PREFACE.

THE purpose of the following sheets is fully expressed in the title-page. In these days of skepticism, when so many doubts are popularly thrown over the genuineness and integrity of the Sacred Volume, it is desirable that the Family Bible should contain within itself the means of repelling these doubts, so far as these means can be brought within a compass necessarily very short. It is believed, that any candid and intelligent reader, who will first carefully examine the account of any particular Book of the Scriptures as given in the Introduction, and then closely study the book itself with the aid of the Chronology, the References and the Translations to be found in the Margin, and also of the Dictionary, the Concordance, and other helps inserted at the end of the volume, will be very little troubled with the popular doubts, and will gain a far better impression of the real character and meaning of the Sacred Word than can be obtained by any other method.

This Introduction makes no claim to the qualities of an entirely original composition. Much of it is a compilation from able and trustworthy sources. The best works of the present times have been carefully and laboriously consulted; the selections made have been put together, with such modifications, abridgments, and occasional enlargements, as the editor thought necessary; a large amount of original matter has been added, and the whole so moulded and compacted, that it is as impossible, as it would be needless, to designate in each instance the particular source of supply. I wish, however, to express particularly my obligations to the learned editors of Bagster's Bibles, and to the Rev. John Ayre, one of the most instructive and valuable of the coadjutors of Dr. Thomas Hartwell Horne in his last edition of the Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

CONCISE HISTORY

OF THE

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

THE earliest version of any part of the Bible into any of the languages of the British Islands, so far as has been ascertained, is a translation of the Psalms into the Saxon tongue by Adhelm or Adelme, the first bishop of Sherborne, about the year 706. A Saxon version of the four Gospels was made by Egbert, Bishop of Lindisfern, who died, A. D. 721; and, a few years after, the venerable Bede translated the entire Bible into that language. Nearly two hundred years after Bede, King Alfred executed another translation of the Psalms, either to supply the loss of Adhelm's (which is supposed to have perished in the Danish wars), or to improve the plainness of Bede's version. A Saxon translation of the Pentateuch, Joshua, part of the books of Kings, Esther, and the apocryphal books of Judith, and the Maccabees, is also attributed to Elfric or Elfred, who was Archbishop of Canterbury, A. D. 995.

A chasm of several centuries ensued, during which the Scriptures appear to have been buried in oblivion, the general reading of them being prohibited by the Papal see. The first English translation of the Bible, known to be extant, was executed by an unknown individual, and is placed by Archbishop Usher in the year 1290; of this there are three manuscript copies preserved, in the Bodleian library, and in the libraries of Christ Church and Queen's Colleges at Oxford. Towards the close of the following century, John de Trevisa, vicar of Berkeley in the county of Gloucester, at the desire of his patron, Lord Berkeley, is said to have translated the Old and New Testaments into the English tongue. But as no part of this work appears ever to have been printed, the translation ascribed to him is supposed to have been confined to a few texts, which were painted on the walls of his patron's chapel at Berkeley Castle, or which are scattered in some parts of his works, several copies of which are known to exist in manuscript. Nearly contemporary with him was the celebrated JOHN WICKLIFFE, who, about the year 1380, translated the entire Bible from the Latin Vulgate into the English language as then spoken, not being sufficiently acquainted with the Hebrew and Greek languages to translate from the originals. Before the invention of printing, transcripts were obtained with difficulty, and copies were so rare, that, according to the registry of William Alnewick, Bishop of Norwich, in 1429, the price of one of Wickliffe's Testaments was not less than four marks and forty pence, or two pounds, sixteen shillings and eight-pence, a sum equivalent to more than forty pounds at present. This translation of the Bible, we are informed, was so offensive to those who were for taking away the key of knowledge and means of better information, that a bill was brought into the House of Lords, 13 Rich. II., A. D. 1390, for the purpose of suppressing it. The Duke of Lancaster, the king's uncle, is reported to have spoken to this effect: "We will not be the dregs of all: seeing other nations have the law of God, which is the law of our faith, written in their own language." At the same time he declared in a very solemn manner, "That he would maintain our having this law in our own tongue against those, whoever they should be, who first brought in the bill." The duke was seconded by others, who said, "That if the Gospel, by its being translated into English, was the occasion of running into error, they might know that there were more heretics to be found among the Latins than among the people of any other language. For that the Decretals reckoned no fewer than sixty-six Latin heretics; and so the Gospel must not be read in Latin, which yet the opposers of its English translation allowed." Through the Duke of Lancaster's influence the bill was rejected; and this success gave encouragement to some of Wickliffe's followers to publish another and more correct translation of the Bible. But in the year 1408, in a convocation held at Oxford by Archbishop Arundel, it was decreed by a constitution, "That no one should thereafter translate any text of Holy Scripture into English, by way of a book, or little book or tract; and that no book of this kind should be read, that was composed lately in the time of John Wickliffe, or since his death." This constitution led the way to great persecution, and many persons were punished severely, and some even with death, for reading the Scriptures in English.

In England, as in other parts of Europe, the spread of the doctrines of the Reformation was accompanied with new translations into the vernacular language. For the first printed English translation of the Scriptures we are indebted to William Tindal, who, having formed the design of translating the New Testament from the original Greek into English, removed to Antwerp in Flanders, for this purpose. Here, with the assistance of the learned John Fry, or Fryth, who was burnt on a charge of heresy in Smithfield, in 1552, and a friar called William Roze, who suffered death on the same account in Portugal, he finished it, and in the year 1526 it was printed either at Antwerp or Hamburg, without a name, in a middle-sized 8vo. volume, and without either calendar, references in the margin, or table at the end. Tindal annexed a pistil at the close of it, in which he "desyred them that were learned to amende if ought were found amysse." Many copies of this translation found their way into England; and to prevent their dispersion among the people, and the more effectually to enforce the prohibition published in all the dioceses against reading them, Tonstal, bishop of London, purchased all the remaining copies of this edition, and all which he could collect from private hands, and committed them to the flames at St. Paul's cross. The first impression of Tindal's translation being thus disposed of, numerous editions were afterward published in Holland, before the year 1530, in which Tindal seems to have had no interest, but which found a ready sale, and those which were imported into England were ordered to be burned. On one of these occasions, Sir Thomas More, who was then chancellor, and who concurred with the bishop in the execution of this measure, inquired of a person, who stood accused of heresy, and to whom he promised indemnity, on consideration of an explicit and satisfactory answer, how Tindal subsisted abroad, and who were the persons in London that abetted and supported him; to which inquiry the heretical convert replied, "It was the Bishop of London who maintained him, by sending a sum of money to buy up the impression of his Testament." The chancellor smiled, admitted the truth of the declaration, and suffered the accused person to escape. The people formed a very unfavorable opinion of those who ordered the Word of God to be burned, and concluded that there must be an obvious repugnance between the New Testament and the doctrines of those who treated it with this indignity. Those who were suspected of importing and concealing any of these books, were adjudged by Sir T. More to ride with their faces to the tails of their horses, with papers on their heads, and the New Testaments, and other books which they had dispersed, hung about their cloaks, and at the standard in Cheapside to throw them into a fire prepared for that purpose, and to be fined at the king's pleasure.

When Tonstal's purchase served only to benefit Tindal, and those who were employed in printing and selling successive editions of his Testament, and other measures for restraining their dispersion seemed to have little or no effect, the pen of the witty, eloquent, and learned Sir Thomas More, was employed against the translator; and the bishop granted him a license, or faculty, dated March 7, 1527, to have and to read the several books which Tindal and others published; and at his desire Sir Thomas composed a dialogue, written with much humor, and designed to expose Tindal's translation, which was published in 1529. In this dialogue he alleges, among other charges, that Tindal had mistranslated three words of great importance, viz: the words priests, church, and charity; calling the first seniors, the second congregation, and the third love. He also charges him with changing commonly the term grace into favor, confession into knowledging, penance into repentance, and a contrite heart into a troubled heart. The Bishop of London had, indeed, in a sermon, declared, that he had found in it no less than two thousand errors, or mistranslations; and Sir Thomas More discovered (as he affirmed) above one thousand texts by tale, falsely translated. In 1530, a royal proclamation was issued, by the advice of the prelates and clerks, and of the universities, for totally suppressing the translation of the Scriptures, corrupted by William Tindal. The proclamation set forth, that it was not necessary to have the Scriptures in the English tongue, and in the hands of the common people; that the distribution of them, as to allowing or denying it, depended on the discretion of their superiors; and that, considering the malignity of the time, an English translation of the Bible would rather occasion the continuance, or increase of errors, than any benefit to their souls. However, the proclamation announced the king's intention, if the present translation were abandoned, at a proper season, to provide that the Holy Scriptures should be by great, learned, and catholic persons, translated into the English tongue, if it should then seem convenient. In the meantime, Tindal was busily employed in translating for popular use into English the five books of Moses, in which he was assisted by Miles Coverdale. But his papers being lost by shipwreck in his voyage to Hamburg, where he designed to print the book, a delay occurred, and it was not put to press till the year 1530. It is a small 8vo. printed at different presses, and with different types. In the preface he complained, that there was not so much as one i in his New Testament, if it wanted a tittle over its head, but it had been noted, and numbered to the ignorant people for an heresy, who were made to believe, that there were many thousand heresies in it, and that it was so faulty as to be incapable of amendment or correction. In this year he published an answer to Sir Thomas More's dialogue, containing his reasons for the changes which he had introduced into his translation. The three former editions of Tindal's English New Testament being all sold off, the Dutch booksellers printed a fourth in this year, in a smaller volume and letter. In 1531, Tindal published an English version of the prophet Jonah, with a prologue, full of invective against the church of Rome. In 1534, was published a fourth Dutch edition, or the fifth in all, of Tindal's New Testament, in 12mo. In this same year, Tindal printed his own edition of the New Testament in English, which he had diligently revised and corrected; to which is prefixed a prologue; and at the end are the pistils of the Old Testament, closing with the following advertisement: "Imprinted at Antwerp, by Marten Emperour, anno M. D. XXXIV." Another edition was published this year, in 16mo. and printed in a German letter. Hall says, in his Chronicle, printed during the reign of Henry VIII. by Richard Grafton, the benefactor and friend of Tindal: "William Tindal translated the New Testament, and first put it into print; and he likewise translated the five books of Moses, Joshua, Judicum, Ruth, the books of Kings, and books of Paralipomenon, Nehemiah, and the first of Esdras, and the prophet Jonas; and no more of the Holy Scriptures." Upon his return to Antwerp, in 1531, King Henry VIII. and his council, contrived means to have him seized and imprisoned. After long confinement he was condemned to death by the emperor's decree in an assembly at Augsburgh; and in 1536, he was strangled at Villefort, near Brussels, the place of his imprisonment, after which his body was reduced to ashes. He expired, praying repeatedly and earnestly, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes." Several editions of his Testament were printed in the year of his death. Tindal had little or no skill in the Hebrew, and therefore he probably translated the Old Testament from the Latin. The knowledge of languages was in its infancy; nor was our English tongue arrived at that degree of improvement, which it has since attained; it is not, therefore, surprising, that there should be many faults in this translation which need amendment. This, indeed, was a task, not for a single person, but requiring the concurrence of many, in circumstances much more favorable for the execution of it than those of an exile. Nevertheless, although this translation is far from being perfect, few first translations will be found preferable to it.

In 1535 the whole Bible, translated into English, was printed in folio, and dedicated to the king by Miles Coverdale, a man greatly esteemed for his piety, knowledge of the Scriptures, and diligent preaching; on account of which qualities King Edward VI. advanced him to the see of Exeter. In his dedication and preface, he observes that as to the present translation, it was neither his labor nor his desire to have this work put into his hands; but "when others were moved by the Holy Ghost to undertake the cost of it," he was the more bold to engage in the execution of it. Agreeably, therefore, to desire, he set forth this "special" translation, not in contempt of other men's translations, or by way of reproving them, but humbly and faithfully following his interpreters, and that under correction. Of these, he said, he used five different ones, who had translated the Scriptures not only into Latin, but also into Dutch. He further declared, that he had neither wrested nor altered so much as one word for the maintenance of any manner of sect, but had with a clear conscience purely and faithfully translated out of the foregoing interpreters, having only before his eyes the manifest truth of the Scriptures. But because such different translations, he saw, were apt to offend weak minds, he added, that there came more understanding and knowledge of the Scripture by these sundry translations, than by all the glosses of sophistical doctors; and he therefore desires, that offense might not be taken, because one translated "scribe," and another "lawyer," one "repentance," and another "penance," or "amendment." This is the first English Bible allowed by royal authority; and also the first translation of the whole Bible printed in our language. It was called a "special" translation, because it was different from the former English translations. It is divided into six tomes or parts, adorned with wood cuts, and furnished with Scripture references in the margin. The last page has these words: "Prynted in the yere of our Lorde M. D. xxxv. and fynished the fourth day of October." Of this Bible there was another edition in a large 4to., 1550, which was republished, with a new title, 1553. Coverdale, in this edition of the English Bible, prefixed to every book the contents of the several chapters, and not to the particular chapters, which was afterwards the case: and he likewise omitted all Tindal's prologues and notes. Soon after this Bible was finished, in 1536, Lord Cromwell, keeper of the privy seal, and the king's vicar-general and vicegerent in ecclesiastical matters, published injunctions to the clergy by the king's authority, the seventh of which was, that every parson, or proprietary of any parish church, within this realm, should, before the first of August, provide a book of the whole Bible, both in Latin and in English, and lay it in the choir, for every man that would, to look and read therein; and should discourage no man from reading any part of the Bible either in Latin or English, but rather comfort, exhort, and admonish every man to read it, as the very Word of God, and the spiritual food of a man's soul, &c.

In 1537, another edition of the English Bible was printed by Grafton and Whitchurch, at Hamburgh, as some think, or, as others suppose, at Malborow, or Harpurg in Hesse, or Marbeck in the duchy of Wirtemberg, where Rogers was superintendent. It bore the name of Thomas Matthewe, and it was set forth with the king's most gracious license. This book contained Tindal's prologue and notes; and was no other than the translation of Tindal and Coverdale somewhat altered. The name of Matthewe is allowed to have been fictitious, for reasons of prudence; one of which was, that the memory of Tindal had become odious to many. It may well be admitted that John Rogers, a learned academic, and the first who was condemned to the flames in the reign of Queen Mary, was employed by Cranmer to superintend this edition, and to furnish the few emendations and additions that were thought necessary. This must have been the general persuasion in 1555, as the condemning sentence preserved by Fox, is "against Rogers, priest, alias called Matthew." Cranmer presented a copy of this book to Lord Cromwell, desiring his intercession with the king for the royal license, that it might be purchased and used by all. There are extant two letters from the archbishop, on the subject of Lord Cromwell's intercession, expressing warm approbation and acknowledgment. "I doubt not," says he, "but that hereby such fruit of good knowledge shall ensue, that it shall well appear hereafter what high and excellent service you have done unto God and the king; which shall so much redound to your honor, that, besides God's reward, you shall obtain perpetual memory for the same within this realm."—"This deed you shall hear of at the great day, when all things shall be opened and made manifest." In the year 1538, an injunction was published by the vicar-general of the kingdom, ordaining the clergy to provide, before a certain festival, one book of the whole Bible, of the largest volume in English, and to set it up in some convenient place within their churches, where their parishioners might most commodiously resort to read it. A royal declaration was also published, which the curates were to read in their several churches, informing the people that it had pleased the king's majesty to permit and command the Bible, being translated into their mother tongue, to be sincerely taught by them, and to be openly laid forth in every parish church. But the curates were very cold in this affair, and read the king's injunctions and declarations in such a manner, that scarcely anybody could know or understand what they read. They also read the word of God confusedly; and they bade their parishioners, notwithstanding what they read, which they were compelled to read, "to do as they did in times past, and to live as their fathers, the old fashion being the best." The setting forth of this book much offended Gardiner and his fellow bishops, both for the prologues, and especially because there was a table in the book chiefly about the Lord's supper, the marriage of priests, and the mass, which was there said not to be found in Scripture. It was wonderful to see with what joy this book was received, not only among the more learned, and those who were noted lovers of the reformation, but generally all over England, among the common people; and with what avidity God's word was read, and what resort there was to the places appointed for reading it. Every one that could, bought the book, and busily read it, or heard it read, and many elderly persons learned to read on purpose. During a vacancy in the see of Hereford, it was visited by Cranmer, who enjoined the clergy to procure, by the first of August, a whole Bible in Latin and English, or, at least, a New Testament in these languages; to study every day one chapter of these books, conferring the Latin and English together, from the beginning to the end; and not to discourage any layman from reading them, but encourage them to it, and to read them for the reformation of their lives and knowledge of their duty. In the course of the year 1538, a quarto edition of the New Testament, in the Vulgate Latin, and Coverdale's English, bearing the name of Hollybushe, was printed, with the king's license, by James Nicolson. Of this another more correct edition was published in 1539, in 8vo., and dedicated to Lord Cromwell. In 1538, an edition in 4to. of the New Testament, in English, with Erasmus's Latin translation, was printed, with the king's license, by Redman. In this year it was resolved to revise Matthewe's Bible, and to print a correct edition of it. With this view Grafton went to France, where the workmen were more skilful, and the paper was both better and cheaper than in England, and obtained permission from Francis I., at the request of King Henry VIII., to print his Bible at Paris. But notwithstanding the royal license, the inquisition interposed, and issued an order, dated December 17, 1538, summoning the French printers, their English employers, and Coverdale the corrector of the work, and prohibiting them to proceed; and the impression, consisting of 2,500 copies, was seized, confiscated, and condemned to the flames. Some chests, however, of these books escaped the fire by the avarice of the person who was appointed to superintend the burning of them; and the English proprietors, who had fled on the first alarm, returned to Paris as soon as it subsided, and not only recovered some of these copies, but brought with them to London the presses, types, and printers, and resuming the work, finished it in the following year.

As soon as the Papal power was abolished in England, and the king's supremacy settled by parliament in 1534, Cranmer was very assiduous in promoting the translation of the Holy Scriptures into the vulgar tongue; well knowing how much the progress of the Reformation depended upon this measure. Accordingly, he moved in convocation, that a petition should be presented to the king for leave to procure a new translation of the Bible. This motion was vigorously opposed by Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and his party: but Cranmer prevailed. The arguments for a new translation, urged by Cranmer, and enforced by Queen Anne Bullen, who had then great interest in the king's affections, were so much considered by him, that, notwithstanding the opposition, public and private, on the part of Gardiner and his adherents, Henry gave orders for setting about it immediately. To prevent any revocation of the order, Cranmer, whose mind was intent on introducing a free use of the English Scriptures by faithful and able translators, proceeded without delay to divide an old English translation of the New Testament into nine or ten parts, which he caused to be transcribed into paper-books, and to be distributed among the most learned bishops and others; requiring that they should perfectly correct their respective portions, and return them to him at a limited time. When the assigned day came, every man sent his appropriate portion to Lambeth, except Stokesly, Bishop of London. This laudable design of the archbishop failed; but the business was executed by other persons, whom he countenanced and encouraged. In April, 1539, Grafton and Whitchurch printed the Bible (called the "Great Bible") in large folio, "eum privilegio ad imprimendum solum." A beautiful frontispiece, designed by Holbein, was prefixed to it: and in the text, those parts of the Latin version which are not found in the Hebrew or Greek, are inserted in a smaller letter; such, for instance, as the three verses of the 14th Psalm, which are the 5th, 6th, and 7th, in the translation of the English liturgy, and the controverted clause in I. John v. 7, 8; and a mark is used to denote a difference of reading between the Hebrew and Chaldee, afterwards explained in a separate treatise. In this edition Matthewe's Bible was revised, and several alterations and corrections were made in the translation, especially in the book of Psalms. Tindal's prologues and notes, and the notes added by others, in the edition of 1537, were wholly omitted. Pointing hands, placed in the margin and in the text, show the passages on which these notes were written. Coverdale, in a sermon at Paul's cross, defended his translation from some slanderous reports which were then raised against it, confessing "that he himself now saw some faults, which, if he might review the book once again, as he had twice before, he doubted not he should amend; but for any heresy, he was sure that there were none maintained in his translation." This is related by Dr. Fulke, who was one of Coverdale's auditors. A second edition of this Bible seems to have been printed either in this or the next year, by Edward Whitchurch; but the copy is imperfect, and has no date.

In the course of the year 1539, another Bible was printed by John Byddell, called "Taverner's Bible," from the name of its conductor, Richard Taverner; who was educated at Christ church, Oxford, patronized by Lord Cromwell, and probably encouraged by him to undertake the work, on account of his skill in the Greek tongue. This is neither a bare revisal of the English Bible just described, nor a new version; but a kind of intermediate work, being a correction of what is called "Matthewe's Bible," many of whose marginal notes are adopted, and many omitted, and others inserted by the editors. It is dedicated to the king. After his patron's death, Taverner was imprisoned in the Tower for this work; but he had the address to reinstate himself in the king's favor. In November, 1539, the king, at the intercession of Cranmer, appointed Lord Cromwell to take special care that no person, within the realm, should attempt to print any English Bible for five years, but such as should be admitted by Lord Cromwell; and assigns this reason for the prohibition, that the Bible should be considered and perused in one translation, in order to avoid the manifold inconveniences to which human frailty might be subject from a diversity of translations, and the ill use that might be made of it. In the year 1540, two privileged editions of the Bible, which had been printed in the preceding year, issued from the press of Edward Whitchurch. Cranmer wrote a preface for the editions of the year 1540, from which we learn the opinions and practice of those times. In May of this year, the curates and parishioners of every parish were required, by royal proclamation, to provide themselves with the Bible of the largest volume before the feast of All Saints, under the penalty of 40s. for every month during which they should be without it. The king charged all ordinaries to enforce the observance of this proclamation; and he apprised the people, that his allowing them the Scriptures in their mother-tongue was not his duty, but an evidence of his goodness and liberality to them, of which he exhorted them not to make any ill use. In May, 1541, one edition of Cranmer's Bible was finished by Richard Grafton; who, in the November following, completed also another Bible of the largest volume, which was superintended, at the king's command, by Tonstal, Bishop of Durham, and Heath, Bishop of Rochester.

In consequence of the king's settled judgment "that his subjects should be nursed in Christ by reading the Scriptures," he again, on the 7th of May, published a brief or decree, for setting up the Bible of the great volume in every parish church throughout England. However, this decree appears to have been very partially and reluctantly observed; and the bishops were charged, by a writer in 1546, with attempting to suppress the Bible, under pretence of preparing a version of it for publication within seven years. After the death of Cromwell in 1540, the bishops inclined to Popery gained strength; and the English translation was represented to the king as very erroneous and heretical, and destructive of the harmony and peace of the kingdom. In the convocation assembled in February, 1542, the archbishop, in the king's name, required the bishops and clergy to revise the translation of the New Testament, which, for that purpose, was divided into fourteen parts, and portioned out to fifteen bishops; the Apocalypse, on account of its difficulty, being assigned to two. Gardiner ellogged this business with embarrassing instructions; and Cranmer clearly perceiving the resolution of the bishops to defeat the proposed translation, procured the king's consent to refer the matter to the two universities, against which the bishops protested: but the archbishop declared his purpose to adhere to the will of the king his master. With this contest the business terminated; and the convocation was soon after dissolved. The Romish party prevailed also in parliament, which enacted a law that condemned and abolished Tindal's translation, and allowed other translations to remain in force, under certain restrictions. After the passing of this act, Grafton, the king's printer, was imprisoned; nor was he released without giving a bond of £300 neither to print nor sell any more English Bibles, till the king and the clergy should agree on a translation. In 1544, the Pentateuch was printed by John Day and William Seres; and in 1546, the king prohibited by proclamation the having and reading of Wickliffe's, Tindal's, and Coverdale's translations, and forbade the use of any other than what was allowed by parliament. From the history of English translations during the reign of Henry VIII. we learn that the friends of the Reformation conducted themselves with zeal and prudence in the great work of introducing and improving English translations of the Bible; that they encountered many difficulties from the dangerous inconsistency of a despotic prince, and from the inveterate prejudices of a strong Romish party; and that the English Scriptures were sought after and read with avidity by the bulk of the people.

Upon the accession of Edward VI. the severe stat. 34 and 35 Henry VIII. c. 1, was repealed, and a royal injunction was published, that not only the whole English Bible should be placed in churches, but also the paraphrase of Erasmus in English to the end of the four Evangelists. It was likewise ordered by this injunction, that every parson, vicar, curate, etc., under the degree of a bachelor of divinity, should possess the New Testament, both in Latin and English, with the paraphrase of Erasmus upon it; and that the bishops, etc., in their visitations and synods should examine them, how they had profited in the study of the Holy Scriptures. It was also appointed, that the epistle and gospel of the mass should be read in English; and that on every Sunday and holiday, one chapter of the New Testament in English should be plainly and distinctly read at matins, and one chapter of the Old Testament at even-song. But in the year 1549, when the book of common prayer, etc., was finished, what nearly resembles our present custom was enjoined, viz., that after reading the Psalms in order at morning and evening prayer, two lessons, the first from the Old Testament, and the second from the New Testament, should be read distinctly with a loud voice. During the course of this reign, that is, in less than seven years and six months, eleven impressions of the whole English Bible were published, and six of the English New Testament; besides an English translation of the whole New Testament, paraphrased by Erasmus. The Bibles were reprinted, according to the preceding editions, whether Tindal's, Coverdale's, Matthewe's, Cranmer's, or Taverner's.

In 1562, the "Great Bible," viz., that of Coverdale's translation, which had been printed in the time of Henry VIII., and also in the time of King Edward, was revised by Archbishop Parker, and reprinted for the use of the church; and this was to serve till that projected by his grace was ready for publication.

Many of the principal reformers having been driven to Geneva during the persecutions of Queen Mary's reign, they published, in 1557, an English New Testament, printed by Conrad Badius; the first in our language which contained the distinctions of verses by numerical figures, after the manner of the Greek Testament, which had been published by Robert Stephens in 1551. R. Stephens, indeed, published his figures in the margin; whereas the Geneva editors prefixed theirs to the beginning of minute subdivisions with breaks, after our present manner. When Queen Elizabeth passed through London from the tower to her coronation, a pageant was erected in Cheapside, representing Time coming out of a cave, and leading a person clothed in white silk, who represented Truth, his daughter. Truth had the English Bible in hand, on which was written "Verbum veritatis," that is, word of truth. Truth addressed the queen, and presented her with the book. She kissed it, held it in her hand, laid it on her breast, greatly thanked the city for their present, and added that she would often and diligently read it. Upon a royal visitation in 1559, the Bible, and Erasmus' paraphrase, were restored to the Churches; and articles of inquiry were exhibited whether the clergy discouraged any from reading any part of the Scriptures. "Ministers were also enjoined to read every day one chapter of the Bible at least; and all who were admitted readers in the church were daily to read one chapter at least of the Old Testament, and another of the New, with good advisement, to the encrease of their knowledge."

During the year 1559, the exiles at Geneva published the book of Psalms in English, with marginal notes, and with a dedication to the queen dated February 10. In 1560, the whole Bible in 4to. was printed at Geneva by Rowland Harle; some of the refugees from England continuing in that city for this purpose. The translators were Bishop Coverdale, Anthony Gilby, William Whittingham, Christopher Woodman, Thomas Sampson, and Thomas Cole; to whom some add John Knox, John Bodleigh, and John Pullain; all zealous Calvinists, both in doctrine and discipline: but the chief and most learned of them were the first three. Professing to observe the sense, and to adhere as much as possible to the words of the original, and in many places to preserve the Hebrew phraseology, after the unremitting labor and study of more than two years, they finished their translation, and published it; with an epistle dedicatory to the queen, and another, by way of preface, to their brethren of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Besides the translation, the editors of the Geneva Bible noted in the margin the diversities of speech and reading, especially according to the Hebrew; they inserted in the text with another kind of letter, every word that seemed to be necessary for explaining any particular sentence: in the division of the verses, they followed the Hebrew examples, and added the number to each verse; they also noted the principal matters, and the arguments, both for each book and each chapter; they set over the head of every page some remarkable word or sentence, for helping the memory; they introduced brief annotations for ascertaining the text, and explaining obscure words; they set forth with pictures certain places in the books of Moses, of the Kings, and Ezekiel, which could not be made intelligible by any other description; they added maps of divers places and countries, mentioned in the Old and New Testament; and they annexed two tables, one for the interpretation of Hebrew names, and the other containing all the chief matters of the whole Bible. Of this translation there were above thirty editions in folio, 4to. or 8vo., mostly printed by the queen's and king's printer, between the years 1560 and 1616. Editions of it were likewise printed at Geneva, Edinburgh, and Amsterdam. To some editions of the Geneva Bible (as to those of 1599 and 1611), is subjoined Beza's translation of the New Testament, Englished by L. Thompson.

In the year 1568, the Bible, proposed by Archbishop Parker three years before, was completed. In this performance, distinct portions of the Bible, at least fifteen in number, were allotted to select men of learning and abilities, appointed, by the queen's commission; and, accordingly, at the conclusion of each part, the edition of 1568 has the initial letters of each man's name to the end of the first epistle to the Corinthians; e. g. at the end of the Pentateuch, W. E. for William, Bishop of Exeter, whose allotment ended there; at the end of Ruth, R. M. for Richard Menevensis, or Bishop of St. David's, to whom pertained the second allotment; and so of the rest. But it still remains uncertain, who, and whether one or more, revised the rest of the New Testament. Eight of the persons employed were bishops; whence the book was called the "Bishops' Bible," and the "Great English Bible." The archbishop employed other critics to compare this Bible with the original languages, and with the former translations; one of whom was Laurence, a man famous in those times for his knowledge of Greek, whose corrections the Bishops' Bible followed exactly. His grace also sent instructions concerning the method which his translators were to observe; and recommended the addition of some short marginal notes, for the illustration or correction of the text. But the particulars of these instructions are not known. The archbishop, however, directed, reviewed, and finished the whole; which was printed and published in 1568, in a large folio size, and with a beautiful English letter, on royal paper, and embellished with several cuts of the most remarkable things in the Old and New Testaments, and in the Apocrypha, with maps cut in wood, and other engravings on copper. It has numerous marginal references and notes, and many useful tables. It also has numerous insertions between brackets, and in a smaller character; which are equivalent to the italics afterwards used by James' translators. The several additions from the vulgar Latin, inserted in the "Great Bible," are omitted; and verse 7 of I. John v. which was before distinguished by its being printed in a different letter, is here printed without any distinction; and the chapters are divided into verses. In the following year, 1569, it was again published in large 8vo. for the use of private families. This Bible was reprinted in 1572, in large folio, with several corrections and amendments, and several prolegomena; this is called "Matthew Parker's Bible." In the convocation of the province of Canterbury, which met in April, 1571, a canon was made enjoining the churchwardens to see that the Holy Bible be in every church in the largest volumes, if convenient; and it was likewise ordered, that every archbishop and bishop, every dean and chief residentiary, and every archdeacon, should have one of these Bibles in their cathedrals and families. This translation was used in the churches for forty years; though the Geneva Bible was more read in private houses.

In the year 1582, the Romanists finding it impossible to withhold the Scriptures any longer from the common people, printed an English New Testament at Rheims; it was translated, not from the original Greek, but from the Latin Vulgate. The editors (whose names are not known) retained the words azymes, tunike, holocaust, pasche, and a multitude of other Greek words untranslated, under the pretext of wanting proper and adequate English terms, by which to render them; and thus contrived to render them unintelligible to common readers. Hence the historian Fuller took occasion to remark that it was a "translation which needed to be translated;" and that its editors, "by all means labored to suppress the light of truth under one pretence or other." The erudite Puritan, Thomas Cartwright, was solicited by Sir Francis Walsingham, to refute this translation; but after he had made considerable progress in the work, he was prohibited from proceeding further by Archbishop Whitgift, who, judging it improper that the defence of the doctrine of the Church of England should be committed to a Puritan, appointed Dr. William Fulke in his place. By him the divines of Rheims were refuted with great spirit and ability. Fulke's work appeared in 1617, and in the following year, Cartwright's confutation was published under the auspices of Archbishop Abbot; both of them were accompanied with the Rhemish translation of the New Testament. The Old Testament was translated from the Vulgate at Douay (whence it is called the Douay Bible) in two volumes 4to., the first of which appeared in 1609, and the second in 1610. Annotations are subjoined, which are ascribed to one Thomas Worthington: the translators were William (afterwards Cardinal) Allen, Gregory Martin, and Richard Bristow. This translation, with the Rhemish version of the New Testament above noticed, forms the English Bible, which alone is used by the Romanists.

The last English version that remains to be noticed, is the authorized translation now in use, which is commonly called King James' Bible. He succeeded to the throne of England in 1603; and, several objections having been made to the Bishop's Bible at the conference held at Hampton Court in the following year, the king commanded a new version to be undertaken, and fifty-four learned men were appointed to this important labor; but, before it was commenced, seven of the persons nominated were either dead or had declined the task; for the list, as given us by Fuller, comprises only forty-seven names. All of them, however, were pre-eminently distinguished for their piety and for their profound learning in the original languages of the sacred writings; and such of them as survived till the commencement of the work were divided into six classes. Ten were to meet at Westminster, and to translate from the Pentateuch to the end of the second book of Kings. Eight, assembled at Cambridge, were to finish the rest of the Historical Books, and the Hagiographa. At Oxford, seven were to undertake the four greater prophets, with the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and the twelve minor prophets. The four Gospels, Acts of the Apostles, and the Apocalypse, were assigned to another company of eight, also at Oxford, and the epistles of St. Paul, together with the remaining canonical epistles, were allotted to another company of seven, at Westminster. Lastly, another company at Cambridge were to translate the Apocryphal books, including the prayer of Manasseh. The names of the translators, who were from Westminster, Oxford, and Cambridge, were as follows:

WESTMINSTER. Genesis to II. Kings inclusive.

DR. LANCELOT ANDREWS, then Dean of Westminster, who is reported to have been such a linguist that he understood fifteen languages. Afterwards Bishop of Chichester, 1605; then Ely in 1609; and finally of Winchester in 1619. Died 21st September, 1626, aged 71.

DR. JOHN OVERALL, then Dean of St. Paul's. Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, 1614. Of Norwich in 1618. Died 12th May, 1619, aged 60.

DR. ADRIAN A SARAVIA, then Canon of Westminster. Of Spanish extraction; the friend of Hooker, and tutor of Nicholas Fuller. Afterwards Prebend of Gloucester, and Canterbury, where he died 15th January, 1613, aged 82.

DR. RICHARD CLARKE, then Fellow of Christ College, Cambridge; Vicar of Minster and Monkton in the isle of Thanet: died in 1634, and a folio volume of his sermons published in 1637.

DR. JOHN LAIFIELD, then Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, afterwards Rector of St. Clements Danes. A Fellow of Chelsea College, which, however, was never founded. Died in 1617.

DR. ROBERT TIGHE, or TEIGH (not Leigh as often misnamed), then Archdeacon of Middlesex, and Rector of All-Hallows, Barking. An excellent textuary and profound linguist. He died in 1616, leaving his son £1,000 a year.

DR. FRANCIS BURLEIGH, then Vicar of Bishop Stortford, if not of Thorley, Herts, and died in 1619.

DR. GEOFFRY, or WILFRID KING, then Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. As Regius Professor of Hebrew in that University, he succeeded Robert Spalding, hereafter mentioned.

RICHARD THOMPSON, M. A., of Clare Hall, Cambridge; born in Holland of English parents; an admirable philologist, but better known in Italy, France, and Germany, than at home.

WILLIAM BEDWELL, the best Arabic scholar of his time. The tutor of Erpenius and Pocock; (but not W. Bedell of Kilmore, as has been conjectured; he was then at Venice,) "The industrious and thrice-learned," said Lightfoot, "to whom I will rather be a scholar, than take on me to teach others."

CAMBRIDGE. I. Chronicles to Ecclesiastes inclusive.

EDWARD LIVLIE, Regius Professor of Hebrew for thirty years in this University; an eminent linguist, in high esteem with Usher and Pocock. His death, in May, 1605, is supposed to have retarded the work in hand.

DR. JOHN RICHARDSON, then Fellow of Emmanuel College. Afterwards Master of Peter House, then of Trinity College. He is not to be confounded with Usher's friend of the same name. Died in 1625.

DR. LAURENCE CHADERTON, distinguished for Hebrew and Rabbinical learning, then first Master of Emmanuel College. "If you will not be Master," said Sir Walter Mildmay, "I will not be Founder." He was tutor of Joseph Hall of Norwich and W. Bedell of Kilmore, who retained the highest veneration for him, and died the year after him. Chaderton, who never required the aid of spectacles, died according to his epitaph, at the age of 103! Born in 1537 he lived to 13th November, 1640. His life, in Latin, by W. Dillingham, was published in 1700.

FRANCIS DILLINGHAM, then Fellow of Christ's College, an eminent Grecian. He was Parson of Dean, and beneficed at Wilden, Beds. As an author, he, as well as Overall continued to quote the Geneva version years after our present one had been published. He died a single and a wealthy man.

THOMAS HARRISON, Vice-Chancellor of Trinity College, was eminently skilled in the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew tongues, as his own University has borne witness. Dyer ascribes to him a Lexicon Pente Glotton.

DR. ROGER ANDREWS, brother of Lancelot, then Fellow of Pembroke Hall, and afterwards master of Jesus College, and Prebendary of Chichester. Died in 1618.

