around the family altar, while the high priest led our prayers to God, and offered himself and his children there.

“And blessed to others, as well as to ourselves, was the light of such example! I have heard that, in long after years, the worst woman in the village of Torthorwald, then leading an immoral life, but since changed by the grace of God, was known to declare, that the only thing that kept her from despair and from the hell of the suicide was when in the dark winter nights she crept close up underneath my father’s window, and heard him pleading in family worship that God would convert ‘the sinner from the error of wicked ways and polish him as a jewel for the Redeemer’s crown.’ ‘I felt,’ said she, ‘that I was a burden on that good man’s heart, and I knew that God would not disappoint him. That thought kept me out of hell, and at last led me to the only Saviour.'

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

"Each of us, from very early days, considered it no penalty, but a great joy, to go with our father to the church; the four miles were a treat to our young spirits, the company by the way was a fresh incitement, and occasionally some of the wonders of city life rewarded our eager eyes. A few other pious men and women of the best evangelical type went from the same parish to one or other favourite minister at Dumfries,—and when these God-fearing peasants 'forgathered' in the way to or from the house of God, we youngsters had sometimes rare glimpses of what Christian talk may be and ought to be. They went to the church, full of beautiful expectancy of spirit—their souls were on the outlook for God; they returned from the church, ready and even anxious to exchange ideas as to what they had heard and received of the things of life. I have to bear my testimony that religion was presented to us with a great deal of intellectual freshness, and that it did not repel us but kindled our spiritual interest. The talks which we heard were, however, genuine; not the make-believe of religious conversation, but the sincere outcome of their own personalities. That, perhaps, makes all the difference betwixt talk that attracts and talk that drives away.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

“We had, too, special Bible Readings on the Lord’s Day evening,—mother and children and visitors reading in turns, with fresh and interesting question, answer and exposition, all tending to impress us with the infinite grace of a God of love and mercy in the great gift of His dear Son Jesus, our Saviour. The Shorter Catechism was gone through regularly, each answering the question asked, till the whole had been explained, and its foundation in Scripture shown by the proof-texts adduced. It has been an amazing thing to me, occasionally to meet with men who blamed this ‘catechizing’ for giving them a distaste to religion; every one in all our circle thinks and feels exactly the opposite. It laid the solid rock-foundation of our religious life. After-years have given to these questions and their answers a deeper or a modified meaning, but none of us have ever once even dreamed of wishing that we had been otherwise trained. Of course, if the parents are not devout, sincere, and affectionate,—if the whole affair on both sides is taskwork, or worse, hypocritical and false,—results must be very different indeed!

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

"Oh, I can remember those happy Sabbath evenings; no blinds drawn, and shutters up, to keep out the sun from us, as some scandalously affirm; but a holy, happy, entirely human day, for a Christian father, mother, and children to spend. How my father would parade across and across our flag-floor, telling over the substance of the day's sermons to our dear mother, who, because of the great distance and because of her many living 'encumbrances,' got very seldom indeed to the church, but gladly embraced every chance, when there was prospect or promise of a 'lift' either way from some friendly gig! How he would entice us to help him to recall some idea or other, rewarding us when we got the length of 'taking notes' and reading them over on our return; how he would turn the talk ever so naturally to some Bible story, or some martyr reminiscence, or some happy allusion to the Pilgrim's Progress! And then it was quite a contest, which of us would get reading aloud, while all the rest listened, and father added here and there a happy thought, or illustration, or anecdote.

"Others must write and say what they will, and as they feel; but so must I. There were eleven of us brought up in a home like that; and never one of the eleven, boy or girl, man or woman, has been heard, or ever will be heard, saying that Sabbath was dull or wearisome for us, or suggesting that we have heard of or seen any way more likely than that for making the day of the Lord bright and blessed alike for parents and for children. But God help the homes where these things are done by force and not by love! The very discipline through which our father passed us was a kind of religion in itself. If anything really serious required to be punished, he retired first to his closet for prayer, and we boys got to understand that he was laying the whole matter before God; and that was the severest part of the punishment for me to bear. I could have defied any amount of mere penalty, but this spoke to my conscience as a message from God. We loved him all the more, when we saw how much it cost him to punish us; and, in truth, he had never very much of that kind of work to do upon any one of all the eleven—we were ruled by love far more than by fear.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

“Our home consisted of a ‘but’ and a ‘ben’ and a ‘mid-room,’ or chamber, called the ‘closet.’ The one end was my mother’s domain, and served all the purposes of dining-room and kitchen and parlor, besides containing two large wooden erections, called by our Scotch peasantry 'box-beds'; not holes in the wall, as in cities, but grand, big, airy beds, adorned with many-coloured counterpanes, and hung with natty curtains, showing the skill of the mistress of the house. The other end was my father's workshop, filled with five or six 'stocking frames,' whirring with the constant action of five or six pairs of busy hands and feet, and producing right genuine hosiery for the merchants at Hawick and Dumfries. The 'closet' was a very small apartment betwixt the other two, having room only for a bed, a little table, and a chair, with a diminutive window shedding diminutive light on the scene. This was the Sanctuary of that cottage home. Thither daily, and oftentimes a day, generally after each meal, we saw our father retire, and 'shut to the door'; and we children got to understand by a sort of spiritual instinct (for the thing was too sacred to be talked about) that prayers were being poured out there for us, as of old by the High Priest within the veil in the Most Holy Place. We occasionally heard the pathetic echoes of a trembling voice pleading as if for life, and we learned to slip out and in past that door on tiptoe, not to disturb the holy colloquy. The outside world might not know, but we knew, whence came that happy light as of a new-born smile that always was dawning on my father's face: it was a reflection from the Divine Presence, in the consciousness of which he lived. Never, in temple or cathedral, on mountain or in glen, can I hope to feel that the Lord God is more near, more visibly walking and talking with men, than under that humble cottage roof of thatch and oaken wattles. Though everything else in religion were by some unthinkable catastrophe to be swept out of memory, or blotted from my understanding, my soul would wander back to those early scenes, and shut itself up once again in that Sanctuary closet, and, hearing still the echoes of those cries to God, would hurl back all doubt with the victorious appeal, 'He walked with God, why may not I?'

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

"His happy partner, 'Wee Jen,' died in 1865, and he himself in 1868, having reached his seventy-seventh year,—an altogether beautiful and noble episode of human existence having been enacted, amid the humblest surroundings of a Scottish peasant's home, through the influence of their united love by the grace of God; and in this world, or in any world, all their children will rise up at mention of their names and call them blessed."

IV

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

(CONTINUED)

“Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.”—JOHN 8:32.

IV

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS (Continued)

AMERICA'S DEBT TO CALVINISM

IF THE average American citizen were asked, who was the founder of America, the true author of our giant Republic, he might be puzzled to answer. We can imagine his amazement at hearing the answer given to this question by the famous German historian, Ranke, one of the profoundest scholars of modern times. Says Ranke, "John Calvin was the virtual founder of America."

The founder of America

If this be true, every American should know it. Let us see.

At the time of the Revolution the estimated population of our country was 3,000,000. Of this number 900,000 were of Scotch or Scotch-Irish origin, 600,000 were Puritan English, while over 400,000 were of Dutch, German Reformed, and Huguenot descent.¹ That is to say, two thirds of our Revolutionary forefathers were

Early material of our republic

¹ W. H. Roberts, Proceedings Seventh General Council, 1899, p. 94.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

trained in the school of Calvin. Since these two thirds included the New England colonists and the Scotch-Irish immigrants, pronounced by the learned author of A History of American Christianity "the two most masterful races on the continent,"² "the two streams," as Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus said, "apparently most effective and important in the creation of great things, intellectual and spiritual, in our American life,"³ their preponderance in influence was even more marked than in numbers.

*Calvinism
and human rights*

Where learned they those immortal principles of the rights of man, of human liberty, equality, and self-government, on which they based our Republic, and which form today the distinctive glory of our American civilization? In the school of Calvin they learned them. There the modern world learned them. So history teaches.

A democratic religion

Says Bancroft: "Calvinism was revolutionary; it taught as a divine revelation the natural equality of man." "It is the essential tendency of Calvinism," says Doyle, the eminent Oxford scholar, "to destroy all distinctions of rank, and all claims to superiority which rest on wealth or political expediency.”⁴ “Calvinism is essentially democratic,”⁵ says Buckle. “A democratic and republican religion,”⁶ it is called by De Tocqueville, one of the ablest political writers of the century. “Calvinism opposed,” says Bancroft, “hereditary monarchy, aristocracy, and bondage.”⁷ John Richard Green, the author of the greatest history of the English people yet written, belonged to the Anglican Church. Yet he says: “It is in Calvinism that the modern world strikes its roots; for it was Calvinism that first revealed the worth and dignity of man. Called of God, and heir of heaven, the trader at his counter and the digger in his field suddenly rose into equality with the noble and the king.”⁸ “In that mighty elevation of the masses,” he says again, “which was embodied in the Calvinist doctrines of election and grace, lay the germs of the modern principles of human equality.”

² Leonard Woolsey Bacon, A History of American Christianity, (1900), p. 292.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews, February, 1901, p. 167.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

“The fruits of such a teaching,” continues Green, “soon showed themselves in a new attitude of the people. ‘Here,’ said Melville, over the

*Effect of Calvinistic
teaching illustrated*

⁴ The English in America, by J. A. Doyle, M.A., p. 9.

⁵ History of Civilization, vol. I, p. 669.

⁶ Democracy, vol. I, p. 384.

⁷ History of the United States, vol. II, p. 464.

⁸ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 114.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

grave of John Knox, 'here lies one who never feared the face of man'; and if Scotland still reverences the memory of the reformer, it is because at that grave her peasant and her trader learned to look in the face of nobles and kings and 'not be ashamed.' ”⁹ To the effect of these “doctrines of election and grace” taught by Knox, Froude also testified, saying: “His was the voice which taught the peasant of the Lothians that he was a free man, the equal in the sight of God with the proudest peer or prelate that had trampled on his forefathers. He it was that raised the poor Commons of his country . . . into men whom neither king, noble, nor priest could force again to submit to tyranny.”¹⁰

“Such faith is freedom”

The learned author of The United States as a Nation makes the following eloquent acknowledgment of the relation of the Calvinistic theology to liberty: It “inspires a resolute, almost defiant, freedom in those who deem themselves the subjects of God’s electing grace: in all things they are more than conquerors through the confidence that nothing shall be able to separate them from the love of God. No doctrine of the dignity of human nature, of the rights of ⁹ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 446.

¹⁰ History of England, vol. X, p. 457.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

man, of national liberty, of social equality, can create such a resolve for the freedom of the soul as this personal conviction of God's favoring and protecting sovereignty. He who has this faith feels he is compassed about with everlasting love, guided with everlasting strength; his will is the tempered steel that no fire can melt, no force can break. Such faith is freedom; and this spiritual freedom is the source and strength of all other freedom." ¹¹

Professor Fiske of Harvard, himself not ecclesiastically allied in any way with Calvinism, said: "The promulgation of Calvin's theology was one of the longest steps that mankind have taken toward personal freedom." "It was a religion," he said, "fit to inspire men who were to be called upon to fight for freedom." ¹²

"Calvinism," says Froude, "has inspired and maintained the bravest efforts ever made to break the yoke of unjust authority," ¹³

Before proving its power in the new world, Calvinism had fought and won the fight for freedom in the old. Not only in Scotland, as we have seen, but also in England and Holland it

Previous achievements

¹¹ p. 30, quoted by McFetridge.

¹² The Beginnings of New England, pp. 58, 59.

¹³ Short Studies on Great Subjects, p. 13.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

had challenged and conquered tyranny. To the Puritans, declares Hume, a hater of Calvinism, England owes "the whole freedom of her constitution."¹⁴ Says Motley, not ecclesiastically committed himself to Calvinism: "The battle that saved England to constitutional liberty was fought and won by Calvinists." Of Holland the same eminent historian says: "The Reformation had entered the Netherlands by the Walloon (Calvinistic) gate. The earliest and most eloquent preachers, the most impassioned converts, the sublimest martyrs, had lived, preached, fought, suffered, and died with the precepts of Calvin in their hearts. The fire which had consumed the last vestige of royal and sacerdotal despotism throughout the independent republic had been lighted by the hands of Calvinists."¹⁵

The makers, therefore, of free Holland, free England, free Scotland, were earlier pupils in the same school that molded the makers of free America.

Church
government

As might have been expected, Calvinism's revolutionary principles of liberty and equality found expression in a system of church government equally revolutionary. The people of ¹⁴ History of England, vol. v, p. 134.

¹⁵ The United Netherlands, vol. III, p. 120.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

Christ, it taught, were to be governed and ministered to, not by the appointees of any one man or set of men placed over them, but by pastors and officers elected by themselves.

With the principle and right of self-government embodied in this plan, we, in America at least, are now happily familiar. Four centuries ago it was so novel and revolutionary as to shake the whole civil, social, and religious world to its centre.

Revolutionary re-publicanism

“For all the past of time reveals
A bridal dawn of thunder-peals,
Wherever Thought hath wedded Fact.”