DR. ROBERT SPALDING, then Fellow of St. John's College, and afterwards the successor of Livlie as Regius Professor of Hebrew, a sufficient proof of his skill in that language.

DR. ANDREW BYNG, (not Burge, as in Burnet and Wilkins,) then Fellow of St. Peter's College. In 1606 Subdean of York, and in 1618 Archdeacon of Norwich. As Regius Professor of Hebrew, he succeeded King, who had succeeded Spalding, already mentioned.

OXFORD. Isaiah to Malachi inclusive.

DR. JOHN HARDING, then Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, and afterwards President of Magdalen College, and also Rector of Halsey in Oxfordshire.

DR. JOHN RAINOLDS, President of Corpus Christi College; the man who moved the King for this new translation. "The memory and reading of that man," said Bishop Hall, "were near to a miracle; and all Europe at the time could not have produced three men superior to Rainolds, Jewell, and Usher, all of this same College." At the age of 58, he died 21st May, 1607. Even during his sickness, his coadjutors met at his lodgings once a week, to compare and perfect their notes.

DR. THOMAS HOLLAND, then Fellow of Balliol College, afterwards Rector of Exeter, and Regius Professor of Divinity in Oxford. "Another Apollos," says Wood, "and mighty in the Scriptures." Died 17th March, 1613, aged 73.

DR. RICHARD KILBY, the Rector of Lincoln College, highly esteemed by Isaac Walton. He was afterwards prebendary of Lincoln, and Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. He left commentaries on Exodus, drawn from the Rabbins and Hebrew interpreters. Died November, 1620.

DR. MILES SMITH, then Canon of Hereford. A Hebrew and Chaldec, Syriac and Arabic scholar. He is understood to have been the writer of the preface. He and Bilson were to be the final examiners of the whole work. Bishop of Gloucester in 1612.

DR. RICHARD BRETT, then Fellow of Lincoln College. Eminent as a linguist in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, to which he added Chaldee, Arabic, and Ethiopic. Rector of Quainton, Bucks, where he died 15th April, 1637.

RICHARD FAIRCLOUGH, of New College, Oxford. The Rector of Bucknell, Oxfordshire, and died there in 1638.

CAMBRIDGE. The Apocryphal Books.

The Apocryphal Books were assigned to six Cambridge men, to wit, Dr. Duport, Master of Jesus College, Dr. Branthwaite and Radcliff, Mr. Ward, of Emmanuel College, and Mr. Ward of King's College, Mr. Downes and Mr. Boyse, all good men and eminent scholars; but Mr. Boyse was particularly distinguished above all the rest. This committee did their work pre-eminently well—there is no part of the Bible more perfectly translated. The first book of Maccabees, Sirach, the Wisdom of Solomon, Tobit and other books deserve to be read over and over again, as specimens of pure, beautiful Saxon English, nowhere to be excelled; and these books give us a very high idea of the intellectual and ethical culture of the educated Jews, between the time of the close of the Old Testament and the beginning of the New Testament canon, and ought to be diligently read by every Christian with special reference to that point.

OXFORD. Matthew to the Acts inclusive, and the Revelation.

DR. THOMAS RAVIS, then Dean of Christ Church. Afterwards on the 14th March, 1605, Bishop of Gloucester, and in 1607, of London, where he died 14th December, 1609.

DR. GEORGE ABBOT, then Dean of Winchester and Vice-Chancellor of Oxford. Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry in 1609; of London in 1610, and Bancroft dying 2d November, Abbot became primate in 1611. Died 4th August, 1633, aged 71.

DR. JOHN AGLIONBY, then Principal of St. Edmund's Hall and Rector of Islip, and afterwards chaplain in ordinary to the King. "Accomplished in learning and an exact linguist." Dr. Richard Eedes was indeed the first appointed, but he died 19th November, 1604; Aglionby died 6th February, 1610.

DR. GILES TOMSON, then Dean of Windsor, afterwards in March, 1611, Bishop of Gloucester, but died 14th June next year. "He had taken a great deal of pains in translating."

SIR HENRY SAVILE, Greek tutor to Elizabeth and Provost of Eton. He was knighted by James this year, and losing his son about that period, he devoted his time and fortune to the encouragement of learning. He contributed several rare books and MSS. to the Bodleian, besides Greek type and matrices to the Oxford press. His fine edition of Chrysostom's Works, in Greek, with notes by John Bois, and of which 1,000 copies, in eight volumes folio were printed, is said to have cost him £8,000. He died at Eton, 19th February, 1622, aged 73.

DR. JOHN PERYN, Professor of Greek, and afterwards Canon of Christ Church, died 9th May, 1615.

DR. LEONARD HUTTEN, then Vicar of Flower, Northamptonshire; an excellent Greek scholar, and learned in other branches. He died at the age of 75, 17th May, 1632. Dr. Ravens had been first appointed, but his place was vacated.

DR. JOHN HARMAR, had been Professor of Greek, Warden of Winchester College. A noted Latin and Greek scholar. He published Latin translations from Chrysostom, and his translation of Beza's sermons into English bespeaks him an excellent writer of English. He died 11th October, 1613.

WESTMINSTER. Romans to Jude inclusive.

DR. WILLIAM BARLOW, made Dean of Chester in December 1604, Bishop of Rochester in 1605, of Lincoln, 1608. Died 7th September, 1613.

DR. RALPH HUTCHENSON, then President of St. John's College, Oxford. Wood's Athenæ, by Bliss, ii. p. 92.

DR. JOHN SPENCER, Fellow of Corpus Christi College, and afterwards Chaplain to the King. On the death of Dr. Rainolds he succeeded him as President of Corpus Christi, and died 3d April, 1614.

DR. ROGER FENTON, it has been supposed; if so, Fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge; and Minister of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, London.

MICHAEL RABBETT, B. D., was Rector of St. Vedast, Foster Lane, London.

DR. THOMAS SANDERSON, of Balliol College, Oxford, Archdeacon of Rochester in 1606.

WILLIAM DAKINS, B. D., then Greek Lecturer, Cambridge, and afterwards junior Dean in 1606. He had been chosen for his skill in the original languages, but died February, 1607.

To these translators the following instructions were given:

"1. The ordinary Bible read in the church, commonly called the Bishop's Bible, to be followed, and as little altered as the original will permit.

"2. The names of the prophets and the holy writers, with the other names in the text, to be retained as near as may be, according as they are vulgarly used.

"3. The old ecclesiastical words to be kept, as the word church not to be translated congregation.

"4. When any word hath divers significations, that to be kept, which hath been most commonly used by the most eminent fathers, being agreeable to the propriety of the place and the analogy of faith.

"5. The division of the chapters to be altered either not at all, or as little as may be, if necessity so require.

"6. No marginal notes at all to be affixed, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek words which cannot without some circumlocution, so briefly and fitly be expressed in the text.

"7. Such quotations of places to be marginally set down, as shall serve for the fit references of one Scripture to another.

"8. Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters; and having translated or amended them severally by himself, where he thinks good, all to meet together, to confer what they have done, and agree for their part what shall stand.

"9. As any one company hath dispatched any one book in this manner, they shall send it to the rest, to be considered of, seriously and judiciously; for his majesty is very careful in this point.

"10. If any company, upon the review of the book so sent, shall doubt or differ upon any places, to send them word thereof, to note the places, and therewithal to send their reasons; to which if they consent not, the difference to be compounded at the general meeting, which is to be of the chief persons of each company, at the end of the work.

"11. When any place of special obscurity is doubted of, letters to be directed by authority, to send to any learned in the land for his judgment in such a place.

"12. Letters to be sent from every bishop to the rest of his clergy, admonishing them of this translation in hand, and to move and charge as many as, being skilful in the tongues, have taken pains in that kind, to send their particular observations to the company, either at Westminster, Cambridge, or Oxford, according as it was directed before in the king's letter to the archbishop.

"13. The directors in each company to be the Deans of Westminster and Chester for Westminster, and the King's Professors in Hebrew and Greek in the two Universities.

"14. These translations to be used, when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible, viz., Tyndal's, Coverdale's, Matthewe's, Whitchurch's, Geneva.

"15. Besides the said directors before mentioned, three or four of the most ancient and grave divines in either of the universities, not employed in translating, to be assigned by the Vice-Chancellor, upon conference with the rest of the heads, to be overseers of the translation, as well Hebrew as Greek, for the better observation of the 4th rule above specified."

According to these regulations, each book passed the scrutiny of all the translators successively. In the first instance, each individual translated every book which was allotted to his division. Secondly, the readings to be adopted were agreed upon by the whole of that company assembled together, at which meeting each translator must have been solely occupied by his own version. The book, thus finished, was sent to each of the other companies to be again examined; and at these meetings "one read the translation, the rest holding in their hands some Bible, either of the learned tongues, or French, Spanish, Italian, etc. If they found any fault, they spoke; if not, he read on." Further, the translators were empowered to call to their assistance any learned men, whose studies enabled them to be serviceable, when an urgent occasion of difficulty presented itself. The translation was commenced in the spring of 1607, and the completion of it occupied almost three years. At the expiration of that time, three copies of the whole Bible, thus translated and revised, were sent to London,—one from Oxford, one from Cambridge, and a third from Westminster. Here a committee of six, two being deputed by the companies at Oxford, two by those at Cambridge, and two by those at Westminster, reviewed and polished the whole work: which was finally revised by Dr. Smith (afterwards Bishop of Gloucester,) who wrote the preface, and by Dr. Bilson, Bishop of Winchester. This translation of the Bible was first published in folio in 1611, with the following title:

"The HOLY BIBLE, conteyning the Old Testament and the New, newly translated out of the Originall Tongues, and with the former Translations diligently compared and revised by his Majesties speciall Comandement. Imprinted at London, by Robert Barker, Printer to the King's most excellent Majestie. 1611."

There are copies of it which have the dates of 1612 and 1613. In 1653, an edition was printed by John Field, at Cambridge, in 24mo., which is of extreme rarity and beauty: it is called the Pearl Bible, from the very small type with which it was printed, but has very numerous errata, some of which are of importance. An imitation of it was made in Holland, in 1658; but the genuine edition is known by having the four first Psalms on a page, without turning over. In 1660, the same printer executed a splendid folio edition of the Bible, which was illustrated with chorographical plates, engraved by Ogilby, an eminent artist of that time: he also printed several other editions in 8vo. and 12mo. but they are not considered as typographical curiosities. From the time of Field to the end of the seventeenth century, several curious flat Bibles were printed, which are denominated preaching Bibles, from the use made of them in the pulpit during that period. The typographical execution of them is very clear, the type being a broad-faced letter, upon thin paper, with a few marginal notes, which gives them a superiority over many of the thick and heavy volumes that have since been printed.

In 1683, this translation was corrected, and many references to parallel texts were added by Dr. Scattergood; and in 1701, a very fine edition was published in large folio under the direction of Dr. Tenison, Archbishop of Canterbury, with chronological dates, and an index by Bishop Lloyd, and accurate tables of Scripture weights and measures by Bishop Cumberland: but this edition is said to abound with typographical errors. A very elaborate revision was next made by the Rev. Dr. Blayney, under the direction of the Vice-Chancellor and delegates of the Clarendon Press, at Oxford. In this edition, which was printed both in quarto and folio, in 1769, the punctuation was thoroughly revised; the words printed in Italics were examined and corrected by the Hebrew and Greek originals; the proper names, to the etymology of which allusions are made in the text, were translated and entered in the margin, the summaries of chapters and running titles at the top of each page corrected; some material errors in the chronology rectified; and the marginal references were re-examined and corrected, and thirty thousand four hundred and ninety-five new references were inserted in the margin. From the singular pains bestowed, in order to render this edition as accurate as possible, it has hitherto been considered the standard edition, from which all subsequent impressions have been executed. Notwithstanding, however, the great labor and attention bestowed by Dr. Blayney, his edition must now yield the palm of accuracy to the very beautiful and correct edition published by Messrs. Eyre and Strahan, but printed by Mr. Woodfall in 1806, and again in 1812, in quarto; as not fewer than one hundred and sixteen errors were discovered in collating the edition of 1806 with Dr. B.'s, and one of these errors was an omission of considerable importance. Messrs. Eyre and Strahan's editions may therefore be regarded as of the very highest authority, in respect to correctness of printing.

The British and Foreign Bible Society, and the American Bible Society, have taken great pains to revise the text of the authorized translation, and make it as correct as possible; and the later editions issued by these societies, are of almost faultless accuracy.

Samuel Bagster of London deserves great credit for what he has done in the way of issuing beautiful and useful editions of the authorized English translation of the Scriptures, and wherever the English language is spoken, Bagster's Bibles are known and prized above all price.

It has for some time been deeply and widely felt, that the changes in the English language since our translation was made, as well as the great advance in the knowledge of the original tongues, and the immensely rich and varied sources of illustration furnished by the researches of modern travelers and explorers, make a new revision of our authorized version an indispensable necessity. The Church of England has commenced the work, and has committed the execution of it to some of the most able and suitable men that can be found in Britain, not only Episcopal, but also Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Baptist, Methodist, and even a Roman Catholic, as appears by the following statement made in the month of June, 1870:

"At the first meeting of the Committee appointed by the Convocation of Canterbury, the following resolutions and rules were agreed to, as the fundamental principles on which the revision of the Bible is to be conducted:

"I. That the Committee appointed by the Convocation of Canterbury at its last session separate itself into two companies, the one for the revision of the authorized version of the Old Testament, the other for the revision of the authorized version of the New Testament.

"II. That the company for the revision of the authorized version of the Old Testament consists of the Bishops of St. Davids (Thirlwall), Llandaff (Ollivant), Ely (Browne), Lincoln (Wordsworth), and Bath and Wells (Hervey), and of the following members from the Lower House: Archdeacon Rose, Canon Selwyn, Dr. Jebb, and Dr. Kay.

"III. That the company for the revision of the authorized version of the New Testament consist of the Bishops of Winchester (Wilberforce), Gloucester and Bristol (Ellicott), and Salisbury (Moberly), and of the following members from the Lower House: The Prolocutor, the Deans of Canterbury and Westminster, and Canon Blakesley.

"IV. That the first portion of the work to be undertaken by the Old Testament Company be the revision of the authorized version of the Pentateuch.

"V. That the first portion of the work to be undertaken by the New Testament Company be the revision of the authorized version of the Synoptical Gospels.

"VI. That the following scholars and divines be invited to join the Old Testament Company: Dr. W. L. Alexander, Professor Chinnery, Canon Cook, Professor A. B. Davidson, Dr. B. Davies, Professor Fairbairn, the Rev. F. Field, Dr. Ginsburg, Dr. Gotch, Archdeacon Harrison, Professor Leathes, Professor M'Gill, Canon Payne Smith, Professor E. H. Perowne, Professor Plumptre, Canon Pusey, Dr. Wright (British Museum), W. A. Wright (Cambridge).

"VII. That the following scholars and divines be invited to join the New Testament Company: Dr. Angus, the Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Eadie, the Rev. F. J. A. Hort, the Rev. W. G. Humphry, Canon Kennedy, Archdeacon Lee, Dr. Lightfoot, Professor Milligan, Professor Moulton, Dr. J. H. Newman, Professor Newth, Dr. A. Roberts, the Rev. G. Vance Smith, Dr. Scott (Balliol College), the Rev. F. Scrivener, Dr. Vaughan, and Canon Wescott. [Five of these have declined—Dr. Pusey, Canon Payne Smith, Dr. Wright, Dr. Newman, and Dr. Tregelles. The latter is too ill to attend to it, and Dr. Newman, being a Catholic, could hardly be expected to look with favor on the project.]

"VIII. That the general principles to be followed by both companies be as follows:

"1. To introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the authorized version consistently with faithfulness.

"2. To limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the authorized and earlier English versions.

"3. Each company to go twice over the portion to be revised, once provisionally, the second time finally, and on principles of voting as hereinafter provided.

"4. That the text to be adopted be that for which the evidence is decidedly preponderating, and that when the text so adopted differs from that from which the authorized version was made, the alteration be indicated in the margin.

"5. To make or retain no change in the text on the second final revision by each company, except two-thirds of those present approve of the same, but on the first revision to decide by simple majorities.

"6. In every case of proposed alteration that may have given rise to discussion, to defer the voting thereupon till the next meeting, whensoever the same shall be required by one-third of those present at the meeting, such intended vote to be announced in the notice for the next meeting.

"7. To revise the headings of chapters, pages, paragraphs, italics, and punctuation.

"8. To refer on the part of each company, when considered desirable, to divines, scholars, and literary men, whether at home or abroad, for their opinions.

"IX. That the work of each company be communicated to the other as it is completed, in order that there may be as little deviation from uniformity in language as possible.

"X. That the special or by-rules for each company be as follows :

"1. To make all corrections in writing previous to the meeting.

"2. To place all the corrections due to textual considerations on the left-hand margin, and all other corrections on the right-hand margin.

"3. To transmit to the chairman, in case of being unable to attend, the corrections proposed in the portion agreed upon for consideration."

It must be some time, however, perhaps years, before this important work can be completed.

For several years past, learned men of the Baptist denomination have been hard at work on a revision of the English Scriptures in accordance with their views, of which only the New Testament and a few books of the Old have as yet been published.

Canon of Scripture.

THE word canon found in the Greek of Gal. vi. 16, means literally a measuring rule; and the canon of Scripture indicates those books which, in distinction from all others, are received as of divine inspiration and of divine authority.

CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The books of the Old Testament, as they stand in our common English Bibles, are the books and the only books which the Jews, who were entrusted by GOD HIMSELF with the oracles of God, (Rom. iii. 2,) have always recognized as of divine inspiration and divine authority. They have never allowed even works of acknowledged merit produced from time to time among them afterwards to be added to the sacred canon. This is matter of unquestionable history. And, though it might be thought that the Alexandrian Jews, apart in some respects from their brethren in Judea, were not at one with them in their limitation of the Scripture canon, since certain other pieces were appended to the Septuagint or Alexandrian Greek translation, yet it will be found that substantially they held the same rule. Thus the grandson of the author of Ecclesiasticus, in his prologue to that book, implies the identity; and Philo, the eminent Alexandrian, evidently acquainted with apocryphal works, from which he has occasionally borrowed ideas, nowhere cites them, as he does almost every book of canonical Scripture.

It is very evident, from the expressions we continually meet in the New Testament, that a certain body of writings was at that time considered to be "Scripture." The various terms employed—"the Scripture," "the Scriptures," "the Holy Scriptures," "the Holy Writings," (II. Tim. iii. 15, Gr.)

etc.,—presuppose this. And sometimes various parts of a whole are spoken of—"the law and the prophets," "the law of Moses, the prophets, and the psalms,"—showing the distribution of the several writings into well-known classes, (comp. Matt. v. 17, xv. 3-9; Mark xii. 24; Luke xxiv. 27, 44, 45; John v. 39, x. 34, 35; Rom. iii. 2; II. Tim. iii. 16; I. Pet. i. 10-12; II. Pet. i. 19-21.) There is also contemporary secular evidence as to the several books which made up the collection of the Scriptures. Josephus lived at the time of the apostles, and declares that the Jews "had only twenty-two books of Scripture, which might justly challenge credit and belief among them; whereof five were the books of Moses, containing little less than 3,000 years; and thirteen the books of the prophets, wherein they wrote the acts of their times, from the death of Moses to the reign of Artaxerxes, king of Persia; and four more, containing both hymns to God, and admonitions to men for the amendment of their lives; but, from the time of Artaxerxes, though certain books had been written, yet they deserved not the same credit and belief which the former had, because there was no certain succession of prophets among them: in the meanwhile, what belief they had of the true Scriptures which they only acknowledged, and how faithful they were towards them, was from hence most manifest, that, though they were written so long time before, yet durst never any man presume either to add or diminish, or alter aught at all in them, it being a maxim engrafted into every one of that nation from their youth, and in a manner born with them, to hold these writings for the oracles of God, and remaining constant to them, if need were, willingly to die for them," (Contr. Apion. lib. i. §8.)

The twenty-two books of which Josephus speaks are thus made up:—

There is therefore the strongest proof which the nature of the case admits, that the Old Testament (as we call it) was, at the beginning of the Christian era, revered as the rule of faith containing the communications of God to man, and further, that it was composed of the same books or parts which compose it now. These books, and these only were THE BIBLE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, which He constantly referred to as THE WORD OF GOD, the Scriptures which could not be broken, (John x. 35,) which He was continually explaining to his disciples to the very last, and urging upon them the most implicit belief and acceptance of their every sentence. (Luke xxiv. 25-27, 32.)

Moreover, it is clear, from the books of the Apocrypha written before our Lord's advent, that there was at an earlier date a collection recognized as the sacred code of the Jewish church. Some proof of this has been already given in the reference made to the prologue to Ecclesiasticus. But the following passages may also be consulted: Ecclus. xxiv. 23; Bar. iv. 1; I. Macc. i. 56, 57, ii. 50-68, xii. 9; II. Macc. vi. 23. The holy books of Scripture are expressly named as in the hands of the people in the time of Jonathan Maccabeus; and for these books the Jews contended as earnestly then as at any period of their history. Many other passages there are more or less directly referring to the contents of those books, and leading us to the conclusion that those which were "the Scriptures" of those times are identical with "the Scriptures" of a later date.

The Septuagint or Alexandrian Greek version of the Scriptures is another testimony. This version, comprising all the books of the Jewish canon, was in existence and credit before the Christian era. It is true that the complete translation was not made at once; that the Pentateuch was first rendered into Greek, about 286 years B. C., and that the versions of other books succeeded at intervals, perhaps for a century; also that there are certain additions of things not in the Hebrew text, tending afterwards to complicate the question; yet, as before observed, we have no reason to believe that originally the Alexandrian canon differed from that of Palestine. Thus the great fact is proved that some centuries before Christianity arose there was a body of sacred writings held to be the authoritative standard of the Jewish faith.

The Old Testament gives evidence that its contents were preserved with care. We are told that the book of the law was delivered to the Levites to be placed beside the ark of the covenant (Deut. xxxi. 9, 25, 26). The diligent writing by Joshua of other "words" is noted (Josh. xxiv. 26). And collections seem from time to time to have been made, as of proverbs (Prov. xxv. 1), of Jeremiah's writings (Jer. xxxvi. 2-4, 32: see also xv. 16). Then, again, "the book of the Lord" is spoken of (Isai. xxxiv. 16: comp. xxx. 8). So Daniel had "the books" (Dan. ix. 2; the article being in the original); and after the return from Babalon "the law" and "the former prophets" are referred to as if they were a known collection (Zech. vii. 12; comp. i. 4.) Very remarkable, too, are the expressions in the Psalms. David could hardly have penned that commendation of "the Law of the Lord" (Psal. xix. 7-11,) had that law not been in a written form; and later psalm-writers have spoken of loving the law, and the testimonies, and the Word of God, taking them as a guide, meditating upon them day and night (cxix. 97, 99, 105, 149; comp. cxxxviii. 2, cxlvii. 19.) Surely there must have been at the time some well-understood body of divine writings to justify language like this.

It was not to be expected that the sacred books themselves would give a definite account of the settlement of the canon. Indications such as have been exhibited are all that could be looked for in them. But other testimony points to the times of Ezra and Nehemiah, the life-time of the last prophets of the Jewish church, as the period when the Holy Writings were definitely gathered and recognized as the completed standard of God's teaching. Traditions of this kind are mentioned in two of the apocryphal books (II. Esdr. xiv.; II. Macc. ii. 13.) There is also an extraordinary statement of this kind in the Talmud. It is to the following effect. The question is first put, Who wrote these books? And to this the answer is given: "Moses wrote the Pentateuch and Job; Joshua his book and eight verses in Deuteronomy; Samuel the books of Samuel, Judges, and Ruth; David the book of Psalms by ten men; Jeremiah his book, Lamentations, and the books of Kings; Hezekiah and his college, Isaiah, Proverbs, Solomon's Song, and Ecclesiastes; the men of the great synagogue Ezekiel, the twelve minor prophets, Daniel, and Esther; Ezra his book, and the genealogies of Chronicles; and Nehemiah completed the Chronicles," (Baba Bathra, fol. 13.2.) It is questioned what is the precise meaning of "wrote" in this place. It cannot be interpreted in the sense of original composition; for no one imagines that Hezekiah, with those he employed, composed the prophecies of Isaiah. It must rather be understood (comp. Prov. xxv. 1,) to imply transcription and collection, the preparing and placing the several books in the condition in which they were to go authoritatively forth.

It must be remembered that the books of the Old Testament are of extreme antiquity, that no contemporaneous Hebrew or any other literature exists, nay, that these very books constitute the entire remains of the Hebrew language. Such proof as might be properly demanded under other circumstances, in another age, cannot for the reasons assigned be produced here. And yet, with every disadvantage, most remarkable is the chain of evidence—indications in the writings themselves, that when produced they were committed to the care of a specially-commissioned body of men, presumptions in the later parts that those previously written were recognized and regarded with reverence, all of them claiming to be not posterior to the latest prophets, the collection acknowledged and described in works written anterior to Christ, the various books in it distinctly named just as they are in our lists, by an author contemporary with the apostles, with the addition that no part was composed after the cessation of prophecy, the practice of our Lord and of his disciples of citing the collection as well known, noting sometimes its three great constituent parts, the singular unanimity in regard to this canon of the two in some respects rival branches of the Jewish church, and lastly the venerable tradition which assigns to the times of Ezra and Nehemiah the completion of the book of God, it neither needing nor accepting any further addition; surely there is here a mass of proof not easily to be set aside. It is not meant that any man or set of men (the "great synagogue" they have been called) admitted to or excluded from the canon at their will, judging what was or what was not inspired, but that they laid apart those which had always been known to be so authenticated from the very time of composition as parts of the message and the memorial of God to his people. The work of such men was declaratory, that the canon might be guarded against groundless claims. It was acknowledged as an ascertained fact among the Jews that the last strains of prophecy died out with Malachi: no inspired man arose after his days; and therefore no book could be added to those already venerated.

The precise time when the final gathering and recognition occurred, in other words, when the canon was closed, may be uncertain—some may deem it earlier and some later; but the conclusion is irresistible, that from about the times of the later prophets, not long after the return from captivity, the Jews have had a collected body of holy books which they retain without addition or diminution to the present day. Investigations into the date and authority of each separate book of both the Scripture and the Apocrypha, so far as we can make them, confirm this judgment.

It is granted that some of the Christian fathers cited as Scripture books not belonging to the canon. They generally used the Septuagint version of Scripture, to which other compositions, as stated above, had been annexed. Justin Martyr is an exception. He was familiar with Palestine. And nowhere in his works does he use any of the apocryphal writings (Cosin. Schol. Hist. of Can., chap. iv. 48.) There are early Christian catalogues extant of the books of the Old Testament. And these exactly, or with an exception not difficult to be accounted for, coincide with the Jewish canon. Jerome, the most important witness, agrees exactly. Melito of Sardis, in the second century, took special pains to obtain an accurate list (Euseb. Hist. Eccles., lib. iv. cap. 26); and his list is identical with that of the Jews, save that he does not separately mention Esther, which, however, was probably as well as Nehemiah, included under Ezra (See Bp. Marsh's Comp. View of Churches of England and Rome, chap. v. pp. 106, 107, 2d edit.) Origen makes one addition; he enumerates Jeremiah with the Lamentations and the Epistle (Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. vi. cap. 25.)

This epistle has been taken to be that appended to the apocryphal book of Baruch. It may with at least equal probability be regarded as the genuine letter found in Jer. xxix. These are the only discrepancies from the Hebrew canon which early catalogues present. During the first four centuries, this Hebrew canon is the only one which is distinctly recognized, and it is supported by the combined authority of those fathers whose critical judgment is entitled to the greatest weight.

It was not till the time of Augustine that any real divergence manifested itself. The Septuagint was the parent of the Latin version; and thus uncanonical books were found in the Latin Bibles. It was with the Latin version that Augustine was conversant; and hence his catalogue includes apocryphal books. Still, though not always consistent with himself, it would seem that he intended to make a distinction; and, while Augustine's influence had great weight in leading the mind of the western church, there were always, down to the very spring of the reformation, many of the most learned divines who adhered to the integrity of the Jewish canon.

It was reserved for the council of Trent to decree that the Hebrew canon must be enlarged, and that the Apocrypha must be accepted as equal in authority with the inspired writings (Decret. de Canon. Script., Sess. iv. Apr. 8, 1546). Here, then, there is a fundamental difference as to the basis of faith between the Roman Catholics and ourselves.

CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THE writings of the New Testament are circumscribed by a narrow period of time. They were not, like the sacred books of the Hebrews, spread over many ages: they were composed by men who were contemporaries, who were more or less known to each other; some of whom were close and intimate friends and colleagues. And yet they were not the result of counsel and agreement. At first the body of Christian doctrine was to be found in the oral teaching of the apostles, and of those instructed by them, and received and further propagated by the various communities of the faithful whom they taught. But circumstances showed by-and-by the expediency and necessity of committing certain truths to writing; and exigencies arose requiring communications from the apostles by letters to the churches to which they could not personally speak. These churches were in different parts of the Roman world. And, as a history written specially for one class would not immediately pass into the hands of others, and an epistle directed to a church in the east would not from the nature of the case be at once known to a church in the west, so, though composed almost contemporaneously, it could only be by a gradual process that the books of the New Testament would be brought together, and acknowledged to be not an incongruous collection of writings of the age, but the sum of the treasures of apostolic teaching stored up in various places.

There are indications in different parts of the New Testament that the writers were aware of the position their productions were to occupy. They speak with authority (I. Cor. vii. 7, xiv. 37; II. Thess. iii. 6; I. Tim. iv. 1); they require their writings to be publicly read (Col. iv. 16; I. Thess. v. 27); they deliver truth only to be divinely known for the instruction of the faithful, pronouncing a blessing on those who shall read and obey, and a curse on those who shall add to or subtract from what they have said (Rev. i. 1, 3, xxii. 18, 19); they refer to the writings of their fellows under the significant name of Scripture (II. Tim. v. 17; II. Pet. iii. 15, 16).

It is freely acknowledged that no particular time can be specified when the books of the New Testament were collected and formally recognized. We have, rather, to feel our way along the course of Christian history and literature. But, "if it can be shown that the epistles were first recognized exactly in those districts in which they would naturally be first known, that from the earliest mention of them they are assumed to be received by churches, and not recommended only by private authority, that the canon as we receive it now was fixed in a period of strife and controversy, that it was generally received on all sides, that even those who separated from the church, and cast aside the authority of the New Testament Scriptures, did not deny their authenticity; if it can be shown that the first references are perfectly accordant with the express decision of a later period, and that there is no trace of the general reception of any other books; if it can be shown that the earliest forms of Christian doctrine and phraseology exactly correspond with the different elements preserved in the canonical epistles, it will surely follow that a belief so widely spread throughout the Christian body, so deeply rooted in the inmost consciousness of the Christian church, so perfectly accordant with all the facts which we do know, can only be explained by admitting that the books of the New Testament are genuine and apostolic, a written rule of Christian faith and life." Anything like a full investigation or proof of all these particulars would, it is manifest, require a volume. Here there can be given only a brief outline, with a few of the more prominent illustrations.

We possess writings of Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, and others, men who had some of them conversed with the first disciples, and who flourished in the Christian church but a little later than the apostles. These writers make frequent references to portions of the New Testament, and quotations from it. And, if they do not at once cite the New Testament exactly as they do the Old, the reason is to be found in the considerations already suggested. But indisputably they recognize a distinction between themselves as ordinary writers, and those from whom the books of the New Testament proceeded as of far higher authority.

Thus Clement, writing to the Corinthians, alludes to James iv. 1; Eph. iv. 4; Rom. xii. 5, quotes Matt. xviii. 6, xxvi. 24, and reminds those he addresses how St. Paul "divinely inspired" had sent them an epistle (Epist. ad Cor. 46, 47). Ignatius cites Matt. iii. 15 (Epist. ad Smyrn. 1), Matt. x. 16 (ad Polycarp. 2), and tells the Romans that he does not lay injunctions on them like Paul and Peter (ad Rom. 4). Polycarp quotes Acts ii. 24; I. Pet. i. 8; Eph. ii. 8, and says that neither he nor any like him can attain to the wisdom of St. Paul (ad Philip. 1, 3). And these are but specimens of the many citations and allusions to be found in the works of these early writers.

The testimony of Justin Martyr, born about the close of the first century (89 A. D.) is very important. Some of the spurious Gospels were probably extant in his time; but his references are not to them, but to those of Matthew, Mark, and Luke certainly, and it can hardly be doubted to that of John. He speaks also of the memorials or memoranda of the apostles being read with the writings of the prophets in public Christian assemblies for worship (Apol. 1, 67). Heretics were rising at this time in the church; but they appealed to the sacred books. Of two of these some notice must be taken. Basilides (about 125 A. D.), though he certainly used some other writings besides those of our canon, yet treated the genuine Scriptures with the utmost reverence, and appears to have been the first who distinctly cited them in the same manner as those of the Old Testament. Heraclion, a Gnostic, about the same date wrote commentaries on the Gospels, and would seem to have been the first commentator on the New Testament. Two more important witnesses of the second century must be referred to, one representing the eastern, the other the western church. The Peshito Syriac version comprises all the books of the New Testament, except II. Peter, II. and III. John, Jude and the Revelation; the Muratorian fragment, as it is called, of Roman origin (about 170 A. D.) includes all but Hebrews, James, and II. Peter; it notices also the partial reception of an apocryphal work called the Revelation of Peter. The two taken together comprise every book but II. Peter.

Later authorities are, as might be expected, still more explicit. Irenæus, toward the close of the second century, speaks of the Scriptures collectively (the New Testament as well as the Old) as "perfect, being delivered by the Word of God and his Spirit." (Adv. Hær. lib. ii. 28, 2.) Clement of Alexandria nearly at the same time describes the blessed Gospel as with the law and the prophets ratified by the authorization of Almighty power (Strom. lib. iv. 1.) And Tertullian distinctly mentions the New Testament (Adv. Prax. 15.) The testimonies of these three writers are the more weighty, because they speak as representatives of respectively the western, the Alexandrian, and the African churches.

The stream of evidence cannot here be further traced. It must suffice to say that Eusebius at the beginning of the fourth century reckons, as acknowledged by all, the four Gospels, the Acts, the Pauline Epistles, I. John, I. Peter, and it would seem the Revelation. He then enumerates as doubted by some, James, Jude, II. Peter, II. and III. John; and afterwards names many writings, confessedly spurious (Hist. Eccles. lib. iii. cap. 25.) The special evidence for those books thus noted as doubtful will be stated hereafter. It is sufficient to observe here that the very hesitation with which some churches received them is a proof of the watchful care taken, lest any unauthorized writing should be accepted as canonical.

The fair conclusion, therefore, is that, seeing the books of the New Testament began very early to be called Scripture (possibly even by the apostolic fathers; see Polycarp, ad. Philip. 12,) and were revered as possessing an authority which belonged to no other compositions, that they were publicly read in religious assemblies, that they were appealed to by both Christians and heretics, that commentaries were written on them as the text book of the gospel, that versions were early made of them, and catalogues formed, agreeing in the main, with discrepancies not difficult to account for, surely we are justified in regarding these as the authentic records, the canonical standard of the Christian religion.

The carrying out of the argument, the full statement of the illustrations and proofs, must be sought in the larger works devoted to this subject.

CONCISE ACCOUNT OF EACH ONE OF THE BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Pentateuch or the Five Books of Moses.

THE PENTATEUCH.

THE name by which the first five books of the Old Testament, commonly ascribed to Moses, are collectively designated. The word Pentateuch is of Greek origin, implying five books or volumes. In Scripture various appellations are given to the Pentateuch, such as "the law," "the law of Moses," "the book of the law of the Lord," &c., &c., (Deut. xxviii. 61; II. Kings xxii. 8, 11; II. Chron. xvii. 9, xxxiv. 14, 15; Neh. viii. 1, 3, 18; Luke xxiv. 44, and elsewhere); and by the Rabbins it is termed "the five-fifths of the law." It forms to the present day but a single roll or volume in the Jewish manuscripts, distributed into fifty-four larger perashioth or sections, and into six hundred and sixty-nine smaller ones, called open or closed, according as they commence respectively at the beginning or in the middle of lines.

1. The current of external evidence is altogether in favor of the Mosaic authorship. That great lawgiver is said to have been "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," (Acts vii. 22.) Now it is notorious that the art of writing was known and was continually practised in Egypt prior to the time of Moses. It was among such a people that Moses was reared, and in such wisdom he was trained. When, then, the stirring events of the exodus occurred, when a nation was to be organized, laws to be promulgated, and customs to be established, it is a moral certainty, apart from the consideration of any divine command, that such a man would take care to chronicle passing events, and to have his laws a written code.

Perfectly reasonable, therefore, are the notices which we find in the Pentateuch itself, (Exod. xvii. 14, xxiv. 3, 4, 7, xxxiv. 27, 28; Numb. xxxiii. 2; Deut. i. 5, xvii. 18, xxviii. 58, xxxi. 9-11, 22, 24-26), which go to show that Moses was in the habit of committing things to writing, for preservation to succeeding ages. Some of these notices, indeed, refer to particular historical events, or to a compendium of laws. But others furnish a strong presumption that the entire Pentateuch was intended. Thus, when it is said that "the book of the law" was to be placed beside the ark of the covenant, (Deut. xxxi. 26,) a natural conclusion is that this was the complete roll. So, when the "law" was ordered to be read to the people at the feast of tabernacles (9-11), it could hardly be a mere fragment.

If we pass to the following books of the Old Testament we have a chain of evidence for the existence of the Pentateuch. There are several notices in Joshua of "the book of the law," sometimes expressly called "the law of Moses," (Josh. i. 8, viii. 30-32, 34, xxiii. 6, xxiv. 26). And that such a volume continued to exist, and was often appealed to, the following references will prove: (I. Kings ii. 3, viii. 53; II. Kings xi. 12, xiv. 6, xxi. 8, xxii. 8, 10, 11, 16, xxiii. 24, 25; I. Chron. xvi. 40, xxii. 12, 13; II. Chron. xvii. 9, xxiii. 18, xxv. 4, xxx. 16, xxxi. 3, xxxiii. 8, xxxiv. 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 24, 30, xxxv. 6, 12, 26; Ezra iii. 2, vi. 18, vii. 6; Neh. i. 7, 8, viii. 1-3, 5, 8, 14, 15, 18, ix. 3, x. 34, 36, xiii. 1-3; Dan. ix. 11, 13; Mal. iv. 4). The testimony may be traced still farther. For, though soon after the return from captivity the spirit of prophecy ceased, yet there were Jewish secular writers of credit who preserved and carried on the record which they had received from their fathers. They bear witness to the existence of the book in their days, and to the fact that it was attributed to Moses. The testimony of Christ and the New Testament is unequivocal and explicit. See Matt. xix. 7; Mark x. 3-5, xii. 19, 26; Luke xvi. 29, 31, xxiv. 27, 44; John i. 45, v. 46, 47, vii. 19, viii. 5; Acts iii. 22, xv. 21, xxvi. 22, xxviii. 23; Rom. x. 5; II. Cor. iii. 15; Heb. vii. 14.

Scarcely for any other ancient book can such a continuous line of witnesses be produced.

Besides the direct evidence, there are various collateral proofs of the antiquity of the Pentateuch. Thus the whole body of the later writings of the Old Testament is in accordance with what we find therein. The customs of the Pentateuch are observed, the laws of it are acknowledged, the history it details is referred to, its phraseology colors the style of every Hebrew author. It would be very difficult to account for this, if the book itself were not at the time in existence, if there were merely some floating traditions or unauthorized documents, which were not till a later period formed into a collected, consistent, whole. It is not merely that, as has been shown, there is distinct mention of a law-book, but the rest of the Old Testament is, so to speak, impregnated with the Pentateuch. Detailed proof of this obviously can not be produced here; but it has been gathered by various critics, and may be seen drawn out at length in the larger works.

It is urged that Gen. xiii. 7, betrays a later date, that it was written after the expulsion of the Canaanites. Nay, it may be rejoined; for, as remnants of the Canaanites were in Palestine after the Babylonish captivity (Ezra ix. 1), the date would then have to be brought down to a time in which no sane man would choose to place it. Rather, we have in the words objected to, the natural reason stated why Abraham and Lot could not dwell together. Had there been no other settlers, there would have been room enough; but it was not so: the Canaanites and the Perizzites even then, at that early time, were there.

It is said that places are called in the Pentateuch by names which they did not bear till after the days of Moses. Beth-el (Gen. xii. 8), Hebron (xiii. 18), and Dan (xiv. 14), are examples of the alleged anachronism. But really little stress need be laid on such objections. The title Beth-el might not be generally adopted till the Israelites had occupied Canaan, but as it was so solemnly given by Jacob, it is reasonable to believe that it was from his time used by his descendants. Hebron was probably the old name of the city, to which the title Kirjath-arba, "town of Arba," was additionally and subsequently (for not Anakim, but Hittites, dwelt there in Abraham's days) given, as that of "the city of David" to Zion and to Beth-lehem. There is nothing to surprise us in the old names being resumed: modern examples of such a resumption might easily be produced. As to Dan, there seems to have been another place, Dan-jaan (II. Sam. xxiv. 6,) so-called, besides that which took its name from the tribe (Josh. xix. 47); but we have scarcely information enough to decide. After all, though the text as it is may be satisfactorily defended, yet who shall say, as it is likely that the hands of inspired men subsequently arranged some of the holy books, that a name may not have been for perspicuity exchanged; or a slight explanatory addition have been made—like the notice of Moses' death—such as those which occur in ordinary works without impeachment of their authority or good faith? Such captious objections will not in any reasonable man's mind cast doubt upon the Mosaic authorship.

The law of the king (Deut. xvii. 14-20) was written, it is said, after the establishment of the Hebrew monarchy. The real ground of objection to it is its prophetic character. That the injunction against multiplying horses and wives was not properly obeyed is no proof that there was no such early law; else every statute that ever existed in any country might be pronounced "unhistorical;" for none has been always observed. The prophetic objection need not be here discussed: we believe in prophecy, and that is enough.

One more point must be here adverted to. The writer of the Pentateuch applies the third person to Moses, and speaks of him, it is said, as he would not have spoken of himself. It is perhaps necessary to notice only that remarkable passage (Numb. xii. 3) which, as appearing to involve self-commendation, has created the chief difficulty. We must bear in mind that Moses shrunk from the charge laid upon him. In his earlier life, indeed, fired with a sense of his people's wrongs, he had zealously stood forth as their defender, (Exod. ii. 11-14.) But afterwards he repeatedly declined the offered mission, (iii. 11, iv. 1-17, v. 22, 23, vi. 12, 28-30.) And even after the deliverance from Egypt we find Moses desiring to be relieved from his burden and rejoicing when others were called to share it, (Numb. xi. 10, 15, 28, 29.) Who can doubt that such a man would readily, if it had been permitted him, have devolved on Aaron and Miriam all the authority they coveted? Moses was not "meek" in the ordinary sense of the word, for we frequently read of his wrath; but he was thoroughly unambitious. So far then from personal commendation, he simply records (xii. 3) the fact that for his part his brother and sister might have had their way. What is there inconsistent with his authorship of the history in this?

Besides the question of authorship there is yet another—that of the truthfulness of the record—which must be briefly looked at. If we cannot depend upon it as credible, it matters little by whom the Pentateuch was written.

Regarding, however, the Mosaic authorship generally as proved, we have presumptive evidence that the narrative is true. A large part of it comprises events in the life-time of Moses, events many of them witnessed by the Israelitish nation, events published before those who could have exposed their falsehood if they were falsely reported, and who, from the temper they manifested, we may be sure would have exposed it if they could. The Pentateuch demonstrably moulded the manners of Israel: it contained the ordinances of their religion based upon alleged facts: it prescribed their political constitution and rights based also upon alleged facts: it regulated, moreover, their domestic habits, meeting them, so to speak, at every point publicly and socially. Their pass-over was to be observed because they had been delivered by divine judgment from bondage. The division of the nation was fixed because their early ancestor had twelve sons. Their priesthood was assigned to one of these tribes, because of the zeal reported at a particular crisis to have been shown by that tribe. How could all these ordinances have taken effect, unless the events which are said to have led to them, really happened?

But actual contradictions are alleged; as a sample of which take the following: Two varying reasons are given for Jacob's being sent into Mesopotamia; the one that he might escape the results of his brother's anger, the other that he might marry with his own kindred, (Gen. xxvii. 41-45 compared with xxvii. 46, xxviii. 5.) But these reasons were not contradictory, and may both be true. Esau's threatening against his brother may well consist with Rebekah's wish that Jacob should take a wife from among his own relations. Indeed, the two parts of the history fit accurately together. For it is not said that Esau's angry threats reached his father's ear. They were told only to Rebekah. And she, of course, did not convey them to Isaac. With characteristic tact she mentioned to him only her fear that Jacob also might intermarry with the daughters of Heth, sure that that would procure Isaac's consent to Jacob's departure. Matters fell out as she had anticipated; and Jacob obeyed both his father and his mother, the one in going to seek a wife of his kindred, the other in consulting for his safety by flight. The narrative is complete and consistent.

But there are, further, said to be historical inaccuracies—indeed, yet stronger language has been used; and many of the recorded events, we are now plainly told, are impossible. One or two examples must be given. We are told that Israel could never have multiplied from a family into a populous nation within the period during which they were held in bondage by the Egyptians. But, first of all, this objection overlooks the fact that Jacob went down into Egypt with a very large establishment. We may well suppose that it was not from the family only, but from the family and the dependents, with whom there would be intermarriages, that the nation sprung. But, setting this consideration apart, it has been sufficiently proved and confirmed by modern examples, that it is quite possible that the recorded increase could have taken place within the specified time: more especially when the divine blessing was vouchsafed purposely for this multiplication. Again, it is maintained that the vast masses of Israel never could have lived, as we read they did, with their cattle for many years in the desert. But to this there are two answers. Modern travelers declare that the wilderness is not, as men are ready to suppose, all a bare and naked waste. Amid arid plains there are extensive fertile tracts, abundantly watered, and, in parts of the year at least, covered with vegetation. And, so far from its being impossible for large bodies of men to traverse it, at this day the caravans of the pilgrims to Mecca, often including many thousands, pass directly through the whole length of the most desert portion of the peninsula. Besides, it is a gratuitous assumption that the Arabian wilderness was always as inhospitable as it is at present. There is strong reason to believe that there were anciently cities where now there is a sandy waste; and there are still visible the traces of works, yielding full proof that the country was once far more fitted for the sojourn of nomadic tribes than it is now.

The grand objection, however, to the truthfulness of the Pentateuch is the supernatural character of many of the events related; and men, professing to know accurately what their Maker can or will do, have gravely pronounced his special interference in the government of the universe, the work of his fingers, the domain of his power, impossible. Objections of this kind have a larger scope than the credibility of the Pentateuch: they affect the whole of revealed religion.

The direct evidence for the truthfulness of the Mosaic writings is, at least, as strong as it is for any historical document whatever. We find the leading facts of them alluded to or pre-supposed in almost all the later books of the Old Testament. Here, especially, Christ's authority before adverted to, may properly come in. Would he have grounded his pretensions on a book which was not literally true? Besides, though profane history does not reach so far back as sacred, yet it does furnish innumerable weighty proofs of the credibility of Moses. Mr. Rawlinson has exhibited many of these in his Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Record. Every book of travels in the East is an additional witness. The manners are still very much as Moses describes them. The natural productions, the face and structure of the country, unite their voice. The cities of Bashan which he mentions—it was once thought with exaggeration—as so mighty, yet remain to corroborate his statements; see Porter's Giant Cities of Bashan. And, above all, there is the present condition of his people. Their destiny, as foretold in the Pentateuch, our own eyes may see. They are a standing miracle, a testimony resounding through the world, that it was no forger, no pretender to divine communications, no mere guesser, that traced from its origin the house of Jacob, narrated its early history, sketched its yet future fortunes, drew the accurate picture of its present state, but one endued with the wisdom which could flow from the Spirit of truth alone.

More cannot be added. It is but the merest outline which has here been given; and the student must be referred for fuller particulars to other books. Several such books have been already cited; and to them may be added some articles in the valuable work called Aids to Faith; Dr. McCaul's Examination of Dr. Colenso's Difficulties with regard to the Pentateuch; Dr. Mühleisen-Arnold's English Biblical Criticism and the Authorship of the Pentateuch from a German Point of View; Birks' Bible and Modern Thought, and Exodus of Israel; Macdonald's Introd. to the Pentateuch.*

GENESIS.

THE first of the five books into which the Pentateuch is now divided, so called from its Greek title in the Septuagint version; the word signifying generation or production. By the Jews it is usually termed Bereshith ("in the beginning") that being its initial word.

Genesis is divided in Hebrew Bibles into twelve perashioth or larger sections, and forty-three sedarim or shorter sections; with us it is distributed into fifty chapters. Various other divisions have been proposed. One able German writer supposes that after an introduction (i., ii. 3) it contains ten sections, each with a special and similar heading, "These are the generations," or "This is the book of the generations." They are the generations (1) of the heaven and the earth (ii. 4-iv. 26); (2) of Adam (v. 1-vi. 8); (3) of Noah (vi. 9-ix. 29); (4) of the sons of Noah (x. 1-xi. 9); (5) of Shem (xi. 10-26); (6) of Terah (xi. 27-xxv. 11); (7) of Ishmael (xxv. 12-18); (8) of Isaac (xxv. 19-xxxv. 29); (9) of Esau (xxxvi.); and (10) of Jacob (xxxvii. 1-1. 26.) This distribution illustrates the plan and unity of the book. But perhaps, with reference to the scope and purpose, which is to exhibit the foundation of the theocracy afterwards established, and to describe the origin of God's church in the world, which placed upon the firm rock of primary promise, shall be gradually tried, and beautified, and glorified in a happier state than man forfeited by the fall, we may regard Genesis as comprising two parts. I. The early history and genealogies of mankind (i.-xi. 26) including, from the creation to the flood, man's formation and settlement in paradise (i., ii.), his fall and expulsion (iii.), the state of the antediluvian world (iv. 1-vi. 8), the flood and restoration of the world (vi. 9-ix. 29); from the flood to the call of Abraham, the genealogy of nations, (x.) the confusion of tongues, and the line of descent from which the chosen race should come (xi. 1-26). II. The early history of that race (xi. 27-1. 26), under three leading patriarchs; Abraham, detailing his call and the limitation of the promise in his son Isaac (xi. 27-xxv. 18)—Isaac (xxv. 19-xxviii. 9)—Jacob, including his family history, into which is introduced a notice of Isaac's death, and of the posterity of Esau (xxxv. 28-xxxvi. 43), and the descent into Egypt, with some supplementary particulars to the death of Joseph (xxviii. 10-1. 26).

Many modern critics have employed themselves in trying to detect a mythical element in the book of Genesis, as if its statements, particularly the earlier ones, conveyed truth only in an allegorical form; and in dissecting its style in order to show that it is not the work of a single historian, but a mere aggregate of documents, separate traditions of primeval story put together without much skill or precision.

The ground of the first is a reluctance to admit the supernatural. Events are assumed to be the mere sequence of natural causes; and the writer who mentions the active working of the Deity is thought, either in his ignorance to have transformed the wonderful into the miraculous, or, if better informed, to have consulted the taste of his age by investing very common occurrences with a mythic coloring, and thus to have produced mere "unhistoric" legend. It is not explained why a prose history, for the most part plain and straightforward, which can be tested, and has been shown, by the accounts given of manners, scenery, climate, natural productions, to contain literal truth, should from time to time suddenly interweave incredible stories. The ordinary rule is that, if a witness is accepted so far as he can be confirmed, credit is extended to him even where corroborative proof cannot be obtained. And therefore we do not hesitate to receive Genesis as a record of facts, careful only not, by a wrong interpretation, to make the writer speak our own notions

* As what I here write is intended for plain, private Christians, and not for scholars and theologians, it is not worth while to refer often to learned works on the several topics discussed. But as the writings of Bishop Calenso, throwing doubts on the Pentateuch and other historical books of the Old Testament, have been extensively and boastingly circulated, I have thought it best in this instance to refer the reader to a few books in which the shallow and sophistical suggestions of that unbelieving prelate are fully met and exposed. An assertion without proof may be made in a half dozen lines, which it would take a volume to refute with the necessary proofs, and citations, and historical authorities.

rather than what his words properly expounded would really mean. Many who regard this book, and others of Scripture, as embodying legends, profess at the same time great reverence for them, and will not allow the rejoinder that no creditable person would write legend as if it were truth, or introduce himself to his readers in grave composition as other than he really was. We must not be afraid of the offense so taken, but must hold to the solid maxim that, if the supernatural element we find in a record claiming God's authority, proves to be only legend, such claim is false in fact, and also in intention, and is therefore deserving of the highest moral blame. Even ignorance with such pretensions would be no excuse.

Critics, moreover, have attempted to dismember Genesis, as if it were the inartificial combination of two or more distinct writers. If this meant merely that the author had made use of previously existing truthful documents, no valid objection could be urged. Such documents are introduced by several of the sacred penmen into their respective books. But it is further assumed that each distinct writer had his own purpose and predilections, and has fashioned his narrative, not according to truth, but according to his particular temperament and ruling notions.

It is remarkable that, generally speaking, the critics who propose to dismember Genesis do not by any means agree together. They imagine two principal writers; but portions, that some confidently ascribe to the one, others equally sagacious as confidently ascribe to the other.

The unity of Genesis may be successfully defended. Even if it be granted, as above said, that early documents were used, yet it was a master-hand that, under divine guidance, moulded them into shape, and developed through the whole one leading idea; so that, as by a golden thread, all the parts are connected, that thread being the thread of promise, inviting the faith of the infant church, and exhibiting the most remarkable proof that the ancient fathers were not content with transitory things. Their faith begat a steady expectation of good to come; and in that faith they died, "not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth," (Heb. xi. 13.) Genesis is an appropriate introduction to Exodus; and it is the key to the rest of the Scripture. Without its narratives the mission of the Redeemer could hardly have been comprehended; and therefore very properly may it be said with respect to Genesis, as our Lord said generally, that Moses wrote of Him (John v. 46.)

It may be added that the period of time comprised in the history of Genesis is, according to the vulgar computation, about 2,369 years. Many chronologers, however, would extend this period.

Prophecies specially pointing to the Messiah are found in Gen. iii. 15, xii. 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxvi. 4, xxviii. 14, xlix. 10.

EXODUS.

THIS is the second book of the Pentateuch: the name by which we commonly distinguish it is that attached to it in the Septuagint version, being a Greek word significant of the principal transaction recorded, viz., the departure of Israel from Egypt. The Jews generally designate it by the two initial words, or, more shortly, by the second of them.

In Hebrew bibles it is divided into eleven perashioth or chapters, and twenty-nine sedarim or sections: in our own it is distributed into forty chapters.

The contents of the book of Exodus may be regarded as comprising (1) historical, and (2) legislative matter; the first may be considered as extending from i. 1 to xix. 2, the second from xix. 3 to xl. inclusive. But there is some legislation intermixed with the former, and some narrative with the latter part; we may, therefore, note some subdivisions. I. In the first part we have (1) the condition of Israel in Egypt before their departure (i.) with the events preparatory to that deliverance, such as the birth of Moses and his settlement in Midian (ii.), the commission given him to liberate the people, and his announcement of this to them (iii., iv.), the negotiations with Pharaoh and infliction of the plagues, together with the institution of the passover (v.-xii. 30); (2) the thrusting out of Israel by the Egyptians, the departure, the passage of the Red Sea, with the song of victory, and the march under the divine protection to Sinai (xii. 31-xix. 2). II. In the second part we find the preparation for the establishment of the theocratic covenant (xix. 3-25), the promulgation of the moral law (xx.), ordinances chiefly of a judicial kind (xxi.-xxiii.), the ratification of the covenant, with the summoning of Moses to receive directions for ceremonial worship (xxiv.), the orders for the construction of a sanctuary with things pertaining to it, and the selection of a priestly caste (xxv.-xxxi.), interrupted by the apostasy of Israel, and Moses' intercession for them (xxxii., xxxiii.), with the resumption of the divine directions, and the construction of the tabernacle in obedience thereto (xxxiv.-xl.)

The book of Exodus is closely connected with that of Genesis, yet it has a distinct character. Through the former book the large history of the human race was continually narrowing into that of a family to be separated from other nations as the chosen depository of divine truth, whose fortunes should exhibit the outlines of the divine dealings, to be filled up in the future trials and triumphs of the church. And branch after branch of that family is divided off, till a single nucleus is reached, to whom the promise of extended blessing was committed. The book of Exodus takes up the narrative of that family so circumscribed, and follows out its development in the increase of a household into a people, in the consolidation of vague promises into an orderly covenant, with its sanctions, and its regulations, and its priesthood, all pointing forward again to something still more substantial and more sufficient, when the teachings of a long minority should have ended, and the shadows of a tedious night have been succeeded by the bright rising of the Sun of Righteousness. Taken by itself, without reference to what preceded and what followed, the book of Exodus would be a riddle: viewed in its right proportion as but a part of the great counsel of God, it is luminous with instruction and encouragement.

The time comprised in this book is generally believed to be about 145 years, from the death of Joseph to the erection of the tabernacle. This is of course on the supposition that the sojourn of Israel in Egypt was for 215 years; the 430 (Exod. xii. 40) being computed from the giving of the promise to Abraham, (Gal. iii. 17.)

The credibility of the history has been assailed. The book is said to be of a mythic or legendary character; and various parts of it have been declared to be impossible, if they are taken as literal narratives. But the real objection to each and all of these narratives is, that they assert or imply supernatural interference; and it is held that God does not, or can not, interfere with the natural laws, which are imagined, by his disposition at the first it may be, or else by some strange inherent power of establishing and executing themselves, uninterruptedly to govern and control the universe. Exodus is bound up with the rest of the sacred volume. If this one stone be taken out as unsound, the whole structure is, to say the least, endangered. For all succeeding Scripture writers go upon the presumption that the history of Exodus is fact. The following passages are but a sample of those which may be found in the Old Testament referring to events related in Exodus: (Josh. ii. 10, iii. 3, xviii. 1; Judges xix. 30; I. Sam. iv. 3-8, x. 18, xii. 6, 8, xxviii. 6; II. Sam. vii. 2, 6; I. Kings viii. 9, 16, 51, 53, ix. 9; II. Kings xvii. 7, xxi. 15; I. Chron. vi. 1-3, 49, xvii. 21; II. Chron. xv. 7, 8, 10, xx. 18, xxxv. 6; Neh. xiii. 15; Psal. lxxvii. 20, lxxviii. 12-16, 23-25, 43-53, cv. 23-41; Isai. xi. 16, lxiii. 11-14; Jer. vii. 22, 25, xxxii. 18-21; Dan. ix. 15; Hos. xi. 1; Mal. iv. 4.) Besides which, twenty-five passages are quoted in express words from Exodus by our Saviour and his apostles; and nineteen allusions to the sense are made in the New Testament. The credit of this book is therefore well sustained by competent authority.

LEVITICUS.

THE third book of Moses has this name (derived from the Septuagint), because it contains almost exclusively those ritual laws respecting sacrifices, purifications, &c., the administration of which was the charge of the priests, the sons of Levi. The first Hebrew word in it, (signifying "And he called,") is its title among the Jews. It is also termed "The law of the priests."

In Hebrew Bibles Leviticus is distributed into ten perashioth, and by ourselves divided into twenty-seven chapters. But its contents may very properly be classed in five sections:—I. The laws concerning sacrifices (i.-vii.), comprising

(i.) burnt-offerings, (ii.) meat-offerings, (iii.) peace-offerings, (iv.-v. 13) sin-offerings, (14-vi. 7) trespass-offerings, (8-vii. 38) attendant rites, with the assignment of portions of the sacrifices to the priests. II. The account of the consecration of the priests, with various ordinances appertaining, and the punishment of Nadab and Abihu, (viii.-x.) III. Laws concerning clean and unclean animals, the purity and impurity of men, with the annual purification of the sanctuary on the great day of atonement, (xi.-xvi.) IV. Laws against various offenses, for which no atonement was provided, (xvii.-xx.) V. Laws relating to the spotlessness of the priests and the sacrifices, also to the great festivals, with promises and threatenings (xxi.-xxvi.), and an appendix, with regulations about vows, things devoted, and tithes, (xxvii.)

The Mosaic authorship of this book is evident on the face of it. It is, moreover, specially referred to as Moses' law in Neh. viii. 14, 15. And, though some modern critics have thought fit to represent it as a collection of statutes gradually formed by various compilers, some of them at least (De Wette is an instance) have felt themselves obliged, on more mature consideration, to retreat from such an untenable position. Bleek acknowledges everywhere the hand of Moses, though still he maintains that the book was not put exactly into its present shape by the great legislator. Thus, he says that Moses would never have placed chaps. xviii. and xx., containing similar precepts, so near together, and fancies that he detects traces of a later hand in xviii. 3, 24, &c., 27, &c. He objects to the collection of diverse laws given without orderly arrangement in xix., and also to the regulations concerning festivals in xxiii., which yet are there arranged and summed up in order. These objections are of very little weight; for every book in existence might be dismembered on some such pretexts. In fact, the simple artlessness of the way in which various statutes are here recorded is no slight proof that we have the whole as Moses wrote it. A later compiler and interpolator would have gone more systematically to work.

By comparing Exod. xl. 17 with Numb. i. 1, we may infer that the time comprised in this book is about a month, from the erection of the tabernacle to the numbering of the people; the commands in it being delivered in the first month of the second year after leaving Egypt, 1490 B. C., according to the common computation.

Leviticus is altogether of a prophetic character. The typical nature of its ordinances is illustrated by the epistle to the Hebrews; and in xxv., xxvi., the whole future of the nation is delineated. The spiritual purport of the law is thus most clearly displayed.

NUMBERS.

THIS book occupies the fourth place in the Pentateuch. It has several names among the Jews; the most common of which are the first and the fifth words in the first verse, which signify respectively "And he spake," and "In the wilderness." The name which we give it is taken from the fact that twice it records a numbering of Israel. By the Jews it is divided into ten perashioth.

There is no definite plan visible in the composition of this book, which contains both legal enactments and historical notices. It was probably written at different times during the period which it includes, that is, from the first day of the second month in the second year after the departure from Egypt, to the beginning of the eleventh month of the fortieth year (Numb. i. 1, xxxvi. 13, compared with Deut. i. 3). But we may for convenience distribute its contents into three parts: I. Comprising the events and regulations during the continuance of the Israelites at Sinai (Numb. i. 1—x. 10). In this we have the account of the first census: II. Transactions in the wilderness, from their quitting Sinai till the beginning of the fortieth year (x. 11—xix. 22): III. The occurrences and commands given in the first ten or eleven months of the fortieth year (xx.—xxxvi.) The second census is here detailed, also the deaths of Aaron and Miriam, and the arrival of the people in the plains of Moab, on the eastern bank of the Jordan. A list of their various stations through the whole of their wanderings is given in xxxiii.

It will be observed that most of the events narrated in Numbers occurred in the second and fortieth years of the wilderness life of Israel. Little, and that not dated, is recorded of what happened in the interval. Exception has been taken to this fact. But it is in accordance with God's general plan in Scripture. Those events only he would have recorded for the permanent instruction of his church, which were necessary to illustrate the covenant-relationship in which he designed to stand to them. Blanks, therefore, are often left in the history: much is omitted which it would have gratified our curiosity to know; all is related which is needful for our guidance and profit.

It has been imagined by some critics that there are portions of this book which do not fit in well with the rest; thus the date in i. 1 is the first day of the second month, while (ix. 1) the Lord is said to speak to Moses in the first month. Then, again, discrepancy is fancied because (xiii. 30, xiv. 24) Caleb's conduct, and the promise to him are alone mentioned, though, immediately after (6, 38) Joshua is noticed too; and the untenable supposition is made that the history of the spies comprised at first xiii. 1—xiv. 4, 10 (latter part)—25, 39-45; and that a later hand unskillfully enlarged it by introducing xiv. 5-10 (former part), 26-38. It must be sufficient to say here that, on the principle applied to Numb. i. 1, compared with ix. 1, almost any history ever written might be dismembered, and that the other difficulty is readily solved by supposing that Caleb spoke first in testifying against the evil report of the ten spies, and remembering that there was a special promise made to him, the fulfillment of which is to be noted in the course of the sacred history (Josh. xiv. 6-15).

DEUTERONOMY.

THE fifth book of Moses is known among the Jews (who divide it into eleven perashioth) by several names. Thus the two words with which it begins, and the second word, signifying respectively: "These are the words," and "The words," are common appellations: it is also called "The repetition of the law," and "The book of reproofs." Our name, Deuteronomy, is derived from the Greek title, signifying "the second law."

Its obvious purpose is to repeat to Israel the principal laws which had been given them in the wilderness, explaining, enforcing, adding to the sanctions with which those sacred ordinances bound them, gathering up some notices of what had befallen them on their way, and unfolding so far their future destiny as that they might see that obedience to the covenant would ensure their prosperity, while idolatry and rebellion against God's laws would provoke him to scatter them through the world and make them a mocking and a by-word to the nations. The fulfillment of this threatening is before our eyes. We cannot walk the streets of our cities without beholding it. And, as it is on all hands conceded that this book was written before the dispersion began, we have in the very fact of the history of the branded sons of Jacob a proof not to be evaded that he who wrote it was gifted with supernatural prescience, that he "spake" as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost."

It was very fitting that such an address should be at the time delivered to the Israelites. Their weary wanderings were now ended. Their multitudinous hosts lay camped in the plains of Moab, close upon that promised heritage, a fair land, fertile and most desirable, which they were only waiting for the signal to occupy. And in strains touching and tender, delivering the last admonitions of a father, does their veteran leader charge them. For himself his life-long hope was not to be realized. O, if he might but set foot upon the soil of Canaan! But he had sinned; and therefore, though his eyes, undimmed by the mists of a hundred and twenty years, might feast upon the lovely prospect, his feet should never tread the other bank of Jordan. His life, waning fast, was the last single thread which bound his nation in their pilgrimage. When he was dead, and buried where no man knew, then once more should the cry "Go forward!" that had stirred them to adventure the passage of the Red Sea (Exod. xiv. 15) summon them to cross the full river which swelled before them, and the swarming tribes should press on to occupy the great and goodly cities which they did not build, and enjoy the vineyards which they had not planted (Deut. vi. 10, 11.) An address delivered by such a man in such a crisis would not, we may be sure, be in that plain style of narrative which he might use at other times. And hence the hortatory tone, the fulness of expression of the book of Deuteronomy, are the surest warrants that it is what it professes to be. "I must regard this book," says Professor

Moses Stuart, "as being so deeply fraught with holy and patriotic feeling, as to convince any unprejudiced reader who is competent to judge of its style, that it can not, with any tolerable degree of probability, be attributed to any pretender to legislation, or to any mere imitator of the great legislator. Such a glow as runs through all this book it is in vain to seek for in any artificial or supposititious composition."

And yet certain critics are disposed to deny the Mosaic authorship of Deuteronomy. Some ascribe it to the person who they say supplemented the other books of the Pentateuch; and some are of opinion that the writer was a third individual, who, having lighted upon the works of two predecessors—the Elohist and the Jehovist they are called—constructed from them the preceding four books, and added Deuteronomy from his own pen. Some, from a fancied resemblance in diction, attribute the work to Jeremiah; while Ewald has recourse to the very fanciful notion that it was written by a Jew who lived in Egypt in the latter part of Manasseh's reign. Speculations of this kind placed together are mutually destructive; and little respect can be felt for criticism thus uncertain. Ewald, in particular, can hardly have expected credit for his theory, so utterly repugnant to the principles of common sense. For the Egyptian Jew of his dream he supposes to be a pious man, gifted with prophetic power, who adopts the Mosaic mode of expression to make his countrymen believe that their ancient legislator was addressing them. And he succeeds, according to this notion, so well that they never detect his well-intended fraud, they incorporate his composition with the rest of the Pentateuch, (the five-fold division of which was not made, in all probability, till the time of the Septuagint translators,) they reverence it as Scripture, and as Scripture our Lord himself cites it. Surely the wildest credulity must be startled at a theory like this.

The grounds on which such improbable fictions are based are very narrow. Let us briefly examine them. The book is pretty generally allowed to be (with trifling exceptions) a complete whole. It is consistent throughout. But then it is said that, both in regard to its legislation and its historical statements, there are differences from the preceding books, additions and indeed contradictions, sufficient to show that they could not all have proceeded from one pen; and, moreover, that there are unequivocal indications of a later date. Among the historical additions may be mentioned the prohibition against attacking Edom, Moab, and Ammon, (Deut. ii. 4-6, 9, 19,) and the greater circumstantiality in relating the aggression of the Amalekites (xxv. 17-19, compared with Exod. xvii. 8). In the legislation, we are to observe that the command to kill an animal at the door of the tabernacle (Lev. xvii. 3-5) is modified and relaxed, (Deut. xii. 15, 20, 21,) and that there are special directions introduced as to the appointment of a king (xvii. 14-20). But surely such additions as these do not even tend to prove diversity of authorship: no writer would bind himself to say in a second work neither more nor less than he had said in a first. Rather some of the additions are strong evidence that Deuteronomy was delivered at the time and under the circumstances professed. The command to kill at the door of the tabernacle was appropriate so long as the tabernacle was in the center of the camp, each man's tent close by: it would have been inappropriate, almost tantamount to a prohibition against killing animals at all, when the tabernacle was settled in a city, and the tribes were dispersed through the extent of Palestine. Doubtless God, in his wisdom and his goodness, will enact his laws so as to fit the varying circumstances of his people. And it was very meet that the repetition of the law, delivered, as Deuteronomy was, on the eve of the occupation of Canaan, should look forward to Israel's position there, and not backward to their habits in the wilderness they were leaving. God does not deal with men as if they were mere machines. He would have them use their faculties, and find out their wants, and then apply to him on his mercy-seat. Thus their filial dependence on him is best secured. We have a remarkable illustration of this in the progressive legislation in regard to the daughters of Zelophehad (Numb. xxviii. 1-11, xxxvi. 1-12.)

But we must see if the so-called discrepancies can disprove the Mosaic authorship of Deuteronomy. Only one or two of these can be here noticed. Thus it is said that Deut. ii. 24, contradicts Numb. xxi. 21, 22; for that in the last-named place the Israelites sent Sihon a peaceful embassy, while in the other God encouraged them to attack him. But the fact is that Sihon had a warning, as Pharaoh had. He might have escaped attack. Invasion did not come till the embassy had been sent and the terms had been rejected (Deut. ii. 26-30). God, however, foresaw that they would be rejected, and that Sihon would be justly destroyed. Once more it is alleged that, whereas generally in the preceding books the mountain where the law was given is called Sinai, in Deuteronomy, with one exception (xxxiii. 2), the name Horeb is used. But it would seem a sufficient reply that Sinai is the particular mountain, Horeb the range: it was natural, at an earlier period, when in the neighborhood, to specify the single summit, but, when the region had long been quitted, it was equally natural to apply the general name. As to traces of a post Mosaic date, it is argued that the regulations already referred to concerning the kingdom show that the government of Israel had already become monarchical; but this argument can hardly weigh with those who are not inclined to deny the prescience of God, and to refuse him the right of providing for the future guidance of his people.

Little more can be said in this place. Be it only added, as a brief summary of the evidence for the Mosaic authorship, that direct quotations (I. Kings viii. 29; II. Kings xiv. 6; Jer. xxxiv. 14) would show that 400 years and onwards after Moses this book was in existence and was recognized as law; that there are verbal allusions in various early books of Scripture, and traces in history which serve to connect Deuteronomy with the times in which it professes to be written. Further, the diction of this book is archaic like the rest of the Pentateuch, so much that one critic is driven to the pitiful resource of guessing that the writer had very likely a fancy for imitating the phraseology of old books. Then we have the evident high antiquity of chap. xxxiii., the silence as to post-Mosaic events, peculiar geographical notices, a relation pre-supposed of Moab, Ammon, and Edom to Israel, varying from that which subsisted later, a familiar acquaintance with Egypt, a certain indefiniteness in the predictions, laws appearing which related to the conquest of Canaan, the sanction, moreover, which our Lord gave to Deuteronomy, together with the glaring difficulties to which a contrary hypothesis is exposed, seeing that it can be successfully maintained only on the supposition that the book is an elaborate forgery. He that comes in a reverent spirit to the Bible cannot easily doubt that Deuteronomy is what it professes to be.

The contents may be arranged under the following heads: I. A repetition of the history related in the preceding books (i.-iv.) concluding with an introduction to the following discourse. II. A repetition of the moral (v.-xi.), ceremonial (xii.-xvi.), and judicial law (xvii.-xxvi.) III. The confirmation of the law, with prophetic promises to the obedient and curses against the disobedient, and sundry admonitions (xxvii.-xxx.) IV. The personal history of Moses to his death; the account of which is of course supplied by some other hand (xxxi.-xxxiv.) There is a remarkable Messianic prophecy in Deuteronomy (xviii. 15, 18, 19), expressly applied to Christ in the New Testament (Acts iii. 22, 23, vii. 37).

JOSHUA.

THIS book receives its name from its recording the conquest and appropriation of the land of Canaan by the Israelites under the leadership of Joshua. It may be considered as comprising three parts: I. The conquest and occupation of Canaan, (i.-xii.) II. The division of the conquered land, (xiii.-xxii.) III. The addresses and dying counsels of Joshua, his death and burial, (xxiii., xxiv.)

Attempts are made by several modern critics to dismember this book; as if it were compiled by some comparatively late writer, from various materials, which he has not succeeded, they say, in reducing to a consistent whole. Discrepancies are alleged and interpolations supposed; but when examined they amount to little more than that, whereas Joshua is represented as having subdued the entire country, yet portions are still said to be unconquered; that he is declared to have rooted out the Anakim, who appear afterwards in force, and to have captured and destroyed many cities which subsequently were held against the Israelites. It is enough to say that generally, after campaigns are decided by great victories, there are sure to remain petty wars of detail, and that it was not possible for the Israelites at once to disseminate themselves through every corner of the country. It is natural, therefore, to suppose that places might be lost and won, occupied and re-occupied, by both contending parties. And we must remember that it by no means follows that the limitation of a general statement is a contradiction of it.

It is not denied that documents were used in the composition of the book: the territorial descriptions of the districts allotted to the various tribes were most probably taken from the surveys made by the appointed officers; and so accurately have they been copied that, whereas too much land was at first allotted to Judah, and afterwards Simeon's inheritance was taken out of it, both the first and second apportionments are preserved. Documents were used, then, but faithfully, judiciously, and harmoniously.