“The right exercised by each congregation of electing its own ministers was in itself,” says Bancroft, “a moral revolution. Religion was now with the people, not over the people.”¹⁸ Sir James Stephen, the eminent English statesman and jurist, for ten years Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, a member himself of the Anglican Church, in speaking of the ecclesiastical organization effected by the General Synod of France, which met May 25, 1559, says: “A great social revolution had thus been effected. Within the centre of the ¹⁸ History of the United States, vol. 1, p. 462.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

French monarchy, Calvin and his disciples had established a spiritual republic, and had solemnly recognized as the basis of it four principles—each germinant of results of the highest importance to the political commonwealth. These principles were, first, that the will of the people was the one legitimate source of the power of their rulers; secondly, that power was most properly delegated by the people to their rulers, by means of elections, in which every adult man might exercise the right of suffrage; thirdly, that in ecclesiastical government, the clergy and laity were entitled to an equal and co-ordinate authority; and, fourthly, that between the Church and State, no alliance, or mutual dependence, or other definite relation, necessarily or properly existed.”¹⁷ Calvin’s church organization Green calls “a Christian republic,” “a Christian state in which the true sovereign was not Pope or Bishop but the Christian man.”¹⁸

*Birth
of the modern world*

By its coronation of the individual man as sovereign, Calvin’s organization clashed not only with the rule of Pope and Bishop, but with all those despotic and aristocratic ideas and customs which had dominated and darkened the world for ages.

¹⁷ Lectures on the History of France, p. 415.

¹⁸ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 113.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

“And Freedom reared in that august sunrise
Her beautiful bold brow.”

“Presbytery agreeth as well with monarchy,” declared despotic King James, “as God and the devil.” Says Georgia Harkness, “Calvinism became, in theory and practice, the spiritual undergirding of resistance to tyranny.”¹⁹ The Calvinistic system, “the monarchs of that day,” says Bancroft, “with one consent and with instinctive judgment feared as republicanism.”²⁰ “As a vast and consecrated democracy,” says Green, “it stood in contrast with the whole social and political framework of the European nations.”²¹ It marked the opening of a new chapter in the history of humanity.

Had Calvin done nothing more than to make government of the people, by the people, for the people, a startling and triumphant reality in the earth, he would have deserved well of mankind. Says Bancroft, “More truly benevolent to

Benefactor of mankind

¹⁹ John Calvin: The Man and His Ethics (1931), p. 86. Henry Holt & Co., publishers.

²⁰ History of the United States, vol. II, p. 461.

²¹ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 114.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

the human race than Solon, more self-denying than Lycurgus, the genius of Calvin infused enduring elements into the institutions of Geneva and made it for the modern world the impregnable fortress of popular liberty, the fertile seed-plot of democracy.”²²

When this book with the above quotation was first written forty years ago, no one dreamed that the day would come when our Calvinistic ideals of government of, by, and for the people would be fiercely, and in wide areas victoriously, challenged. Thirty-five years ago Woodrow Wilson in Princeton University was teaching his classes that the ultimate universality of representative government was, so far as men could see, an assured fact. And only twenty years ago Lord Brice in his Modern Democracies declared in effect that representative government was likely to cover the earth. How different from these confident prophecies is the present reality! And how sorely needed today is our witness to, and how gloriously certain is the ultimate victory of, those God-given principles of civil and religious liberty which our Calvinistic forefathers fought for and won and which we shall never consent to see perish from the earth.

²² Miscellanies, p. 406.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The city of Geneva, in Switzerland, on the shores of Lake Geneva, called also Lake Lemman, was the home of Calvin. Here he had his church, which Knox, who came to Geneva, like ten thousand other Bible students from all parts of Europe, to sit an admiring pupil at Calvin's feet, pronounced "the most perfect school of Christ that ever was since the days of the Apostles."

Calvin's home

From Geneva his influence radiated into every corner of Christendom. "Frail in body, gigantic in intellect," Georgia Harkness describes him.²³ "Calvin's true home," as Schaff says, "was the Church of God. He broke through all national limitations. There was scarcely a monarch or statesman or scholar of his age with whom he did not come in contact. Every people of Europe was represented among his disciples. He helped to shape the religious character of churches and nations yet unborn. The Huguenots of France, the Protestants of Holland and Belgium, the Puritans and Independents of England and New England, the Presbyterians of Scotland and throughout the world, yea, we may say, the whole Anglo-Saxon race, in its prevailing religious character and institutions, bear the im-

Influence

²³ John Calvin: The Man and His Ethics (1931), p. vii.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

press of his genius, and show the power and tenacity of his doctrines and principles of government.”²⁴

*Calvinism
and America*

Those revolutionary principles of republican liberty and self-government, taught and embodied in the system of Calvin, were brought to America, and in this new land where they have borne so mighty a harvest were planted, by whose hands?—the hands of Calvinists. The vital relation of Calvin and Calvinism to the founding and free institutions of America, however strange in some ears the statement of Ranke may have sounded, is recognized and affirmed by historians of all lands and creeds.

*D'Au-bigné's
testimony*

Says D'Aubigné, whose History of the Reformation is a classic: “Calvin was the founder of the greatest of republics. The pilgrims who left their country in the reign of James I, and, landing on the barren soil of New England, founded populous and mighty colonies, were his sons, his direct and legitimate sons; and that American nation which we have seen growing so rapidly boasts as its father the humble Reformer on the shores of Lake Leman.”²⁵

²⁴ Creeds of Christendom, vol. 1, p. 444.

²⁵ Reformation in the Time of Calvin, vol. 1, p. 5.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The famous French critic and historian, Taine, holding no religious faith himself, yet declares of the Calvinists: "These men are the true heroes of England. They founded England, in spite of the corruption of the Stuarts, by the exercise of duty, by the practice of justice, by obstinate toil, by vindication of right, by resistance to oppression, by the conquest of liberty, by the repression of vice. They founded Scotland; they founded the United States; at this day they are, by their descendants, founding Australia and colonizing the world." ²⁶

*Taine's
testimony*

Says Motley: "In England the seeds of liberty, wrapped up in Calvinism and hoarded through many trying years, were at last destined to float over land and sea, and to bear largest harvests of temperate freedom for great commonwealths that were still unborn." ²⁷ "The Calvinists founded the commonwealths of England, of Holland, and of America." ²⁸ "To Calvinists," he says again, "more than to any other class of men, the political liberties of England, Holland, and America are due." ²⁹

*Motley's
testimony*

²⁶ History of English Literature, vol. II, p. 472 (as quoted by McPettridge).

²⁷ The United Netherlands, vol. III, p. 121.

²⁸ The United Netherlands, vol. IV, p. 548.

²⁹ Ibid., p. 547.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

*Schaff's
testimony*

Says Philip Schaff, the Origen of the modern world: "The principles of the Republic of the United States can be traced thro' the intervening link of Puritanism to Calvinism, which, with all its theological rigor, has been the chief educator of manly characters and promoter of constitutional freedom in modern times." ⁸⁰

*Choate's
testimony*

Says Rufus Choate, the great American lawyer, in his oration on "The Age of the Pilgrims, Our Heroic Period": "In the reign of Mary, from 1553 to 1558, a thousand learned Englishmen fled from the stake at home to the happier states of continental Protestantism. Of these, great numbers—I know not how many—came to Geneva. I ascribe to that five years in Geneva an influence which has changed the face of the world. I seem to myself to trace to it, as an influence on the English character, a new theology, new politics, another tone of character, the opening of another era of time and liberty. I seem to myself to trace to it the great civil war in England, the republican constitution framed in the cabin of the Mayflower, the theology of Jonathan Edwards, the battle of Bunker Hill, the Independence of America." ⁸¹

⁸⁰ Creeds of Christendom, p. 219.

⁸¹ Works of Rufus Choate, vol. 1, p. 378.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

The conclusions of the famous Spanish scholar, orator, and statesman, Emilio Castelar, at one time Professor of History in the University of Madrid, are of special interest and value. As a Roman Catholic, he hated Calvin and Calvinism. He says: "It was necessary for the republican movement of America that there should come a morality more austere than Luther's, the morality of Calvin, and a Church more democratic than the German, the Church of Geneva. The Anglo-Saxon democracy has for its only lineage a book of a primitive society—the Bible. It is the product of a severe theology learned by the few Christian fugitives in the gloomy cities of Holland and of Switzerland, where the morose shade of Calvin still wanders. . . . And it remains serenely in its grandeur, forming the most dignified, most moral, most enlightened and richest portion of the human race."³² One feels like asking Castelar how a fountain so bitter could send forth such sweet waters.

*Castelar's
testimony*

Says Bancroft: "The light of Calvin's genius shattered the mask of darkness which Superstition had held for centuries before the brow of Religion. Calvinism inspired its converts to cross

*Bancroft's
testimony*

³² Harper's Monthly, June and July, 1872.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

the Atlantic and sail away from the traditions of the Church, from hereditary power, from the sovereignty of earthly kings, and from all dominion but that of the Bible and such as arose from natural reason and equity. He that will not honor the memory and respect the influence of Calvin knows but little of the origin of American liberty.”²³

Invaluable training school Not only did Calvinism imbue its converts with the spirit of liberty, it gave them practical training in the rights and duties of freemen. Each Calvinistic congregation having largely an independent life of its own, and conducting its own affairs through officers of its own election, constituted, as Fiske affirms, “one of the most effective schools that has ever existed for training men in local self-government.”²⁴

Church government and character The influence of the doctrines of Calvinism upon character we have seen in a former chapter. How powerfully also its method of church government, especially in its fully developed Presbyterian form, tends to foster in the individual that high and self-respecting type of manhood which alone gives success and permanence ²³ Miscellanies, pp. 406, 407.

²⁴ The Beginnings of New England, p. 59.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

to free institutions is matter of history and observation.

For example, an English writer, of Episcopalian sympathies, Mr. Richard Heath, testifies to the excellent effect of the Presbyterian system where it has crossed the Scottish border and established itself in the northern shires of England: "The Northumbrian peasant is largely influenced by a form of Christianity that not only recognizes that he is a man, but that, without ceasing to be a laboring man, tending the sheep or following the plow, he can be chosen, and is chosen, and found worthy to be an elder of the church." He goes on to speak of "the superior educative power of the Presbyterian to the Church of England system, as seen in the higher form of manhood and womanhood of the people under its control. The reason is clear: the one is a democratic religion, the other the most aristocratic in the world."⁸⁵

Should any member of a Presbyterian church feel that injustice has been done him by the Session, through misapprehension or through any local or personal prejudice, he can appeal, if he will, to the Presbytery, and thence, if he will, to the Synod, and thence, if he will, to the General

Individual rights safeguarded

⁸⁵ R. E. Thompson, American Church History (1900), vol. vi, p. 293.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Assembly. The rights of the youngest, poorest, humblest member are thus safeguarded to the uttermost.

"Without an equal or a rival"

The well-nigh perfect manner in which justice, freedom, order, and all the ends of popular self-government are secured by the Presbyterian system of graded representative assemblies, with executive, legislative, and judicial functions, all distinct, yet all working together as component parts of a well-ordered whole, has won the admiration of thinking men of all creeds. Testimony from a remarkable source is that of the late able and distinguished Roman Catholic, Archbishop Hughes of New York: "Though it is my privilege," he wrote, "to regard the authority exercised by the General Assembly as usurpation, still I must say, with every man acquainted with the mode in which it is organized, that for the purposes of popular and political government its structure is little inferior to that of Congress itself. It acts on the principle of a radiating centre, and is without an equal or a rival among the other denominations of the country."⁸⁶

*Amazing
"coincidence"*

The striking similarity between the constitution of the Presbyterian Church and that of the ⁸⁶ Quoted by W. P. Breed in Presbyterians and the Revolution, p. 28.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

United States has excited much wondering comment. The Hon. W. C. Preston of South Carolina wrote: "Certainly it was the most remarkable and singular coincidence that the constitution of the Presbyterian Church should bear such a close and striking resemblance to the political constitution of our country."⁸⁷

Upon this "most remarkable and singular coincidence" a few facts from history may shed light. In Green's History of the English People we read, the reader remembering that kirk is Scotch for church: "The moral power which Knox created was to express itself through the ecclesiastical forms which had been devised by the genius of Calvin."⁸⁸ The new force of popular opinion was concentrated and formulated in an ordered system of Kirk-Sessions and Presbyteries and provincial Synods, while chosen delegates formed the General Assembly of the Kirk. In this organization of her churches Scotland saw herself for the first time the possessor of a really representative system, of a popular government. Not only did Presbyterianism bind Scotland together, as it had never been bound before, by its

The explanation

⁸⁷ Scotch and Irish Seeds, p. 346.

⁸⁸ More accurately, "which had been developed by the genius of Calvin from the principles laid down in Scripture."

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

administrative organization, but it called the people at large to a voice, and, as it turned out, a decisive voice, in the administration of affairs. No church constitution has proved in practice so democratic as that of Scotland. Its influence in raising the nation at large to a consciousness of its power was shown by the change which passed from the moment of its establishment over the face of Scotch history.”³⁰

*The
national model*

That was two centuries before the achievement of American independence. When, therefore, the fathers of our Republic sat down to frame a system of representative popular government, their task was not so difficult as some have imagined. They had a model to work by. As Chief Justice Tilghman says: “The framers of the Constitution of the United States borrowed very much of the form of our Republic from the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland.”