Joshua is said, indeed, (Josh. xxiv. 26,) to have committed several things to writing; but this record of his, though added, it would seem, to some book of authority previously existing, can hardly be supposed to include more than the renewal of the covenant, the circumstances and substance of the address he had just made to Israel. And there are indications that the composition must be placed later than the time of Joshua. For, to refer to but one of these, the expedition of the Danites to Leshem or Laish is mentioned (xix. 47); a fuller account of which is given in Judges xviii. And, from that account, it appears that a system of image-worship was established immediately on the settlement of Laish, ever after called Dan. We find also that (xvii.) the same system had previously existed in Mount Ephraim, probably for a few years. Now, though there are indications in Joshua's last address that he thought dejection into idolatry not unlikely, and though there might be individual instances of that sin, yet, looking at the declarations of Josh. xxiii. 8, xxiv. 31, we can hardly imagine that such flagrant examples of open image-worship could have occurred in that great captain's life-time. Yet the date could not have been late. There are some expressions tending to prove this, which must be noticed. We may observe that Rahab is spoken of as still alive, (vi. 25.) We have no knowledge how long she lived; yet, as in all probability young at the taking of Jericho, (she had then parents,) she might very well have survived it sixty or seventy years. The expression, "She dwelleth in Israel even unto this day," would not have been used by one writing immediately; it points rather to a time when few who had taken part in the stirring scenes of the conquest still remained. The words "unto this day" occur not less than seventeen times in the whole book, viz., iv. 9, v. 9, vi. 25, vii. 26 (twice), viii. 28, 29, ix. 27, x. 27, xiii. 13, xiv. 14, xv. 63, xvi. 10, xxii. 3, 17, xxiii. 8, 9. The last four instances are found in Joshua's own addresses: that in vi. 25 is, as just observed, an argument for an early date; and the rest may very well come within, if not Joshua's life-time, at least the next generation. But xv. 63 fixes a lower limit, later than which the composition of the book cannot be dated. In the seventh or eighth year of David's reign the Jebusites were expelled from Jerusalem (II. Sam. v. 6-9). Perhaps then we may not unreasonably believe that this history was compiled in the days when judges ruled, it may be when some who witnessed the conquest were yet alive, or, if all had passed away, with such a scrupulous adherence to authorities as to embody some of the expressions in which eye-witnesses had chronicled the events as they occurred. There are indications, too, in the style, faint no doubt, but still pointing to the same period of time. It slightly differs from that of the Pentateuch, but yet is not quite assimilated to that of later books. To take a single instance: the expression "Lord of Hosts" is nowhere found in Joshua. It first occurs in I. Sam. i. 3, 11, and thenceforth is sufficiently common.

This book has a historical and a geographical part. All the parts are closely linked together; the end of the first portion (xii.) clearly preparing for an account of the division of the country, and the conclusion of the geographical sections referring back not only to xi. 23, but also to i. 2-6; while the remaining chapters both are necessary to narrate the return of the trans-Jordanic tribes to their own settlements and the close of Joshua's administration, and have also various references to what had preceded. The independent character of the book, moreover, is evidenced by the mention of the assignment of their lands to those eastern tribes, and of the appointment of the refuge cities; all of which had been narrated in the Pentateuch.

The canonical authority of this book has never been disputed; there are references to it (besides allusions in the Old Testament) in Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8, xi. 30, 31; James ii. 25.

But objection has been made to the credibility of the narrative, because it records miraculous events. Thus, various expedients have been devised, by men who seem to have a nervous fear of God's working a miracle, to account for the statement that the walls of Jericho fell down. And great perplexity has been felt in regard to the assertion that the sun and moon stood still. The main argument against the literal truth of this wonder is that it must be of a character so stupendous that all other miracles sink in comparison into the shade. The plain meaning of which is that God may work an easy miracle, but not a hard one. As if hard and easy could have any place in respect to the power of him at whose word creation started forth! Man is unable to perform the so-called least miracle; God is mighty enough to perform the so-called greatest. The only question for the reverent enquirer is whether the statement is so distinctly made that it must be received. It is not intended to decide dogmatically how the wonder was accomplished. It might be by a powerful refraction of the solar light. It may be a poetical figure from the poetical book of Jasher.

It may be added that, in corroboration of the general history of this book, a Phœnician inscription is cited (Procopius, Vandal., lib. ii. 10), as written by Canaanites fleeing from Joshua. "We are they who fled from the face of Joshua, the robber, the son of Naue."

JUDGES.

THIS book has its name because it contains an account of the Israelites, from the death of Joshua, under the administration of various persons raised up from time to time to deliver them from foreign oppression, or to regulate their internal affairs, and generally called Judges, till the time of the high priest Eli. It is not a connected history relating everything that happened: long periods (see iii. 30, v. 31 and other places) are often passed over without notice. But, as we find elsewhere in Scripture narrative, individual persons are brought forward as the central figures around which the events of their times may be grouped. The scope and intention of these records is indicated in Judges ii. 6-23: it was to depict the theocracy, to exhibit the relation of God to his people, and of the people towards him and with each other, during the first term of their enjoyment of the promised land, to show how the covenant Lord dealt in judgment and in mercy for the warning and instruction of future ages. It may be read as a living commentary upon the inspired maxim: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people," (Prov. xiv. 34).

The book of Judges consists of two principal parts; I. i.-xvi., II. xvii.-xxi. In the first we have, after an introduction, i. 1-iii. 4 an account of the oppressions of the Israelites, and their deliverances; in the second, the story of two particular disgraceful internal events.

Modern critics have been zealous in their attempts to dismember this book. The parts, they say do not agree; thus in Judges i. 18 we find Judah seizing Gaza, Askelon, and Ekron, while in iii. 3 five lords of the Philistines (those of the three cities just named being included) are said to be left unsubdued. Again, it is urged that i. 1 begins very naturally "after the death of Joshua," but that a single writer was never likely to commence again (ii. 6-10), with what the people did when Joshua, the war being ended, let them go to their several possessions. But these are not very formidable objections. In all campaigns, especially under circumstances similar to those of the Israelites occupying Canaan, towns and districts are taken and ravaged by one party, and afterwards recovered and held by the other. There is no improbability, therefore, in the statement that the Philistine cities were at one time in the hands of Judah, or that Jerusalem was burnt (Judges i. 8), and yet that somewhat later the lords of the Philistines again made head, and that the Jebusites were in possession of Jerusalem. For surely, if for their sins foreign nations, Moab, Ammon, Midian, were permitted to enslave the Israelites, the remnant of the original inhabitants of Canaan would have ample opportunity of regaining at least some of their fortresses. And, as to the alleged two beginnings, the critics have failed to see that the historian describes, very naturally, two different relations of the people, i. 1-ii. 5, that to the Canaanites, ii. 6-iii. 4, that to their own theocratic king. Both these views were necessary for the full understanding of what was to follow. With regard to xvii.—xxi., it certainly does seem that these chapters stand apart from the preceding narrative, in which, generally speaking, chronological sequence is observed, while the two stories found here are not in the order of time in relation to what had been before chronicled. Much stress cannot, indeed, be laid on this, because the events are of internal history, not the strifes of the nation with external foes, and a writer might very well think it best to place them by themselves. But, further, there is some difference of diction; and, if that could be accounted for, yet the date of the composition can hardly be the same in both parts. In xiii. 1 the length of Israel's subjection to the Philistines is stated. It was terminated by Samuel's victory (I. Sam. vii. 1–14), until after which of course the history was not written. But it must have been written (see Judges i. 21) before the seventh year of David, when (II. Sam. v. 6–9) that king occupied Jerusalem. The Jews ascribe the composition to Samuel, and, as it would seem to fall in the life-time of that prophet, there is no improbability in supposing him the author; who used, no doubt (see Deborah's song, Judges v.), written documents.

But the appendix, so to call it, must be placed later. It is repeatedly said (xviii. 1, xix. 1, xxi. 25) that there was then "no king in Israel." The natural inference is that the writer lived in the time of the kingdom. But it was probably not far on; for there is no hint of the separation into two states; it might therefore be in the reign of Solomon, perhaps a century later than the composition of the first part. And it may be observed that this second part is simply an appendix to the first; there is no indication that the later writer touched the work of the earlier; the two are just put together. It must in fairness be said that the expression (xviii. 30) argues to many a later date for the appendix. If "the captivity of the land" means the Assyrian deportation, doubtless the history could not have been written earlier than 721 B. C.; but it is possible that the carrying off of the ark by the Philistines may be intended (comp. Psal. lxxviii. 61). And it is not very likely that David and Solomon would have left the unhallowed worship at Dan without interference. The explanation (Judges xxi. 12), "Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan," does not prove that the section was written by a foreigner, or out of Palestine; it is only to mark the situation of Shiloh as distinguished from Jabesh-gilead, which was to the east of the Jordan. It is very difficult to settle the chronology of the book of Judges.

RUTH.

THIS book is a kind of appendix to that of Judges, and introduction to that of Samuel. Critics have amused themselves by conjecturing that it is a tale written to enforce the duty of a man, according to the levirate law, to marry his kinswoman, or that it is intended to moderate the dislike entertained in Israel to alliances with foreigners. It is unnecessary to argue seriously against such notions. The book is not a fragmentary episode which might have been spared: it has its special object, to illustrate the source of David's line; and without it the divine purpose would have appeared incomplete. It seemed good to the Holy Spirit to place on record this history of the ancestors of David, who were ancestors of Christ, that the line which had the promise might be distinguished; teaching also that, as there were some of his ancestry introduced from foreign nations into Israel, so Messiah's kingdom should embrace not alone the literal seed of Jacob, but Gentiles too.

The narrative is given with beautiful simplicity; and the spirit of piety evinced in the principal persons of this history is remarkably instructive. We cannot ascertain who the writer of the book was. It has been attributed to Samuel, to Hezekiah, to Ezra. But these are guesses, and not very happy ones. Critics have examined the diction; and some have thought they detected Chaldaisms; so that the book, they say, must have been written very late. Others have endeavored to explain away this alleged proof by saying that peculiarities of language might have been provincialisms, modes of speech in use at Bethlehem; and some have gone farther and imagined they were imported from Moab. There is little in all this. The custom originally observed in regard to the levirate law seems at the period of writing to have been well nigh obsolete; it is described as prevailing in former times; (Ruth iv. 7); therefore the history was not composed till a later period. The judges are spoken of, as if that kind of government had ceased (i. 1); therefore the composition was probably during the monarchy. But David's name is the last in the pedigree (iv. 22). We shall perhaps not greatly err, then, if we believe that the book of Ruth was written in David's reign or shortly after.

It comprises three sections: I. The account of Naomi's sojourn in Moab (i.) II. The transactions at Bethlehem (ii., iii., iv. 1–17). III. The pedigree (iv. 18–22).

SAMUEL.

THE two books of Samuel were by the Jews considered one. They bear the name of Samuel, because the earlier part is occupied with the history of that prophet. In the LXX. and Vulgate versions they are called "books of Kings" or "Kingdoms"; and hence in our bibles we find added to the titles, "otherwise called the first (or the second) book of the Kings."

It has been sometimes imagined that the books of Samuel and of Kings are parts of the same work, by the same author; but there are sufficient reasons for rejecting such a theory. Thus in Kings authorities are perpetually cited; it is otherwise in Samuel. In Kings are many express references to the law; in Samuel none. In Kings the exile is often alluded to; it is not so in Samuel. The plans of the two works vary; Samuel has more of a biographical cast—Kings more the character of annals. Moreover, the modes of expression are not the same; there are in Kings later forms of language, of which few occur in Samuel. The only real difficulty is that the books of Samuel do not conclude David's reign, for the end of which we have to consult Kings. Some have consequently supposed that the first two chapters of Kings ought to be attached to Samuel. But it is replied that there is particular mention of the law of Moses in I. Kings ii. 3, which as above remarked is not found in Samuel.

The books of Samuel present three large sections: we have—I. The history and administration of Samuel (I. Sam. i.—vii.) II. The establishment of a monarchy, and the history of Saul's reign (viii.—xxxi.), including (1) Saul's advancement and administration till his rejection (viii.—xv.), (2) his downward course till his death (xvi.—xxxi.) III. The reign of David (II. Sam. i.—xxiv.) This, too, divides itself into two parts: (1) David's career of conquest and prosperity (i.—ix.); (2) his great sin, and the troubles which afterwards afflicted his house (x.—xxiv.) In all this narrative is shown the manifold wisdom of God, delivering his people, carrying on and developing the blessing long before promised, and designating a family whose royalty should last on, till in the Son of that house an everlasting dominion should be inaugurated. The narratives, the foreshadowings, of Samuel, are eminently instructive and profitable.

It is freely acknowledged that the author, like most other historians, had documents before him from which he gathered his matter. The song of Hannah (I. Sam. ii. 1–10), the psalm which David composed (II. Sam. xxii.), the list of his worthies (xxiii. 8–39), &c., were doubtless previously in writing. But some critics choose to impute to the sacred penman an unskilful use of these materials, discrepancies and contradictions, and the recording twice, from different sources, of events which happened only once. There is no great weight in such charges. For to substantiate them they must prove that the writer was not only not inspired, but careless, ignorant, wanting in common sense. Thus there are two expeditions of Saul related in which he is in David's power, and is spared by him (I. Sam. xxiii. 19—xxiv. 22, xxvi.); and these, it is said, are but two traditionary forms of one event. It is improbable, we are told, that circumstances so nearly the same, and so singular, should have occurred twice. But surely it is much more improbable that a historian possessed of any qualifications for his task should have been so blind as not to discern one fact at the bottom of two traditions, so careless as not to try to sift out the truth, so unfortunate as by sticking in the discrepant accounts to make his history a caricature of truth. With all deference to the deeply-learned men who deem Israelitish story a not very harmonious mixture of two threads of narrative, it is too large a demand upon the world's credulity to require assent to a theory which pre-supposes that Hebrew historians one after another (for from the Pentateuch the notion begins) found always two traditions ready to their hand, and one after another made the same blunder of giving a double account of almost every great event which befel their most noted ancestors.

Chronological sequence is another difficulty urged. Critics find a summary of facts; they find afterwards some of those facts given in fuller detail, and then they accuse the writer of inaccuracy, as if he intended to place these facts chronologically after the point reached in the summary. No history can be written in exact chronological order. When an event has been mentioned, the writer must return to give some of the details, to gather up the threads of contemporaneous occurrences, to amplify and explain what he had stated. Granting this obvious principle very many difficulties will disappear. It is in this way that the perplexities attending the account of David's combat with Goliath have been removed.

It is, however, said, further, that there are contradictions in the books of Samuel. Two or three of these may be examined here. It is alleged that the assertion in I. Sam. vii. 13 is in opposition to ix. 16, x. 5, xiii. 3, 19, 20. But the victory of Mizpeh was gained in the early part, perhaps at the beginning of Samuel's administration. It is not till years after that we hear again of the Philistines; so that the expression may be most fairly used of a deliverance which lasted till Samuel had grown old, and his sons were unpopular, and when advantage was probably taken of these circumstances once more to plunder Israel. It is alleged, again, that two modes of Saul's appointment as king are narrated, by a special revelation from God (ix. 1—x. 16), and by a public assembly of the people in which he was chosen by lot (x. 17–27). But to call these inconsistent is to deny the divine government of the world. To the reverent mind Prov. xvi. 33 is a sufficient explanation. It is further objected that there is an inconsistency in the narrative in regard to Saul's not waiting for Samuel at Gilgal; xiii. 8, it is urged, must refer back to x. 8; though there had certainly been a meeting of the people with Samuel and Saul at Gilgal in the interval (xi. 14, 15). But much stress need not be laid on this. We may fairly suppose that Samuel's charge was intended for a general direction, or that, having been disobeyed once, it was reiterated on a fresh occasion. And, if we are not able precisely to determine the exact order of events, surely it is but reasonable to impute the difficulty to our want of information, instead of charging the historian with misstatement. Only one more alleged contradiction can be noticed. The two passages, I. Sam. xviii. 27 and II. Sam. iii. 14, it is said, do not agree. But all appearance of disagreement is removed by a reference to I. Sam. xviii. 25. The number which the king prescribed was 100; and this was the price which David naturally names to Ish-bosheth, though in fact he had doubled Saul's demand.

It is, moreover, said that the whole work is a thing of shreds and patches; that there are summings up, as in I. Sam. vii. 15–17, xiv. 47–52; II. Sam. viii. 15–18, xx. 23–26, so that the narrative begins again when it seemed to be concluded; and that therefore it is altogether a heterogeneous compilation. Even if this were true, it would not affect the authority of the record; but the charge has little to support it. Till the breaking of the Phillistine yoke on the great day of Mizpeh, Samuel's authority, if he really previously exercised any, was not consolidated; what more natural than at such a crisis to give an account of his ordinary administration of justice? And at the end of chap. xiv. we reach the turning-point of Saul's reign. He had been hitherto successful, regardless it is true of Samuel's charge in one instance, but not altogether rejected, and always victorious in external war. Here was the place, then, to give a statement of his family and household. Immediately after, when proved again with a fresh command, he recklessly disobeyed, and ran with ever-increasing celerity the miserable course which conducted him to utter ruin. There was a somewhat similar crisis in David's reign. With II. Sam. x. begins the story of that series of events which led to his great sin, and embittered his closing years. And chap. ix. the account of his kindness to Jonathan's son, is an apt adjunct to the enumeration of the officers of his kingdom. The list, too, xx. 23-26, is appropriately placed, because David had just been restored to his throne; and the chaps. xxi.-xxiv. are but a kind of appendix, describing the last scenes of his reign and life. We may see, then, really the careful hand of a single compiler in these arrangements.

As to the author little can be said with certainty. Some have concluded, from I. Chron. xxix. 29, that Samuel, Gad, and Nathan recorded the events of their times, and that to them therefore these books must be ascribed. But we have just seen that, though previously existing documents may have been used, the probability is that a single writer composed the whole. And he seems to have been somewhat removed in point of time from the events he chronicles. The expression "unto this day" (I. Sam. v. 5, vi. 18, xxx. 25; II. Sam. iv. 3, vi. 8, xviii. 18) may be taken to imply this; so may I. Sam. ix. 9; II. Sam. xiii. 18. Perhaps we may not unreasonably assign the composition to the time of Rehoboam.

KINGS.

THE two books of Kings follow and are closely connected with those of Samuel, carrying on the history of the chosen people from the point where the preceding record leaves it. They are not separate compositions—in fact, in the Hebrew canon they formed but a single book, in which the author has exhibited the progressive development of the theocracy, according to the principle of God's promise to David (II. Sam. vii. 12-16.) This promise is the connecting thread; and its fulfilment is illustrated by the way in which God preserved an inheritance to David's family. In the kingdom of the ten tribes the sceptre is seen passing from one to another, seized by bold usurpers, whose descendants retained it rarely above two or three generations; but David wanted not a man to sit upon his throne continually—a pregnant fact—a gracious assurance being therein conveyed of that everlasting kingdom which should be fully established in the person of David's greater Son, who was to have the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession (Psal. ii. 8.)

It is to the illustration of this great principle that the books of Kings are dedicated. And they evince a sufficient unity to show that they were composed by a single author. They are compiled, no doubt, from various sources; yet they are not a bald compilation, but a perfect history, worked up on a definite plan, in method and in style giving ample proof of their independent completeness. The writer refers to his sources in the same terms, marks carefully the chronology of the most important events, estimates the character and administration of the kings by the rules of the Mosaic law, describes the commencement, tenor, and close of each reign, and the death and burial of the sovereigns in the same phraseology. These points have been fully illustrated, as by Keil, (Comm. on Kings, transl., vol. i. Intro., pp. 9, 10,) who shows that the same usages in point of language are found throughout. There are critics, however, who, while they admit the substantial unity of Kings, believe that they see instances of discrepancy and repetition which tend to prove that the author did little more than bring his materials into juxtaposition. Thus, there are direct contradictions alleged. It is said that I. Kings ix. 22 is inconsistent with v. 13 and xi. 28: for that in the last named place Solomon is said to have imposed tasks on Israel, and laid a burden on the house of Joseph, while in the former he is stated to have made none of the Israelites bondmen. But the objection confounds two things, actual bondage, and labor, possibly remunerated, which was performed only in courses (v. 14.) Then, again, the threatening that the dogs should lick Ahab's blood in the portion of Naboth at Jezreel (xxi. 19) is said to be contradicted by the result; for Ahab's blood was merely licked up by dogs when the chariot in which he had received his mortal wound was washed in the pool of Samaria (xxii. 38.) But it is a sufficient answer that the Lord, who often, when men repent, restrains his anger (comp. Jonah iii. 10,) so far regarded Ahab's humiliation, hollow as it was, as to declare that not to him but to his posterity the full measure of judgment should be meted out (I. Kings xxi. 29; II. Kings ix. 25, 26). Indirect discrepancies have also been gathered by industrious men. But they are too trifling to require more than a passing notice. Thus, things are described as subsisting "to this day" (I. Kings viii. 8, ix. 21, xii. 19; II. Kings viii. 22); whereas the Jewish polity had ceased to exist before the work was compiled, and such relations were consequently at an end. The answer is that the author retained the expressions from the sources he used. Again, I. Kings xxi. 13 and II. Kings ix. 26 are said to be scarcely in harmony; as in the first the death of Naboth alone is described, while the blood of his sons is mentioned in the last. It has been well rejoined that the death of Naboth's natural heirs is at least implied in I. Kings xxi; else how could his inheritance have fallen to the king? But in truth such objections are, as before said, unworthy of notice. The credit and consistency of every history that was ever written might be thus impugned with equal justice.

The sources from which the author drew his materials are exactly indicated. Thus at the close of Solomon's history he refers to the Book of the Acts of Solomon (I. Kings xi. 41); for every king of Judah to the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah xiv. 29, xv. 7, 23, xxii. 45; II. Kings viii. 23, xii. 19, and elsewhere); and for every king of Israel to the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel (I. Kings xiv. 19, xv. 31, xvi. 5, 14, 20, 27, xxii. 39; II. Kings i. 18, x. 34, and elsewhere). The book of the acts of Solomon has been thought identical with the Book of Nathan the prophet (II. Chron. ix. 29): it was more probably a comprehensive history compiled from, or at all events comprehending all that was recorded in, the three books named in the same place. The book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel is cited for the last time in II. Kings xv. 31, that of the kings of Judah last in xxxiv. 5; possibly these chronicles did not come down to a later point than the reigns of Pekah and Jehoiakim respectively. We can only conjecture that these works may have been part of a complete history cited as the Book of the kings of Judah and Israel, in II. Chron. xxxii. 32, and with slight variations of title in xx. 34, xxiv. 27, xxxv. 27. Some have imagined that these were annals duly kept by the "recorders," of whom we frequently hear as officers of state; but the unlikelihood of this is well shown by Bleek. It is more probable that prophetic men from time to time wrote the leading events of their own days (hence, may be, the full account of the acts of Elijah and Elisha), not perhaps in a regular succession, but still so as to furnish a number of memoirs from which the history of the nation might be compiled before the exile. It is some corroboration of this conjecture that "the book of Jehu the son of Hanani" is said to be incorporated (such is the meaning of the text) with "the book of the kings of Israel" (II. Chron. xx. 34).

The time when the books of Kings were compiled may be pretty nearly fixed on. It was in the time of the exile; the last event related being the kindness shown to Jehoiachin by Evil-merodach; and some have believed that it was while Jehoiachin yet lived: the expression, however, of II. Kings xxv. 29: "he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life," would rather imply that that life was ended. But the exile was not over: there is no indication of that: most probably, then, the composition may be dated between the death of Jehoiachin (the exact time of which we do not know) and the return from captivity. The author can not be identified. Many have believed that it was Jeremiah; but that prophet, whose ministry began in the thirteenth year of Josiah, must have been in extreme old age at the liberation of Jehoiachin 66 years later; and therefore those who hold to Jeremiah's authorship suppose the notice of Jehoiachin a subsequent addition.

The books of Kings have always had a place in the Jewish canon; and the history they contain is authenticated by the references we find in the New Testament (Luke iv. 25-27; Acts vii. 47; Rom. xi. 2-4; James v. 17, 18). Modern research is also continually adding fresh evidence to the truth of the narrative.

These books may properly be distributed into three different parts. I. The narrative of Solomon's reign (I. Kings i.—xi.) II. The contemporary history of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah from the division of the nation (xii.—II. Kings xvii.) III. The account of the kingdom of Judah while it stood alone to the period of the Babylonish captivity (xviii.—xxv.) The length of time embraced is about 453 years. It may be observed that the first book would end better at xxii. 50 than at 53; 51-53 more properly belonging to II. Kings i.

CHRONICLES.

AMONG the ancient Jews these formed but one book, though they are now divided in Hebrew Bibles, as well as in our own, into two. They were called The Words of Days, i. e. Diaries or Journals. The Septuagint translators denominated them Paraleipomena, Things omitted; and from Jerome we have derived the name 'Chronicles.' They are an abridgement of the whole of the sacred history, more especially tracing the Hebrew nation from its origin, and detailing the principal events of the reigns of David and Solomon, and of the succeeding kings of Judah down to the return from Babylon. The writer goes over much of the same ground as the author of the books of Kings, with whose work he was probably acquainted. He does not, however, merely produce a supplement, but works out his narrative independently after his own manner. The following table, taken from Keil, will be of service as exhibiting the parallels between the Chronicles and the books of Samuel and Kings:—

It will be seen, however, on collation, how much difference there is between the two histories. There are omissions in Chronicles, as, for instance, David's adultery (II. Sam. xi. 2-xii. 25): there are facts added, as David's preparations for building the temple (I. Chron. xxii.): there are fuller details of matters shortly noticed in the parallel history, as in the account of the removal of the ark from Kirjath-jearim (comp. I. Chron. xiii. 2, xv. 2-21, xvi. 4-43, with II. Sam. vi.), besides briefer additions, explanatory remarks, reflections, and the omission of a few words in a narrative, differences of spelling, &c., which serve to prove that, as before noted, the author of Chronicles was not a mere supplementer. He had, indeed, a definite object. Supposing him to have written shortly after the return from captivity, we can easily see the necessity of a work which should fix the genealogies of the returned exiles, with special reference to the line from which Messiah was to spring, to facilitate the re-establishment of religious worship by detailing the pedigrees, the functions, and the order of the priests and Levites, and to describe the original apportionment of lands, that the respective families might be confirmed in their ancient inheritance. Accordingly, after the early genealogies in the first eight chapters, the writer seems to mark his age and design in ix. 1, &c. We may thus perceive why the kingdom of the ten tribes is hardly mentioned. Israel had been removed, and their country occupied by an envious and hostile population. We may see why the building of the temple, David's preparations, as well as Solomon's accomplishment of them, are detailed, and the various reformatations of later godly kings specially chronicled: these accounts would serve to cheer those who were engaged in a similar work, and strengthen them to believe that their covenant God would enable them to reconstruct their religious order, and repair their ruined civil polity, in spite of the vast difficulties against which they had to contend. The pedigrees were, no doubt, extracted from public registers; a confirmatory proof of which is that they are not all brought down to the same period. And, in regard to his facts, the author is careful to name his authorities. Thus, for the history of David (1), he specifies the books of Samuel the seer, of Nathan the prophet, and of Gad the seer (I. Chron. xxix. 29), probably the same with the Chronicles of king David mentioned in xxvii. 24; for the history of Solomon (2), the book of Nathan, the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and the visions of Iddo the seer against Jeroboam (II. Chron. ix. 29). For the further history of Judah (3), a book of the kings of Judah is referred to (xvi. 11), cited elsewhere with small variations of title (xxv. 26, xxviii. 26, xxxii. 32, xxvii. 7, xxxv. 27, xxxvi. 8, xx. 34, xxxiii. 18, see the Hebrew). There are also (4), the story, midrash, of the book of the Kings (xxiv. 27), by some supposed identical with (3); (5), the book of Shemaiah the prophet and of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies (xii. 15); (6), the story, midrash, of the prophet Iddo (xiii. 22), (7), the book of Jehu, the son of Hanani (xx. 34); (8), the acts of Uzziah, written by Isaiah the prophet (xxvi. 22); (9), the vision of Isaiah the prophet (xxxii. 32); and (10), the sayings of the seers (xxxiii. 19). Of these, the book or words of Jehu and the vision of Isaiah are said to have been incorporated with the book of the kings of Judah and Israel. It is very likely that the rest were sections of some one large historical work.

The author of the Chronicles it is not very easy to ascertain. The Jews believe him to be Ezra; but the pedigree inserted in I. Chron. iii. 17-24 would seem to reach beyond Ezra's time. Different explanations, however, are given of it; and some imagine that the passage is a later addition to the book. Some indications of the date are afforded by the diction; as where the reckoning is by darics (xxix. 7), in our translation 'drams.' We must place the composition, therefore, under the Persian dominion. It is not likely to have been later. There is a probability, it may be added, that the books of Chronicles and of Ezra were originally one work.

Besides the differences which have been noted between Chronicles and the books of Samuel and Kings, some critics believe that they have detected contradictions. It can only be replied generally here, that discrepancies in orthography, diction, and arrangement are of little weight; and that those of numbers and facts have for the most part been satisfactorily explained. It was customary to express numbers by letters of the alphabet: hence many of the mistakes of transcribers. And, if no perfect solution of every knot can now be given, the difficulty is perhaps owing rather to our want of information than to a real fault in the composition. Besides, it must never be forgotten that the points of exact agreement between independent Scripture writers are almost innumerable—those of stubborn discrepancy very few.

The books of Chronicles have always had their place in the canonical writings, ranked among the khethubim or hagiographa, both as being later than the captivity, and as not exhibiting that detailed history and teaching of prophets which we find in Kings. They are not expressly cited in the New Testament; but there are probably some indirect allusions to them: comp. I. Chron. xxiii. 13 with Heb. v. 4; xxiv. 10 with Luke i. 5; II. Chron. ix. 1 with Matt. xii. 42 and Luke xi. 31; xxiv. 20, 21 with Matt. xxiii. 35 and Luke xi. 51. The books of Chronicles comprise, I. Genealogical lists from Adam downwards, including an enumeration of those who returned from captivity (I. Chron. i.–ix. 34); II. The histories of Saul and David (ix. 35–xxix. 32); III. The history of the united kingdom under Solomon (I. Chron. xxix. 23–30; II. Chron. i.–ix.); IV. The history of the kingdom of Judah till its termination by the Babylonian conquest (x.–xxxvi.)

EZRA.

THIS book commences with a notice of the edict of Cyrus permitting the exiled Jews to reoccupy their own country: it narrates the return of a large body under Zerubbabel, with their proceedings till the temple was rebuilt and dedicated: it gives an account also of Ezra's journey to Jerusalem, upwards of half a century later, and of the reformation effected by him. The books of Ezra and Nehemiah were reckoned by the Jews as one volume. Portions of Ezra (viz., iv. 8–vi. 18, and vii. 12–26) are written in Chaldee: the rest is in Hebrew. It is questioned whether the whole is from Ezra's pen. Some critics maintain the affirmative; others, with greater apparent reason, dissent. Several of the arguments alleged are of no great weight; but perhaps, on a full consideration, we may divide the book into two parts: 1. i.–vi.; 2. vii.–x., and may ascribe vii.–x. to Ezra. It is true that in vii. 1–26 and x., the writer uses the third person; but this fact does not seem conclusive against Ezra's authorship. The former chapters i.–vi. are probably from different sources. Chap. i. is a continuation of II. Chronicles; the last two verses in that book being identical with the first two in Ezra. Chap. ii. iii. is a document inserted with slight variation in Neh. vii. The portion iii. 2–vi. 22 (with the exception of iv. 6–23, possibly by a later hand) has been ascribed, from the similarity of style, diction, etc., to the prophet Haggai. Be this as it may, Ezra, it is likely, had the preceding portions before him, and combined them with his own narrative; or it might be that the author of Chronicles was the final editor of those books, and of the books of Ezra and Nehemiah. The zeal and piety of Ezra are admirably illustrated in the transactions that are here recorded. And, though some have objected to certain particulars, and impeached the credibility of the history on account of them, such objections are groundless. The canonical authority of this book is beyond dispute. It may be added that it comprises in its history a period of about eighty years.

NEHEMIAH.

THIS book was placed by the Jews in one volume with that of Ezra: contemporary events are treated of in both.

The book of Nehemiah may be roughly divided into three sections; I. (i.–vii.) comprising the narrative of Nehemiah's appointment to office, his rebuilding, in spite of opposition, the walls of Jerusalem and his purpose of bringing the people to an orderly settlement. In II. (viii.–x.) there is an account of certain religious solemnities; and in III. (xi.–xiii.) we have various lists, appointments, and settlements, with a recital of some acts of Nehemiah's administration on resuming his post.

In many parts of this book, Nehemiah appears as speaking in the first person; but there are difficulties in the way of believing that the whole proceeded from his pen. It is true that some of the arguments urged, as that taken from the use of different divine names, are not of much weight; still, when we find a perceptible diversity of diction, when in parts of the book Nehemiah seems to retire into the background, when his own title varies and the designation of the nobles is not the same, when, too, we see lists extended beyond what we can reasonably imagine was the limit of Nehemiah's life, we can hardly help coming to the conclusion that various hands contributed to this book. The following will probably be found not an unfair apportionment of the parts of it. Nehemiah evidently was in the habit of noting the occurrences of his time. Now the section, Neh. i. 1–vii. 5, is written in the first person: there is an uniformity in its style, and several favorite expressions recur. The writer also declares that he found a document (nearly identical with Ezra ii.) which he adds to his own narrative, Neh. vii. 6–73. There is no reason to doubt that the whole of this section, therefore, belongs to Nehemiah himself. But in viii.–x. there is a change: the governor is spoken of in the third person. The remainder of the book xi.–xiii., was, with small exceptions, most likely written by Nehemiah: xi. 1 seems to connect itself with the first part of vii. 5. But the list of xii. 1–26 was from a later hand, as the succession of high priests is carried down to Jaddua, who was contemporary with Alexander the Great; or else the final editor added some names. Jaddua, however, may have been born before Nehemiah's death. The verses xii. 44–47 may possibly not be by Nehemiah, as xiii. 1 is closely connected with xii. 43. We may believe, then, that, as much of this book was written by Nehemiah, but not the whole, it was ultimately arranged in its present form by some one, the author of the Chronicles very possibly (to which it, with Ezra, formed an appendix), who, under divine guidance, has transmitted to future ages of the church this most instructive narrative as we now have it.

ESTHER.

THIS book is so termed because Esther is the principal figure in it, not from any notion that she wrote it. It has generally been held in high estimation among the Jews, who class it with Ruth, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, and the Lamentations, as one of the five megilloth or rolls, and solemnly read it at the feast of Purim. Objections have been made to the truthfulness of the history, the decree that every man should bear rule in his own house, the promulgation of the edict against the Jews, &c., &c. It would be easy to set aside all history, if its records are to be judged of by what may appear likely or unlikely to this or that individual. But the truth is that what we know of Xerxes from other sources, his mad and unprincipled conduct on various occasions, will point him out as just the person to act in the way which is represented in this book. Besides, there was the institution of the feast of Purim, in order to commemorate the deliverance of the Jews, a feast which we know (II. Mace. xv. 36) was observed at no great distance from the time when the events occurred, and which is observed to the present day. The observance of this feast is the very strongest proof that the history is true; it being manifestly far more improbable than any of the improbabilities Bleek has suggested, that a whole nation should observe for ages a solemn festival, to commemorate the incidents of a romance.

With regard to the writer of this book nothing certain can be said. Some have ascribed it to Mordecai, or to Mordecai and Esther jointly, grounding their notion on Esth ix. 20, 23, 32. But the statements there made refer, not to the authorship of the book, but to the circular letters sent to the Jews. That it was written by a resident in Persia may very well be allowed. There is a thorough acquaintance evinced with Persian customs (see i. 1, 10, 14, 19, ii. 9, iii. 7, 12, 15, iv. 11, viii. 8). The diction closely resembles that of Ezra and Nehemiah, mixed with some Persisms, just such as we might suppose a contemporary of theirs likely to use. The arguments employed by some critics to bring the composition down to a late date, grounded on the language, are therefore of little weight. Neither is the alleged spirit of revenge pervading the narrative, nor the supposed formalism in religion, worth mentioning. The spirit of revenge is not in the writer, but, if anywhere, in the persons whose deeds are chronicled. And, as revengeful deeds have been committed in all ages, the occurrence of them cannot be taken as a chronological mark. Neither is more stress laid on fasting than in other times of Hebrew history; comp. Judges xx. 26; II. Sam. xii. 16, 17, 21, 22. The composition, therefore, of the book may most reasonably be placed about or soon after the time when the facts occurred. But there is one great peculiarity of the history. The name of God does not occur in it. Various hypotheses have been devised to explain this fact.

A very probable one is that, as the history of the reigns of Persian kings was duly chronicled (Esth. ii. 23, vi. 1, x. 2), and the events here narrated were of course recorded in the annals of the empire, this book may be mainly a translated extract from those annals. There would be nothing more strange in such an extract's being preserved in the sacred canon than in Dan. iv. being, as it is, a decree of Nebuchadnezzar; and this is what the Talmud asserts.

JOB.

THIS book derives its name from the patriarch whose prosperity, afflictions, and recovery, it delineates. It is a noble poem, complete in all its parts; as will be seen from the following brief analysis. It may be distributed into six sections:

I. The introduction (i., ii.), in which we have an account of the way in which Job's troubles came upon him, his deportment under them, with the arrival of his three friends Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, to condole with him.

II. The first discussion or controversy with them, in which, after Job had complained, each speaks once, and is answered by Job (iii.-xvi.) First Job passionately bewails his condition (iii.) Eliphaz then reproves his friend's impatience, and expresses his belief that, as misery implies guilt, Job's distress must have been occasioned by sin (iv., v.) Job next justifies his complaint, charges his friends with unkindness, and expostulates with the Deity for laying so heavy a hand upon him (vi., vii.) Hereupon Bildad with some harshness declares that certainly, if Job were blameless, God would vindicate him by restoring him to prosperity (viii.) Job retorts by denying that his affliction is any proof of guilt, and passionately desires death (ix., x.) Zophar then coarsely exhorts him to repent (xi.); and Job in reply sarcastically reflects on the pretensions of his three friends to wisdom, and appeals to the Deity in whom he still places his hope (xii.-xiv.)

III. The second discussion is similar in form (xv.-xxi.) Eliphaz, in admirable imagery, reiterates his censure on Job for his self-justification (xv.) Job again complains of the unkind treatment he has met with, afresh protests his innocence, and describes the grave as his last resource (xvi., xvii.) Bildad rejoins by a striking picture of the retribution of the wicked, which he applies to Job (xviii.) Job in his reply describes again his sufferings, appeals to his friends for pity, and, having professed his steady faith in God, assures them that if they persist in their invectives God will chastise them (xix.) Zophar then warns him that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and his destruction sure to come (xx.); and Job answers by showing the fallacy of Zophar's reasoning, which is not borne out by experience (xxi.)

IV. The third discussion has no speech of Zophar (xxii.-xxxi.) Eliphaz vindicates God's dealings, and urges Job afresh to repentance (xxii.) Job replies that he wishes he could plead his cause before God, and maintains that in this life the wicked frequently escape punishment (xxiii., xxiv.) Upon this Bildad says shortly that no man can be just before

God (xxv.); while Job, as none of his friends had more to say, again reproves them, shows how hard it is to discover true wisdom, elaborately vindicates his course of life, and describes once more his miseries, with an appeal to God for a hearing (xxvi.-xxxi.)

V. The speech of Elihu succeeds, who blames all the disputants, censures Job for persistently declaring his innocence, shows how for wise ends God afflicts, and that man's duty is submission to that Glorious One whose power is uncontrollable (xxxii.-xxxvii.)

VI. The awful interference of Jehovah himself is now described. The Lord here illustrates his own omnipotence and righteousness, and exposes the ignorance of man, and his inability to comprehend the Creator's ways (xxxviii.-xli.) Hereupon Job humbly submits; the friends are censured; and Job's restored prosperity is depicted (xlii.) The conclusion, like the introduction, is in prose.

In all these discussions the character of each interlocutor is excellently brought out—Eliphaz discerning, grave, and dignified, reluctantly led to condemn his friend; Bildad, with less delicacy, swayed by Eliphaz's example, and repeating himself; Zophar rude and pertinacious; Elihu zealous for God's honor, which he thinks Job has impugned, but which yet his opponents have not known how properly to maintain. The whole is consistent and complete. The action, so to speak, of the poem is continually rising, till the climax of the divine speech of Jehovah. But certain critics, taking no account of the eastern mode of composition, so different from ours, have thought fit to represent some parts as additions or interpolations. Thus they object to the introduction and conclusion, mainly because they are in prose; and to the speech of Elihu, because he is not mentioned at either the beginning or the end of the book, because his appearance is said to break the connection, and because some shades of peculiarity are found or fancied in his diction. Other more trivial reasons are alleged; and other portions of the book are also said to be interpolated. It is impossible to enter here into any full discussion of these matters; it must be sufficient to say that there is an evident fitness in the historical introduction and conclusion being in prose, and that the appearance of Elihu, so far from breaking the connection between the parts, rather strengthens it. He corrects some of Job's assertions, but is unable to give a full explanation of the divine purposes. It was necessary to show how the highest intellect and the warmest zeal fall short before the majesty of the counsels of God. It is this conclusion to which the whole mind of Scripture is directed: "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" (I. Cor. i. 20.) Proceeding after the fashion of the critics who attempt to dismember the book of Job, we might pull in pieces every composition that exists.

Various conjectures have been propounded as to the authorship of this work. It must be fully understood that, though Job himself lived in a very early age, it by no means necessarily follows that the book was written by a contemporary. So the book of Genesis from Moses' pen narrates events that happened long before. The guesses that have been gravely produced and defended by scholars of name are instructive, as exposing the uncritical helplessness of those wise men who in these our times have undertaken to correct Moses, and to teach the world how prophets and apostles ought to have written. It is with comparative sobriety that some propose Job, Elihu, Moses, Solomon, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Ezra, as author; and Dr. Hengstenberg may plausibly fix its limits between the ages of Samuel and Isaiah, within which he thinks the work must be dated. But, when others have no difficulty in coming to an exact conclusion, and require us to believe that the author was an Idumean, a Hebrew who lived in Idumea, an Egyptian, a Nahorite, and one sage, minutely informed of every particular, places him in the south of Judea, near a caravan-road, and says he was a citizen of Tekoah, it is difficult to refrain from wishing criticism a little more under the control of common sense. On this point we must be content to remain in ignorance. The knowledge of the author affects not the place of the book in the sacred canon. Some well-meaning writers are eager to maintain that it was from a Hebrew pen; otherwise they suppose the Jews would never have acknowledged its inspiration. It is enough to ask, do such writers imagine that it was left to Jewish prejudice to stamp this or that book as inspired or not? The guiding Spirit, assuredly, even if he had ceased to raise up prophets properly so-called, yet continued to the ancient saints that marvellous discernment by which they were able to separate between the mere works of men and those which God intended for the perpetual instruction and edification of his people. The book of Job was demonstrably in the canon sanctioned by our Lord's usage; and we may be content.

The question whether this book is altogether real history, or rather the elaboration of a great truth from historical materials, requires some notice. Several of the most conscientious scholars have held the last named view. They consider the dialogue between God and Satan (Job i. 6-12, ii. 1-6) as evidently figurative; they do not suppose that the artificial and highly finished speeches of Job and his friends could have been uttered at once in the course of ordinary conversation: they think the audible interposition of the Deity not accordant with his usual modes of dealing with his creatures. It must be confessed that, provided its composition under divine guidance be allowed, the literal truth of the narrative is a subordinate question. Our Lord himself has used parables, and introduced unreal persons into his discourses. There is nothing, therefore, to shock the reverent mind in the notion of fictitious narrative being adopted as the vehicle of momentous instruction. But the circumstances dwelt on in the preceding article go to show that Job really lived and acted as is here told. Moreover, the extreme circumstantiality of the details, the description of the patriarch himself, his family, his property, his country, his friends, with their names and special designations, the genealogy of Elihu, the exact account of the feasting of Job's sons, the particular mention of the plunderers—these and other similar points mark a history rather than a parable (see Dr. Lee's Book of Job transl., 1837. Intro. pp. 8, 9). No such minute details are found in any Scripture parable; it seems, therefore, a necessary inference that these details are not the play of fancy, but all historically true. Doubtless we are not to believe that God holds court (if the expression may be used) on certain days, when evil angels as well as fallen spirits have access to him. But, in speaking of the Deity words in their proper sense applicable only to men must be employed. We may not hence entertain gross notions of him; but it is hard to see how in any other way we could be taught the perfect control in which he holds all the beings and things of the universe. There are some sensible remarks on this topic in Caryl on Job, 1669, Annot. on i. 6, vol. i. pp. 78, 79. Objections of the kind made to the book of Job would apply equally to other parts of Scripture. Compare, for example, the address of Micaiah to Ahab (I. Kings xxii. 19–23), in which he tells how a lying spirit proposed to deceive the false prophets. Then we have the still small voice, after the wind and the earthquake and the fire, sounding in Elijah's ear (xix. 11–18). We are not to limit the Holy One to place or time, or to prescribe how he should make his communications to men. Dr. Kitto, again, has very well observed in reference to the elaborate character of the speeches: "Nothing is more remarkable among the Semitic nations of western Asia, even at this day, than the readiness of their resources, the prevalence of the poetical imagination and form of expression, and the facility with which the nature of this group of languages allows all high and animated discourse to fall into rhythmical forms of expression; while the language even of common life and thought is replete with poetical sentiments and ideas."

This book gives an interesting view of religious belief in patriarchal times. It is true that some critics imagine they detect signs of a knowledge more advanced than we have reason to suppose revelation had taught in very early ages. If this notion be well founded, it may be some reason for considering the book, and perhaps the time when Job lived, not so very remote as other evidence would seem to show. Still it can hardly be denied that, while great truths are distinctly held, the interlocutors of this poem were not advanced beyond the elementary understanding of God's plans and purposes, and that one great object of the work is to show how man in his ignorance must wait for the fuller manifestation which only the Gospel has effected. The chief principles of religion which we find recognized are that there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him (Heb. xi. 6). These truths are variously illustrated: the creation of the world by God's power (Job x. 8, xxxviii.–xli.), the administration of it by his providence (v. 8–27, ix. 4–13), the existence of angels that do his will, though some of those mighty spirits are fallen (i. 6–12, ii. 1–6, iv. 18, xv. 14–16, xxxviii. 7), the polluted state of man (xiv. 4, xxv. 4–6), the need of a propitiation by sacrifice (i. 5, xlii. 8, 9), the future day of retribution (xx. 4–29, xxvii. 8)—all these doctrines are set forth with more or less clearness. And, if the passage (xix. 25–27) may be interpreted, as many critics believe it may, of the expected Redeemer, we have in it not only a Messianic promise, but also an anticipation of the resurrection of the flesh. It is fair, however, to say that some would refer this expression of hope merely to deliverance from temporal distress. Throughout the book, further, there is a high-toned morality; obedience to God regarded as an imperative duty (xiii. 15), and brotherly kindness inculcated by example (xxix. xxxi.) And yet there is great dimness in the views exhibited. The afflictions that befel Job are a problem which neither he nor his friends can solve. And, when the Deity appears, he does not reveal clearly, as he does in later times, how his chastening was in wise love, a training for eternal life: he rather, by the exhibition of his majesty, enforces submission and humble acknowledgment. There was light enough to guide men in practical godliness, and promise enough to call out faith. But the promise was not fully realized (Heb. xi. 39, 40); and it was not till the glorious gospel appeared that life and immortality were fully brought to light (II. Tim. i. 10). It is very questionable whether Job, as distinctly as Abraham, saw and rejoiced in the prospect of Messiah's day (John viii. 56).

"The book is engaged with the great problem regarding the distribution of good and evil in the world, especially as viewed in connection with the doctrine of a righteous retribution in the present life. It sets forth the struggle between faith in the perfect government of God, and the various doubts excited by what is seen and known of the prosperity of the many among those who are despisers of God. The subject thus appears to be one that comes home to men's business and bosoms. Even under the light of Christianity, there are perhaps few who have not at particular seasons, felt the strife between faith in the perfect government of the world and the various feelings excited in the mind by what they have experienced of human suffering." The event showed that Job's friends had judged him too soon: had he been a righteous man, his troubles, they thought, would end. They did end; and very consolatory must have been the story to those who in times immediately subsequent to its composition pondered this book. It has not lost its effect for us. We, as the apostle James admonishes, must see "the end of the Lord," and hold on in faith and patience accordingly.

Little need be said as to the nature of the poetry of this book. Some will have it an epic, some a dramatic poem; while others class it with lyric compositions. It matters not what name be given it: it is poetry of the highest order. There is a wonderful glow of fancy, and power of description; so that even if it had no higher merit it must be regarded as one of the most admirable productions of the pen. The language, it may be added, has much in it of an archaic cast.

Perhaps it may be worth while to advert to an argument sometimes taken from the book of Job against the doctrine of inspiration. It is alleged that the false assumptions of the interlocutors never could have been dictated by an infallible Intelligence. Of course not. There are many speeches of evil men and of evil spirits in Scripture. God never dictated them. But he did see it good in his wisdom that they should be chronicled in the holy book for warning and instruction; and it was under the guidance of his Spirit that they were so preserved. Rightly viewed, such speeches afford not the shadow of an argument against inspiration.

The actual existence of Job is expressly recognized by inspired writers of both the Old and the New Testament, (Ezekiel xiv. 14, 16, 18, 20, James v. 11); and there is nothing improbable in the tradition of the Talmud that it was Moses who introduced this book into the Hebrew canon. Job might have lived in Arabia during the patriarchal age, and Moses, while in exile in that country, might have taken the book, and under the influence of divine inspiration, copied it and prepared it for its place in the Sacred Code of the Hebrews. For a similar proceeding in subsequent times, compare Prov. xxv. 1.

PSALMS.

THIS collection has in the Hebrew the title Sēpher Tehillim, "book of hymns," or "praises," because most of the compositions consist more or less of hymns of praise. To some of the pieces other names are applied; as tephillah, "prayer," to five (Psalms xvii., lxxxvi., xc., cii., cxli.), shîr, "song," to one (xlvi.), also mizmôr to forty-five (e. g. iii., iv., v., vi.), rendered "psalm," and meaning properly a rhythmical production. Eight are mizmôr-shîr, a "psalm-song" (e. g. xxx., lxxv.); five are shîr-mizmôr, "song-psalm" (e. g. xlviii.); one is tehillah, "praise" (cxlv.). Other titles are maschâl, nichtam, "instructive," "golden." By the Septuagint translators the book was called Psalmoi, whence our name, "The Psalms."

This book is placed in the Jewish canon among the khethubim, or hagiographa, the third division of the sacred volume. And, as it is universally acknowledged that many of the Psalms were from the pen of David, chronologically prior to most of the prophetic writers, we have in this fact a proof that the khethubim were not collected as fragmentary relics, or as being less valued than other books of Scripture. It was because of their peculiar character that they were distributed into a distinct class; and the distribution and the acknowledgment of them as canonical were of extreme antiquity; the Davidical psalms forming a nucleus around which other inspired hymns and didactic poems might gather, and along with which other compositions might be reckoned, apart indeed from the law, distinguished from the former and later prophets, but as precious, as fully the voice of God, books to be the study and the guide of Israel, and to descend through the generations of the church, as part of her prized heritage for ever. The canonical authority of the Psalms cannot be doubted by any one who remembers how the divine Saviour spoke of them (Luke xxiv. 44,) including under the name the class of writings just spoken of, of which the Psalms were a principal part, generally placed first in order.

The authorship of the various psalms has occasioned much discussion. Popularly the whole book is termed the Psalms of David; and superficial readers have accustomed themselves to refer to them all as the words of the royal prophet. It is true that several of the Christian fathers adopted this notion; but there were others of greater critical acumen who were well aware of its unsoundness; and certainly no man with any pretensions to critical knowledge—it may really be said to common sense—would now revive the hypothesis. The reader may consult on this point Horne's Introd., vol. ii. pp. 699, 700, edit. Ayre, and the references there given.

The following are the authors to whom the various Psalms are usually ascribed: Moses, David, Solomon, Asaph, Heman, Ethan, Jeduthun, and the three sons of Korah. In endeavoring to apportion to these, so far as may be, their respective compositions, use must be made of the inscriptions or titles, and of the division of the whole into five books, of both which something will be afterwards more particularly said.

To Moses ten Psalms (xc.—xcix.) are assigned by Jewish writers. They have laid it down as a rule that, if one Psalm is attributed to a particular author, all the succeeding ones are from his pen, till another name occurs. But for this rule there is no good reason; and it is clear from the mention of Samuel in xcix. 6, that Moses could not have written that. Moses may very well have been the author of xc. It is thought to correspond in tone and style with his acknowledged hymns in Exod. xv.; Deut. xxxii.; and the objection taken from the limit of human life being placed at seventy or eighty years (Psal. xc. 10) is of no weight. Moses and a few of the elders lived to a great age; but the mass of the nation in his time died far earlier.

David's name is prefixed to seventy-three psalms (iii.—ix., xi.—xxxii., xxxiv.—xli., li.—lxxv., lxxviii.—lxx., lxxxvi., ci., ciii., cviii.—cx., cxvii., cxviii., cxxi., cxxiii., cxxviii.—cxlv.) in the Hebrew text. In the Septuagint at least eleven others are assigned to him (xxxiii., xliii., xci., xciv.—xcix., civ., cxxxvii.), to which may be added x.; forming part of ix. in that version. Doubtless very many of the psalms thus attributed to David were written by him; some of them, however, must be of later date. But then there are others not so distinguished which in all probability are David's. Several illustrate the events of his history: he may have written some in youth, some when a fugitive from Saul, some when a crowned king. We may expect, therefore, to find his style and thoughts varied. But it may be said generally that softness, tenderness, and pathos characterize the productions of "the sweet psalmist of Israel," while there are those which evinced a wonderful force and sublimity; and the diction is somewhat rugged and of an archaic cast.

The name of Solomon appears to two psalms (lxxii., cxxvii.); but the first-named was written rather for him than by him.

Twelve psalms bear the name of Asaph (l., lxxiii.—lxxxiii.) But these cannot all be justly ascribed to the Asaph celebrated in king David's days (I. Chron. vi. 39): some evidently allude to later events. Hence Keil allows only l., lxxiii., lxxvii., lxxviii., lxxx.—lxxxii. to Asaph, and assigns lxxxiii. to the time of Jehoshaphat, lxxv., lxxvi. to the Assyrian period under Hezekiah, and lxxiv., lxxix. to the beginning of the Babylonish captivity (Einleit., § 114, p. 398). The family of Asaph are prominently mentioned as sacred musicians in II. Chron. xx. 14; Ezra ii. 41; Neh. vii. 44; some of them possibly might write psalms and prefix their great ancestor's name; for it was very common in Israel for a representative name to distinguish a family for many generations. The psalms that bear the name of Asaph are doctrinal or didactic, less sweet than those of David, but characterized by a deep vein of thought and a lofty tone.

Eleven psalms are described as belonging to "the sons of Korah" (xlii., xlv.—xlix., lxxxiv., lxxxv., lxxxvii., lxxxviii.), most likely the descendants of the rebel who perished in the wilderness (Numb. xvi., xxvi. 11). A holy line proceeded from him; of whom Heman, grandson of Samuel the prophet, is mentioned as "a singer" (I. Chron. vi. 33.) Of these psalms Keil assigns xlii., xlv., lxxxiv. to the time of David, xlv. to that of Solomon, xlvii., xlviii., to Jehoshaphat's reign, xlv., lxxxvii. to the days of Hezekiah. Of xlix., lxxxv. he feels uncertain as to the date; while he attributes lxxxviii. to Heman the Ezrahite (according to the title,) who may have been the person mentioned in I. Chron. ii. 6, or his descendant, and being incorporated into the tribe of Levi may or may not be the same with Heman the singer. Psal. lxxxix. is ascribed to Ethan; but it is probably of the time of the captivity. Ethan has been imagined identical with Jeduthun (comp. I. Chron. xv. 19 with xxv. 1, 3, 6); and Jeduthun's name appears in the titles to certain psalms (xxxix., lxii., lxxvii.); but then it is rather as the musician than as the writer. Also it is far from certain that the Korahite psalms are not appropriated to that family as musicians or singers, not as the authors. Be this as it may, those so distinguished are exquisite lyric compositions.

The whole, as above noted, are distributed into five books. I. Psal. i.—xli.; II. xlii.—lxxii.; III. lxxiii.—lxxxix.; IV. xc.—cvi.; V. cvii.—cl.; and at the end of each of the first four there is a doxology. It is questioned when this distribution was made. Most likely it was gradual; and if so, there is no reason against the belief that the psalms of the first book were gathered by David himself, most of them being inscribed with his name; and there being none which he might not have written. The objections made to v. 7 that it names the temple, and to xiv. 7 that a return from captivity is desired, only convict the objectors of carelessness. For the tabernacle is called the "temple" in I. Sam. i. 9, iii. 3; and the use of the phrase "turned the captivity" in Job xlii. 10 shows that it means generally deliverance from affliction. To this first book a second was afterwards added. Perhaps it was collected in Hezekiah's time. For Psal. xlv. would seem to point to the Assyrian invasion. And, as we know that the men of Hezekiah wrote out additional proverbs of Solomon (Prov. xxv. 1), so it is no unreasonable thing to believe that they gathered more psalms of David, composed after those which he had himself collected, and that they added thereto other similar inspired poems. Perhaps also they were not aware that any others of David existed; for in Psal. lxxii. 20 there is the note, "The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended." This at least proves that the collections were gradually made. For no mere divider of a book that was altogether before him would have inserted such a note in the middle. A third book was added, and then a fourth, and a fifth, we can hardly form a conjecture when. But it may be observed that, from the comparison of I. Chron. xvi. 36 with Psal. cvi. 48, where the same doxology is found, Bleek believes that the fourth book was formed before the Chronicle history was written. It has been asserted that no Davidical psalm is to be found in the third, fourth, or fifth books; and it has been conjectured that, as some of those marked Asaph were perhaps composed by late descendants of Asaph, so those marked David in the later books might be the production of some one or more of David's posterity. The conjecture is not happy: it is not even ingenious; and it has the demerit of point-blank opposition to our Saviour's assertion that David in the Spirit uttered Psal. cx.; see Matt. xxii. 43–45. The fact is that, though, as just shown, the five books were gradually collected and arranged, and thus a chronological influence is apparent, yet some other principle helped to govern the arrangement. There is a remarkable diversity in the use of divine names. It seems that Jehovah occurs 272 times in the first book, Elohim (used absolutely) 15 times; in the second book Jehovah 30 times, Elohim 164 times; in the third Jehovah 44 times, Elohim 43 times; in the fourth and fifth books together Jehovah 339 times, and Elohim 7 times. This fact is variously explained. It has led some to believe that the entire arrangement was the work of a single hand, guided largely by the prevailing use of the sacred name. To this, as already shown, there are objections; but we may well allow the character and the contents to have had some weight in determining the place of various psalms, and we are by no means obliged to suppose the divisions and distribution altogether chronological. More upon this topic cannot here be said; nor can the authorship of each psalm be minutely and at length investigated (see Horne's Introduct., vol. ii. pp. 711, 712). All that can now be added is that it matters not as to the canonical authority by whom any particular psalm was written; we may certainly receive it as from some holy man speaking as he was moved by the Holy Ghost. One word, too, may be said on the allegation that the psalms in which Elohim predominates are the earlier, those in which Jehovah is used the later compositions. Bp. Edw. H. Browne has distinctly disproved this in his Pent. and Elohistie Psalms, lect. iv. pp. 52-67. And indeed a mere inspection of the preponderance of Jehovah in the first book where the earlier psalms are collected, is decisive.

It has been already observed that the names of the alleged authors are prefixed to many of the psalms. There are other inscriptions of various kinds, the meaning of which it is sometimes difficult to explain. None of these titles or inscriptions are to be reckoned as canonical or inspired. Many of them are true and to be relied on; but they manifestly express the opinion of a collector, or (so to speak) editor, rather than of the original writer: they are directions as to the mode of singing or chanting the psalms; and there are notices of the occasion on which a psalm is supposed to have been written, which are erroneous. They vary, too, in some of the old translations, as the Greek and the Syriac. They are, then, of not much higher authority than the subscriptions to the apostolic epistles. Still there are critics of no mean reputation who maintain these titles to be from the pens of the respective authors.

Besides the titles heretofore mentioned, there are several which probably denote the tunes to which the psalms that bear them were suited. Such are Aijeleth-shahar, "hind of the morning," prefixed to Psal. xxii.; Shoshannim, "the lilies," to xlv.; Jonath-elim-rechokim, "the dumb dove in distant places," to lvi.; Shoshan-eduth, "the lily of the testimony," to lx.; and Shoshannim-eduth, "the lilies of the testimony," to lxxx. It was and is still customary in the East to give poems names of this kind. They probably, therefore, are attached to the psalms to denote well-known melodies. Fifteen Psalms cxx.—cxxxiv. are called "Psalms of Degrees." The Jews believe that they were sung by the Levites on the fifteen steps which separated the men's court from the women's in the temple. Gesenius suggested that there was a kind of progression in the thought and phraseology; the last member of a verse or part of it being taken up, repeated, and amplified in the next verse, thus:

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills,
From whence cometh my help.
My help cometh from the Lord,
Which made heaven and earth."—(Psal. cxxi. 1, 2.)

Ten are styled Hallelujah-psalms (cvi., cxi.—cxiii., cxxxv., cxlvi.—cl.); as beginning with that word, rendered in our version "Praise the Lord."

Other words prefixed are Alamoth to xlvi., to be sung with the female voice; Gittith to viii., lxxxi., lxxxiv., a light joyous air; Mahalath to liii., and Mahalath-leannothe to lxxxix., perhaps with a vocal accompaniment; Muth-labben to ix., for a chorus of virgins; Neginah or Neginoth to iv., vi., liv., lv., lxi., lxvii., lxxvi., with an instrumental accompaniment; Ne- hiloth to v., possibly a wind instrument; Sheminith to vi., xii., upon the eighth or octave; Shiggaion to vii., perhaps an elegy. An address, "To the chief musician," is prefixed to 55 psalms. Attached to it is sometimes the name of the author, sometimes that of the musician himself, occasionally with the melody, tone or key, or instrument to be used; it cannot be doubted that all these directions signified that the psalms were to be sung, and regulated the manner thereof. See Hävernicks, Einleit., § 283, vol. iii. pp. 109-120. We further find "To bring to remembrance" prefixed to xxxviii., lxx., and "To teach" to lx. Perhaps the recollection of God's mercy was suggested by the first; while the last might intend that the psalm was to be committed to memory. Al-taschith are words prefixed to Ps. lvii., lviii., lix., lxxv.; and they probably indicate the name of the tune to which the psalm was sung. Higgaion Ps. ix. 16, is a note of musical intonation. Selah occurs 71 times in 39 psalms. It denotes a pause of voices filled up by an interlude of the instruments.

The number of canonical psalms is 150; and, apart from the five-fold division already noticed, they have been classified by various modern critics. There is little practical advantage in such classifications; it may be enough to say that Hengstenberg, followed by Keil (Einleit., § 112,) would arrange them as 1. Psalms of praise and thanksgiving; e. g. viii., xviii., xix., xxiii., xxix., etc.; 2. Psalms expressive of sorrow and complaint; e. g. iii.—vi., etc.; 3. Didactic psalms; e. g. i., xiv., xv., xxxii., xxxvii., etc. In their structure they present almost every form of Hebrew poetical composition. Some are lyric, others elegiac: some exhibit a kind of dramatic form in which speakers are introduced in dialogue; and there are several called alphabetical psalms, (xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxi., cxii., cxix., cxlv.) because the initials of each line or stanza follow the order of the Hebrew alphabet. The Septuagint translators have added one more to the canonical 150; it is certainly spurious, though it is ancient and has been adopted in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions. Its subject is the combat of David with Goliath. The Septuagint followed by the Vulgate also divides the canonical psalms differently from the Hebrew text. The following table will exhibit the diversity:—

Several of the psalms are cited in the New Testament and distinctly applied to Christ (e. g. see Matt. xxii. 43, 44; Acts ii. 25-31, xiii. 33-37). There is indeed a great tendency in some quarters to limit the Messianic character of the psalms, and to argue that when cited it is only by way of accommodation; so that passages are applied to Christ which had no real intended reference to him, and were only so used on account of a certain similarity of circumstances observed or imagined between a psalmist and our Lord. But it may be remarked here that we cannot consent to sever the close connection which exists between the Old Testament and the New. The first is introductory to the second; the last is the full development of the first, the maturity of that which before was but a seed. And God has seen fit to describe by his dealings with the earlier church what he intends to do with the later. All things that happened to them were fraught with present lessons of mercy and judgment: they had specially and thoroughly to do with the men of that generation, proving them and guiding them and encouraging them. But yet they were "our examples" (I. Cor. x. 6, 11); and God teaches us most effectually not by bare words but by living things, in which we may best see his purposes and the path he would have us to walk in. The revelation of the Old Testament was to prepare the world for its Saviour, by the selection of a peculiar people who were to be God's witnesses, by the severing of a particular line in whom the promised One was to descend, by the setting up of men his prototypes who should in one way or other represent the ideal to be afterwards fully realized.

There was a definite relation, then, both between Israel God's first-born and the Only-begotten, and between David the chosen king of the chosen people and the great King of whose dominion there should be neither limit nor end (Luke i. 32, 33.) Hence, when the psalmist describes his own griefs, his description is not bounded by them. In the lineaments of the past, the future is depicted; and the sorrows and experience of David, his persecutions and his perils, his trust and his victories, the treachery practiced toward him and the establishment of his throne, have their intended and higher counterpart in the deeper sorrows and fuller experience and more complete triumphs of a more innocent sufferer, a nobler King.

It is this, its Messianic teaching, which renders the book of Psalms so precious a heritage to the church, and has made it the store-house of devotional thought. There is eternal life therein, because these Scriptures testify of Christ (John v. 39.) And it is not merely one or two that point to some particular circumstance in Messiah's history, that exhibit some special trait in Messiah's character, but—just as we must read his life in the four evangelists to grasp the full portraiture of him—there is a prophetic tone through the whole collection; one part, one sacred song, illustrating the others and leading on by historical note, by apt comparison, by definite prediction, to that fulness of Messianic doctrine, which renders them even now the best expressions of a soul that needs a Saviour, that is longing for a Saviour, that has found a Saviour, that rejoices in a Saviour's love. They must be taken as a whole; and it is truly wonderful to find that they rise with the growing development of the divine plans, and are yet more adapted to the Christian experience than they were to the experience of earlier, of Jewish believers. Along with this prophetic character there is their moral and doctrinal teaching—the deep views of sin they present, the spiritual character of the divine law, the perfection of God, with the faith, hope, and love, heavenly graces, implanted in the heart of God's people, and the happy prospect of eternal life—in all these points we recognize the same spirit that breathes indeed through all the inspired volume. How well fitted is this book to promote the soul's communion with God!

There is one more topic connected with the Psalms which must be touched on—it can be so but very briefly. In many places there are expressions evincing, it has been said, the stern spirit of revenge far alien from that mild and merciful temper which shines conspicuously in the gospel of love. Attempts have been made to explain these expressions away—they are but eastern forms of speech, they are prophetic of what will happen, embodying and intending no wish for evil—such are some of the modes adopted of solving what has always been felt a serious difficulty. It is fair to say that explanations like these cannot satisfy; neither can they with any propriety be applied to such passages as Psal. cix. 1–20, cxxxvii. 7–9, or to some of the imprecations elsewhere, (e. g. Jer. xi. 19, 20.)

We must admit, then, that there are wishes for the destruction of God's enemies, of the writer's enemies. But how is this to be accounted for? It is not enough to say that the dispensation of the law was imperfect, that principles were sanctioned and moral feelings indulged by it, which the purer spirit of the gospel condemned and removed. Men under the law might be imperfect, with evil passions; but we cannot conceive of God approving their imperfection, still less instigating to evil. Carnal revenge has always been odious in God's sight; and he has indisputably never read the Hebrew law aright who has not discovered that its provisions went to curb evil and unholy tempers.

We must look higher, therefore, we must understand the infinite demerit of sin with all the vast mischiefs it has inflicted. It is as the exponent of God's hatred of this foul rebellion against his sway, of this dark blot upon the universe, that the sacred writer speaks. It is evident that he does not speak in a spirit of private revenge. For, though David was quick of temper, he was eminently ready to forgive. His conduct towards his ruthless enemy, Saul, when he twice had him in his power, is proof enough of this. Besides, the strongest expressions against the ungodly are closely coupled with the highest feelings of devotion to God (e. g. Psal. v. 7–10.) It is absolutely inconceivable that he who in ordinary life was clement, should be then especially actuated with bitter and malicious thoughts when he had approached nearest in communion with the Holiest. It is not, then, David the man, but David the inspired sage who thus speaks—rather David the inspired man, by whom God speaks, thus most impressively making known to the world his hatred of sin. And, as he reveals other great truths by the words and deeds of his servants, so he acts with this. If it be a just thing for God to punish iniquity, it cannot be unjust at his command to denounce that punishment: and, as it is the highest excellence of the creature to be conformed in mind and will to the Creator, so to acquiesce in his dealings with the ungodly, yea to exult that his pure justice is triumphant over evil, must be morally good. Besides, it is against men as sinners that these denunciations are uttered (Prov. i. 20-33.) Let them repent them of their sins, and forsake their evil ways; and no more shall the curses touch them than the predicted doom uttered by Jonah touched the Ninevites when they repented. Still further, it is to bring men to repentance that these things are recorded, by revealing the vengeance of God upon the impenitent, and the everlasting shame they shall suffer in the sight of angels and of men—"an abhorring unto all flesh." (Isai. lxvi. 24.) The beacon-light which reveals the fatal rocks on which so many noble vessels have been shattered does not lure to destruction, it is the best safeguard against it.

PROVERBS.

OF the canonicity of this book there can be no doubt. It is true that one of the Jewish schools is said to have fancied some contradictions in it. But it is in all the Hebrew catalogues; being ranked among the khethubim or hagiographa. The book of Proverbs bears generally the name of Solomon, and has for the most part been attributed to that prince, who "spake (we are told) three thousand proverbs." (I. Kings iv. 33). But it is manifest on looking at the book that Solomon did not put it into its present state, and that some, at least, of the wise sayings it contains proceeded from other sources.

We may divide it into four parts. I. This portion comprises Prov. i.—ix., a discourse extolling true wisdom, and specially urging the young, with many arguments, to secure so excellent a possession. To this we find prefixed a title and introduction (i. 1-6), intended, it would seem, to apply to the whole book. II. A collection of maxims generally unconnected, inculcating moral precepts which respect both man's duty towards God, and his behavior to his fellow-creatures (x. 1—xxii. 16). III. A more connected address, with various admonitions, and a charge to listen to the words of the wise xxii. 17—xxiv. 34). IV. An appendix (xxv.—xxxi.), comprising (1) a collection of Solomon's proverbs which Hezekiah's servants copied out (xxv. xxix.): many of those which are comprised in the second part are here repeated: comp. xxv. 24 with xxi. 9; xxvi. 3 with x. 13; xxvi. 13 with xxii. 13; xxvi. 15 with xix. 24; xxvi. 22 with xviii. 8; xxvii. 12 with xxii. 3; xxvii. 13 with xx. 16; xxvii. 15 with xix. 13; xxvii. 21 with xvii. 3; xxviii. 6 with xix. 1; xxviii. 19 with xii. 11; xxix. 13 with xxii. 2; xxix. 22 with xv. 18; there is also one that is nearly the same with a proverb of the third part: comp. xxviii. 21 with xxiv. 23. It has been inferred therefore that Hezekiah's servants used the same sources as the compiler of the second part; (2) the maxims delivered by Agur to Ithiel and Ucal (xxx.); (3) the admonitions to king Lemuel by his mother (xxx. 1-9); and (4) the description of a virtuous woman (xxx. 10-31); where the initial letters of the verses follow the order of the Hebrew alphabet.

There have been doubts as to the authorship of parts of this book. It is of course generally admitted that many of the proverbs contained in it are really by Solomon; but some critics disbelieve that the first part (i.—ix.) was composed by him. The style, and diction, and tone, it has been alleged, conclusively mark a difference from the sententious utterances comprised in the second part. The parallelism is said to vary, and a higher degree of poetic power to be displayed. But these are not sufficient proofs. More poetical power would naturally be developed in a connected piece, such as the description of wisdom, in iii. 13-20, or again in viii., than when pregnant thoughts were to be compressed into brief sentences. And a discourse would be more likely to furnish scope for synonymous or gradational parallels, and a series of maxims for antithetic ones. It is true that the parts of i.—ix are somewhat loosely connected; but this furnishes no argument against the unity of its authorship, or against its being the work of Solomon. It is natural to believe that, when a collection of moral precepts was made containing some of the acknowledged productions of the wise king, his would be placed first, and those from other writers, as we see in the appendix, come afterwards. The repetition of titles (x. 1, xxv. 1) only shows that the collection was not made all at once. Some hasty critics have tried to make out a difference of authorship from the use of different divine names: God (Elohim) occurs twice in chap. ii.: the Lord (Jehovah) is elsewhere generally used; therefore there were different writers. The fact is that Elohim is found only four times in i. 1—xxix. 27; first in ii. 5, where, as Jehovah had immediately preceded, the repetition of the same word would have been awkward; secondly in ii. 17, where, according to the genius of the Hebrew language, Elohim must be used because a pronoun had to be joined to it; thirdly in iii. 4, where there is the antithesis of "God and man;" fourthly in xxv. 2, where there is a similar antithesis, more prominent in the original. It is most probable then, on the whole, that the first and second parts are from the same pen. With regard to the third part, xxii. 17—xxiv. 34, there may perhaps be greater ground for hesitation. It is not unlikely that the moral sayings of others might be appended to those of Solomon; and perhaps this is intimated in xxiv. 23, where a kind of fresh title, "the words of the wise," seems prefixed to the section xxiv. 23-34. But some of the most judicious critics ascribe the whole of i.—xxix. to Solomon; and Keil (Einleitung, § 119,) produces a number of characteristic words and phrases frequently used in these chapters, and rarely or (some of them) nowhere else occurring. Of the authorship of xxx., xxxi. nothing can be said. We can only suppose that these chapters were added before the captivity.