Summary

We see then that Calvinism furnished the foundation principles of our Republic; it supplied the best and largest part of the early material of our Republic; it served as the invaluable training school of our Republic; it furnished the model for the immortal constitution of our Re-

³⁰ History of the English People, vol. III, p. 447.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

public. It remains to show the leading part that Calvinism took in securing the national independence that guaranteed the life of our Republic.

The briefest statement will here suffice. The facts are undisputed. They are summed up in two sentences by Bancroft: "The Revolution of 1776, as far as it was affected by religion, was a Presbyterian measure. It was the natural outgrowth of the principles which the Presbyterianism of the Old World planted in her sons, the English Puritans, the Scotch Covenanters, the French Huguenots, the Dutch Calvinists, and the (Scotch-Irish) Presbyterians of Ulster."⁴⁰

As late as August, 1775, Thomas Jefferson said: "I would rather be in dependence on Great Britain, properly limited, than on any nation on earth, or than on no nation." Washington said in May, 1776: "When I took command of this army (June 1775) I abhorred the idea of independence." "The first voice raised in America," says Bancroft, "to destroy all connection with Great Britain came from the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians."⁴¹ The first Declaration of Independence, certainly the first body of resolutions to that effect, was sent forth by the Mecklenburg Assembly, in session at Charlotte, North Carolina, composed of twenty-seven stanch Calvinists, of whom nine were Presbyterian ruling elders and one a Presbyterian preacher.

⁴⁰ Quoted by W. H. Roberts, Proceedings of Seventh General Council, 1899, p. 95.

⁴¹ History of the United States, vol. x, p. 77.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

The deciding voice in Congress

When fourteen months later, Jefferson's Declaration was submitted to the Continental Congress, and that body hesitated and wavered, Dr. John Witherspoon, a Presbyterian preacher, the only clergyman in the Congress, the only minister of Jesus Christ whose name is graven on the pedestal of a civic statue on the American soil, arose and gave the deciding voice. "There is a tide," he said, "in the affairs of men. We perceive it now before us. To hesitate is to consent to our own slavery. That noble instrument should be subscribed this very morning by every pen in this house. Though these gray hairs must soon descend to the sepulchre, I would infinitely rather that they descend thither by the hand of the executioner than desert at this crisis the sacred cause of my country." John Witherspoon was a lineal descendant of John Knox.

*"The Presbyterian
rebellion"*

Witherspoon's spirit was shared by the whole body of American Presbyterians. So intense, universal, and aggressive was their zeal for liberty that the struggle of the colonists for independence was spoken of in England as "The Presbyterian Rebellion." An ardent colonial devotee of King George wrote home: "I fix all the blame of these extraordinary proceedings upon the Presbyterians. They have been the chief and principal instruments in all these flaming measures. They always do and ever will act against government from that restless and turbulent anti-monarchical spirit which has always distinguished them everywhere." ⁴² When news of "these extraordinary proceedings" reached England, Horace Walpole said in the English Parliament, "Cousin America has run off with a Presbyterian parson."

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

When war's thunders and lightnings began to roll and flash, the Presbyterians breasted the storm. "The members of that Church," says the author of the sixth volume of American Church History, "bore the brunt of the struggle for independence from the Hudson to the Savannah." ⁴³ Their military enthusiasm was like that of one of their own preachers, who, when the patriot's wadding gave out in a fight close by his

*The brunt
of the struggle*

⁴² W. P. Breed, Presbyterians and the Revolution, p. 49.

⁴³ R. E. Thompson, American Church History, vol. vi, p. 69.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

church, rushed into the building,—but let Bret Harte tell the story:

“They were left in the lurch
For the want of more wadding. He ran to the church, Broke the door, stripped the pews, and dashed out in the road
With his arms full of hymn-books, and threw down his load
At their feet. Then above all the shouting and shots
Rang his voice: ‘Put Watts into ’em; boys, give ’em
Watts.’
“And they did. That is all. Grasses spring, flowers blow
Pretty much as they did ninety-three years ago.
You may dig anywhere, and you’ll turn up a ball,
But not always a hero like this; and that’s all.”

*Victory
of the Shorter Catechism*

At Kings Mountain, where “the aspect of the war was changed and Cornwallis left no choice but to retreat,” “all six of the colonels in command save one were Presbyterian elders, and their troops were mustered from Presbyterian settlements. When we remember that Generals Morgan and Pickens, who won the equally pivotal battle of the Cowpens, were also Presbyterian elders, and that after his surrender at Saratoga, Burgoyne said to Morgan concerning ⁴⁴ Bancroft's History of the United States, vol. x, p. 340.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

his Scotch-Irish riflemen: "Sir, you have the finest regiment in the world"; when we remember that "more than one half of the officers and soldiers of the American army were Presbyterians,"⁴⁵ we can understand the statement of Dr. Elliott, editor of the Western organ of the Methodist Church, that "in achieving the liberties of the United States the Presbyterians of every class were foremost," and appreciate Dr. Hodge's remark that the Shorter Catechism fought through successfully the war of American Independence.

Had we space we could show how our boasted Education common-school system is indebted for its existence to that stream of influence which flowed from the Geneva of Calvin,⁴⁶ through Scotland⁴⁷ and Holland, to America, and how for the first two hundred years of our history almost every college and seminary of learning, and almost every academy and common school, was built and sustained by Calvinists. Said Gen. John ⁴⁵ Westminster Anniversary Addresses, p. 30.

⁴⁶ See Chap. III, pp. 95, 96.

⁴⁷ "Knox returned from Geneva fully impressed with the conviction that the education of the masses is the strongest bulwark of Protestantism and the surest foundation of a state." (The Puritan in Holland, England, and America, vol. II, p. 19, note.)

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Eaton, LL. D., Ex-United States Commissioner of Education: "The Presbyterians by universal consent stand for intelligence."

The Sabbath and the Family

We could show what an immeasurable influence the Presbyterian Church has exerted upon the national character through the superlative emphasis it has ever placed upon those two sacred institutions on which depend the purity and the permanence of our nation's life, the Sabbath and the Family. As Dr. Landrum, an eminent Baptist minister, said: "It is the conservator of the most valuable principles. It has the soundest scholarship. All denominations look to Presbyterianism for a wise leadership in all that pertains to the preservation of the Lord's Day, and to the preservation of the family."

Benevolence

We could show how pre-eminently great and rich have been the streams of benevolence by which the Presbyterian Church has blessed our own and other countries through its unequalled power to develop in its members the character elements that command success and the consecration that makes that success tributary to the service of God and our fellow men. Indeed certain modern economists, as Weber in his Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism, have discovered that Calvinism and capitalism in history have been closely linked together. Though meant as a criticism, and though Calvinism has no special relation to any economic system, yet this discovery is another proof of how Calvinism brings the whole of life under the divine Sovereignty. The sphere of industry and commerce belongs to God as does everything else, and the Calvinist feels it his duty to develop it to the utmost—for God. As a youth he learned from the Shorter Catechism that “The eighth commandment requireth the lawful procuring and furthering the wealth and outward estate of ourselves and others.” Our business, instead of being something profane, is our “calling” from God, our God-given task. “A calling,” says Calvin, “in Scripture means a lawful mode of life, for it has relation to God as calling us.” It is a part of our religion. Religiously we must practice such business virtues as industry, sobriety, frugality, honesty. This naturally tends to the amassing of wealth and helps to explain Dwight L. Moody’s well-known statement that if he needed $100,000 for some worthy religious enterprise, he would expect to secure $80,000 of it from the Presbyterians.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

We could show from history how nearly all the far-spreading continental reformations and Revivals of religion

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

revivals of religion, which from time to time have blessed not only America but Christendom, have been of Calvinistic origin, after the type of that first great Christian revival in Jerusalem under Peter, whose preaching embodied such bold Calvinism as "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."⁴⁸

National leadership

We could show how incalculable has been the service rendered the nation by the Presbyterian Church through its peculiar ability to develop moral and intellectual manhood, and thus fit men for responsibility and leadership. Professor Baldwin of the Yale Law School pronounced the Presbyterian "the most American Church," and Mr. Gladstone said she develops a "genuine individuality; the love of law combined with the love of freedom." The power and prominence of Presbyterians in civic and national life is so out of proportion to their numbers that the secular press has made it a matter of sharp and wondering comment. "In calling the roll of the great men of this nation," said Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, "the number of Presbyterian presidents, ⁴⁸ Acts 2:23.

THE CREED TESTED BY ITS FRUITS

of legislators and jurists, of authors and editors, teachers and merchants, has been vastly disproportionate to the membership of the Church.”⁴⁹ The Presbyterian precedence he justly describes as “this unique pre-eminence.” Ambassador Bayard declared that Presbyterianism stands for the best element of American greatness. Mr. Moody, whose shrewd views of men were only matched by his unexampled opportunities for observation, said of the Presbyterian Church: “That Church has the brains of the United States.”⁵⁰

The above facts of history and observation we have set forth, not to stimulate denominational vanity, but to fill us with gratitude to God for that past history and that present eminence which should be to every one of us above all to kindle in our hearts a holy enthusiasm for that divine system of truth, which, under God, has been the foremost factor in the making of America and the modern world.

“A vantage-ground for nobleness”;

⁴⁹ Westminster Anniversary Addresses, p. 254.

⁵⁰ Ibid., p. 314.

V

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

“As for you, ye thought evil against me: but God meant it unto good.”—GENESIS 50:20.

V

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

WE SHALL illustrate Calvinism and the Calvinistic point of view by a brief discussion of the twin doctrines of Predestination and Providence.

God is Sovereign. He reigns supreme in fact as well as in right. This universe to Him is not a surprise, a defeat, a failure, but a development of His eternal purpose. That purpose is predestination. That development is providence. The one is the all-wise predetermined plan in the mind of God; the other is the all-powerful execution of that plan in the administration of the universe

Predestination and providence

Says an able commentator and divine: "Calvinism, tho' it is often represented as a mere system of doctrine or of abstract dogmas having no practical bearing, is, in fact, a system of government—a method and form in which the divine power is put forth in the administration of the affairs of the universe. It is based on the idea that God rules; that He has a plan; that the plan is fixed and certain; that it does not depend on the fluctuations of the human will, on the caprice of the human heart, or on the contingen-

Method of divine government

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

cies and uncertainties of undetermined events in human affairs. It supposes that God is supreme; that He has authority; that He has a right to exercise dominion; that for the good of the universe that right should be exercised, and that infinite power is put forth only in accordance with a plan."

God has a plan

To suppose that God ever acts without a plan, in a purposeless, random way, is an impossible conception of the divine character. How does even a wise man act? He first determines upon the end he desires to attain, and then upon the best means of attaining it. Before the architect begins his edifice, he makes his drawings and forms his plans, even to the minutest details of construction. In the architect's brain the building stands complete in all its parts before a stone is laid. So with the merchant, the lawyer, the farmer, and all rational and intelligent men. Their activity is along the line of previously formed purposes, the fulfillment, so far as their finite capacities will allow, of preconceived plans. Our common sense, therefore, teaches us that in His government of this world which He has made God is sure to have His own definite purposes in view, and His own definite plans by which He will secure their fulfillment.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

It is also evident that these divine purposes and plans must include not some but all events, "whatsoever comes to pass,"¹ otherwise there would be some things coming to pass which He had not designed or expected or counted on—which is incredible, and which might defeat the purposes He had formed in reference to other things—which is equally incredible.

God's plan all-embracing

The control of the greater must include the control of the less, for not only are great things made up of little things, but history shows how the veriest trifles are continually proving the pivots on which momentous events revolve. The persistence of a spider nerved a despairing man to fresh exertions which shaped a nation's future. The God who predestinated the course of Scottish history must have planned and presided over the movements of the tiny insect that saved Robert Bruce from despair.

God is no absentee Deity, sitting outside the universe and seeing only the events that lift themselves like peaks above the common level. He is "everywhere present,"² "upholding, directing, disposing, and governing all creatures, actions, and things, from the greatest even to the least.”³ The affairs of the universe are controlled and guided, how? “According to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.”⁴ His all-embracing purpose or “decrees,” says the Catechism, He executeth “in the works of creation and providence.”⁵ That is to say, providence is God’s execution of His decrees; in other words, it is simply God’s universal and certain fulfillment of His predetermined purposes.

¹ Shorter Catechism, Question 7.

² Larger Catechism, Question 7.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Story of Joseph

While illustrations of this truth crowd the Scriptures, there is one inspired biography which holds and will ever hold the gaze of mankind, because in that life above any other recorded in history the presiding mind of God and the guiding hand of God are not only felt, but distinctly traceable. The story of Joseph is a picture in miniature of the divine method of government painted for us by the hand of inspiration. Here we have foreordination made familiar, and providence made palpable.

Illustration In the 42d chapter of Genesis we see the ten sons of Jacob, driven by stress of bitter famine into a foreign country, and there prostrating

³ Confession of Faith, chap. v, sec. 1.

⁴ Eph. 1:11.