The book of Proverbs is frequently cited or alluded to in the New Testament: it is, indeed, a treasure-house of ethical wisdom, filled with choice sententious aphorisms, far excelling those of heathen sages, and inculcating all moral duties. Hence may every class of persons in every condition of life derive instructions for the regulation of practice: hence may he who learns be imbued with the teachings of more than earthly wisdom.

ECCELESIASTES.

THE name of this book, Ecclesiastes, is derived from the Septuagint version; it being a Greek word signifying a preacher, one who addresses a public assembly. The Hebrew title Koheleth conveys nearly the same idea, intended to intimate preaching wisdom.

The book has generally been ascribed to Solomon as the author; and it is only of late years that any serious doubts have been entertained upon the question. Some of the Jewish rabbis, it is true, advanced different opinions; and Grotius in more modern times denied the Solomonic authorship. The general belief, however, was little disturbed by these exceptions. It is allowed on all hands that the writer represents himself as Solomon. He does not, indeed, take the very name of the wise king; but, when he says, "I, the preacher, was king over Israel in Jerusalem," (i. 12), he sufficiently indicates whom he means, there being after Solomon no king who reigned over Israel in Jerusalem. The question, therefore, is whether Solomon literally was the writer, or whether his name is assumed as personifying that high intellectual faculty which specially distinguished the gifted son of David. There are many examples in literature of some eminent man being chosen, into whose mouth sentiments agreeing with his known character are placed. The Cato Major of Cicero is an instance; and the parables of Scripture are of a similar cast. Why then, it is asked, why should not an inspired writer, commissioned to teach moral truth, have allowed himself the same license, in order to give a form and clothing to the instructions he had to convey? Different answers will undoubtedly be given to such a question. Modern critics are not content with rejecting the Solomonic authorship: they would carry down the date of Ecclesiastes to a very low period indeed, after the captivity, to the Persian, nay, to the Macedonian, rule. Many of the arguments they urge are of little weight.

The scope of Ecclesiastes is indicated in i. 2, and xii. 13. It is an enquiry into the chief good of man, and is distributed by Keil into four discourses (Einleitung, § 131.) The first (i., ii.,) exhibits (1) the vanity of theoretical wisdom directed to the knowledge of things, and (2) the nothingness of practical wisdom which aims at enjoying life; the result being that man with all his striving can attain no lasting good. The second (iii.-v.), following the idea thrown out in ii. 21, 26, begins with a description (iii. 1-8) of man's entire dependence on higher unchangeable providence, and, in reply to the question of the chief good, shows that there can be no higher (iii. 9-22) than self-enjoyment and benevolence; which, however, (iv.) it is not easy to attain; still one must, in the fear of God and a conscientious fulfilment of duty, seek trustingly and contentedly to use earthly goods. In the third discourse (vi. 1-viii. 15,) is shown the vanity of grasping riches (vi.); practical wisdom is then described (vii. 1-22,) and the mode of attaining it indicated, spite of the incongruities of earthly life (vii. 23-viii. 15.) The last (viii. 16-xii. 7,) further discusses these incongruities, lays down rules for the conduct of a happy life, which may please God, and brings us to the conclusion of the whole (xii. 8-14,) that a future judgment will clear up all present uncertainties. This is the great object the author intends to develop; he argues at first on lower principles, to show their imperfection, not prematurely expressing the whole truth (comp. iii. 21,) but reserving that till he has raised by degrees the view to that high tribunal where every wrong will be redressed. The style of this book is loose and unconnected, with little poetical character. It was one of the megilloth read, we are told, by the Jews at the feast of tabernacles.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

THIS book, called also Canticles, and according to its Hebrew appellation "the Song of Songs," always had a place in the Jewish canon, and has consequently been received into that of the Christian church. It was reckoned among the khethubim or hagiographa: it was included in the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament: it was enumerated by Josephus as one of the Hebrew sacred books. Its canonicity is affirmed in the Mishna: it appears in the Christian catalogue of Melito (about 170 A. D.); and indeed, as it is clear from what has just been said, that it was in the canon of Scripture in our Lord's time, any doubts which have since been entertained have been only partial, confined to individuals.

Before proceeding to enquire into the author and the date of this book, it may be well to consider its form and object. Some have called it a mere collection of fragments: others have deemed it a regular drama. The fragmentary theory certainly cannot be sustained. For it is clear that the subject is the same from the beginning to the end: the same persons are introduced; and, though after the eastern manner, the transitions are abrupt, yet a connecting thread of thought and purpose runs through the whole, in the highest degree improbable if independent pieces had just been strung together. Still it is not constructed with sufficient nicety of adaptation to claim the appellation of a drama. There are interlocutors, doubtless, and so far portions of it may be termed dramatic, but not more so than many other ancient poems, in which characters occasionally speak, but which no man on this account regards as dramas. The impassioned mind of the poet is by no means inclined always formally to describe and introduce his persons: he assumes at once their character, and speaks in their name, knowing that no sensible reader will misunderstand him. We must hold, then, this composition to be a single poem, with a definite plan, conversations being intermingled with description. Whether it be called idyllic with some, or pastoral with others, is of little moment.

Most probably it had an historic basis. The Scripture poems and prophecies were suggested generally by some passing event, on which the mind of the seer—like that of Elisha, composed and fixed by the strain of music he asked for (II. Kings iii. 15)—brooded for a while. And then the mental picture was constructed; the events which gave occasion to it being the foreground, while fancy added in other lineaments, and, under the guidance of the informing Spirit, from the present the future was traced, receiving its shape, and conveying its lessons in agreement therewith. Thus see how Hannah, in her joyful offering of her first-born at the sanctuary, with kindling ardor describes the wondrous dealings of the Lord, and travels on till she sees in vision his strength displayed in the exalting of the horn of the great anointed King, (I. Sam. ii. 1-10.) Examples of the kind are innumerable. So it must have been here. There was some story of pure earthly affection, in which obstacles for a while disunited two loving hearts. This the writer seizes on: he takes up the steps of it; and he converts it to a higher purpose.

Many indeed deny that there was a higher purpose. They see in the Song literal love, and no more. Their reasons are not without weight, and deserve calm consideration. But it is submitted that there are other reasons more weighty which go to prove that in the literal words there is an allegorical meaning, so that through allegory a mystical or spiritual sense is conveyed embodying and inculcating sublime truth. How else should the book have had a place in the sacred canon?

Dr. Stowe has argued the question very fully, (Journ. of Sac. Lit., Jan. 1852, pp. 320-339, reprinted from Amer. Bibl. Repos., Apr. 1847); and his views have been adopted by Dr. Kitto, (Daily Bible Illustrations.) He urges: "(1). The names of the two principal characters, namely Shelomoh and Shulamith, are in the original quite as significant as John Bunyan's Christian and Christiana, Obstinate and Pliable, Faithful and Hopeful, etc. (2). The sudden changes from the singular to the plural number in the part of the dialogue sustained by Shulamith indicate that her name is to be taken in a collective sense. 'Draw me: we will run after thee. The king hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad,' etc. (Solomon Song i. 4, and many other places.) (3). Shulamith is put into situations and made to utter expressions which, if literally understood, are so entirely abhorrent to oriental manners, that no sane writer, certainly no writer so skilful as the author of this poem shows himself to be, would ever put them into a literal love-song; though they are all very beautiful and appropriate when understood allegorically. Such are iii. 1-4, v. 7, viii. 1, 2. Such scenes and expressions are not uncommon in the allegorical poetry of the East, but in their literal amatory songs they can never occur. Literally understood they would doom their heroines to everlasting infamy; and certainly no poet ever thus treats his favorites. (4). The entire absence of everything like jealousy, in situations where that passion must appear in a literal love-song, is proof of the allegorical character of the piece. See i. 4, v. 1, vi. 8, 9. (5). The dreamy and fanciful and even impossible character of many of the scenes shows that they cannot be understood literally, (ii. 14-17.) Shulamith is in the cleft of the rocks, in the concealments of the precipices; and Shelomoh wishes to see her and hear her speak. He is in the garden at night; and she tells him to catch the jackals that are destroying the vines. She sees him feeding his flocks in a distant field of anemones. She sees him beyond the mountains which separate them, and calls upon him to leap over them like the gazelle and the fleeting fawn, to rejoin her at evening. All these things occur at the same time and place, (iv. 8.) Shelomoh calls upon Shulamith to go with him to the snowy peaks of Lebanon and Hermon, among the lions' dens and the leopards' lairs, and enjoy the fine prospect over the plains of Damascus. Numerous impossibilities of this kind will occur to every intelligent reader of the poem."

In addition to these reasons, there is the fact that poems of the kind are common in the East, having an allegorical character; insomuch that men well acquainted with oriental literature, and familiar from their residence in those parts of the world with oriental habits and feelings, such as Dr. Kitto, Mr. Lane, Major Scott Waring, not only produce examples, but unhesitatingly tell us that no oriental doubts of the allegorical intention of Solomon's Song. Would not then the ancient Hebrews have the same feeling? On such a point surely the impressions made on those to whom the book is addressed, or among whom it was first published, ought to be specially regarded.

This book, according to its spiritual meaning, is understood to delineate the mutual love of God and his people, in which there are vicissitudes and trials, and backslidings and repentance, and finally a perfect union betwixt the Redeemer and his ransomed church. The same similitude, not indeed wrought out with such particularity, is to be found in other parts of Scripture. God frequently condescends to take the marriage tie as illustrative of the close fellowship of himself with his chosen. Departure from him is spiritual adultery. His kindness is pre-eminent in receiving back the polluted one. And the last glorious triumph is called the marriage supper of the Lamb, where the bride is presented pure and undefiled, every stain obliterated, resplendent in glistening robes, the meet consort of a royal spouse. The idea is repeated in both the Old and New Testaments. See, for example, Psal. xlv.; Isai. liv. 4-6, lxii. 4, 5; Jer. ii. 2, iii. 1, 20; Ezek. xvi.; Hos. ii. 16, 19, 20; Matt. ix. 15; John iii. 29; II. Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 23, 29, 30, 32; Rev. xix. 7-9, xxi. 2. Such passages as these show how familiarly the idea was used even in prose composition: we need not be surprised to find it expanded in impassioned poetry.

But this interpretation depends on the Song being supposed to exhibit nuptial love. If such a supposition be erroneous, of course there will be a much greater difficulty in establishing the allegorical meaning. Now Mr. Ginsburg, a late and able expositor, maintains (Song of Solomon with Commentary, Lond. 1857) that we have in it an example of virtue in a young woman who overcame great temptations to become a royal favorite, and remained faithful to a humble suitor. A shepherdess, he thinks, is described, whom Solomon admires and carries to his palace, till wrought upon by her constancy, he dismisses her to happiness with the shepherd to whom she had been betrothed. It would be hard certainly to put a spiritual meaning on such a story. But after the fullest consideration of Mr. Ginsburg's theory it appears untenable. The parts do not hang well together. And seeing that he admits only a literal exposition, the extreme improbabilities of the story as he interprets it are difficulties which one really cannot see how to surmount. See Horne's Introd., vol. ii. edit. Ayre, pp. 751, 752. On the whole, then, the allegorical interpretation described above appears most reasonable. Nor are the objections urged against it insuperable. It is said that no hint is given in the book itself that it is allegorical. But no such hint would be needed, especially to readers prepared by habit and feeling, as it has been noted the orientals were, to recognize its inner meaning. It is also urged that, if it was a sacred allegory, it is marvellous that our Lord or his apostles did not cite it. They would have been more likely to put the church on her guard against it, if not being allegorical it was so understood, as we can hardly doubt it was in their times.

The date and authorship must now be briefly noticed. In the title, which even if not original is of extreme antiquity, the Song is expressly declared to be Solomon's. And to him generally, both in the Jewish church and the Christian, it has been ascribed. There is no reason to doubt that it was produced about his time. The diction is evidence of it. And, whereas some trace of Aramaic or Chaldean expression has been imagined, such may readily be explained without resorting to the conjecture of a later date. It has been suggested that it was composed in Northern Palestine. There is little ground for the conjecture; a reason of Hitzig, that Tirzah is named before Jerusalem (Sol. Song vi. 4), being one of the silliest that ever entered a critic's brain. But, if written in Solomon's age, may we regard that prince as the author? If Mr. Ginsburg's exposition be established, unquestionably he was not: he never would have recorded his own disappointment. But that exposition, it has been said above, can not be adopted. Some particular expressions are alleged as not likely to have fallen from Solomon's pen; it is needless to dwell upon them; they prove little one way or the other. The gravest objection, certainly, to the Solomonic authorship arises from the character and habits of that prince. Wise, indeed, he was, gifted in many respects above the sons of men; but the license of his harem, independently of the miserable fact that his wives turned away his heart from God, so that he was led to build high places for the deities of those idolatrous women (I. Kings xi. 4-8) shows how far he was from realizing that purity of mind and conduct which one would think must mark the man to whom were revealed, on the supposition of the Song having a spiritual meaning, the deepest things of God. Truly they are earthen imperfect vessels to whom any of the inspired treasure is committed; nevertheless we look for some reasonable correspondence; and it would seem more likely that one of high seraphic virtue would have been the man to depict the tender affection of the Lord and his church, instead of the sensuous monarch of Israel. Yet the objection is by no means pressed as unanswerable; and the weight of external evidence will be thought perhaps by most decisive for Solomon. If he was the author, it is impossible to tell at what period of his life he wrote this book; some say in youth, some in his elder days. This, however, we may confidently conclude; the fair one was not Pharaoh's daughter, but rather a native of Palestine, or the child of some neighboring prince. Some identifying Shunem and Shulem would have her a Shunammite, and—whither will not fancy lead!—have guessed that she was Abishag.

It is well to note that a proper examination of the Song proves the baselessness of some of the objections to it. Thus Dr. Stowe shows that Sol. Song v. 10-16, often taken to describe the unclothed person, has really reference to the dress. "Those parts . . . which custom exposes to view are indeed described; but, as to those parts which custom conceals, it is the dress and not the skin which is intended. For example, 'His head is as the most fine gold; and his hair is curled, and black as the raven!'" What is this but the turban, gold-colored or ornamented with gold, and the raven-black ringlets appearing below it? How else could his head be yellow and his hair black? . . . Again, his belly is as bright ivory girded with sapphires." How admirably this corresponds with the snow-white robe, and girdle set full of jewels, as we see it in Sir R. K. Porter's portrait of the late king of Persia! But what is there, I pray you, in the unclothed body that looks like a girdle of sapphires?" The same principle will apply to vii. 1-5; with regard to which Dr. Kitto says, "There can be no impropriety in describing those parts of the person which are always exposed to view, as the face, hands, etc. Now all the monuments and pictures of ancient Egypt show us that the ancient oriental ladies dressed so as to leave the bust fully open to view; and of course there could then be no impropriety in alluding to or describing that part of the person.

It may be added that this is the custom of modern oriental as well as of ancient oriental dress; and we have ourselves seen women who would sooner die than allow their faces to be viewed by strangers, and sooner be flayed alive than be seen with the top of the head uncovered, who would at the same time be perfectly indifferent to a display of a part of their persons which is in Europe more carefully veiled."

Almost every expositor divides this book in his own way. The following is one of the many modes of distributing it. There are two parts, each with three subdivisions; I. (i.—vi.), comprising, besides the title (i. 1), 1. The aspiration of reciprocal love (i. 2—ii. 7.)—2. The mutual search and finding of the beloved object (ii. 8—iii. 5.)—3. The espousals (iii. 6—v. 1.) II. (v. 2—viii. 14,) including. 1. The separation and reunion (v. 2—vi. 9.) 2. The commendation of the beloved object (vi. 10—viii. 4.)—3. The cementing of the alliance for inviolable fidelity (viii. 5—14.)

ISAIAH.

THIS collection of prophecies, though delivered later in point of time than several of those uttered by other prophets, occupies in our Bibles the first place, both on account of its bulk, and also for the sublimity and importance of the predictions.

They have been uniformly ascribed by the Jews to the great prophet whose name they bear. Modern criticism, however, has been very busy upon them; so that, if we could trust the conclusions to which various writers have come, everybody has been heretofore mistaken about this book, which is nothing but a collection of fragments, for the most part later than the times of the real Isaiah, gathered after the Babylonian captivity. The only portions which some critic or other has not questioned are said to be Isai. i. 3—9, xvii., xx., xxviii., xxxi., xxxiii. Of course opinions are discordant: what one rejects another defends. And it has happened that men who have at one time maintained the integrity of Isaiah have at another attacked it. We may respect their candor in so retracing their steps; but we can have little confidence in their judgment. Their fickleness disqualifies them as public teachers.

It will be impossible, in the limited space which can be here allowed, to discuss all the objections which have been brought against the Isaian authorship of the book. Leaving, then, some of the earlier chapters which have been questioned, it will be better to confine the observations which can be made, to the later portion (xl.—lxvi.), which has been most specially and most confidently pronounced to be not earlier than the Babylonian captivity.

Here are the chief arguments that are urged. The writer, it is said, is describing not a future but a present exile. The desolations of which he speaks in Edom and Judea (lxiii., lxiv.) must have already taken place. They would not else have been dwelt on with such a minuteness of detail, which is quite alien to the genius of prophecy foretelling the far-distant future. Again, in Hezekiah's days Babylon was a mere tributary province: there was no great Chaldean monarchy: the Medes and Elamites, mentioned as the destroyers of Babylon, were at that time petty, undistinguished nations. Isaiah, it is therefore urged, would never have passed from the Assyrian to the Babylonian age, omitting all notice of the actual conquest of Judea by Babylon, and, placing himself at once as it were in the last times of the captivity itself (xliv. 26—28), have spoken as quite familiar with the nations which then, and not till then, were prominent, expressing even the name of the actual conqueror of Babylon, Cyrus (xlv. 1). That Cyrus was so named, that the predictions down to him were perspicuous, while those referring to later events were obscure, is declared to be convincing proof that the writer was contemporary with Cyrus. Further, the strain of this part of the book is said to be hortatory, fitting enough for one really addressing exiles among whom he lived, but inconceivable in a writer a century and a half before who could not enter into all the relations in which the captive people would stand, or so thoroughly identify himself with their feelings and aspirations. Moreover, it is urged that the style differs much from that of the rest of the book, there being many peculiarities of diction, also that the tone is not that of Isaiah—the descriptions of the "servant" of Jehovah (xli. 8, 9, xlii. 1—4, 19, xlv. 1, xlviii. 12, 20, xlix. 7, lii. 13, and elsewhere), the derisive contempt of idolatry (xl. 19, 20, xlv. 9—20, xlv. 5—7), the extraordinary expectations of Jewish supremacy, and of the relation which the Jews would bear to the Gentiles, being, it is declared, unparalleled in the genuine productions of Isaiah—and that there is an appeal (xl.—xlvii.) to ancient prophecy respecting the Babylonish captivity; none such being existent in Isaiah's time. It is, besides, said that, had these chapters been known to Jeremiah, that prophet, we may be sure, would have made some reference to them.

The objections taken from the alleged difference of style and tone are of a very unsubstantial character. They have weight only on the presumption that an individual, however long his life, however varied the circumstances under which he is at different times called to speak, will always fall into the same strain of thought, will always express himself in the same way. To be sure, if there are on other grounds grave doubts in regard to the authority of any piece, this may be taken as corroborative testimony, but in itself, were it even true to the extent claimed, it is not to be relied on. Prof. Lee has well observed that Cicero, Virgil, Shakspeare, Milton, and others might be dismembered on the same principles as those applied to Isaiah.

But we must take higher ground. The original fault which has prompted the denial of the Isaian authorship is an imperfect view of the nature of prophecy. If the Hebrew seers were but sagacious men, with a quick eye for the turns of the times, and with merely a political object, which as active, perhaps unscrupulous, partisans they determined to promote, we might well allow all that has been objected. Obscurity and vagueness would characterize their so called predictions; and their view must be limited to the events and the agents then upon the stage of the world. But once establish the fact that the prophetic gift is a reality, that God does unveil to his servants the events that are coming to pass, that it is one great test of his supremacy that he stands alone, "declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done" (Isai. xlv. 10), and the difficulty vanishes. As St. Paul rebuked the sarcastic unbelief of Agrippa and Festus, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts xxvi. 8), so may we well ask, Why should he in whose eternal mind all past and future occurrences are fully present, for adequate reasons—and the establishment of his kingdom and the administration of his church are adequate reasons—not make known his will beforehand, and trace out from old time the lineaments of that magnificent plan, according to which, by an appointed Saviour, he restores the ruin which sin and Satan had occasioned? Are his people to have no strong warrant for their faith? Is the High and Lofty One to be limited to the petty grasp of a human understanding? The plainest facts attest the contrary. There is prophecy fulfilled and fulfilling before our eyes. No prescience of man, no sagacious guess, no keenness of natural instinct, mysterious as in the response of an ancient oracle, or far-reaching as that of a finished modern German professor, could have foreshown the present condition of the Jews, of Nineveh, Babylon, Tyre, Egypt, depicted, as we may see, in prophecies delivered demonstrably while those nations and cities were existing and prosperous. The prophetic vision is a reality, then. And the Old Testament is one great prophecy of the New, and God's dealings with his church, the gradual unfolding of that sublime purpose according to which the Just was to suffer for the unjust. By means of the prophets God revealed his will for human guidance. When temporal deliverance from earthly foes was predicted, there was yet a further meaning in the prophetic utterances. Mightier victories over adversaries more implacable were presignified; and the immediate fulfilment was but the proof, or it may be the type also, of that more complete accomplishment of the good pleasure of God's goodness in the redemption of the world, and the glorious establishment of his holy kingdom. It is quite a mistake, therefore, to imagine that Isaiah's later prophecies respected merely the return from the literal Babylon. Hence Stuart observes (Crit. Hist. and Def. of O. T. Canon, sect. iv. p. 103, edit. Davidson), "It is only when chaps. xl.-lxvi. are viewed in the light of a great Messianic development—a series of predictions respecting the person, the work, and the kingdom of Christ—that the earnestness, the protracted length, the fullness, the deep feeling, the holy enthusiasm, the glowing metaphors and similes, and the rich and varied exhibitions of peace and prosperity, can well be accounted for. The writer, in taking such a stand-point, uses the exile and the return from it as the basis of his comparisons and analogies. It was a rich and deeply interesting source, from which he might draw them. Any other solution of the whole phenomena is, to my mind at least, meagre and unsatisfactory."

If principles like these be established, a satisfactory reply may readily be given to the specific objections before noticed. Isaiah, occupying a prophetic, not a historical position, is carried forward into future ages; and the lamentable condition of Judah desolated and captive is before his eye. It is not as a historian that he writes. Nor are there any such details as we discover in the prophets who lived really in the period of the exile. Just in accordance with prophetic usage, there is no note of time. The nations referred to were not altogether unknown. Babylon was brought prominently forward by the embassy from its king to Hezekiah. And Hezekiah's vanity on that account gave occasion for the predicting of the Babylonian conquest; while his submission may be said to invite the cheering assurances of deliverance from it. Nor did Isaiah stand alone in the character of his predictions. Micah, his contemporary, delivered a similar message, as if writing amid the actual exile, (Mic. iv. 10, vii. 7-11.) And to these declarations, and to those of Isaiah himself already delivered, and not to any more ancient utterances, reference was made. As to Cyrus, he is spoken of in general terms. And, though he is called by name, yet such designation is not unprecedented. Besides, after all, it is very probable that the word Cyrus was rather a title of dignity, as Pharaoh in Egypt, than a name properly so called. The silence of Jeremiah, even if it could be proved that he made no use of Isaiah's prophecies, surely is small evidence that such prophecies were not then existing. But there is great reason to believe that later writers were acquainted with what Isaiah delivered here and in earlier chapters, against Babylon, and embodied thoughts and expressions from him. Some illustrative proof of this is produced by Keil, (Einleitung, §§ 68, 72, pp. 252, 253, 281. If, further, a difference of style be perceptible in these last chapters as compared with the earlier ones, it is conceived that an ample explanation is supplied by the fact that the earlier oracles were various, called forth by passing events, and were consequently more abrupt; while the later chapters are one long discourse more carefully elaborated, hence naturally exhibiting a greater copiousness and flow of language. If there are some Chaldaic words introduced, they may easily be accounted for by the intercourse in Hezekiah's time with Assyria. But some of those objected to may be paralleled from parts of Isaiah generally acknowledged genuine; as may also the strain of thought and the imagery employed. Besides, had the writer really lived in the time of the exile, there would certainly have been more peculiarities of diction, and a greater diversity of thought and expression.

Much more might be said on this topic. But it is believed that sufficient reason has been produced to show that the objections against the Isaian authorship of the later chapters are by no means conclusive. And it may be added that "it is a principle of higher criticism that both whole works, and the single parts of the same, must be regarded as the production of the author to whom they are attributed, so long as it is not shown, by internal and external grounds, that he could not have been the author. This has not been done in the present case."

But there are some more positive evidences for the genuineness of these prophecies which must now be looked at. It is obvious that a writer, endowed with the prophetic gift or not, will allude to the things around him, will reprove the sins actually committed by his own generation. It is not natural, one may almost say it is not possible, for a Jewish teacher, without divine help too—for the very object of placing these chapters at a late date is to show that they were the production of no prophet—it is hardly possible that a teacher, addressing his people in the time of the captivity, should accuse them of sins which they could not then commit, and warn them against an untheocratic behavior the opportunity for which had passed away. Now observe: the people are cautioned against seeking for foreign help (Isai. lvii. 3), censured for hypocritically observing fast-days (lviii. 3-6), and nevertheless exacting burdens and usurious profits, and keeping their brethren in bondage; for profaning the Sabbath (13), for confounding the distinction between clean and unclean meats, (lxv. 4, lxvi. 17.) There are frequent allusions, too, to false prophets in Jerusalem; and idolatry is ceaselessly denounced. Again, the Assyrian oppression is referred to as if it were the last then suffered, (lii. 4.) In short, these and many similar allusions are suitable only to a time when the Jewish state was still existing, and are not likely to have been made by any, except, as Prof. Blunt says, by "a man dwelling in Judea before the captivity, during a period which, as historically described in the latter chapters of the books of Kings and Chronicles, presents the exact counterpart of those referenees in the prophet." Much stress need not be laid upon the curious observation by the same writer (p. 238), that Hezekiah's wife and Manasseh's mother was named Hephzi-bah (II. Kings xxi. 1), and that the marriage of the land is described, and the name applied to it is Hephzi-bah, (Isai. lxii. 4). But it is a very natural illustration, if the king's marriage occurred about the time the prophecy was uttered.

There is still more remarkable evidence. Kleinert has shown how the decree of Cyrus (Ezra i. 2-4) actually incorporates words and expressions from the later chapters of Isaiah. And this gives consistency to the statement of Josephus (Antiq., lib. xi. 1, §§ 1, 2) that Isaiah's prophecies were communicated to Cyrus, and that he was hence induced to issue his decree for the Jews' return and the re-building of their temple. We cannot very well suppose that the Jewish exiles ventured to palm some late compositions upon the great conqueror, and made him believe that they were the solemn utterances of ancient prophecy. It must be noted, further, that there are many peculiarities of diction found in all parts of the book, in the earlier as well as the later chapters, of such a kind as to render it most probable that the compositions proceeded from the same source. Illustrations and examples have been supplied in abundance by various critics, to whose works the reader must be referred.

And, though the later chapters have been here almost exclusively referred to, yet it must be remembered that, as before said, various other parts have been assailed with similar objections, and must be defended on similar grounds. But consider for a moment the result, if all or if many of these objections could be substantiated. What a strange phenomenon would the conglomerate, a congeries of fragments, be! Is such a construction probable? Well and pertinently, therefore, does Stuart enquire, "What example is there, among all the prophets, of a book so patched up by putting together six different authors, five of them without any names? Who did this? Where, when was it done? If parts of the book are so late as is alleged, why have we no hint about its compilation, no certain internal evidence of it? How can we account for it that all the minor prophets, even Obadiah with his one chapter, should be kept separate and distinct, and this even down to the end of the prophetic period, and yet Isaiah be made up by undistinguished fragments and amalgamations? These surely are serious difficulties; and they have not been satisfactorily met," (ubi supr., p. 97.)

There is another point which must be pressed earnestly and reverently. These chapters repeatedly cited in the New Testament are there ascribed to Isaiah. Thus Isai. xl. 3 is introduced by the words, "This is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias" (Matt. iii. 3; see Luke iii. 4; John i. 23.) So Isai. xlii. 1 is introduced by "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet" (Matt. xii. 17.) Again of Isai. liii. 1 we have, "That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled which he spake" (John xii. 38); and in the following verses reference is made to Isai. vi. in terms which show that the two quotations were considered as belonging to the same prophet; comp. Rom. x. 16. Once more, St. Paul expressly attributes Isai. lxv. 1, 2 to Isaiah, "Esaias is very bold and saith" (Rom. x. 20.) It cannot be denied that our Lord and his apostles received the passages so cited as really written by Isaiah. Surely a devout mind will not lightly set their judgment aside. It is beside the mark to say that Christ did not come to rectify critical error, or that perchance he was ignorant, like religious Jews in general, of the true authorship of these portions of the book. For if not from Isaiah's pen they are not prophecy. What confidencee could the church repose in a divine Teacher who mistook mere human utterance for inspired predictions, and could not distinguish between God's genuine word and a counterfeit?

It is not intended to deny that able and conscientious men have arrived at a different conclusion, or to refuse to their arguments their fair weight. But, looking at the whole question, and laying together all the considerations, of which a mere outline has been here presented, it does seem that the difficulties, on the presumption that these prophecies are not genuine, are enormous. And the objections are not more formidable than an ingenious man could frame against the credit of almost every ancient writing. Some have suggested a kind of compromise. There was, they have guessed, a second Isaiah, the author of the later chapters—a man unknown to history, but who has had the advantage of being combined with and mistaken for his namesake. Serious disproof of such a theory is little needed. And as little can it be imagined, when every other prophetic book is assigned definitely to its author, that he who delivered this grand revelation, enclosing the most extraordinary descriptions of the person and work of Messiah, and promising the establishment of that kingdom into which Gentiles as well as Jews should be gathered—in itself, it may be by the way remarked, a sufficient authorization—that he, who by universal consent stands foremost for sublimity of thought and vastness of conception among the Hebrew seers, should never have gained a name among his people, and have been degraded into a mere appendage to a writer a century and a half before him. Besides, to a careful observer the later portions are but the development of the earlier. Allusions and references in confirmation might easily be pointed out. Take a single instance: the lofty consolations of Isai. xl. only open forth in louder notes the strains which are heard in i. 16–19, 25–27. This fact increases the difficulty of supposing an appendix by a strange and later hand. The conclusion, then, maintained by all external evidence, and corroborated in spite of objection by internal proof, to which the thoughtful student who believes that “holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost” must come, will surely be that Isaiah the son of Amoz it was to whom it was given to promulgate these oracles of God.

We may be content to let the question rest whether Isaiah's own hand arranged the book in its present form. The chapters do not follow in chronological order. And it is not easy to discover any distinct principle which has guided the distribution. Keil sees in the whole two great groups of prophecies. He supposes chap. i. an address to Isaiah's contemporaries, and an introduction to the rest; and then he includes in the first group ii.–xxvii., in the second xxviii.–lxvi. The two great events of the time were the combination of Syria and Ephraim against Judah, and the invasion of Sennacherib; and to these, as the special objects, the mission of the prophet was directed. The center and nucleus of the first group is chap. vii., of the second chaps. xxxvi.–xxxix. And to these the rest of the predictions are subordinate, either as preparatory to them, or as taking occasion from them to develop the future manifestation of God's kingdom, (Einleitung, § 66.)

Such a classification is perhaps too artificial; but objections may be made against any others—and they are numerous—which are proposed. And, it may be added, it is hardly possible to specify with exactness the dates of the particular portions. After observing, however, that the book seems naturally to fall into three parts:—I. A collection of separate prophecies in regard to Israel, Judah, and neighboring nations, (i.–xxxv.) II. The historical portion, (xxxvi.–xxxix.) III. The discourse respecting Messiah and his kingdom, (xl.–lxvi.)—the first of these having special reference to Assyria, linked by the second to the third, which points to Babylon and onwards—it may be an assistance to the reader if a compendious view of the dates of the several oracles, taken from Browne's Ordo Sæculorum (part i. chap. iv. append. pp. 249–252), be presented to him: I. i. (i.–v.) Prophecies against Jerusalem delivered in the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, the section being completed by the narrative of the prophet's mission (vi.); ii. (vii.–xii.) Prophecy of Immanuel, delivered on occasion of the confederacy against Jerusalem in the first year of Ahaz; iii. (xiii. 1–xiv. 27,) Prophecies against Babylon and Assyria; iv. (xiv. 28–xxiii. 18,) Prophecies immediately relating to the Assyrian invasion, including: 1. (xiv. 28–32), against Philistia, delivered in the death-year of Ahaz, 726 B. C.; 2. (xv., xvi.), against Moab, relating to the invasion of Shalmaneser, 723–721 B. C.; 3. (xvii.), against Damaseus and Ephraim, fulfilled 721 B. C., (xviii.), connected with the preceding chapter, and relating to Ethiopia; 4. (xix.), against Egypt, about 718 B. C.; 5. (xxi. 1–10), the capture of Babylon; 6. (11, 12), oracle concerning Dumah; 7. (13–17), that against Arabia; 8. (xxii.), vision of the siege of Jerusalem; 9. (xxiii.), against Tyre. In all these subdivisions, Mr. Browne thinks he perceives a connecting link, there being some relation more or less near to Assyria as threatening or conquering each people or country named. v. (xxiv.–xxvii.) Desolation of Judah and Jerusalem; after the judgment, Messiah's kingdom; vi. (xxviii.–xxxv.) The same general subject, with particular application to the prophet's own times, (xxx., xxxi.) The latter series was delivered before the catastrophe of Samaria; xxviii. prophesying the desolation of that kingdom. Probably numbers v. and vi. start from the same point as iv., i. e. the year of the death of Ahaz. II. The historical chapters, (xxxvi.–xxxix.) III. (xl.–lxvi.) An interval of many years probably separates these from the former.

It must be added that a careful study of the history of the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, and Manasseh, with that of contemporaneous Israelitish kings, is necessary for the understanding of Isaiah's prophecies.

Of the character and merits of Isaiah's style little need be said: every reader can in some degree appreciate the majesty of his sentiments, the propriety and elegance of his imagery, the beauty and energy of his language; the different excellencies being so tempered that, as Ewald acknowledges, “one can not say of Isaiah as of other prophets, that he had some special peculiarity or favorite mode of coloring. . . . As the subject requires, every kind of diction and every change of method are respectively manifested."

It may be desirable to say somewhat of the "servant of the Lord," of which, in the later chapters, the prophet frequently speaks. The title is given sometimes to specified persons (Isai. xx. 3, xxii. 20), but it is used in a peculiar sense in xlii. 1-7, xlix. 1-9, l. 5-10, lii. 13, liii., with which compare Zech. iii. 8. Here we find it predicated of the character intended that he was "called from the womb," fitted and prepared for the office in which he was to glorify God (Isai. xlix. 1-3); he was endued with the Spirit to be the source of blessing and deliverance to the world, to inaugurate a new dispensation (xlii. 1-7): he was to be despised and to suffer, becoming a sacrifice for sin, though not his own (liii. 1-10): he was, however, to have a splendid recompense for his sufferings (11, 12), his exaltation being as great as his humiliation had been before (lii. 13-15).

There have been many interpretations attempted of the prophet's meaning. Laying out of view those that are manifestly untenable, we shall see five specially maintained by different writers, viz., that the Jewish people is described; that it is Cyrus; Isaiah himself; the prophets collectively; the Messiah. This last supposition is alone satisfactory. Henderson (Isaiah, note on xlii. 1) briefly sums up the proof of it:—"First, the passage (xlii. 1, etc.) is directly applied to our Saviour by the inspired evangelist Matthew (Matt. xii. 17-21); and part of the first verse is verbally adopted in the divine testimony to his Messiahship at the Jordan (iii. 17), and on the mount of transfiguration (xvii. 5; Mark ix. 7; Luke ix. 35). To which add the reference made to the sixth verse by Simeon in his inspired testimony, (Luke ii. 32.) Secondly, this interpretation is that of the Chaldee paraphrast, and is advocated by Kimchi and Abarbanel, notwithstanding the narrowness of their Jewish notions. The latter writer scruples not to assert that all those who do not interpret the prophecy of the Messiah have been struck with blindness. Thirdly, the totality of character exhibited in the passage is such as to render it inapplicable to any but our Lord."

But so close is the union between Christ and his Church, that sometimes what is predicated of the one is applied to the other; because he is the Head, and his people members of one mystical body (Rom. xii. 5; I. Cor. xii. 12, 13); he the chief corner stone, his servants living stones built upon him, in whom the whole "building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. ii. 20-22). So that we have here exhibited, as Dr. Alexander well says "the Messiah and his people, as a complex person, and as the messenger or representative of God among the nations." Sometimes therefore Christ, sometimes his people are more especially pointed to. Thus in Isai. xlii. 18-25, "the church or body of Christ, as distinguished from its Head, and representing him until he came, is charged with unfaithfulness to their great trust, and this unfaithfulness declared to be the cause of what it suffered." So there is an analogy in Dent. xviii. 15-19, where the prophet intended is perhaps not Christ in an exclusive sense, but rather as the Head of that prophetic body to whom his Spirit was imparted. There is something, then, of truth in several of the various interpretations propounded, but not the whole truth. The offices and excellencies borrowed in description from inferiors and typical personages have their full signification in One to whom they point; who "is more than a prophet, for the isles wait on his law; more than a priest, for he offers up himself; more than a king, for through his glory he makes kings to tremble. Not mere prophet, mere priest, mere king is the servant of the Lord, who is none of them exclusively, but is all together; and they are only three emanations of his individual glory." This is no ideal: the notion is fully realized in him, who in the fulness of the time personally appeared in the world, and gathered around him the true Israel, and thus has become indeed "the first born among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29).

The acts of Uzziah were written by Isaiah (II. Chron. xxvi. 22); and two apocryphal books have been ascribed to him, "The Ascension of Isaiah," and "The Apocalypse of Isaiah." They are both forgeries; and the Apocalypse has long since perished. He was the son of Amoz (Isai. i. 1), whom rabbinical tradition represents as the brother of king Amaziah. He was married, his wife being called "the prophetess" (viii. 3), not because she exercised the prophetic gift herself, but simply because she was married to a prophet. He had at least two sons, with symbolical names, Shear-jashub and Maher-shalalhash-baz, (vii. 3, viii. 1-3.) It is presumed that he ordinarily wore a hair-cloth garment (xx. 2); but there is no reason for believing that he was an ascetic. He would seem to have resided at Jerusalem, where he exercised his prophetic ministry during a long course of years. Isaiah prophesied under Uzziah, receiving the divine call in the last year of that monarch's reign (vi.), and under the succeeding kings, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, (i. 1.) Whether he lived on into Manasseh's reign is uncertain. Jewish tradition asserts that he did, and that he was martyred by being sawn asunder; and this has been supposed to be alluded to in Heb. xi. 37. And to this day a spot at Jerusalem is pointed out where the martyrdom occurred, just by an old mulberry tree near the pool of Siloam.

JEREMIAH.

THE arrangement of this book is on the face of it so chronologically inexact that some critics have imagined that the chapters have been altered from their original order.

Attempts have therefore been made to assign their proper historical place to be various portions. Thus, Jer. i. is evidently at the beginning of Jeremiah's ministry, in the thirteenth year of Josiah; the latter part of the inscription (3) being of course added afterwards. Then we may also consider ii. 1-iii. 5 as of early date. The Scythian invasion of Media, Asia Minor, etc., must have occurred in Josiah's reign; it was checked by Psammetichus, king of Egypt; and, though Jeremiah does not appear to refer to it, yet it must have created alarm in Judah; and Egypt would be looked to for protection. This section was evidently delivered while the eyes of the Jews were directed towards Egypt. The next portion, iii. 6—vi. 30, is expressly stated to belong to the days of Josiah. The nation from far (v. 15, vi. 22) is not the Scythians but Chaldeans. Chaps. vii., viii., ix., are also generally assigned to Josiah's reign. There is some difficulty in deciding; for it seems unlikely that that pious king would have permitted the idol practices "in the streets of Jerusalem" (vii. 17, 18.) Some critics, as Hengstenberg and Keil, regard these chapters as a kind of resumé of Jeremiah's early ministry, in which he has collected the substance of what he said at different times. But they are not (as they would in that case be) a continuous whole; and the fresh titles and directions (iii. 6, vii. 1) are a great objection to such a theory. We may further suppose xi. 1—17 to have been uttered just when the book of the law was found in the temple, in the eighteenth year of Josiah.

The earlier ministry of the prophet had lasted twenty-three years, from the thirteenth of Josiah to the fourth of Jehoiakim; and the portions of the book above mentioned seem to be all that we can with any degree of certainty ascribe to this period. In the last-named year we find many oracles delivered. These are xxv., to which may be appended xlv. 2—12, also xxvi., xxxv., evidently when the Chaldeans were first approaching (comp. Dan. i. 1,) xxxvi., xlv., and probably the sections xvi. 1—xvii. 18, and xvii. 19—27. We may perhaps refer xiv., xv., delivered in the time of famine, to this reign, and xviii. To this last chapter the account of the murderous purpose of the prophet's townsmen at Anathoth, together with the resulting complaint and predictions (xi. 18—xii. 17) may be supposed a supplement.

To the short reign of Jehoiachin, so soon deposed and carried with many other captives to Babylon, the section x. 17—25 may be assigned, and possibly xiii., relating a symbolical act, of which it is difficult to say whether it was literally performed.

Zedekiah was now placed upon the throne. To the beginning of his reign we may ascribe chap. xxiv.; and, as about the same time an embassy was sent to Babylon, the prophet directed to the captives there the letter which we find in chap. xxix. And we may not improbably suppose that the section x. 1—16 was addressed to the exiles at the same time. It was very suitable for those who were living among the heathen; and then the curious fact of verse 11 being written in Chaldee will be accounted for. Next in chronological order very possibly come xxvii., xxviii.; "Jehoiakim" in xxvii. 1 being obviously a transcriber's mistake for "Zedekiah." And, according to li. 59, the prophecy against Babylon (l., li.) was delivered in the fourth of Zedekiah. We may place next xxii. 1—xxiii. 8, a reference to the fate of the king's three predecessors, and a warning to him, concluding with a remarkable prophecy of Messiah. The oracle against false prophets succeeds (xxiii. 9—40.) Chaps. xix., xx. may be assigned to the time of Zedekiah's rebellion before the avenging Chaldean armies appeared; xxxiv. 1—7, when they had entered Judea, and reduced all the fortresses except Lachish and Azekah, which they were attacking; xxi., a little later, while yet the Jews were not cooped up within their walls. In their distress the people had agreed to grant liberty to their slaves; but, when the Chaldeans retired on the approach of the Egyptians (xxxvii. 5,) they revoked the grant of freedom. To this juncture must be referred xxxiv. 8—22, and xxxvii. 3—10.) Jeremiah wished to retire into Benjamin, but was stopped and placed in custody, first in Jonathan the scribe's house, and afterwards, with less rigor, in "the court of the prison" (11—21.) While here the transaction related in xxxii. took place; and in this dark time there were cheering utterances of future joy, in xxxiii., when several houses were demolished for purposes of the siege, and in xxx., xxxi., comprehending Israel as well as Judah. Chap. xxxviii. must be assigned to the closing scene; the bread of the city was well-nigh spent; and in desperation the princes cast Jeremiah into a foul pit, from which he was raised by Ebed-melech, to whom the message (xxxix. 15—18) was communicated, no doubt immediately after. The sections xxxix. 1—14, xl. 1—xliii. 7 narrate the capture of the city and other events till the going-down of the remnant into Egypt; where the prediction of xliii. 8—13 was delivered, and xlv. perhaps somewhat later: xlv. 13—xlix. 39 are oracles against various heathen nations, of which that against Elam (xlix. 34—39) is dated at the beginning of Zedekiah's reign: it is not improbable that the rest were delivered contemporaneously with that against Egypt (xlv. 2—12,) before noted as in the fourth of Jehoiakim, and the closing section; and li. is an historical appendix, nearly identical with II. Kings xxiv. 18—xxv. 30.

The chronological distribution which has here been followed is almost entirely that of Bleek; and, though there must be some uncertainty in regard to several portions, yet it appears for the most part to be based (where the notes of time are not given in the text) on very probable grounds. But it must not be imagined, because these prophecies are not now ranged in chronological order, that they have been carelessly displaced, and thrown together at random. We can discover traces of a classification according to their subjects, and we can see reasons, from some incidental notices, why the collection was made as we have it.

The two parts are:—I. Domestic prophecies and histories (i.—xlv.), including 1. Longer discourses (i.—xxiv.); 2. Special predictions of the destruction of Jerusalem and the captivity, placed together on account of the subject being the same, introduced by an announcement of the judgment of many nations (xxv.—xxix.); 3. Predictions of future blessing, united because of their similarity (xxx.—xxxiii.); 4. Shorter utterances on special occasions, with an account of the occasions (xxxiv.—xxxix.); 5. Historical narrative, with the special message to Baruch (xl.—xlv.) II. Prophecies against foreign nations (xlvi.—li.); lii. being an appendix.

There is every reason to believe that the collection of these prophecies was made by Jeremiah himself, or at least by his amanuensis Baruch. According to what we read in xxvi., xlv., he was instructed to have written in a roll the threatenings against Israel and Judah and other nations. These were probably not dictated from memory, but read to Baruch from earlier memoranda. When the roll so produced was destroyed by Jehoiakim, it was rewritten with additions, but containing of course only those which had been delivered down to that time. At a later period the prophet received another command (xxx. 2) to collect his utterances. And it is very probable that while in Egypt, with these two collections before him, he embodied them in the book we have. There is no trace (excepting the appendix, lii.) of a later date. And, though some critics have chosen to except against portions as being from a different hand, careful examination (a detail of which the size of the present volume forbids) shows that the arguments they have alleged are not of weight.

The style of this book is elegant, and the sentiments pathetic and tender. And, while for the most part it contains denunciations of judgments, there are consolatory promises, and predictions of the Messiah and the blessings of the new covenant. See Jer. xxiii. 5, 6, xxxi. 31–37.

Jeremiah was both a prophet and priest (II. Chron. xxxv. 25), the son of Hilkiyah of Anathoth, a Benjamite city allotted to the priests, about three miles from Jerusalem. It is not probable that this Hilkiyah was the high priest in Josiah's reign, because we may conclude (I. Kings ii. 26; I. Chron. xxiv. 3) that the priests at Anathoth were descendants of Ithamar; whereas Hilkiyah the high priest was of the family of Eleazar, (vi. 4–13.)

Jeremiah's lot was cast in troublous times. The long wicked reign of Manasseh had thoroughly demoralized the people of Judah. And, though ere his death that monarch had repented and striven to repair the evil he had caused, yet Amon his son returned to idolatry. It was in the thirteenth year of Josiah (Jer. i. 2) that the word of the Lord first came to Jeremiah. He was then, it would seem, residing at Anathoth, and very young. For, although the word used (6) is not determinate, yet, as we know that Jeremiah prophesied at least forty years, to the taking of Jerusalem, and possibly longer, it must have been in early life that the commission was entrusted to him. And this, with his residence at Anathoth, will explain why, when the book of the law was found five years after, counsel was sought of Huldah (II. Kings xxii. 14) rather than of him. The burden of the prophet's message was soon perceived. He was to testify that recourse to Egypt was sinful and in vain (comp. Ezek. xvii.), and that their own sins were bringing destruction upon the people, (Jer. ii. 17.) And he announced the coming woe: a mighty nation from the north was the destined avenger, (i. 15, v. 15.) He urged submission to the Chaldees. He was denounced as a traitor. The priests and the false prophets demanded his life (xxvi. 11); and it was only by the interference of Ahikam that he was delivered. Jehoiakim himself once endeavored to apprehend him (xxxvi. 26); and, when under the last weak king, seeing the fruitlessness of his expostulations, he was taking an opportunity of leaving Jerusalem to go into the territory of Benjamin, probably to his ancient home, he was seized, accused of deserting to the enemy, cast into a dungeon, and his life again demanded, as weakening, they said, the hands of the men of war, (xxxvii., xxxviii.) When the city was taken, Jeremiah received kind treatment from the Chaldean chiefs: he then joined Gedaliah, the son of his friend Ahikam, and, after his murder, was carried by the remaining captains, whom he warned in vain, into Egypt (xxxix.—xliii.), where, according to one tradition, he was stoned by his own people, while, according to another, he afterwards went to Babylon, and died there. Other legendary stories there are about him which need not be here repeated. We learn much of this prophet's own mind from his writings. He has recorded his communings with God, his grief at the ruin of his nation, and for the cruelty with which he was treated. He describes his misgivings lest he was misapprehending God's message, and the burning fire of the word within him (xx. 7–9), and then like Job he curses the day of his birth, (14–18.)

THIS collection of Ezekiel's prophecies divides itself into two equal parts: I. The first, comprising prophecies and visions before the fall of Jerusalem (i.—xxiv.): these are placed in chronological order, from the fifth year of the captivity, to the ninth (i. 2, xxiv. 1). II. The second is occupied with prophecies and visions after Jerusalem was taken (xxv.—xlvi.); including (1) denunciations against seven heathen nations disposed in the following order (xxv.—xxxii.), Ammon, Moab, Edom, the Philistines, Tyre, Zidon, and Egypt, (2) predictions of the re-establishment of the theocracy (xxxiii.—xlvi.), an oracle against Seir being included (xxxv.): these, too, though dates are but sparingly noted, seem to be placed chronologically, the whole being, no doubt, arranged by the prophet himself.

The forms of Ezekiel's composition are varied. Sometimes the strain is didactic, in which proverbial expressions are interwoven (as in xii. 22, 23, xvi. 44, xvii. 1–10, xviii. 2), and extends itself in long-drawn sentences, with oratorical fulness and lyric spirit. Then, again, we find allegorical representation, unfolding a vast richness of majestic ideas and colossal symbols (illustrated, it may be said, by late Assyrian discoveries), including not unfrequently symbolic actions. Hence, as observed by Jerome, there is much that is dark and mysterious in his prophecies. Thus the symbolic cheru-bim are variously explained. It is enough to say of them here that, described as working one within another, they may be taken to symbolize the awful and mysterious providence of God, ministered by angelic beings, instinct with spiritual life. The later chapters (xl.—xlviii.) have caused great difference of opinion. They have been referred to the restoration of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity: they have been supposed to depict by symbols the times of Messiah; and there are those who, regarding them as predictions yet unaccomplished, expect that at some future period the temple in the proportions here delineated will rise again, and the rites and regulations so minutely recorded be literally in force. These theories are lucidly described by Dr. Fairbairn, in his valuable "Exposition" of Ezekiel. Such matters cannot be argued here. They belong rather to the province of the commentator.

But it may not be improper to give a summary of the view entertained by Hävernick of the purport of the prophet's vision. "In the gospel times," he thinks, "there is to be, on the part of Jehovah, a solemn occupation anew of his sanctuary, in which the entire fulness of the divine glory shall dwell and manifest itself. At the last there is to rise a new temple, diverse from the old, to be made every way suitable to that grand and lofty intention, and worthy of it; in particular of vast compass for the new community, and with a holiness stretching over the entire extent of the temple; so that in this respect there should no longer be any distinction between the different parts. Throughout, everything is subjected to the most exact and particular appointments: individual parts, and especially such as had formerly remained indeterminate, obtain now an immediate divine sanction; so that every idea of any kind of arbitrariness must be altogether excluded from this temple. Accordingly, this sanctuary is the thoroughly sufficient, perfect manifestation of God for the salvation of his people (xl.—xliii. 12.) From this sanctuary, as from the new centre of all religious life, there gushes forth an unbounded fulness of blessings upon the people, who in consequence attain to a new condition. There come also into being a new glorious worship, a truly acceptable priesthood and theocratical ruler; and equity and righteousness reign among the entire community, who, being purified from all stains, rise indeed to possess the life that is in God (xliii. 13—xlvi. 12.) To the people who have become renewed by such blessings the Lord gives the land of promise; Canaan is a second time divided among them, where, in perfect harmony and blessed fellowship, they serve the living God, who abides and manifests himself among them (xlvi. 13—xlviii.) See Journ. of Sac. Lit., Jan. 1852, pp. 434-447.

Ezekiel's style is characterized by a mass of peculiar and frequently recurring expressions and forms; and, though he shows a dependence on earlier models, on the Pentateuch in particular, he has words, together with Aramaisms and corruptions, anomalies and grammatical inaccuracies, testifying to the decline of the Hebrew language, and confirming the belief that the writer was residing in a foreign land. Some of his peculiarities are, the constant use of the phrase "son of man" as applied to himself (ii. 1, 3, 6, 8, iii. 1, 3, 4, and elsewhere,) the designation of the people as "a rebellious house" (ii. 5, 6, 7, 8, iii. 9, 26, 27, xii. 2, 3, 9, xvii. 12, xxiv. 3, xlv. 6); with many others, which Keil has enumerated (Einleit. § 79.)

There is a somewhat perplexing statement of Josephus (Antiq., lib. x. 5, § 1) that Ezekiel wrote two books. The most general explanation is that (if not a mere error on the part of the Jewish historian) he divided the book we have into two parts, making that which contains a description of the temple (xl.—xlviii.), a distinct treatise, as altogether apart from the preceding portion of his writings. Ezekiel like Jeremiah was both a priest and prophet, the son of Buzi. He was among the captives carried away with Jehoiachin 599 B. C., and he prophesied in Chaldea at Tel-abib by the Chebar river.

The word of the Lord came to him in the fifth year of the captivity; and his ministry lasted, so long as we have any account, to the twenty-seventh year (Ezek. i. 2, 3, xxix. 17). Whether he lived beyond this time or how or where he died, there is no certainty. According to Jewish tradition he was put to death by the prince of the Jews, who was an idolater, and was irritated by the prophet's rebukes.

DANIEL.

THE book bearing the name of Daniel is in our Bibles placed immediately after that of Ezekiel, as the fourth of the so-called greater prophets. In the Hebrew canon it is ranked in the third division called khethubim, or, according to the Greek name, hagiographa.

This book is composed partly in Hebrew; partly, viz., ii. 4—vii. 28, in Chaldee. A portion of it is occupied with a narrative of events; and the rest is a series of prophetic visions. In the history Daniel is spoken of in the third person; while the visions profess to be recorded by himself. There is no reason, however, to question the unity of the book. "You may divide it," says Zündel; "you cannot possibly pull it to pieces; or separate it according to the languages, for there is a clear reference in the Chaldee pieces, ii. 49, iii. 12, 16, 23, 30, to the Hebrew, i., and also a substantial connection between the Hebrew, viii.—xii., and the Chaldee, vii.; a similar notation of time being found in vii. 1 and viii. 1. If you divide it according to the contents, the narrative and the visions, i.—vi., and vii.—xii. you are met by an equal difficulty. For i. is clearly by its contents an introduction to the historical ii.—vi., and by the language and style connected with the visions viii.—xii., linking through the Hebrew the former with the latter division, just as vii. links the first and the last through the Chaldee," (Krit. Unters. über die Abfass. Daniel, pp. 40, 41.) Other references from one part of the book to another might be pointed out: see Keil, Einleit., § 134, p. 443; Horne, Introduct., vol. ii. p. 842, edit. Ayre. But it is needless to discuss this point further: critics are generally agreed that the whole book proceeds from the same hand.

Received into the Jewish canon, this book has been generally attributed to the prophet Daniel. This belief, however, questioned by certain ancient opponents of Christianity, has of late years been keenly disputed; and many able writers are now of opinion that the date of its composition must be brought down to the Maccabean times, and consequently that much of it is unhistorical. They do not impute to the writer any improper motive or intent to deceive: they suppose him a patriotic Jew, who was anxious to inspire his countrymen under the persecution of Antiochus, and who selected the names of his principal figures from the lists of Ezra and Nehemiah, (e. g., Ezra viii. 2, x. 28; Neh. viii. 4, x. 2, 6, 23,) guided perhaps by some traditionary stories of Daniel as a celebrated Hebrew exile. Whatever may be thought of the theory generally, that this book is of a late date, such fanciful confirmations must be allowed to be worthless. Neither can the opinion that the author was a pious, patriotic Jew be easily approved. For he distinctly assumes the name of Daniel: he relates with all gravity circumstances that are said to have happened to Daniel: he professes as Daniel to have received divine communications, which he delivers as solemn prophecy. In regard to some books it matters little who penned them: their authority and credit will not be interfered with. And others bear merely a name in the title without further allusion to it. But here Daniel's history is found in every paragraph: Daniel personally presents himself everywhere: Daniel speaks continually as from the mouth of Jehovah: you can not take away Daniel's authorship without most seriously impeaching the real writer's honesty, and reverence, and truthful purpose. He trifles with the living God. He speaks in the Lord's name; and yet the Lord did not send him; he utters oracles which are based upon a lie. This assertion is made deliberately and after careful consideration of the whole bearings of the case. And the conclusion is that, if the book can be proved to be the composition of some one much later in date than Daniel, it ought to be rejected as utterly unworthy of a place in the sacred canon.

It is necessary to examine the reasons that are urged against this book's being really the production of the prophet Daniel. In the brief space which can be given here to the investigation, only a few of the principal arguments can be adverted to; and the objections of less weight may well be passed over. Thus it is useless to dwell on the assertion that Greek names are given to some of the musical instruments enumerated in iii. 5, 7, 10, 15. If it were so, what then? It is admitted that Greek influence spread far in Asia at a very early date, that Sennacherib encountered a Greek army in Cilicia, and that Esar-haddon had Greeks in his service, from whom doubtless Greek words passed into eastern speech. And, besides, some Greek names of musical instruments were really words of Persian origin Grecized (see Zündel ubi supr., pp. 5, 6). Few would be inclined now to lay stress on such a reason for the late composition of the book. Neither need much attention be paid to the alleged improbabilities of the narrative. It is said that no king would have required his wise men to tell him the dream he had forgotten, as well as the interpretation of it (Dan. ii. 1-9). On the contrary, it was the most sensible thing Nebuchadnezzar could do. If the magicians had really supernatural knowledge, they could describe to the king his dream as well as interpret it. So the event proved, distinguishing between the false and the true; for the heathen astrologers who could not tell the dream had no power to unroll its prophetic signification; while Daniel, who could by divine revelation expound, by divine revelation told also what the dream had been. It was an admirable test which was thus applied.

Cases, however, are alleged of actual mistake or misrepresentation. Such is the statement that Daniel was carried captive to Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim, (i. 1-6.) Nebuchadnezzar, it is said, was not then king; for his reign commenced in Jehoiakim's fourth year (Jer. xxv. 1); and, besides, it is argued, from the terms of Jeremiah's prophecy (8-11), that the Babylonian invasion was then future. But the fact is that, the different places being compared, there is, instead of mistake or contradiction, a marvelous harmony. For Nebuchadnezzar's march on Jerusalem in Jehoiakim's third year (perhaps the earlier part of it) was before the victory of Carchemish (xvi. 2), while Nebuchadnezzar's father was still upon the throne. What wonder that the Jews, finding that he wielded all the power of Babylon, called him by the title which not long afterwards was exclusively his own? And the taking of Jerusalem at that time was not that utter destruction which Jeremiah predicted in the words above referred to, and which did not come upon the city till many years later. Jehoiakim submitted, and was continued on his throne as a Babylonish vassal; and for three years he was faithful to his liege lord, (II. Kings xxiv. 1; II. Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7.) Now observe that at the end of Jehoiakim's fifth year a fast was proclaimed in Jerusalem (Jer. xxxvi. 9), when Jeremiah's prophecies of the destruction of the Judean kingdom by the Chaldeans were publicly read, (10.) Who can doubt that this fast was held in preparation for the revolt from Nebuchadnezzar? and thus Jehoiakim's rage and destruction of the roll may be readily accounted for (22-26.) Jeremiah's testimony just contradicted the king's determination. Mark, further, that Daniel and his three companions were to be three years in training, (Dan. i. 5.) But in Nebuchadnezzar's second year Daniel stood before the great monarch, (ii. 1, 25.) Exact is the correspondence, if the captivity be as early as Jehoiakim's third year: the three years of previous study had just ended.

The great objections to the authority of this book are the supernatural character of its narratives, and the minuteness of its predictions, down to the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

With regard to the first objection all that shall be said at present is that the wonders related are an essential part of the book. They cannot be supposed to be interpolations. If they are rejected, you must reject the whole.

As to the minute prophetic detail down to Antiochus, and the consequent presumption that the book was composed in his times, let us see how such a supposition will agree with facts. If we imagine some pious Jew patriotically disposed, his object must have been to rouse and encourage that resistance to arbitrary profane power which, under the leadership of the Maccabean family, actually resulted in establishing the independence of the Jews. But certainly neither the histories nor the visions of this book are calculated to call out such a spirit: they suggest patient submission rather than bold opposition: written in the time of the Maccabees they would have tended to paralyze rather than to strengthen those valiant captains' hands. And, then, what could have been meant by the predicted resurrection of xii. 1-4? Who would have made it just follow the downfall of Epiphanes? Zündel places in parallel columns the historical facts of the book and the occurrences and position of the Jews in Maccabean times (pp. 67-73). A glance at his tables is sufficient to show the utter dissimilitude. One cannot conceive a man taking up old legends of quite a different cast, and trying to illustrate what was happening around him by comparisons which fail at every point.

The visions are equally inapposite. Besides, they reach far below the time of Antiochus Epiphanes. This is a point of great importance. For, if it can be proved, it at once puts an end to the notion that the writer was some Maccabean uninspired patriot. Now it will hardly be denied that the visions of ii. and vii. are parallel, and also that we have in viii. a special illustration of parts of the preceding visions. Let us place these over against each other.

The golden head.	The winged lion.
The silver breast.	The bear.	The two-horned ram.
The brass body and thighs.	The four-winged leopard.	The he-goat.
The iron and clay legs and feet.	The ten-horned beast.

The golden head is declared to be the Assyrio-Chaldaic kingdom (ii. 37, 38.) The two-horned ram is the Medo-Persian dominion; and the he-goat the Grecian (vii. 20, 21.) What, then, can be intended by the ten-horned beast, and by the iron and clay legs and feet of the great image (ii., vii.)? The natural answer would be that it was that world-wide Roman empire which rose upon the ruins of preceding sovereignties, which held for long in its iron grasp all known civilized lands, but which ultimately, showing signs of weakness and decay, was divided into many (generally reckoned ten) inferior kingdoms, while under its rule God set up another kingdom of diverse character, which grew, little aided by human hands, which has spread itself mightily, which will embrace within its ample sway all nations, and shall never be destroyed. Of course, if this interpretation stands, the patriotic Jew of the time of Antiochus, wishing merely to rouse his nation against the tyrant, vanishes; and it must be acknowledged that the inspiration of God is here. Accordingly, the unbelieving critics explain the ten-horned beast and the iron and clay legs and feet of the Grecian kingdom, identifying these with the he-goat of viii., and so dividing the Medo-Persian sovereignty that the silver breast and the bear are made to symbolize the Medes, the brass body and thighs, and the four-winged leopard, the Persians. The following scheme will represent this interpretation.

The golden head.	The winged lion.
The silver breast.	The bear.	One horn	Babylon.
The brass body and thighs.	The four-winged leopard.	The other horn	Media.
		} of the ram. Persia.
The iron and clay legs and feet.	The ten-horned beast.	The four-horned he-goat.	Greece.

But surely the parts of this scheme do not fit well together. The bear with unequal sides corresponds better to the unequally horned ram than with a single horn of it; and the four-winged leopard which had suited exactly with the four-horned he-goat, is strangely identified with the second horn of the ram; while, again, propriety is violated in setting the ten-horned beast over against the four-horned he-goat. Great allowance certainly would have to be made for the patriotic Jew, if such were the writer of the book, for his ill management of his symbols. Besides, it was doubtless the Messiah's kingdom, the Christian dispensation, that was ultimately to have sway; and this unquestionably does not date from the time of Grecian rule. It is objected, indeed, that to regard the fourth empire under which it rose as the Roman, would contradict ii. 44, 45; these verses being taken to assert that the fourth empire was subverted at the commencement of the Messianic kingdom. But this is an untenable gloss, to be maintained only on the supposition that Messiah's dominion was of a worldly nature. It was under the Roman, and not under the Greek empire, that Messiah's kingdom was founded.

It may be properly asked, When, at what exact juncture, did the supposed Jewish patriot compose the book? Was it before or after the death of Antiochus? If before, then he actually uttered prophecy; for in vii. 25 we have the prediction that the persecution should continue three and one-half times; if after, the announcement of the resurrection (xii. 2) becomes absolutely monstrous. And then, instead of cheerful consolation, which it is assumed the book was to inspire, Daniel is represented after repeated visions as disappointed and mournful (x. 2, 3.) What intelligible explanation can be given of this? Believing that the book was written by the Daniel of the captivity, the matter is plain enough. In the third year of Cyrus little fruit had been gained of the liberation, and of the decree of his first year. Expectations had not been realized. Opposition had shown itself and had prevailed. Jerusalem was still desolate; the temple had not been reared. No wonder that the prophet mourned. And then it is that the far future is laid open to him, the one and twenty days' resistance of the prince of Persia, the rapid sketch of Persian history, the power of Alexander, the fortunes of the Syrian and Egyptian kings, who had shares of his dominions, all is intelligible on the supposition that God is unfolding to a true prophet the things that should come to pass, and letting him see that, though disappointments might occur, an overruling hand was at work, and all things tending, through worldly change and succession of kings, to that great consummation, the establishment of an endless dominion of peace and glory. On any other view we have an inexplicable riddle. Ascribing the composition to Maccabean times, it is hard indeed, as above noted, to see how the writer could imagine that such narratives and such visions would rouse his countrymen to valiant resistance against their persecutors; and it is still harder to believe that the readers would have detected any incentives in the book sufficient to inspire them with hopeful expectations from such a contest. Minute investigation into the internal character of the composition, the farther it is carried, shows the more clearly that the presumption of a late origin does not fit the circumstances of the case, does not supply the key to unlock the mysterious casket.

Let us proceed to another part of the enquiry, and see if any positive reasons for settling the date can be produced.

Weighty proof of the early existence of the book of Daniel is to be gathered from the circumstances of the Septuagint translation. It is acknowledged that the various parts of Scripture were rendered into Greek at different dates; the version of the Pentateuch being the earliest. Let us see whether we can approximate to that of Daniel. Now there is no doubt that this must have been in existence when the first book of Maccabees was composed. For the expression of I. Macc. i. 54 is evidently from the Septuagint Dan. ix. 27. And the first of the Maccabees may be fairly dated about 100 B. C. Again, we gather from the second prologue to the book of Ecclesiasticus, that the whole of the Old Testament was at that time in Greek; the writer speaking of "the law, the prophets, and the rest of the books." This prologue was composed about 130 B. C. Hävernicks and Zündel still further argue that, as the Septuagint text substitutes "Romans" for "Chittim," in xi. 30, the translator must have been contemporary with Antiochus Epiphanes, who was peremptorily forbidden by the Roman envoy to prosecute his hostile designs against Egypt (Hävernicks, Einleit., § 272, vol. ii. 2, p. 458; Zündel, p. 175.) If this be admitted, or even if the later date, 130 B. C., only be taken, then, since it is allowed by critics generally that the original composition must have preceded the translation fifty or sixty years, the notion that the book was first written in Antiochus's time is distinctly disproved.

That there would be a considerable interval of time between the original and the translation is evident from the fact that the Septuagint text abounds in faults, mistakes, variations of every possible kind. These would not have been made, had the version come close upon the original composing of the book. So faulty is this translation, that it was for a long time laid aside, and that of Theodotion substituted in Greek

Bibles; and it was not till modern times that the Septuagint Daniel was discovered and published, viz., in 1772 A. D. Zündel has with singular acuteness examined and compared the Septuagint, the version of Theodotion, and the original, arranging several paragraphs in a tabular form, and from his investigations, for which the reader must be referred to his book, pp. 176-182, he comes to the conclusion that the Septuagint translator must have had a prior version before him when he did his work. If this be so—and the arguments used are very forcible—the first composition of the book is thrown yet farther back; and what then becomes of the notion of the patriotic Jew writing it in the time of Epiphanes?

It is quite certain from the book of Baruch, from the Apocryphal additions to the book of Daniel, and from the Septuagint translation of the book, that Daniel must have been written before the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

Of course, as much as possible is made of the fact that Daniel appears in that division of the sacred volume called khethubim or hagiographa, the latest portion, we are told, of the canon; just as, if after the gathering of the law, and of the prophets, seeing that there were at a posterior time several other books, floating as it were unconnectedly about, they were at length collected into a late supplement or appendix. But such a notion has no sufficient foundation. In fact, the reasoning we find is in a circle; the collecting of the hagiographa was late, because Daniel is there; and Daniel is late, because it is placed in the hagiographa! The books of the law naturally formed a single class. Those called in the Hebrew nomenclature "the prophets" had a mutual interdependence. True, some are historical, and some are prophetic; but there was a bond of connection. There was prophetic teaching, if not by words, yet by actions. The hagiographa had a different character; and it was at least as much in reference to their contents, as to any consideration of date, that these books were arranged. For the Davidical psalms are there, not left for a long time out of the canon, but regarded from the first as a part of the sacred word, and placed as a nucleus round which other writings deemed fitting to be associated therewith might gather. This part of the subject is argued at length by Zündel (pp. 214-226,) who, reaching by independent investigation the conclusion that the canon was closed about the end of the fourth century before Christ (pp. 226-239,) finds in this a strong proof of the antiquity of Daniel. In any case, it would be hard indeed to explain how a production of the date of Antiochus Epiphanes could get into the sacred canon.

But we may look a little more particularly at the cause why the book of Daniel occupies the place in which we find it. Good reasons for the arrangement there certainly are, though they might not perhaps even appear so forcible in later times; and hence a collateral proof is furnished of the early settling of the canon. Thus, there is a vast difference between the contents of Daniel and those of other prophetic books. There are no fervid addresses in it to the Jewish people, as in the others: how then could it be classed with them? There is not the theocratic tone; nor even is the Jewish nation touched save as having a place in the world-system, to which, and not to the destiny of his own people, the prophet's eye was mainly directed. How well, then, was the wisdom of the sages who gathered the sacred books, guided to place this in that division, the contents of which were rather for private edification than (except at certain festivals, the five megilloth) to be read in public assemblies. "The distribution of the sacred books was (as Zündel well says) according to their public use. The law was the basis handed down from the fathers of all public teaching. The prophets, in the constant public use of them, discharged towards the people the peculiar office which belonged to such divine messengers. The hagiographa or khethubim were for the private use of pious Israelites. And, besides these, there were apocryphal writings, set aside and withdrawn from authoritative use altogether," (see p. 224.) A similar distribution is made in the New Testament; and no man carps at it: why is not the Revelation discredited because it stands last?

Such are but a few of the reasons which can be produced for disbelieving that the book of Daniel is a late production of the Maccabean age. And, it may be added, if it is not of the Maccabean age, it is what it professes to be, of the exile and time immediately succeeding. For there is no pretence for placing it in the interval; and no one has ascribed it to that interval. Well and deeply, in regard to this part of the subject, should the words of Dr. Mill be pondered. The objection, he observes, is an old one, as old as the time of Porphyry, who concluded, from the particularity of detail, that the prophecy was merely history, written after the events. "To those who conclude that Gen. xlix. must have been written after the establishment of David's dynasty, and all of Isaiah, from the fortieth chapter to the end, after the restoration of the Jews from Babylon—simply because the royalty of Judah is mentioned in the one, and the edict of Cyrus in the other—this argument must needs be irresistible. Unfortunately, however, it assumes as granted the whole matter on which such critics are opposed to ourselves, viz., that no higher intellect than that of man has been concerned in what those writers of Israel propounded to the world. And it is quite sufficient to reply that, in all to which the art of criticism properly relates, the criteria of human authorship and transmission of meaning which are common to these writings with all others, there is nothing to justify their allegation, but everything against it."

It was observed above, that the supernatural character of the narrative portion of Daniel was used also as a main argument against its authority. To those enlightened men who have discovered the impossibility of a miracle, the alleged occurrence of one is a fatal objection to a book. On this question nothing need be said here, for we fully believe in miracles. But, as a sufficient reason for vindicating the ways of God, the observation of Zündel is very weighty, that, where the welfare of God's Israel is brought face to face with the world's power, there the wonder-working hand of the Lord is stretched forth. We may see it in the contest with Pharaoh, we may see it when the holy ark was placed in an idol's temple by the Philistines: it was reasonable to expect it in the crisis at Babylon.

Little need here be said of the notice we find of Daniel by the prophet Ezekiel, (Ezek. xiv. 14, 20.) He is coupled with two eminent patriarchs, Noah and Job. Now, if Daniel had been endowed with eminent wisdom, if he had been able to interpret the dream of the Babylonian king, if he was consequently raised to high place in the empire, we can not wonder that one so distinguished, a faithful minister in a heathen court, should be ranked among the Lord's most favored servants. If, on the other hand, the history we have be false, if no such prophet had attracted Nebuchadnezzar's favor, or received such marvellous communications of the divine Spirit, if Daniel were but a mythic personage, how is the mention of the name by Ezekiel to be explained?

There is a yet more august reference to him. Events in God's providence repeat themselves; and those which fulfil a divine prediction are in turn pre-significative of a yet more complete accomplishment. Now the pollution of the sanctuary by Antiochus had been predicted (Dan. xi. 31). But the prophecy was not exhausted by the Syrian king's profanation. There would be a more fearful desecration in a far more calamitous time. And of this our Lord speaks. He tells his disciples it would come, and warns them of it as the signal of their flight from the doomed city. And he expressly ascribes the prediction to Daniel (Matt. xxiv. 15). Here Christ cites a prophecy yet to be accomplished, attributes it to a certain individual, and declares its approaching accomplishment—and that in the same breath in which he denounces and cautions the apostles against false prophets, pretenders to divine gifts, (11, 24.) Will any man dare to say that the prophecy he so refers to was merely the word of an impostor, of a man who had concocted a legendary book, and whose pretended prediction was but the clothing of past events in the phraseology of the future? To all reasonable arguments let due weight be given: all reverent treatment of a mysterious matter may have its honor; but the criticism which attributes such ignorance, such perversion of fact, to the Only-begotten is too daring: let no man who venerates the Saviour give it the least countenance.