⁵ Shorter Catechism, Question 8.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

themselves before their unknown brother, the all-powerful governor of the land, and dependent upon him for the means of life. Was this pre-eminence of Joseph over his brethren a mere accident of fortune? Did it just happen so? On the contrary, it was distinctly foretold by God to Joseph's family twenty-two years before through those two prophetic dreams of the eleven sheaves and the eleven stars that did him obeisance. It was simply the fulfillment of God's predetermined purpose, a fulfillment not through miracles, but through the orderly march of His providence.

In the 37th chapter we see the lad Joseph in the hands of his murderous brothers and begging with tears for his life. They refuse. They determine to kill him outright at once. At Reuben's suggestion they change their minds and decide to starve him to death in a pit. Reuben disappears, intending to return when his brethren have gone and rescue Joseph and restore him to his father. In his absence a merchant caravan passes by on its way to Egypt. They change their minds again and at Judah's suggestion determine to sell him as a slave to these traders. This they do, and Joseph is carried off to Egypt. Was the result of all these purposes and cross-purposes

Illustration

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

and changes of purpose accidental? Not so. That result was foreordained of God to fulfill a merciful purpose of His. As Joseph said twenty-two years later to his penitent brothers: "It was not you that sent me hither, but God; for God did send me before you to preserve life, to preserve you a posterity in the earth and to save your lives by a great deliverance."⁶ Thus Joseph's going to Egypt, though apparently fortuitous, was but the fulfillment of a divine purpose, a fulfillment not through miracle, but through the natural workings of providence.

Illustration In the 45th, 46th, and 47th chapters we see Joseph sending wagons for his father's household, and the whole family, with all their wives and little ones, moving down into Egypt and settling in the land of Goshen. This removal to Egypt is the culmination of an extended series of events, most of which appear entirely fortuitous. Jacob's partiality to Joseph leads to his brethren's hatred; their hatred leads to his being sold to Potiphar in Egypt; the wickedness of Potiphar's wife leads to his imprisonment; his imprisonment leads to his acquaintance with the royal butler; this acquaintance leads to his presentation to Pharaoh; his service to Pharaoh leads to his exaltation over all Egypt to prepare for the famine; the famine drives his brethren down into Egypt to seek food from the hand of his power; his power enables him to transport the entire family to Egypt and give them a home in the richest part of the land.

⁶ Gen. 45: 5, 7.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

We see, then, that the settlement of Jacob's family in Egypt was the result of a long and complicated chain of events, which a hundred chances might have broken at a hundred points, the whole forming to human eyes what we are accustomed to call a fortuitous concurrence of circumstances. But was there anything fortuitous? Nay, verily. Every link of that chain was forged by the hand of God Himself to bring about that very result, and that result was the fulfillment of a divine purpose which God had revealed to Abraham two centuries before, the purpose, viz., to make Egypt the training school of His chosen people. Long before any of the present actors were in existence, before a child was born to Abraham, God had said to him: "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterward shall they come out with great substance.”⁷ So we see that these intricate happenings that issued in the migration to Egypt were but the orderly fulfillment by providence of God’s predetermined purpose.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

The above Scripture narrative is but an inspired illustration of how God governs the world always and everywhere. The God of providence is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

Foreordination and fatalism

As we saw in Chapter I, the doctrine of our Standards is not that “whatever must be, must be,” but that whatever God has decreed and purposed shall be. The one expression attributes the course of events to a blind mechanical necessity, the other to the intelligent purpose of a personal God. The one is fatalism, the other foreordination, predestination, providence. The Bible does not say “whatever must be, must be.” It says: “That that is determined shall be done.”⁸ It says again: “The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand.”⁹

⁷ Gen. 15:13, 14.

⁸ Dan. 11:36.

⁹ Isa. 14:24.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

How God can be sovereign and yet man be free, how God as Supreme Ruler can decree events beforehand and bring them to pass exactly as decreed without interfering with the freedom of the human agent, is a question man cannot answer. But God can. God knows how to govern the natural world by fixed laws, the brute creation according to their instincts, and human beings agreeably to their natures. By the divine decree "neither . . . is violence offered to the will of the creatures, nor is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established."¹⁰ And the perfect harmony between foreordination and free agency which we cannot explain in our theories we can plainly see in God's practice.

Foreordination and free agency

For example, Jacob's preference for Joseph, the wise and good child of his beloved Rachel, above the ten coarse and brutal sons of Leah, Bilhah, and Zilpah, was the natural prompting both of his judgment and his heart. Here is free agency; but here also is foreordination; for this partiality, as the result showed, was the first step in the fulfillment of God's plan for saving thousands of human lives.

Illustration

¹⁰ Confession of Faith, chap. III, sec. I.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Illustration Joseph's brethren hate him and sell him into slavery, seeking to carry out the free and unconstrained impulses of their jealous and wicked hearts; and the Ishmaelite merchants are naturally delighted to secure a young and handsome slave for a mere trifle. Here is free agency, attested in the conscience-smitten cry: "We are verily guilty concerning our brother"; but here also is foreordination; for these people, while free agents, were also so entirely God's agents that the Scripture says it was God that sent Joseph into Egypt "to preserve life."

Illustration

Potiphar's wife was free in seeking to carry out first her lustful and then her revengeful impulses toward Joseph; the royal butler was free in carrying out his courtier-like impulses toward Pharaoh; Pharaoh was free in carrying out his humane and statesmanlike impulses toward his famine-threatened nation; Joseph was free in carrying out his filial impulses in sending for his beloved father. Here in each case was the most unquestionable free agency; but here also was the most unquestionable foreordination; for the result of it all was the exact fulfillment of a purpose which God had revealed to Abraham two centuries before, that not Canaan but fertile and civilized Egypt should be the nursery of the chosen people.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

In that dread yet glorious drama of human Illustration sin and redeeming love which culminated on Calvary, we see the human actors moving on the stage influenced by human motives, exercising their freedom of will, and responsible for what with "wicked hands" they do. Caiphas, Judas, the priests, Herod, Pilate, all act according to the self-promptings of their various natures. We hear their consultations, their agreements, and disagreements. We see their stratagems, their plans, their changes of plan. Human forces—pride, bigotry, curiosity, envy, covetousness, and malice—are in fullest, freest, most abandoned play. Yet every step and every act of every actor had not only been preordained, but predicted, and the judgment of the Holy Ghost is given in these solemn words: "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." ¹¹ "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel

¹¹ Acts 2:23.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

determined before [American Standard Version, "foreordained"] to be done."¹²

"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God" God's foreordination, therefore, we cannot doubt. Neither can we doubt the foreordained freedom of the moral creature. This freedom is asserted or assumed on every page of Scripture. It is emphatically declared in our Standards. It is loudly proclaimed by the universal consciousness of mankind. Here are two impregnable facts: God's predestination and man's eternally predestined freedom. Though the problem of their reconciliation is insoluble to our finite sin-beclouded minds, ignorant as we probably are of some of the essentials of the problem, and incapable as we undeniably are of appreciating the significance of the Infinite Factor involved, yet it is clear from Scripture and history that the problem presents no difficulty to God. Reason, religion, and philosophy alike require us to accept both facts, denying neither, abating the force of neither, "holding to the divine efficiency without flinching, making our faith stout and masculine with it; holding equally to human accountability, making our faith elastic and agile with it"; and as to the harmony between ¹² Acts 4: 27, 28.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

them, we may leave it and leave it cheerfully, till we stand on higher summits in a clearer light.

Overhung with a mystery impenetrable as yet to human eyes is the relation of the divine providence to human sin. Our Standards are careful to guard the character of God from any aspersion in view of the dread mystery of evil. They teach that God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man. They refer sin immediately to the "freedom and power to will and to do that which is good,"¹³ originally given to man as a moral creature. Of all sinful acts whatsoever, they affirm with emphasis that "the sinfulness thereof proceedeth only from the creature, and not from God; who being most holy and righteous, neither is, nor can be the author or approver of sin."¹⁴

*Providence
and sin*

That sinful acts, however, are included in God's plan is a truth abundantly evident in Scripture.

Sinful acts included in God's plan

"Saul took a sword, and fell upon it."¹⁵ It was his own wicked act. Yet it fulfilled a divine purpose revealed years before concerning David; it executed divine justice; Scripture speaks of ¹³ Confession of Faith, chap. ix, sec. 2.

¹⁴ Ibid., chap. v, sec. 4.

¹⁵ 1 Chron. 10:4.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

it as the punitive act of God Himself. "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord. . . . And [he] enquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse." ¹⁶

The act of his brethren in selling Joseph into Egypt was an evil act. Yet it formed an integral part of God's plan. It was intended to produce the most beneficial results. "As for you," said Joseph to his brethren, "ye thought evil against me: but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive." ¹⁷

There never was a more evil act than that of those who

"slew the Lord,

And left their memories a world's curse."

"By wicked hands," says the Scripture, He was "crucified and slain." Yet it was "by the derterminate counsel and foreknowledge of God." ¹⁸

Supremely wicked was the conspiracy that contrived His death, yet the conspirators "were gathered together . . . to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." ¹⁹

¹⁶ 1 Chron. 10:13, 14.

¹⁷ Gen. 50:20.

¹⁸ Acts 2:23.

¹⁹ Acts 4:27, 28.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

Over sin as over all else, God reigns supreme.²⁰ "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice"
His sovereign providence "extendeth to the first fall and all other sins of angels and men," so that these are as truly parts and developments of His providence as are the movements of the stars or the activities of unfallen spirits in heaven itself.²¹ Having chosen, for reasons most wise and holy though unrevealed to us, to admit sin, He hath joined to this bare permission a "most wise and powerful bounding" of all sin, so that it can never overleap the lines which He has prescribed for its imprisonment, and such an "ordering and governing" of it as will secure "His own holy ends," and manifest in the final consummation not only His "almighty power" but His "unsearchable wisdom" and His "infinite goodness."

Thus we rise to the height of that sublime, eternal, all-comprehending decree and plan of God to fulfill which He "doth uphold, direct, Grand truth grandly stated

²⁰ Confession of Faith, chap. v, sec. 4: "The almighty power, unsearchable wisdom, and infinite goodness of God, so far manifest themselves in his providence, that it extendeth itself even to the first fall, and all other sins of angels and men, and that not by a bare permission, but such as hath joined with it a most wise and powerful bounding, and otherwise ordering and governing of them, in a manifold dispensation, to his own holy ends; yet so, as the sinfulness thereof proceedeth only from the creature . . ."

²¹ Morris, Theology of the Westminster Symbols, p. 223.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

dispose, and govern all creatures, actions, and things, from the greatest even to the least, by his most wise and holy providence, according to his infallible foreknowledge, and the free and immutable counsel of his own will, to the praise of the glory of his wisdom, power, justice, goodness, and mercy.”²²

Trans-figures nature

Upon the material universe this mighty doctrine sheds a transfiguring radiance. It consecrates every branch of physical science. The student of nature in tracing out her laws and processes feels with Kepler that he is “thinking the thoughts of God after Him.”

Glorifies history and human life

From this faith there falls a yet greater glory upon the history and life of man. It invests them with a divine significance. It relates them to the eternities past and to come. The obscurest task in life is ennobled by the thought that it is a thread in the warp and woof of that divine purpose at which we are ever weaving in the ceaseless loom of time.

Most comforting

It is a doctrine unspeakably precious to the Christian heart amid the storms and darkness of this earthly pilgrimage—to know that every trial, every burden, every bereavement, every ²² Confession of Faith, chap. v, sec. 1.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

sorrow, has been foreseen and foreappointed by a wisdom that cannot err and by a love that cannot change,

“That every cloud, that spreads above
And veileth love, itself is love.”

Instinctively in its sorrow the heart clings to this faith, feeling that in fatherly kindness the affliction was foreordained, for reasons wise though unknown, and saying in trust, though it be in tears, not, “It is chance; it is ill fortune,” but “It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good.”²³ For “we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.”²⁴ And this blessed purpose of good the next verse declares: “For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son.”²⁵

The most comforting and ennobling is also the Most energizing of faiths. That its grim caricature, fatalism, has developed in human hearts an energy at once sublime and appalling is one ²³ 1 Sam. 3:18.

²⁴ Rom. 8:28.

²⁵ Rom. 8:29.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

of the commonplaces of history.²⁸ The early and overwhelming onrush of Mohammedanism, which swept the East and all but overthrew the West, was due to its devotees' conviction that in their conquests they were but executing the decrees of Allah. Atilla the Hun was upborne in his terrible and destructive course by his belief that he was the appointed "Scourge of God." The energy and audacity that enabled Napoleon to attempt and achieve apparent impossibilities was nourished by the secret conviction that he was "the man of destiny." Fatalism has begotten a race of Titans. Their energy has been superhuman, because they have believed themselves the instruments of a superhuman power.

If the grim caricature of this doctrine has breathed such energy, the doctrine itself must inspire a yet loftier, for all that is energizing in it remains with added force when for a blind fate, or a fatalistic deity, we substitute a wise, decreeing God. Let me but feel that in every commanded duty, in every needed reform, I am but working out an eternal purpose of Jehovah; let me but hear behind me, in every battle for right, the tramp of the Infinite Reserves; and I am lifted above the fear of man or the possibility of final failure. I am inspired with a divine strength and confidence. So in former chapters we have seen how in the long struggle for human advancement, civil and religious, wherever the surge of battle has rolled fiercest and fastest and the day of toil has hung hottest and heaviest, there always have been found the holders of this faith. Rooted in the divine Word, this doctrine has borne through all the ages heroes and martyrs innumerable. Against them, as against Joseph, have been used all the weapons that rage and hate could devise. But in dungeons, in dens and caves of the earth, on battlefield, rack, and scaffold, they were more than conquerors. For they knew with a victorious confidence, that not Satan, or chance, or fate, but God was Sovereign; that even the wrath and wickedness of men were but carrying out His eternal purpose; and that the day was surely coming when to all these hostile agencies they could say, as Joseph said to his brethren: "As for you, ye thought evil against me: but God meant it unto good."

²⁸ T. Verner Moore, Power and Claims of a Calvinistic Literature, p. 10.

THE CREED ILLUSTRATED

VI
THE CREED CATHOLIC

“Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all.”—
EPHESIANS 4:3-6.

VI

THE CREED CATHOLIC

THE CATHOLICITY of Presbyterianism,* its liberality of thought and feeling, its freedom from sectarian narrowness and bigotry, is one of its crowning characteristics. Benjamin Harrison, that noble gentleman, statesman, and Christian, said with truth: "There is no body of Christians in the world that opens its arms wider or more lovingly to all who love the Master than the Presbyterian Church."

The catholicity of Presbyterianism is no mere sentiment. It is not a thing of individual profession or platform declamation. It is rooted in our creed. It is proclaimed in our Standards. It is embodied in our doctrine of the Church. "The visible Church," says our Confession, ". . . consists of all those throughout the world that profess the true religion, together with their children."¹ Thus formally and publicly do we repudiate the name of "the" church and claim only to be a church of Jesus Christ. Not only do

*Our Standards
catholic*

*The words "catholicity" and "catholic," as used by the author in this chapter, have no reference to the Church of Rome.

¹ Confession of Faith, chap. xxv, sec 2.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

our Standards contain no denunciation of the antagonistic views of sister evangelical churches, they are said to be the only church Standards in existence which make explicit and authoritative recognition of other evangelical churches as "true branches of the Church of Jesus Christ."² To the "Communion of Saints," our Confession devotes an entire chapter. We are there taught that our "holy fellowship and communion" in each other's gifts and graces, in worship and mutual service of love, "is to be extended unto all those who, in every place, call upon the name of the Lord Jesus."³

Recognition of other churches

The catholicity of our Standards finds beautiful expression in the Presbyterian attitude toward all sister evangelical churches. Their members and ministers we treat as in all respects true members and ministers equally with ourselves of the Church of Christ.

While several of these churches decline giving letters of dismission from their own to other communions, we make no distinction. We dismiss members to Baptist, Episcopal, or other Christian congregations, in precisely the same form, and with the same affectionate confidence, ² Book of Church Order, chap. III, sec. 13.

³ Confession of Faith, chap. XXVI, sec. 2.

THE CREED CATHOLIC

as though we were transferring them to churches of our own name.

Some evangelical denominations deny the validity of ordinances performed by sister churches, and when a minister or a member would come to them from a sister denomination, the one must be reordained, the other rebaptized. Such denial is utterly contrary to the Presbyterian spirit and usage. We never repeat the rite. The ordinance of a sister church we accept as no less valid than if performed by ourselves.

While from many evangelical pulpits the ministers of sister churches are shut out, or from co-officiation in sacred ceremonies, such exclusion is never practiced by us. It is alien to the Presbyterian heart and habit. We are as free and cordial in asking Episcopal, Baptist, or other evangelical ministers, to occupy our pulpits, or assist us officially in administering the Lord's Supper, as in asking our own pastors.

We unchurch no true Christian. We reject no ministerial ordination. We repudiate no administered Scriptural sacrament of a sister church. We recognize our high-church fellow clergyman as a true minister of Christ, and our immersionist brother as having been validly baptized. We respond with all our hearts to the "Amen" of the Methodists; we join with our brethren in any psalmody that puts the crown upon the brow of Jesus; and most lovingly do we invite our fellow Christians of every name and denomination to partake with us of the emblems of His broken body and His shed blood. We have no prejudice, no peculiarity, no crotchet of any kind, to restrict our Christian sympathies and dig a chasm between us and other servants of our Master. Our catholicity is wide as evangelical Christendom. When the day of union dawns upon the militant forces of our common Lord, and His prayer is answered "that they all may be one," it will be largely due under God to the teaching and the example of the Presbyterian Church.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Support of unsectarian institutions

The catholic breadth of her Christian sympathy is seen in her liberal support of interdenominational and undenominational religious enterprises and institutions of all kinds. Wherever the common cause of Christ calls for the sacrifice of sectarian interests and the submergence of sectarian differences, the Presbyterian Church is ever first to respond, with greatest gifts and largest labors. She stands with hand outstretched and purse open for every needy worthy cause that bears the name of Christian. Her members have been called "God's silly people" from the self-forgetful generosity with which they have lavished the time and means often sorely needed by their own church upon those great outside enterprises whose sole claim is the common Christian good and whose sole appeal is to the catholic Christian heart. In the great interdenominational societies and associations, and in those private or public charities sustained by the gifts of good people of all Christian names, figures show that Presbyterians usually do and give more than any other denomination.

THE CREED CATHOLIC

The catholicity of the Presbyterian Church appears in her one condition of church membership. She demands nothing whatever for admission to her fold except a confession, uncontradicted by the life, of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The applicant is not asked to subscribe to our Standards or assent to our theology. He is not required to be a Calvinist, but only to be a Christian. He is not examined as to his orthodoxy, but only as to his "faith in, and obedience unto Christ."⁴ He may have imperfect notions about the Trinity and the Atonement; he may

One condition of church membership

⁴ Confession of Faith, chap. xxviii, sec. 4.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

question infant baptism, election, and final perseverance; but if he trusts and obeys Christ as his personal Saviour and Lord, the door of the Presbyterian Church is open to him, and all the privileges of her communion are his.

When churches prescribe conditions of membership other than the simple conditions of salvation, they are guilty of the unscriptural incongruity of making it harder to get into the church than into heaven. To such ecclesiastical tyranny and exclusiveness the Presbyterian Church stands in utter contrast. Her Standards declare that as simple faith in Christ makes us members of God's family,⁵ so "those who have made a profession of faith in Christ are entitled to all the rights and privileges of the Church."⁶ Thus with a broad and beautiful catholicity the gates of our Presbyterian Zion are flung wide as the gates of heaven for all the children of God.

*Magnifies
the essentials*

The Presbyterian Church is catholic in its embrace and emphasis of those great essentials of the Christian religion which form the common faith of evangelical Christendom. The central facts of redemption, which are at once the heart and the life of the Christian system, to wit, that Jesus Christ is very God and very man, God manifest in the flesh, the one only power unto salvation from sin and endless death by atoning expiatory sacrifice, through faith alone, these, with the other fundamental doctrines believed by all Christian communions throughout the world, are held by the Presbyterian Church with a grasp that none can loosen and preached with a power that none can dispute. In her Standards and her pulpits they receive, as they deserve, the supreme emphasis and honor.

⁵ "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3:26.

⁶ Book of Church Order, chap. vii, sec 29.

THE CREED CATHOLIC

Even those articles of her creed which some suppose distinctive are more catholic than denominational. In her practice of infant baptism she is in harmony with nine tenths of Christendom. In her mode of baptism she stands again with the overwhelming majority of Christendom. In her doctrine of election, predestination, and final perseverance she is in line with the majority of the historic creeds of the evangelical world. As stated in Chapter I, it is hardly too much to say that if from all the authoritative articles of belief of the various churches one were to make a choice, selecting only such beliefs as are held by the whole or the largest part of evangelical Christendom, the elect and catho-

*The Presbyterian
the catholic creed*

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

lic creed so formed would correspond, almost doctrine for doctrine, with the creed of Presbyterians.

Dr. Briggs quoted

Says Dr. Charles A. Briggs: "Presbyterianism is pre-eminently Christian."⁷ "The Presbyterian Church has the true apostolic succession in striving after the apostolic faith in its purity, integrity, and fullness."⁸ "Presbyterianism is a real Christianity which rejects everything that is not a product of the Christianity of Jesus Christ. It appropriates everything in every age of the Church which bears the impress of Christ and which represents the power of His Spirit."⁹ "The Presbyterian churches adhere to all the doctrinal achievements of the ancient church—the catholic doctrines of the Trinity, the Person of Christ, and the office of the Holy Spirit. They do not adopt the peculiarities of the Greek or the Roman or any other branch of the Christian Church, whether in doctrine or practice; for these peculiarities are not catholic. Presbyterianism is truest to catholicity in that it insists upon those things which are truly catholic, ⁷ American Presbyterianism, p. 5.

⁸ Ibid., p. 8.

⁹ Ibid., p. 11.

THE CREED CATHOLIC

and declines to mingle with them those things which are not catholic.”¹⁰ “Presbyterianism,” declares the same writer, “The genuine Christianity of all ages” belongs to the modern age of the world, but it is not a departure from the Christianity of the ancient and mediæval church. It is rather the culmination of the development of Christianity from the times of the apostles until the present day. It comprehends the genuine Christianity of all ages. It conserves all the achievements of the Christian Church.”¹¹

The stress laid by the Presbyterian Church upon the essentials of religion is the secret of her liberality in nonessentials. The vestments of the minister, the attitude of the worshipper, the precise order and form of worship, and the like, she leaves to the Christian common sense of the individual church. Regarding such matters she may advise or recommend. She never legislates. She is ever mindful of her Lord’s prayer, “Sanctify them through thy truth.”¹² An exaggerated illustration of the Presbyterian indifference to things about which we have no commandment from the Lord is the exclamation of a noble old

Liberal in non-essentials

¹⁰ American Presbyterianism, p. 12.

¹¹ Ibid., p. 5.

¹² John 17:17.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Scotch elder when sounded on the burning question whether or not his minister should wear a gown: "Let him attend to his own wardrobe; he may preach in his shirt sleeves for aught I care, if he only preaches sound doctrine."

Our polity Scriptural

Our Presbyterian polity, or form of church government, whence comes the denominational name we bear,¹³ is derived from Scripture. The famous Anglican scholar and prelate, Bishop Lightfoot, candidly declares: "It is a fact now generally recognized by theologians of all shades of opinion that, in the language of the New Testament, the same officer in the church is called indifferently bishop or elder or presbyter."¹⁴ Says Professor Heron of Belfast: "It is a simple historical fact, of deep significance, that wherever the Reformation had free course, wherever it was permitted to shape itself spontaneously after Scripture, and without external interference, it assumed a Presbyterian form."

Unequaled

That the Presbyterian is the best church polity, as the London Spectator unhesitatingly affirms, would appear not only from its Scrip-

¹³ We are Presbyterians, because our churches are governed by presbyters (or elders or bishops). Every elder is a bishop according to the New Testament.

¹⁴ Commentary on Philippians.

THE CREED CATHOLIC

tural origin, but also from the fact that its principles of popular representative government have been adopted by the most enlightened nations of the earth.

While the Scripturalness and excellence of our ecclesiastical polity are familiar themes, few properly recognize its growingly catholic and universal character. The Presbyterian polity is rapidly leavening all the Protestant churches. It is working visibly in every sister denomination. The Lutherans of America have adopted synodical government as the best suited to their needs, and have associated the representatives of the people with their pastors in their local and national councils. The earlier Anglican prelacy has given way in America to a distinctly Presbyterian type of Episcopal government. The English Episcopal Church has adopted synodical rule in all her colonial branches, where in her synods layman and cleric meet together with the Bishop as permanent Moderator.¹⁵ The Methodists have been obliged to modify their clerical government by the admission of lay members to their conferences. Modern Congregationalism is a manifest compromise between the Independent and the Presbyterian way.

Growingly universal

¹⁵ Ogilvie, The Presbyterian Churches, p. 161.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Even the Baptists, who have been the staunchest representatives of Independency, have come to intrust the real management of denominational affairs to local and national associations, the former treating churches which walk disorderly as liable to the discipline of exclusion from the association.¹⁶

“Presbyterian in substance”

The above are some of the approximations on the part of the sister Protestant churches to methods formerly peculiar to Presbyterianism. The able author of the sixth volume of American Church History states that “As a whole the Protestantism of America has become Presbyterian in substance, though not in name.”¹⁷ When comes that day for which many are longing and praying, when the churches of Protestant Christendom shall abandon their isolation and unite in one mighty Evangelical Federation, there can be little doubt that its form, and a chief factor in its formation, will alike be Presbyterian.

¹⁶ R. E. Thompson, American Church History, vol. vi, p. 285.
¹⁷ Ibid., p. 285.

VII

THE CREED'S FUTURE

"He must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet."—I CORINTHIANS 15:25.

VII

THE CREED'S FUTURE

IN CONSIDERING the future of our creed, we must note that its has benefited with the other Christian creeds by the changed attitude of science to religion. The blatant materialism of a former generation has gone, never, we believe, to return. Quite different is the tone of our present-day scientists.

Changed attitude of science

From the following quotations let no one infer that we are of those who seize upon every favorable opinion of a scientist as if it were a feather, highly gratifying to our Saviour, in the cap of His religion. Nay, verily. Our Lord courts no one. He commands. But that the "oppositions of science falsely so called"¹ have been a disturbing influence in the faith of multitudes is undeniable. Said a famous Dutch theologian, Dr. Herman Bavinck, in 1894, "It is from the side of science that Christianity is threatened with the greatest danger." A fact this is, writ large in the religious life and literature of the last eighty years, writ so large indeed that the happy change above mentioned cannot be overlooked in studying the condition and outlook of any system of Christian belief.

¹ Tim. 6: 20.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Eddington Says Sir Arthur Stanley Eddington, former President of the Royal Astronomical Society, "The philosophic trend of modern scientific thought differs markedly from the view of thirty years ago. . . The idea of a universal Mind or Logos would be, I think, a fairly plausible inference from the present state of scientific theory; at least it is in harmony with it."

Interesting to Calvinists is another statement of Eddington's: "The theological doctrine of predestination, whatever may be said against it, has hitherto seemed to blend harmoniously with the predetermination of the material universe."

Jeans Says Sir James H. Jeans, famous astronomer and mathematician, awarded the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society, "The stream of knowledge is heading toward a non-mechanical reality; the universe begins to look more like a great thought than like a great machine. Mind no longer appears as an accidental intruder in the realm of matter; we are beginning to suspect that we ought rather to hail it as the creator and governor of the realm of matter."

THE CREED'S FUTURE

Says Dr. Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute of Research, scientist and surgeon, winner of the Nobel Prize and of various other international prizes, in his book, *Man, The Unknown*² (1935) : “Despite its stupendous immensity, the world of matter is too narrow for man. . . He also belongs to another world. A world which, although enclosed within himself, stretches beyond space and time. . . Our techniques do not grasp things having neither dimensions nor weight. They only reach those situated in space and time. They are incapable of measuring vanity, hatred, love, beauty, or the dreams of the scientists, the inspiration of the poets, the elevation of the mystical soul toward God. . .”

“There is not the shadow of a doubt that mechanical, physical, and chemical sciences are incapable of giving us intelligence, moral discipline, health, nervous equilibrium, security, and peace. . . Our curiosity must turn aside from its present path, and take another direction. It must leave the physical and physiological in order to follow the mental and the spiritual. . .”

“We have applied to man concepts belonging to the mechanical world. We have neglected

² Alexis Carrel, Man, The Unknown. Harper & Brothers, publishers.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

thought, moral suffering, sacrifice, duty. We have treated the individual as a chemical substance, a machine, or a part of a machine. We have amputated his moral, aesthetic, and religious functions. A radical change is indispensable. . . It is indispensable that our thought embraces all aspects of reality. In man, the things which are not measurable, are more important than those which are measurable.

“For the remaking of man mental activities would become as important as physiological ones. Matter would lose its supremacy. The study of moral, aesthetic, and religious functions would appear as indispensable as that of mathematics, physics, and chemistry. . . Hygienists would be asked . . . why they pay no attention to spiritual health. Why the habits responsible for organic diseases are considered dangerous, and not those which bring on corruption, criminality, and insanity. . .

“Economists should realize that human beings think, feel, and suffer, that they should be given other things than work, food, and leisure, that they have spiritual as well as physiological needs. And also that the causes of economic and financial crises may be moral and intellectual.

. Remaking of man and of his economic and social world should be inspired by a precise knowledge of his body and of his soul."

THE CREED'S FUTURE

Says Dr. Compton, distinguished physicist Compton and Nobel Prize winner, in *The Human Meaning of Science*³ (1940), regarding the scientific determinism of a former generation, which destroyed man's freedom, making him the helpless victim of nature's forces, and which so darkened the closing years of Mark Twain: "The postulate of man as a free agent no longer faces legitimate scientific opposition."

In Dr. Compton's closing chapter, entitled "The Need for God in an Age of Science," he says: "We need hardly point out that evolution is in itself no explanation of these remarkable processes; the theory of evolution is merely the description of how the processes occur. It is, however, difficult to avoid an interpretation which sees underlying these evolutionary processes an intelligent power, directing them with some great purpose."

To the charge that it is foolish to think a supreme Intelligence working through nature's processes on so grand a scale would be concerned with the welfare of any mere individual, Dr.

³ Arthur H. Compton, The Human Meaning of Science. University of N. C. Press, publishers.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Compton replies: "The importance of anything depends upon the interest of the one who judges. Is man of less significance than the stars? Ask a mother if she would trade her newborn babe for the brightest star in the heavens. Even to the astronomers, if the child happens to be a Newton, he would be worth many galaxies of stars. Who then is to say that man is an object of indifference to God? Is it not reasonable to suppose that to an intelligent Creator intelligent creatures may be of special interest?"

This last chapter Dr. Compton closes as follows: "Science has thus helped us to appreciate the inspiring setting in which we find ourselves. We recognize the greatness of the program of nature which is unfolding before us and feel that we are a vital part of a great enterprise in which a mighty Intelligence is working out His hidden plan. In our hands we hold the control of the conditions of life on this planet. If indeed the creation of intelligent persons is a major objective of the Creator of the Universe and if, as we have reason to surmise, mankind is now His highest development in this direction, the opportunity and responsibility of working as God's partners in His great task are almost overwhelming. What nobler ambition can one have than to co-operate with his Maker in bringing about a better world in which to live? 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.'

THE CREED'S FUTURE

"Ye prate of patterns and the web of doom.
Is God then strangled in the warp and woof?
Is not the Weaver in the Weaver's place?"

"Go seat you at the loom!
Create the goodness that is Heaven's proof,
And work with God, if ye would see His face!"

Swiftly increasing in the scientific world to-day are the spiritual heirs of Sir Isaac Newton, a devout believer who Thomas Huxley said had the greatest scientific brain ever housed in a human skull, and of Lord Kelvin who felt himself "forced by science to belief in God."

Dean Inge said recently: "In the nineteenth century we thought of science as the enemy of religion, but today we regard it as religion's greatest ally."

From the changed attitude of science, let us turn now to note how Christian thought, after dalliance with Humanism and other more or less man-centered isms, is being forced by the stern facts of life back to Calvinism.

*The
return to Calvinism*

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

"A greater part than ever before" Despite the glory of its past, it may well be that the great day of Calvinism is yet to come. Said Lord Tweedsmuir, distinguished scholar and historian, known to thousands on both sides the Atlantic as John Buchan, in a speech delivered in June, 1937, after noting the menace to freedom of thought and conscience in the widely adopted doctrine of state sovereignty, and the consequent duty of the Church to combat it: "It seems to me that today our Presbyterian communion is called upon to play a greater part than ever before in its history." "Calvinism," says Froude, "has appeared and reappeared, and in due time will reappear again, unless God be an illusion and men be as the beasts that perish." It has proved itself the creed of heroes, the creed for times that try men's souls. It was the only creed that inspired men to fight for the Reformation, which otherwise would have been crushed. History, as we have seen, is starred with proofs of the heroic, the incomparable, moral energy it inspires. Of those earlier Calvinists Froude says, "They were crushed down, but they rose again. They were splintered and torn, but no power could bend or melt them."

THE CREED'S FUTURE

Says Pierre Van Paassen, famous Foreign Correspondent and student of world conditions, in his recent book Days of Our Years,⁵ published in 1939: "Those democratic Calvinist consistories, which, unlike Luther with his preaching of passive obedience to the state and his denial of the people's right to revolt, resolutely withdrew their allegiance from princes and governments when the cause of Christ was at issue. . . From the beginning the strength of Calvinism resided in the fact that it sought to make the believer a conscious and active instrument in the service of God, a God-conscious militant who knew what he believed in and why he believed it: a man who did not hesitate to pit his convictions against the power of the state, the princes, and the dictatorships. It was Calvinism which formed the hosts who resisted and overcame the worldly dictatorships of France, the Netherlands, and Great Britain. It was Calvinism which broke the chains in which the spiritual dictatorship of Rome and the Jesuits sought to enslave Western Europe. To be an 'elect of the Lord' was not a mere theological phrase with which the Inquisition had to reckon, but a po-

*The Calvinistic
spirit*

⁵ Pierre Van Paassen, Days of Our Years. Hillman-Curl, Inc., publishers.

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

litical fact, a thousand times tested on the battle grounds of freedom."

today Was that spirit ever more needed than now?
Desperately "The Satan of force, of will, of materialistic needed dynamism, of mass might, of antihuman racialism, of class hate and tyranny, of state Caesarism, of a secular and heathen mythology, is loose in the world." "Idols are being erected and passionately worshipped. As always in the past, they turn into Molochs that devour the sons and daughters of men. False religions they are with all the fanaticisms, horrors, and miseries that idolatry carries in its train. Promising true guidance, authority, power, they enslave men, body, mind, and soul. Their attack on Christianity is being made with a complete control of all educational processes and all public information agencies, with a complete suppression of all contrary views, and with an openness, a cruelty, a backing of political and military power unknown since the days of the Roman emperors.

Was our doctrinal witness ever more needed than now? The world is groping for a center of established and reliable authority. The Humanist has enthroned man as sovereign, the Fascist the nation as sovereign, the Nazi the race as sovereign, the Communist the class as sovereign. But no solution of the problem of sovereignty can be found apart from the Calvinistic conception that God alone is Sovereign, absolute Sovereign over every part and particle of human life, national, ecclesiastical, political, business, personal, social, domestic, a totalitarianism that is essentially, immovably, everlastingly opposed to all other totalitarianisms. In the strength of this mighty creed, we can face the future without doubt or fear. Nay, we can cry,

R. E. Speer, When Christianity Was New (1939), p. 101. Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers.

THE CREED'S FUTURE

"Now God be thanked who matched us with this hour."

A Lutheran professor recently said regarding his students—and be it noted that Lutheranism, with all its fine elements, lacks, as is only too evident in Germany, Calvinism's all-controlling sense of the Sovereignty of God to whom alone is due our supreme allegiance—"They need a doctrine and a strong doctrine. I think God has something in store for His Church, and something very dreadful; and as God knows that His Church needs a backbone, he brings her back to Calvinism, because Calvinism is the backbone of Christianity."

"The backbone of Christianity"

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

Calvin enthusiastically studied

That He is bringing her back to Calvinism is evident in many ways. Said Professor Lecerf, of the Protestant Faculty of Theology in Paris, at the Fourth Calvinistic Congress in Edinburgh, 1938: "By a quite unforeseen miracle of the grace of God, there is, at the present time, a powerful revival of Calvinistic theology in our recently united Reformed Churches. Great numbers of the young ministers, and students of other branches of culture, are Calvinists. Calvin's Institutes and Catechisms, long ago forgotten, are read and studied with the zeal of the first days of our glorious Reformation."

At the same Congress Rev. David Read, a young minister of Scotland, spoke on "The Reformed (i. e. Calvinistic) Faith and the Younger Generation." From his address in the records of the proceedings of the Congress, we quote the following: "It is in the sphere of Theology that the Church hammers out the ultimate problems; hence it is of vital importance to know what way the winds of doctrine are carrying the younger generation in whose hands is the Church of the future.

In every student center

"I don't think it would be an exaggeration to say that during the last six or seven years there has been a distinct change in the direction of theological thought among my contemporaries. . . . The change has been most notable on the Continent. As it was there that liberal theological thought took its extremest forms, so it is there that the pendulum has swung most violently over. It was while spending a year in France that I noticed the strange phenomenon that in every center the students were very much nearer the historic Reformed Faith than their professors. . . . While the movement has been most notable in France, Switzerland, Germany, Hungary, and Holland, it has been simultaneously happening in Scotland and to some extent also in England.

THE CREED'S FUTURE

“During the years I was at college there was a distinct swing of interest toward the dogmatic issues of the Reformed Faith, with an ever-increasing attention to the works of the reformers themselves. There has been the immense stimulus to our generation provided by the dynamic theology of the Word. I hope I may be allowed to mention the name of Karl Barth without being irrevocably labeled a Barthian. He, and, in this country perhaps to an even greater degree, Emil Brunner, has been a mighty formative—or rather reformativ—influence on the theology of the new age. For one that will be

*Distinct swing to Calvinistic
theology*

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

found to agree wholeheartedly with all the positions taken up by this theology there are a thousand who have been orientated toward the historic Reformed Faith. . . .

*Modern evangelism
and
Calvinism*

“We have to count among the influences making for a revival of the Reformed Faith the movements of modern evangelists. Since the beginning of the century there has been an astonishing increase of movements directed to winning the young to allegiance to Jesus Christ. The effect of this is now being seen in the theological halls of the country. An increasing number of men have found that their Christian experience could only be adequately interpreted in a dogmatic framework which was nearer to the Reformed Faith than that which was popular at the time.

*Why this “unmistakable trend” to
Calvinism?*

“The trend toward the Reformed Faith is so unmistakable that it has already called forth several kinds of explanation and comment. . . . What was once the brilliant sun of liberal theology seems to many of us to be setting in a dull glow of sentiment and irrelevance. . . .

“What then is the real explanation of the hold that this movement is taking upon the younger generation? I have only time left to summarize very briefly. It appeals in the first place because it takes the word 'God' seriously. We are tired of what are called 'ideas of God.' We want to hear of God Himself. Faced with the helpless confusion of modern life, national and international, we want to hear of a God who pursues His own purposes steadily through history and whose Sovereign will of love must inevitably triumph.

THE CREED'S FUTURE

"And in the second place it takes Man seriously. The stern reality of events which are taking place before our very eyes drives out of court all shallow optimistic views of man's nature and relation to this world. We want a theology that is not afraid to look right into the pit of human sin and tell us the truth. And we want a theology that speaks in no uncertain voice of a Redemption.

"And finally, it appeals because it takes Revelation seriously. Here is no evading of the ultimate issue between God and man; here is no evaporating of saving Revelation in a vague religious syncretism. The historic Reformed Faith takes these seriously because it is not afraid of doctrine. This is what my generation sees in the Reformed Faith."

A remarkable proof of the renaissance of Calvinism is the eager and widespread welcome ac-

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

*The Barthian theology a revival of
Calvinism*

corded the theological writings of Barth and Brunner, especially by the younger and more aggressive minds of the Church. They have profoundly influenced the thinking of all Christendom and their effect is being felt in more or less degree in the preaching of all the Churches. In a letter to me of May, 1940, Rev. Dr. Holmes Rolston, the able author of A Conservative Looks to Barth and Brunner, says: "It can be definitely stated that the Barthian theology is a revival of Calvinism in the modern world. . . .

"It is a revival of Calvinism in that it is a God-centered theology. The fundamental criticism of liberal theology is that it was man-centered. Both Barth and Calvin make God the starting point. . . .

"It is a revival of Calvinism in that it humbles man. In this respect Barth goes beyond Calvin and goes too far, but Brunner strikes the true balance. . . .

"It is a revival of Calvinism in that it is definitely a theology of the Word. In their conception of Revelation and of the Task of theology, Barth and Calvin are at one. This is the great service of Barth to his generation, as it was the service of Calvin to his generation. . . .

"Brunner has rendered an incalculable service to Calvin in his treatment of his doctrine of election. . . . He has shown that it was primarily a doctrine of God's call—a call which sets man in a time of decision and is therefore just the opposite of fatalism. . . .

THE CREED'S FUTURE

“Barthianism is a revival of Calvinism in the doctrine of inspiration . . . Barth and Calvin are at one in their emphasis on the witness of the Spirit in the heart of the believer as the real ground of the authority of Scripture, a doctrine not denied but lost sight of in the midst of a great many external proofs of the authority of Scripture. Both men leave the Bible free to speak to the heart of the believer.”

This return to Calvinism in various lands and realms of thought where man-centered systems have been popularized, is but another proof that “Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again,

The eternal years of God are hers.”

And that reminds us how tremendously our belief in the future of our creed is re-enforced by the many “years of God” through which it has lived and wrought and fought and conquered. Ours is a historic creed, deeply rooted and richly fruitful in a long and glorious past. Its adherents (using the term Calvinist in its broad

“Be . . . followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises”

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

and somewhat loose sense in distinction from Lutheran, Roman Catholic, and other types of the Christian faith) numbering now some 120,000,000,⁶ are the children and successors of countless millions more, seated now in the galleries of "History's vast Coliseum," tier above tier, generation upon generation, of those who through ages of toil, trial, and triumph, "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, . . . out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."⁷

When we remember that as Presbyterians we stand on soil drenched with the blood, baptized with the tears, and eloquent of the achievements of saints and heroes in number without number, surely our hearts should cry out, in language sacred as familiar: "We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. It is for us the living rather to be dedicated here to their unfinished work." "In the memory of their mighty acts," said Dr. W. M. Paxton, "we should train our children. The historian Sallust tells us that the Roman mothers trained their children in the presence of the busts and statues of their ancestors. In like manner we should train our children and our rising ministry, as it were, in the presence of their forefathers, in all the memories of our past history, and urge them, as the Roman mothers did, never to be satisfied whilst the virtues and victories of the past were more numerous or more glorious than those of the present."

⁶ H. Henry Meeter, The Fundamental Principles of Calvinism (1930), p. 19. Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., publishers.

⁷ Heb. 11:33, 34.

THE CREED'S FUTURE

Richly significant of its future is the world-wide range of the Presbyterian empire. As her witnesses in continental Europe, many of them now under severe trial, she has the historic Presbyterian Reformed churches of Austria, Bohemia, Galicia, Moravia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Rumania, Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, of Italy, Greece, the Netherlands, of Russia and Switzerland and Spain. She is rooted and fruitful in Africa, in Asia, in Australia, in Great Britain, in North America, in South America, in the West Indies, in New Zealand, in Melanesia—the people of this faith and order gird the earth. Presbyterianism possesses a power of adaptation unparalleled by any other system. It holds in steadfast array a great part

Worldwide empire

THE CREED OF PRESBYTERIANS

of the intelligence and moral vigor of the Christian world, and from its abounding spiritual life are going forth the mighty forces of Christian missions into all the heathen world.

"Into all the world"

On every continent, on the islands of the sea, on the soil of every non-Christian faith, Presbyterianism has planted her standards. Eager to break the Bread of Life to the perishing, and reveal to the restless darkened millions "that Light whose dawning maketh all things new," she has gone out, as her Master bade, through the lands near at hand, on and on, unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

The missionary heralds of our Pan-American Presbyterianism alone, which is but a branch of the catholic Presbyterian Church, are scattered from British Columbia to Yucatan; they are in Central America, and in Colombia, Venezuela, British Guiana, Chile, and Brazil; they are on the African coast from Liberia to the Ogowe, in the heart of the great Congo Basin, and in Egypt; they are strong in Syria and Iran, in Irak, and side by side in India our separate columns are advancing under one Captain; we are proclaiming glad tidings in Thailand and Laos, in Hainan and the Philippines, in Cuba and Formosa; we have long since "partitioned China," not for political spoil, but for her own salvation; our united forces have won marvelous victories in Korea; we have proclaimed to the Sunrise Kingdom the Sun of Righteousness, whose rising shall know no setting. Our strategic points are taken, our stations occupied, our watchtowers girdle the globe.

THE CREED'S FUTURE

With a past rich in glorious achievement and a present marked by world-wide extension and triumphing missionary enthusiasm, the future of the Presbyterian Church is radiant with promise. Who can doubt that through historic development, through centuries of special experience, through stern battles with relentless enemies as well as through the silent sweeter nurture of His love, God has constituted our Presbyterianism one of His elect agencies in the fulfillment of that gracious purpose which includes not ourselves only, but the whole world? May He thrill us with the consciousness of our divine commission and endowment. May He give us grace, with an humble reliance on His enabling Spirit, to do our part in that great and blessed work, whose aim is the universal enthronement of our common Lord, and whose end is nothing less than the regeneration of humanity.

*Radiant
future*

INDEX

INDEX

- Alva, 80
- AMERICA, Calvin and founding of, 115, 126-129; Calvinism and colonial elements of, 115; Calvinism and republican principles of, 116, 117, 120-124; Calvinism the training school of, 116, 123; national constitution modeled after Presbyterian, 132-134; summary of Calvinism's contributions to, 134; the Revolution a Presbyterian measure, 135-139; work and influence of Presbyterian Church in, 139-143
- Anglo-Saxondom, its Protestantism due to Puritans, 76; Calvin's influence upon, 125
- Apostolic succession, 176
- Aristotle, 45
- Arminianism, 93, 95
- Arnold, Matthew, cited, 93, 95
- Arnold, Thomas, cited, 31
- Assembly, see General Assembly, or Westminster Assembly
- Attila, 164
- Augustine, 13, 89, 90
- Bacon, Francis, 31, 45
- Bacon, Dr. Leonard Woolsey, cited, 116
- Baldwin, Prof., cited, 142
- Bancroft, cited, 76, 81, 85, 91, 92, 96, 116, 117, 121, 123, 129, 135, 138
- Baptism, 13; not repeated, 171; infant, 174, 175; mode, 13, 175
- Baptist approximation to Presbyterianism, 180
- Baptist Association, cited, 47
- Barth, 20, 195, 198, 199
- Bavinck, cited, 183
- Baxter, 32; cited, 33
- Bayard, Ambassador, cited, 143
- Bayne, Peter, cited, 70
- Beecher, H. W., cited, 57, 68
- Benevolence, 140
- Bible readings, 107
- Bishop, in New Testament usage, 178
- Book of Church Order, cited, 170, 174
- Bowen, Dr. L. P., cited, 67
- Breed, Dr. W. P., cited, 132, 137
- Briggs, Dr. C. A., cited, 43, 176, 177
- Bruce, Robert, 149
- Brooke, Rupert, cited, 193
- Brunner, 195, 198
- Bryant, W. C., cited, 199
- Buchan, see Tweedsmuir
- Buckle, cited, 92, 93, 98, 100, 117
- Bunker Hill, 128
- Bunyan, 32, 66

INDEX

CALVIN, creed named after, 13; and Catechisms, 38, 40; and Scripture, 45; and God, 56; and martyrs, 63, 120; and Puritanism, 75; and English Puritans, 76; debt of mankind to, 76, 123; Calvin and Augustine, 89; and St. Cyran, 90; and free inquiry, 91; and popular education, 96, 139; and Knox, 98, 125; and freedom, 119; and Luther, 99, 129; and America, 115, 126-129; and popular government, 122-125; influence of, 125; his works restudied, 194

CALVINISM, needed today, preface, 192; the creed of heroes, 190; inadequately represented by "The Five Points," preface; origin of name, 13; personalized in Paul, 14-25; return to, 20, 190-199; and man's depravity, 21, 197; exalts God, 23, 193; loyalty to Scripture, 45; true secret of unpopularity, 46; Calvinism and revision of Confession, 48-50; tested by its fruits, 53-143; keynote of, 54; Calvinism and God, 53; and duty, 55; program of, 56; Calvinism and sin, 57; and grace, 58; array of martyrs, 62, 63; heroic moral energy, 63-66, 190; appeals to facts, 67; type of character, 66-69; created English Puritanism, 69-79; saved the Reformation, 77; created modern Christian civilization, 78; Calvinism and art, 84; and religious toleration, 84; and persecution, 84; in Holland, 79-85; in France, 85-89; at Port Royal, 89, 90; in New England, 90, 91;

95, 96, 97; in Scotland, 97- Calvinism and free inquiry, 91; intellectual superiority, 92; how explained, 93; most satisfying and stimulating, 94; Calvinism and education, 101; Calvinism and missions, 99; Shorter Catechism and Scottish peasantry, 100; in home life, 104-111; in America, 115-143; Calvinism and Revolutionary forefathers, 115, 116; Calvinism and human rights, 116; a democratic religion, 116, 117; Calvinism and liberty, 118-120, 126-130, 191; Calvinism's coronation of individual man as sovereign, 121-123; opened new era, 123; school of self-government, 130; summary of contributions to American Republic, 134; Calvinism and benevolence, 140; and revivals, 141, 196; illustrated in predestination and providence, 147-165; backbone of Christianity, 193; catholicity of, 169-180; its great day yet to come, 190-197; a historic creed, 199, 200

Caricature, favorite anti-Calvinistic weapon, 67

Campbell, Douglas, cited, 79, 81, 82, 83

Carlyle, cited, 55, 56, 69, 97

Carrel, cited, 185, 186

Castelar, cited, 129

Catechisms, Westminster (see Shorter, Larger); creed complete in each, 29; predominantly ethical, 35; their exposition of Decalogue, 36; proper function of, 37; labor

INDEX

- bestowed upon, 38-40; vs. other catechisms, 40
- Catechizing, benefits of, 110
- CATHOLICITY, of Presbyterianism, shown in Standards, 169; in fraternal recognition of other churches, 170-172; in support of unsectarian institutions, 172; in condition of membership, 173; in embrace and emphasis of Christian essentials, 174-175; in liberality in nonessentials, 177; in growing Presbyterianization of Protestant Christendom, 179-180; in world-wide distribution, 201, 202
- Choate, Rufus, cited, 128
- Churchgoing, 106
- Coligny, 66
- Collier, cited, 31
- Common-school system, Calvin inventor of, 96, 139
- Communion of saints, 170
- Communist, 193
- Compton, cited, 187-189
- CONFESSION OF FAITH, subscription to, 30; ethical quality, 35; loyalty to Scripture, 40, 44; evangelical richness, 36; labor bestowed upon, 40; revision of, 48-50; teaching concerning infants dying in infancy, 49, 50; catholic spirit of, 169; cited, 44, 54, 150, 155, 159, 161, 162, 169, 170, 173
- Congregationalism, 179; approximation to Presbyterianism, 180
- Constitution of U. S., its model, 134
- Covenanters, 88, 135
- Cowpens, battle of, 138
- Curry, Dr., cited, 33, 93
- Creed, outlined, 13-25; core of, 13; purpose and function, 35, 37
- Cromwell, 32, 66, 71, 72
- Cyclopedia, Universal, cited, 80
- Cyran, St., 90
- D'Aubigné, cited, 99, 126
- Depravity, human, 21, 197
- Descartes, 45
- De Tocqueville, cited, 117
- Doyle, J. A., cited, 116
- Dutch Calvinists (see Holland)
- Duty and Calvinism, 55, 99
- Dyer, cited, 76
- Eaton, Gen. John, cited, 140
- Education, 95, 96, 139
- Edwards, Jonathan, 128
- Eldership, Presbyterian, 131, 138
- Election, 14-17, 118
- Eddington, cited, 184
- Election and grace, practical effects of, 63, 64, 117-120
- Elliott, cited, 139
- Emerson, Ralph Waldo, cited, 94
- Encyclopedia Britannica, cited, 68, 86
- England, Calvinism in, 34, 35, 66, 69-79; liberties of, won by Calvinists, 119, 120, 127

INDEX

- Episcopal, Protestant, approximation to Presbyterianism, 179
- Family, the, and Presbyterianism, 140
- Family religion, the family altar, 104; religious conversation, 106; Scripture and catechism, 107; happy Sabbath-keeping, 106-108; parental discipline, 109; the home sanctuary, 110
- Fascist, 192
- Fatalism and foreordination, 154, 163, 164
- Fisher, Prof. Geo. F., cited, 23, 45
- Fiske, Prof. John, cited, 56, 76, 119, 130
- "Five Points," "The," 9
- Foreordination, and fatalism, 154; and free agency, 22, 155; illustrated, 155-162
- France, Calvinism in, 85-90
- Free agency and foreordination illustrated, 155-158; both to be believed, 158
- Froude, cited, 53, 64, 65, 66, 67, 77, 98, 119, 190
- General Assembly, Southern, cited, 30; Northern on revision of Confession, 48, 49; Southern and revision, 50; Archbishop Hughes on, 132
- Geneva, 63, 124, 125, 128, 129
- German Reformed Church, 115, 201
- Gibbon, 65
- Gillespie, George, 41
- Gladstone, cited, 142
- "God's silly people," 173
- Green, J. R., cited, 34, 35, 56, 71, 77, 117, 122, 123, 133
- Gunsaulus, F. W., cited, 116
- Hampden, 32
- Harrison, Benjamin, cited, 169
- Harkness, Georgia, cited, 123, 125, 75
- Harte, Bret, cited, 138
- Heath, Richard, cited, 131
- Heidelberg Catechism, 40
- Henry, Matthew, 32
- Heron, Prof., cited, 178
- Hillis, Dr. N. D., cited, 142
- History vs. fiction, 67; verdict of, 102, 103
- Hodge, Prof. A. A., cited, 139
- Holland, Calvinists of, their sufferings and heroism, 79-85; by what inspired, 81; leader, 82; morality, 82; achievements, 83-85; intellectual freedom, 92; contributions to America, 115, 135
- Home, the Christian, created by the Puritan, 77; a Scotch Presbyterian, 104-111
- Howe, John, 32
- Hughes, Archbishop, cited, 132
- Huguenots, character, 85-90; product of Calvinism, 88; in America, 115, 135
- Humanism, 189, 192
- Hume, cited, 120
- Huxley, cited, 189

INDEX

- Infants dying in infancy, 49, 50
 Inge, Dean, cited, 189
 Ironsides, 76
 James, King, cited, 123
 Jeans, cited, 184
 Jansen, 89
 Jefferson, Thomas, cited, 135
 Joseph, story of, illustration of predestination and providence, 150-156
 Kelvin, cited, 189
 Kepler, 162
 King's Mountain, battle of, 138
 Knox, chief aim, 56; character, 66; pupil of Calvin, 98, 125; creator of Scotland, 98; effect of his teaching, 117, 118
 Landrum, Dr., cited, 140
 Larger Catechism, completed before Shorter, 39; cited, 149
 Law of God, Confession's chapter on, 36
 Leadership, national, 142
 Lecerf, Prof., cited, 194
 Lecky, cited, 69, 86
 Leyden, siege of, 80; University of, 96
 Liberty, civil, saved to the world by Puritans, 76; fruit of Calvinism, 117-123
 Lightfoot, Bishop, cited, 178
 Lincoln, Abraham, quoted, 200
 Longevity, Puritan, 90, 91
 Lord's Prayer, and Calvinism, 55
 Lowell, J. R., cited, 57, 101, 102
 Luther, 38, 40, 66, 129, 191
 Lutheranism, its approximation to Presbyterianism, 179; its weakness, 191, 193
 Lycurgus, 124
 Macaulay, cited, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75
Mayflower, 128
 McFetridge, N. S., cited, 63, 87
 Mecklenburg Assembly, 136
 Meeter, H. Henry, cited, 200
 Melville, Andrew, 66, 117
 Methodist approximation to Presbyterianism, 179
 Methodist, Conference Wesleyan, cited, 47; Conference, cited, 62
 Michelet, Jules, cited, 56
 Milton, 32; cited, 32, 66, 57, 70
 Missions, American Presbyterian, 202, 203; and Calvinism, 99, 100
 Mitchell, Dr. A. F., cited, 37
 Mohammedans, 164
 Moody, D. L., cited, 141, 143
 Moore, Dr. T. V., cited, 103, 164
 Morgan, Gen., 138
 Morley, John, cited, 64, 71, 95, 100
 Morris, Dr. E. D., cited, 161
 Motley, cited, 63, 80, 82, 84, 120, 127
 Murray, Regent, 66

INDEX

- Mystery, all human thought ends in, 23, 24; Paul's attitude toward, 25
- Napoleon, 61, 164
- Nazi, 193
- New England Puritans, health, 90; character, 90, 91; example of Calvinistic spirit of free inquiry, 91, 92
- Newton, Sir Isaac, 189
- Novelists vs. historians, 67
- Ogilvie, J. N., cited, 179
- Ordination, doctrinal requirements at, 30; not repeated by Presbyterian Church, 171
- Owen, John, 32
- Paton, John G., 104
- Paul, 13, 14, 15, 16-25
- Paxton, Dr. W. M., quoted, 200, 201
- Penn, William, 84
- Perseverance, Final, 17, 18
- Pickens, Gen., 138
- Pilgrim Fathers, 92
- Pilgrim's Progress*, 108
- Pitzer, Dr. A. W., 23, 24
- Plato, 45
- Polity, Presbyterian (see under Presbyterian Church)
- Port Royal, 89
- PREDESTINATION, 14-17; in Encyclopedia Britannica, 68; illustrated, 22, 150-163; Predestination and providence, 147; and common sense, 148, 149; and fatalism, 19, 154; and free agency, 155-158, 187; practical effects of, 162-165; and science, 184; (see Foreordination, Providence)
- PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, name, 178; its creed includes all evangelical essentials, 13; the martyr church, 62, 63; doctrinal church, 29; condition of membership, 29, 173; of ordination, 30; Scripture's champion and martyr, 47; confessional revision in, 48-50; polity of, origin, 178; excellence, 131, 132, 178, 179; influence upon character, 130, 131, 132-134; upon other churches, 179-180; served as national training school, 130; furnished model for national constitution, 133-134; Presbyterian Church and American independence, 135-139; and education, 131, 139; and Sabbath and family, 140; and benevolence, 140, 141; and national leadership, 142; catholicity of, 169-180; historic church, 199-201; number of adherents, 200; worldwide range, 201; power of adaption, 201; missionary aggressiveness, 201, 203; outlook, 190, 203
- Preston, Hon. W. C., cited, 133
- PROVIDENCE, our Father's training school, 20; and William the Silent, 82; presupposes predestination, 147-149; all-embracing, 149; illustrated in Joseph's life, 150-160; providence and fatalism, 154; and free agency, 155-159; and sin, 159-161; practical effects of doctrine, 162-165
- PURITANS, founders of commonwealths, 63; by what inspired,

INDEX

- 64; in England, name and character, 56, 69, 70, 71; spiritual father, 76; Puritan army, 71-74; our Puritan heritage: liberty, 76; Protestantism, 76; the Christian home, 77; in America, 115, 125-135
- Ranke, cited, 115
- "Rebellion," "The Presbyterian," 137
- Read, Rev. David, cited, 194-197
- Reed, Dr. R. C., cited, 57, 58
- Reformation, the Protestant, led by Calvinists, 34, 35; fought through by Calvinists, 77
- Reformed Churches of Europe, 201
- Religion in the home, see Family Religion
- Renan, Ernest, cited, 90
- Revision of Confession, in Northern Church, 48, 49; in Southern Church, 50; not a question of orthodoxy, 50
- Revivals, and Calvinism, 141, 142
- Revolution, of 1776, "a Presbyterian measure," 135-139
- Roberts, Dr. W. H., cited, 115
- Rockefeller Inst. of Research, 185
- Rolston, Dr. Holmes, cited, 198, 199
- Romanism, its catechism, 40; where best studied, 97
- Rutherford, Samuel, 41
- Sabbath, in the home, 107-108; Presbyterian emphasis upon, 140
- Saintsbury, cited, 31
- Sallust, cited, 201
- Sanctification, entire, 57, 58
- Schaff, cited, 33, 125, 128
- Science, changed attitude to religion, 183-189
- Scotch-Irish, numbers at Revolution, 115; part in Revolution, 135-139
- Scotland, Calvinism in, 97, 101; where effects of Calvinism best studied, 97; the Scotch before Knox, 97; the transformation, 98; Scottish missionaries, 99; moral and intellectual pre-eminence, 100; religious home life, 104-111; Scotland and Presbyterian church government, 133
- Selden, John, 41
- Shakespeare, 31
- SHORTER CATECHISM, Assembly's last and best work, 39; definition of God, 42; first question strikes keynote of Calvinism, 55; safeguard against error, 58; effect on Scottish peasantry, 100; in the home, 107; in the Revolution, 139; cited, 55, 141, 149, 150
- Smiles, Samuel, cited, 87, 88, 92
- Smith, Goldwin, cited, 71
- Solon, 124
- Sovereignty, divine, 18, 19, 34; and William the Silent, 82;

INDEX

- illustrated, 147-165; needed today, 192, 193
- Spectator*, London, cited, 178
- Speer, R. E., cited, 192
- Standards, see Westminster Standards
- Stanley, Dean, cited, 33
- Stanley, Henry M., cited, 99
- Stephen, Sir James, cited, 121
- Strickler, Dr. G. B., cited, 40
- Subscription formula, 30
- Taine, cited, 57, 70, 71, 73, 74, 91, 127
- Ten Commandments, Catechisms' exposition of, 36, 58
- Tennyson, 123
- Thompson, Dr. R. E., cited, 131, 137, 180
- Totalitarianism, the true vs. the false, 193
- Tilghman, Chief Justice, cited, 134
- Tweedsmuir, Lord, cited, 190
- Twisse, Dr. William, 32
- Ursinus, 38
- Van Paassen, Pierre, cited, 191
- Walpole, Horace, cited, 137
- Washington, George, cited, 135
- Watts, Isaac, 32
- WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY, name and era, 30; personnel, 31; estimates of, 32, 33; background, 34; task, 35; first characteristic, thoroughness, 38-40; advantages and training, 38, 39; second characteristic, prayerfulness, 41-43; third characteristic, loyalty to Scripture, 43-47
- WESTMINSTER STANDARDS, doctrinal, 29; and church membership, 29; and office-bearers, 30; formula of subscription to, 30; name and era of formulation, 30; ethical quality, 35; spiritual vitality, 36; use and function, 35, 37; labor and prayer bestowed upon, 38-43; Scripturalness, 43-47; and philosophy, 45; hard sayings in, 46; why assaulted, 46, 47; Calvinism of, unimpaired by past or proposed revision, 48, 50. (See Catechisms, Shorter, Larger; Confession)
- William the Silent, character, 66; and Calvinism, 82; father of religious liberty, 84
- Wilson, Dr. S. Law, cited, 68
- Witherspoon, Dr. John, 136

INSTITUTE FOR ADV
OF WORLD REL

missionary leadership and insisted upon his continuing in another capacity as a member of the Foreign Missions staff.

In spite of the press of administrative work, Dr. Smith has always found time to demonstrate his unusual gift as an author. Among his writings two volumes stand out pre-eminent. The Desire of All Nations, although written primarily to stimulate missionary interest and missionary support in his own Church, proved so effective that it was adopted by, and widely read in, other denominations.

However, Dr. Smith's outstanding literary contribution to date is The Creed of Presbyterians. For popularity and for circulation it has not been equaled by any other book written on Presbyterianism. Appearing first in 1901, it caught the public imagination and ran through edition after edition under three different publishers, until today this revised and enlarged edition represents the seventy-second thousand to come from the press.

It is fortunate for our troubled generation, so many of whom are desperately seeking to rediscover the foundations of their Christian beliefs, that Dr. Smith should here give us the benefit of his later thoughts and riper experience. Presbyterians seeking a concise statement of their Church's creed against its historical background will rejoice to find here a clear and direct answer to their questions. For this permanent enrichment of its literature, and this popular interpretation of its cardinal doctrines, the Presbyterian Church will long remain indebted to Dr. Smith.