Shortly as the question has been here treated, enough, it is hoped, has been urged to vindicate the authority of this book. Let no reader suffer himself to be influenced by that weakest of all arguments, that all the most enlightened critics now give up the genuineness of Daniel. Were this indeed the case—and it is not so—it should not weigh with the honest enquirer after truth, (John vii. 48.) The recent lectures of Dr. Pusey on Daniel, as well as the masterly German works of Auberlen, Füller, Zündel and others, have fully vindicated the book, and delivered Daniel again from the den of lions.

The book, as already intimated, is divided into two parts:—1. The historical portion, including the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's prophetic dream, i.—vi.—2. The prophetic part, vii.—xii. Daniel is said to have died at a very advanced age in Susa, and what is called his tomb is still pointed out there to travelers.

HOSEA.

THE contents of this book are mainly directed against the corrupt Israelitish kingdom. The sins of the people, committed against mercy and privilege, are denounced in strong language; and judgment is threatened against them. Judah is to take warning by her sister's fall; and promises of forgiveness to the returning backslider, with predictions of future blessing, to have their accomplishment in Messianic times, are given and enforced.

This book may be arranged in two parts: the first including i.—iii., in which we find the relation of certain symbolical actions: the second, iv.—xiv., is a series of prophetic addresses. The title, i. 1, has been made the subject of discussion: some suppose it an addition by a later hand; others with more probability believe that it was prefixed by Hosea himself. But, even if this were not the case, there is no reason to doubt its accuracy. The contents of the book prove this. For there are predictions which we must suppose uttered while the house of Jehu was yet on the throne of Israel; and there are descriptions which suit exactly with the state of things at a far later period: c. g. v. 10 may well be supposed to point to the conduct of Ahaz as narrated in II. Kings xvi. 10–18. Then, again, Hos. x. 14, there is little doubt, refers to the invasion of Samaria by Shalmaneser, who must be identified with Shalman, while Beth-arbel is probably Arbela in Galilee, and the sacking of it occurred on the Assyrian's march towards Samaria (II. Kings xvii. 5, xviii. 9).

Of the first portion of the book, chaps. i.—iii. are in prose. With regard to the symbolical actions narrated in this part, some critics believe that they were literally performed; that the prophet really contracted marriage as described. Others—and the opinion is now more generally adopted—suppose the whole a figurative representation, to inculcate more clearly the sin and ultimate destiny of Israel and Judah. There are obvious reasons why we should interpret these chapters figuratively; and several years would have been required for the literal occurrence of the events; so that the impression intended to be made upon the people would have been frittered away. The second part (iv.—xiv.) has been divided into separate discourses; but critics do not agree upon the number of them; and all attempts at division are uncertain. It may be that Hosea uttered many more predictions, and that, when he collected and arranged his book, he did not comprise in it all the words he had spoken, but, under the guidance of the divine Spirit, those only which, not intended for mere temporary use, were to be the church's treasure for ever. This may in a measure account for the obscurity of Hosea's writings, which are marked by conciseness and abrupt transitions. But he evinces great poetic power: his descriptions are vivid, and his imagery rich: he is often, too, tender and pathetic. The ministry of Hosea probably extended to sixty years or more.

There are several distinct quotations of Hosea in the New Testament, besides occasional adoption of his language: thus Hos. i. 10 is cited in Rom. ix. 26; Hos. ii. 23 in Rom. ix. 25; I. Pet. ii. 10; Hos. vi. 6 in Matt. ix. 13, xii. 7; Hos. xi. 1 in Matt. ii. 15; Hos. xiii. 14 in I. Cor. xv. 55; and Hos. xiv. 2 in Heb. xiii. 15. There would seem also an allusion to Hos. vi. 2 in I. Cor. xv. 4, and to Hos. x. 8 in Luke xxiii. 30; Rev. vi. 16.

JOEL.

THIS book, has been divided into two parts: I. (i.—ii. 17) containing the description of a sore and fearful judgment desolating the land, with a call to humiliation and repentance on account of it. II. (ii. 18—iii. 21,) exhibiting the gracious answer of the Lord, in which he not only promises deliverance from the present calamity, but announces the happy future, when in Messiah's days there should be an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, when Judah and Jerusalem should have the supremacy over their foes, and the victorious church dwell in peace and prosperity for ever. The apostles notice the fulfilment of some of Joel's predictions: comp. Joel ii. 28–32 with Acts ii. 16–21; Rom. x. 13.

It has been questioned whether the description of the calamity (Joel i., ii) is historical or prophetic, i. e. whether the land was really at the time suffering, or whether it was a future judgment that was denounced. Perhaps we may more reasonably believe that the land was then visited, and that Joel was commissioned on the occasion of this visitation to utter his message of warning and promise. But, if this be so, then another question on which critics are not agreed will be readily solved. If the judgment was then upon the people, it must have been of literal locusts, and not the storm of war described in figurative language. There is still, however, some difficulty; for (ii. 20) the plague is said to be from the north; and locusts, it seems, do not ordinarily come into Judea from the north. But why, locusts being literally meant, should not the description have also a symbolical and deeper meaning, to foreshadow those destroying hosts whom the sins of Judah would eventually provoke, and who would pour upon them from the north, the way by which the Chaldeans came, as well as any other quarter, and at least as effectually reduce the land that had been a garden into a desolate wilderness? Browne (Ordo Sæculorum, Append. p. 692) sees in the four-fold "palmer-worm" and "locust" and "canker-worm" and "caterpillar," "a quaternion of heathen foes sent to ravage the Lord's inheritance."

The style of Joel is highly poetical: it is elegant and perspicuous, and at the same time nervous, animated, and sublime.

AMOS.

HE was a native of Tekoah, a small town of Judah, about twelve miles south of Jerusalem; at least, this was his ordinary dwelling-place. He was not trained in the prophetic schools, and is said to have been "among the herdmen of Tekoah," (i. 1.) He also describes himself as a keeper of cattle and "a gatherer of sycamore fruit," and says that he was taken from the flock, (vii. 14, 15.) But, though this seems to indicate a mean condition, and none but the poorest (we are told by travelers) now gather or use sycamore fruit in Palestine, yet it does not follow that Amos was uneducated, a mere workingman. David was taken from the sheep-folds (Psal. lxxviii. 70, 71); and the word used in Amos i. 1, is the same that is applied to Mesha, the tributary king of Moab, (II. Kings iii. 4.)

Amos prophesied early in Uzziah's long reign; for Jeroboam II. was at the time upon the throne of Israel. And, according to the statement of II. Kings xv. 1, Jeroboam died in the fifteenth year of Uzziah. But some critics are disposed to believe that an error has somehow crept into that text; so that Uzziah's accession was twenty-seven years before Jeroboam's death. Be this, however, as it may, we cannot suppose the earthquake (Amos i. 1) to have occurred (according to the story of Josephus) when Uzziah attempted to burn incense. That attempt was later. Else Jotham his son would have been too young to assume the reins of government, for he was not born till his father had been twenty-seven years upon the throne (II. Kings xv. 2, 5, 32, 33); and, further, some of the predictions in Amos i. were fulfilled by Uzziah; whose prosperity seems to have continued afterwards a considerable time, (II. Chron. xxvi. 5-15.)

These predictions were delivered on occasion of the oppression and low estate of the two Israelitish kingdoms through their idolatry and luxury. The punishment of the neighboring nations was announced; and this was in a measure accomplished by the victories of Jeroboam and Uzziah (II. Kings xiv. 23-29; II. Chron. xxvi. 6-15.) The Israelites and Jews, too, might expect severe judgments; yet to those who humbled themselves in true repentance the promise of deliverance is made, and the future blessing of Messiah's kingdom predicted.

This book may be divided into two principal parts:—1. Plain declarations (i.-vi.): this portion comprises a denunciation of the sins of adjacent nations (i. 1-ii. 3), and a reproof of Judah and Israel, (ii. 4-vi. 14.)—2. Prophetic visions and symbolic announcements (vii.-ix.): the impending judgments are here presignified (vii. 1-ix. 10), which Amaziah, the idolatrous priest, misrepresents; and finally, consolatory promises are given, (ix. 11-15.)

The style of the book is forcible; and many of the images drawn from rural life are full of beauty. The composition would seem to show that Amos was not a coarse rustic, but a person of considerable attainments. His book is cited twice in the New Testament—Acts vii. 42, 43, xv. 15-17.

OBADIAH.

THIS is the shortest of all the prophetic books: it is said to have been put in the place it occupies in our canon because of the connection of its subject with that of the closing verses of Amos immediately preceding. There is a remarkable similarity between Obad. 1-8 and Jer. xlix. 7-16; and it seems clear that one of these prophets must have had the composition of the other before him. Which was the earlier is doubtful. As, however, we know that Jeremiah frequently reproduced the oracles which had previously been delivered, we may suppose it to have been the case here.

The style of Obadiah is animated, and his prophecy orderly and perspicuous. He first (1-9) denounces judgment against Edom, then (10-16) dwells upon the special sin committed, the malicious joy with which the Edomites had abetted Judah's enemies (comp. Psal. cxxxvii. 7), reiterating the threatening, and afterwards (17-21) he describes the restoration of Jewish prosperity, their dominion being largely extended. The accomplishment of the earlier part of the prophecy took place about five years after the taking of Jerusalem, that of the latter in the victories of the Maccabean princes: this has, however, no doubt its fullest completion in the establishment of Messiah's kingdom.

JONAH.

OF the personal history of Jonah we have few particulars. He was the son of Amittai, of Gath-hepher, a town of Zebulun, and he predicted the successes of Jeroboam II. (II. Kings, xiv. 25). Jonah's prophecy of deliverance, then, must have been given in Jeroboam's reign, predicting that king's success (who sat on the throne forty-one years, and whose victories were probably in his later administration), for it obviously would not overleap the victories of Joash, if announced before them. Whether Jonah's mission to Nineveh was after or prior to his predictions in regard to Israel, we can but conjecture. His reluctance to undertake that mission, his flight, under the belief apparently that, if he quitted the land of Israel, the scene of theocratic manifestation, God's word would not follow him, with his subsequent preaching and its result, are to be read in the book which bears his name. Of the time and place of his death we have no information. What is said to be his tomb is still shown among the ruins of Nineveh.

Many critics have thought fit to argue that this book is either altogether fictitious, or, if with some fact at the bottom, yet dressed out according to the writer's fancy, in order to teach more vividly a moral lesson. The reason no doubt is that we have here the record of supernatural occurrences: there would else have been no difficulty in allowing it to be literal truth. The narrative is plain and straightforward like that of any other book of Scripture. It is in accordance with the historical relations of the time, when the first communications of Israel with Assyria are noted (Hos. v. 13, x. 6: comp. II. Kings xv. 19). The description of Nineveh (Jonah iii. 3) accords with history: the corruption of the people is mentioned in Nah. iii. 1; Zeph. ii. 15; and the mourning of men and beasts (Jonah iii. 5-8) appears to have been an Asiatic custom (Herod. ix. 24).

Bleek has drawn out at length the reasons for denying the truthfulness of this book. They amount to no more than that the critic supposes it unlikely that a great city would be so stirred at the preaching of a stranger, and with so little lasting effect. On similar grounds he might disbelieve the account of Paul's preaching, e. g. at the Pisidian Antioch (Acts xiii. 44), and more especially at Lystra, where the apostle was first of all regarded as a god by the multitude, and shortly afterwards stoned (xiv. 8-19). Objection is also taken to the account of the fish (probably a kind of shark, which, as Bochart shows, swallows a man entire), and to Jonah's prayer or psalm, which is perversely represented as being composed and finished in the fish's belly, instead of, as common sense might teach, the embodiment after the deliverance (like Hezekiah's ode, Isai. xxxviii. 9-20) of his previous thoughts and feelings.

There is remarkable positive evidence for the literal truthfulness of the book of Jonah. Ezekiel has been thought to allude to it (Ezek. iii. 5, 6): the apocryphal book of Tobit mentions Jonah's preaching at Nineveh (Tob. xiv. 4, 8). And our Lord himself gives a distinct authorization of the narrative (Matt. xii. 39-41). He affirms the two things, that the prophet was three days and three nights in the fish, typical of his own resurrection; and that the Ninevites repented at his preaching. He affirms, still further, his own superiority to Jonah. Would he, it may well be asked, have compared or contrasted himself with a man in a fable, a mere parable, a myth? It is well worth remark that the three facts connected with the Old Testament against which modern critics have specially objected—the Mosaic origin of the Pentateuch, the genuineness of Daniel, and the literal truth of Jonah's story—are distinctly authenticated by Christ. See Dr. Pusey's excellent vindication of the truthfulness of the narrative in his Minor Prophets, pp. 247-264. Whether Jonah himself wrote the book is a matter of inferior importance: most probably he did; and the use of the third person throughout is no proof to the contrary. Some alleged Aramaisms may be without difficulty accounted for. The book consists of two parts: I. Jonah's first commission, and attending circumstances (i., ii.) II. His second mission and its results (iii., iv.) For some good remarks on the typical character of Jonah, see Davison, Discourses on Prophecy, disc. vi. part ii.

MICAH.

ATTEMPTS have been made to divide this book according to the supposed chronology of different parts. But this can not be satisfactorily done. It is true that we can assign with certainty the prediction (Mic. ii. 12) to the time of Hezekiah (Jer. xxvi. 18), and, as that sovereign commenced his reformation immediately upon his accession to the throne, we must believe that the denunciations against idolatry (Mic. v. 13, 14, vi. 16) were delivered at an earlier date, under either Jotham or more probably Ahaz. Still no accurate apportionment can be generally made. Indeed, there is an unity in the composition which would lead us to suppose that the prophet had collected his utterances and arranged them into one connected whole in the book he has transmitted to us.

The structure of it is curiously elaborated. There are three sections, i., ii.; iii.—v.; vi., vii.: each begins with the same word "Hear ye," and each closes with a promise of strength and salvation to God's people. And there is a kind of parallel development. Thus in the first section Judah is threatened, that the deadly blows which are soon to be dealt out on Samaria, should reach to the gates of Jerusalem (i. 9, 12). There is also the deliverance of the covenant people from their distress predicted, and a victorious bursting out from captivity (ii. 12, 13). In the second section the prophecy assumes a graver aspect: the actual destruction of Jerusalem with the ruin of the temple is proclaimed, and the exile in Babylon (iii. 12, iv. 10), while the promise also rises higher and describes positive salvation through the supremacy of Messiah (iv. v.) The third section is altogether of a hortatory cast.

Micah was contemporary with Isaiah; and his book comprises a summary of the prophecies delivered by the last-named seer concerning Messiah and the final blessedness of God's covenant people. Occasionally the one repeats the other: e. g. comp. Isai. ii. 2-4 with Mic. iv. 1-3. The style in some degree resembles that of Isaiah: it is forcible, pointed, and concise, frequently animated and sublime. The tropes, varied according to the nature of the subject, are very beautiful. Two predictions contained in this book may be particularly noticed. The first relates to Samaria (i. 6), a city beautiful for situation, the crowned hill of Ephraim, adorned with sumptuous palaces. Yet the stones thereof should be poured down into the valley. And modern travelers describe the exact accomplishment. There are the fragments of massy columns, the foundations thereof discovered, and the stones rolled down into the valley—a living witness to the truth of the prophetic word. Another utterance is yet more remarkable. Earlier prophecy had noted the Seed of the woman, the descendant of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, in the line Judah, from the family of David; and here (v. 2) his birthplace is designated by name—Beth-lehem Ephratah; so that, when Herod enquired of the chief priests and scribes where Messiah should be born, they unhesitatingly replied in Beth-lehem, and referred him to this prediction (Matt. ii. 4-6).

NAHUM.

HIS time must have been before the capture of Nineveh, and most likely some considerable time before. Then there are historical references to suffering endured at the hands of the Assyrians. Thus, Nah. i. 11 probably intends Sennacherib; and 14 is a threatening against the same king: ii. 13 alludes to the Assyrian messengers who bore Sennacherib's summons to Jerusalem; and i. 9, 12 conveys a comfortable message that the Assyrian power should not attack Judah a second time. There is another note of time in iii. 8-10, where the capture of "populous No," i. e., Thebes, is mentioned as of late occurrence. History does not record this; but, as Bleek remarks we may connect the passage with Isai. xx., and may reasonably believe that the desolation referred to was prior to the fourteenth of Hezekiah, the date of the Assyrian invasion of Judah. Hence we shall hardly err in placing Nahum in Hezekiah's reign.

The book is placed in our bibles seventh among those of the minor prophets. The purpose is to foreshow the entire destruction of the Assyrian empire, and specially of its metropolis Nineveh; with which is intermingled consolation for the prophet's countrymen who should be delivered from the oppressor and hear the happy news of peace. The whole is one undivided poem; in which, after an introduction (i. 1-8) describing in lofty terms the righteous power of God tempered with abundant mercy, the prophet notices the destruction of Sennacherib's army (9-12), and announces his death, with good news for Judah, to have doubtless its full significance in Messianic times (13-15). Then the fall and utter desolation of Nineveh is predicted with a singular minuteness of detail (ii., iii.).

Nahum's composition must be placed high among those of the minor prophets. He evinces great poetic power: his language is pure, his images beautifully appropriate. It may be added that he appears occasionally to refer to the Pentateuch; comp. Nah. i. 2, 3 with Exod. xx. 5, xxxiv. 6, 7, 14; Numb. xiv. 18; Deut. iv. 24. The destruction of Nineveh was almost a century after the delivery of Nahum's prophecy.

HABAKKUK.

THERE are in this prophet's writings a few indications of the time when he lived. Thus, in i. 5, 6, a threat is uttered of the Chaldean invasion, of which at the time no danger, obviously, was apprehended; and yet it is said that it should come in the days of that generation. This would point to the reign of Josiah. And, as we can hardly imagine ii. 20 (comp. iii. 19) written before the reformation or reestablishment of the temple service, we may with some probability place Habakkuk's ministry in the later years of Josiah. (See II. Chron. xxxiv.) Some have imagined, by comparing Hab. ii. 20 with Zeph. i. 7, that Habakkuk preceded Zephaniah, and further, by a comparison of Hab. i. 8 with Jer. iv. 13, v. 6, that he prophesied before Jeremiah, that is, before the thirteenth year of Josiah. But little stress can be laid on such deductions.

This book stands in our ordinary Bibles eighth among those of the minor prophets. It forms a complete whole, in three parts, corresponding to our division of chapters: (1) describing an impending judgment, (2) the downfall of the enemy of God's church, (3) the answer of that believing church to the two-fold revelation, a magnificent ode, expressing the fear which the threatened judgment inspired, and the consolatory hope imparted by the promised gracious retribution; the whole illustrated by the remembrance of God's great deeds in old time. More particularly, in i. 1-4, the prophet bewails the corruption of his people: in 5-11, the Lord threatens righteous punishment: in 12-17, we have the prophet's expostulation. In ii. 1 he expresses a determination to watch and wait for a reply; this he is told (2) to make plain: a general denunciation follows (3-5); and then the various nations oppressed are represented as uttering woes upon the Chaldeans for their prominent vices, their ambition (6-8,) their covetousness (9-11,) their cruelty (12-14,) their debauchery (15-17,) their idolatry (18-20.) Each stanza here (so to call it) commences with "woe," and concludes with a verse introduced by a word signifying "for" or "because." In the fifth stanza, however, there is an introductory verse. Chap. iii., though intimately connected with what precedes, is a complete poem in itself. This is unrivaled in its conception, and in the sublimity of its thoughts. The entire prophecy must, indeed, be placed high among the remains of Hebrew poetry. The majesty of the ideas, and the purity of the diction, are alike most perfect.

ZEPHANIAH.

HIS ancestors are enumerated for four generations (Zeph. i. 1); and in the genealogy given is found the name "Hizkiah," identical with that of Hezekiah king of Judah. It is probable that it was this sovereign from whom Zephaniah was descended; and the fact may explain the unusual length of the pedigree. The date would be found to agree very well, as Zephaniah prophesied in the days of Josiah. There is indeed a tradition that he was of the tribe of Simeon; but this is of no authority; more especially because it can hardly be doubted that he prophesied in Jerusalem. Of his death nothing is known.

There is no division in this short book; and, though some have distinguished in it different prophecies, yet it seems best to consider it as a whole, one part in it apparently referring to another, as Zeph. iii. 8 to ii. 1-3. It might be written in order to give a kind of summary of the prophet's ministry. It commences with denunciations for the sin of Judah, for which repentance is enforced (i.); and, after threatenings against heathen nations (ii.,) as also against Jerusalem, a time of blessed deliverance for Israel is predicted, to have its full accomplishment, doubtless, in the times of Messiah's happy reign (iii.)

The style of this prophet is dignified and energetic, yet not remarkable; he has poetic power, but of no high degree. He occasionally uses paronomasia, and has in several places adopted and repeated the utterances of other prophets.

HAGGAI.

THIS book comprises four prophetic messages which Haggai was instructed to deliver, in the sixth, seventh, and ninth months of Darius's second year. The rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem by the returned exiles had been intermitted, in consequence of the opposition of the neighboring satraps and their complaints at the Persian court to Cyrus, Cambyses, and the Pseudo-Smerdis. It was not till Haggai and Zechariah were commissioned to stir up Zerubbabel and the Jews to renewed exertions, that the work was recommenced. The representations made against it to Darius were discountenanced; and at length, in the sixth year of that monarch, 515 B. C., twenty-one years after the original decree of Cyrus (Dan. x. 13), the new temple was solemnly dedicated (Ezra v. 1, 2, vi. 14, 15).

In the first of his prophetic messages (Haggai i. 1-11) Haggai rebukes the people for their supineness. They dwelt at ease in their own houses, and did not seem to care that the Lord's house lay desolate. Therefore they were visited with drought. The remonstrance was effectual; for on the twenty-fourth of the same month, little more than three weeks after the utterance, the building was recommenced (12-15). In his second message Haggai encourages the people (ii. 1-9). Those who remembered the former temple grieved over the diminished splendor of that which was now rising; but the prophet was to tell them that it should be made more glorious than the first house. And this was fulfilled when Christ himself taught within its courts. The other two messages came the same day. In the first (10-19) the Jews were warned that none of their ritual observances were accepted so long as the temple was disregarded: their sluggishness polluted every action; nor could their care of anything else do away with their fault in this respect; but now, from the day of their active service, God would bless them. In the second, addressed to Zerubbabel, the representative of David's house (20-23), a promise is given that, though the kingdoms of the world might be shaken and fall, yet a lasting dominion (pointing forward to Messiah) should be established on their ruins.

ZECHARIAH.

THIS book has been variously divided into two, three, or four parts. Perhaps we may most conveniently distribute it into two principal sections, in each of which are some minor divisions. I. The first comprises Zech. i.-viii., in which we have, after an introductory message (i. 1-6), 1. A series of visions with which the prophet was favored on the night of the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month in the second year of Darius Hystaspis (7-vi. 15), closely connected with the then state of Jerusalem, symbolically describing the four great Gentile empires, and exhibiting with comfortable promises the establishment of a new theocracy, also pointing onward to the future glory of God's people under the great King and Priest, the Messiah, who would purge away iniquity, and rule his chosen. 2. A response of happy prediction delivered in the fourth year of Darius to certain enquirers, showing how times of mourning for past calamities should be turned into seasons of joyful praise, (vii., viii.) II. In the second part (ix.-xiv.) there are far-reaching prophecies, which leaving present events stretch onward to Messianic times. Included here we have, 1. The struggle of worldly powers with God's chosen people, while Messiah's office is foreshadowed (ix.-xi.); 2. The last onset of foes upon Jerusalem, the repentance of the Jewish nation for their rejection and murder of Messiah, with the final glory of that new kingdom of righteousness which shall never pass away, (xii.-xiv.)

The general scope and purport of this book will be seen from the analysis just given. The more precise interpretation of the visions and symbolical actions must be sought in commentaries. Here it will suffice to say that the comparative calmness of the world under Persian rule is exhibited by lively representations, as confirming the holy purpose of Joshua and Zerubbabel in rebuilding the temple; and, though the severance of Judah from Israel is mentioned, and the rejection of Messiah foretold, yet enough is revealed of the Maccabean conquests and the still more extended victories of the church in the latter days to strengthen and comfort all those that waited for salvation in Israel.

The style of Zechariah is for the most part prosaic; though in the later chapters the grandeur of the subject has given an elevation to the language which describes it. Several references to Zechariah occur in the New Testament (e. g. Matt. xxi. 4, 5, xxvi. 31.; John xii. 15, xix. 37).

But the most perplexing matter respecting this book is the doubt felt by many critics whether it is all by a single hand. The first part (Zech. i.-viii.) is pretty generally ascribed to the prophet of the restoration; but it is questioned whether the rest was not the work of one or two persons of an earlier date. It is suggested, too, that at least one such earlier prophet may have been named Zechariah, and hence his composition would be the more easily attached to what another Zechariah wrote.

Now against such theories there is, first, an enormous improbability. Certainly the Old Testament canon was complete no long time after the captivity, if not while Zechariah himself, possibly while those who had known him, were yet alive. It is hard indeed to imagine such men attributing the production of those who lived centuries before, to their own contemporary. On the whole, allowing due weight to the objections urged, the arguments in favor of the unity of the book decidedly preponderate.

The greatest difficulty in Zechariah is in the reference of Matt. xxvii. 9, 10 to Jeremiah instead of to Zechariah. But Dr. Lee shows that the evangelist very probably desired to explain that Jeremiah was to be regarded as the original author of a well known prediction, to whose words (Jer. xviii. 1-3, xix. 2) the expression of Zech. xi. 12, 13 refers; Jeremiah standing to Zechariah in the same relation as Ezekiel and Daniel to the Apocalypse (Insp. of Holy Script., lect. vii. pp. 339, 340).

MALACHI.

THE time when this prophet lived may be approached with tolerable certainty. The temple service was performed (Mal. i. 10, iii. 1–10). The people had married strange wives (ii. 10, 11); and this was what Nehemiah complained of (Neh. xiii. 23–29). There was a backwardness in bringing in the appointed tithes and offerings (Mal. iii. 8–10); and this Nehemiah, on his second visit to Jerusalem, remedied (Neh. xiii. 10–12). We may from all this fairly conclude that Malachi was contemporary with Nehemiah; and it has been generally believed that his prophecy must have been delivered while that eminent person was a second time governor of the Jews.

This book is rightly placed last of the productions of the minor prophets. Both chronologically considered and also from its contents, it appropriately closes the Old Testament canon, and is the last solemn utterance of the prophetic Spirit under the earlier covenant. Thenceforward the voice of prophecy was heard no more till the forerunner of Messiah here predicted, opened the second volume of revelation.

After the return from Babylon, when the Jews had repopulated their city and rebuilt their temple, abuses crept in. The priests were negligent: the people were worldly and complaining. Accordingly Malachi was commissioned to reprove both priests and people, and to invite them to reformation by promises of blessing and warnings of awful judgment. His book is not marked out into distinct messages or sections. It has been supposed, therefore, that the prophet has collected and compressed in it the substance of his various utterances. Be this as it may, we can properly separate it into three parts; in the first of which there is set forth the loving, fatherly, forbearing, and pitiful mind of God towards the covenant people; the character of Jehovah in the second as the only God and Father; in the third as the just and final Judge of his people. More particularly in I. (i. 2—ii. 9) the prophet, contrasting the state of Judah with that of Edom, which then lay waste, shows how groundless were the murmurings of the Jews against the Lord, as though he loved them not. He next reproves them, priests and people, for their neglect of God's service, and for the blemished offerings they brought, and then, reminding the priests of the grace of their original appointment, he threatens them with shame and punishment. In II. (ii. 10–16) he censures intermarriage with strangers, and divorce of lawful, i. e. Hebrew wives. In III. (ii. 17—iv. 6) against complaints, as if God did not regard men's conduct, and would never arise to judgment, the prophet foretells the coming of Messiah and his forerunner, to purify the sons of Levi, and inflict a curse unless they repented. Reproofs and consolatory promises are interspersed; for the day of the Lord would separate between the righteous and the wicked. He concludes with enjoining the strict observance of the law, since no fresh prophet should arise till the forerunner already spoken of, who should go before Messiah in the spirit and power of Elijah, to introduce a new dispensation.

This book is prosaic in style, but by no means destitute of force and elegance. Reference is made to it in the New Testament (Matt. xi. 10, xvii. 11, 12; Mark i. 2, ix., 11, 12; Luke i. 17, vii. 27; Rom. ix. 13).

CONCISE ACCOUNT OF EACH ONE OF THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

GOSPEL OF MATTHEW.

MATTHEW, the son of Alpheus, also called Levi, was a revenue officer or publican at Capernaum, when called by Jesus to be one of the twelve Apostles, Mark ii. 14, Luke v. 27, Matt. x. 3.

It is the universal testimony of all the early Christians, from the time of Papias and Irenaeus down to the time of Jerome and Chrysostom, without a single exception, that Matthew first wrote his gospel in Hebrew, that is the Aramean dialect spoken in Palestine in the time of Christ. This he must have done if he had meant to be listened to by his countrymen, who at that time would not willingly speak or read any other language. Compare Matt. xxvii. 46; Mark. v. 41, vii. 34, xv. 24; Acts xxi. 40, xxii. 2; Josephus Antiq. xx. xi. 2; Pref. 2.

Fragments of this Hebrew gospel have been preserved by many ancient writers, and in 1842 a very ancient Syrian MS. was discovered and placed in the British museum, which seems to contain nearly the whole of it. This gospel was written about A. D., 40 or 45.

But the Jews were soon to be dispersed among all nations, and Matthew foreseeing that, wrote for their use our present Greek gospel about A. D., 60 or 65. The Hebrew gospel, therefore, not being any longer of use in the Christian churches, was not preserved in the canon.

That our Greek gospel is an original and not a translation is clearly apparent to any one who reads it carefully.

The flow of the language in this gospel, with Hebrew idioms certainly, but in a style far unlike the Hebraized Greek palpable in the Septuagint version of books of the Old Testament; the Hebrew words, such as Raca, (Matt. v. 22,) which certainly would not have been left in an unknown tongue, when the very object of translating, if the composition be translated, was to render it intelligible to Greek readers; above all, the use of the Septuagint in quotations from the Old Testament—these are but some of the formidable objections which those who consider the Greek gospel a version, must have to meet. It is well known that the citations in the New Testament generally follow the Septuagint, occasionally only deserting it, when faulty, for the original, and varying sometimes from both the original and the Septuagint, when it seemed good to the inspiring Spirit to give a fuller development to the ancient word. This is perfectly intelligible if the apostles wrote in Greek: they would naturally adopt for the most part the version in the hands of those they wrote for, and understood by them. But can any reasonable man imagine that Matthew writing in Hebrew, would not (more especially when reporting our Lord's speeches) use the original, but would in preference translate back from the Septuagint? Or can any man imagine that, if Matthew used the original, his translator would so far depart from the model before him as to introduce the Septuagint renderings? It can not, therefore, be admitted that our Greek gospel is merely a version. Besides, all ancient authorities refer to it, and use it as the divine word. How could they so have used it, had it been but a translation? This gospel, from the very first, was received in the Christian Church. Though Polycarp and Clement of Rome do not distinctly name it, they yet have left in their writings allusions to St. Matthew's gospel, and sentences taken from it. It has indeed been asserted by some, who admit generally its authority, that the first two chapters are a spurious addition. "But," says Bishop Ellicott, "when we remember (1) that they are contained in every manuscript, uncial or cursive, and in every version, eastern or western, that most of the early fathers cite them, and that early enemies to Christianity appealed to them (Orig., Cels., i. 38, ii. 32); when we observe (2) the obvious connection between the beginning of chap. iii. and the end of chap. ii., and between iv. 13 and ii. 23; and when we remark (3) the exact accordance of diction with that of the remaining chapters of the gospel, it becomes almost astonishing that even à priori prejudice should not have abstained at any rate from so hopeless a course as that of impugning the genuineness of these chapters. To urge that these chapters were wanting in the mutilated and falsified gospel of the Ebionites (Epiph., Hær., xxx. 13), or that they were cut away by the heretical Tatian (Theodoret, Hær. Fab., i. 20), is really to concede their genuineness, and to bewray the reason why it was impugned."

There can be little doubt that the apostle wrote in Palestine. His object was to place before his countrymen a narrative of the words and actions of Jesus, whom he exhibits specially as the Messiah for whom the nation looked. The diction is Hebraistic; the style plain and perspicuous. The teaching of our Lord is made very prominent in this gospel; so much so that the record of Christ's actions is commonly subservient to the fuller exhibition of his instructions; but through the whole we observe the development of the twofold title of the first verse, "Son of David," "Son of Abraham."

It is no mere fancy to discover a certain relationship between St. Matthew's original occupation and his mode of arranging his materials. He had been a man of business, engaged in accounts; and from such a one we might expect careful grouping and orderly combination. Hence he appears sometimes to disregard exact chronological sequence: at least the order of events differs much in St. Matthew from the order of St. Mark and of St. Luke. He has gathered into groups the discourses of our Lord and the attending circumstances (Matt. v., vi., vii.) He has put together a collection of miracles (viii., ix.), and has arranged the parables with such consummate wisdom that each in the place in which it is set adds force and clearness to the rest (xiii.) There are many particulars, too, untouched by the other evangelists, which are delivered with special effectiveness by St. Matthew—the consolatory promise, for example, with which he concludes (xxviii. 18–20).

Mr. Westcott, in his useful Introduct. to the Study of the Gospels, pp. 327–329, has constructed an elaborate scheme or analysis of the contents of this gospel. It may be consulted with advantage by the student; but perhaps a more simple and brief distribution will be better suited to the general reader. We may, therefore, note four parts—I. The descent, birth and infancy of Jesus (i., ii.) II. The events preparatory to our Lord's public ministry, including the preaching of the Baptist, and the baptism and temptation of Jesus (iii. 1–iv. 11). III. The discourses and actions of Jesus in Galilee, by which his Messiahship was demonstrated (iv. 12–xx. 16). IV. The transactions relative to Christ's passion, death, and resurrection (xx. 17–xxviii.)

For a full exposition of the whole subject, with all the authorities quoted at large, see Stowe's Origin and History of the Books of the Bible, pp. 161–175.

GOSPEL OF MARK.

OF John, whose surname was Mark, we have a biography of considerable completeness in the following passages of the New Testament: Acts xii. 12, 25, xiii. 5, 13, 26–39; Col. iv. 10; II. Tim. iv. 11; I. Pet. v. 13. St. Peter styles Mark his son (I. Pet. v. 13); which is generally taken to mean that he was converted by that apostle. Mark left Jerusalem for Antioch with Paul and Barnabas (Acts xii. 25), and afterwards accompanied them on their first missionary journey (xiii. 5). He did not, however, attend them long, but, for some reason not fully explained, left them at Perga and returned to Jerusalem (13). This subsequently gave occasion to a dispute between the two apostles; for, when they were planning a second journey, Barnabas wished for Mark as a companion, and Paul objected; they therefore separated; Mark sailing with his uncle to Cyprus (xv. 36-39). At a later period he was again with Paul during his first imprisonment at Rome (Col. iv. 10); and a communication had been made respecting him to the Colossian church, perhaps to say that he had fully recovered that apostle's confidence. And this was more plainly expressed when St. Paul again desired his presence at Rome (II. Tim. iv. 11). We find him also with Peter (I. Pet. v. 13), with whom he is said to have traveled, and to have been his amanuensis.

Nothing further of him is recorded in the Scripture; but we may identify him with the author of the second gospel, and may readily believe ecclesiastical history which tells us that he was the first bishop of the church in Alexandria. Whether he died a natural death or by martyrdom is uncertain.

If Mark was, as there is good reason to believe, Peter's companion, and, as he has been called by Irenæus (Adv. Hær., lib. iii. 1), his "interpreter," it is likely that he would derive from him the account of events at which that apostle was present. His selection, too, from the materials might be in some measure guided by his habits of intercourse with Peter. Hence possibly the minuteness of detail of various occurrences which Peter witnessed, and hence, too, it has been supposed, the way in which, without any gloss or palliation, Peter's faults are chronicled.

The arrangement of this gospel appears to be: I. A short introduction noticing the mission of John Baptist (i. 1-8). II. The public ministry of Christ, his discourses and actions in Galilee, prefaced by an account of his baptism (9-ix. 50). III. Our Lord's last journeyings towards Jerusalem, with the narrative of his passion, death, resurrection, and ascension (x.-xvi. 20).

There can be no doubt that the original language of this gospel was Greek; though there are several Latinisms, and some writers of the Romish church have vainly attempted to maintain the theory of a Latin original. Simplicity and conciseness, with almost picturesque vividness of detail, are the characteristics of St. Mark's pen. This is evident if we compare the parallel accounts of the same events, e. g. Mark ix. 14-29 with Matt. xvii. 14-21; Luke ix. 37-42. But this gospel is by no means, as some have imagined, a mere epitome of that by St. Matthew, for in narrative he is often much more minute than Matthew.

It was the intention of Mark to write for Gentiles and especially for Latin readers. Accordingly there are frequently interpretations of Hebrew or Aramaic words, as in Mark v. 41, vii. 11, 34, and explanations of Jewish customs, as in 3, 4, which would have been unnecessary for Jews. With this purpose he selected and modelled, under divine guidance, and probably, as has been said, under Peter's eye, the work he has produced. As to the time and place of composition nothing can be affirmed with certainty. It is most frequently assigned to 63 or 64 A. D., and may perhaps have been written at Rome. Some have rejected the last eleven verses of this gospel, but on entirely insufficient grounds.

GOSPEL OF LUKE.

LUKE was a distinguished companion of St. Paul. We can gather but little of his history from the sacred volume. Indeed, it is only by inference that we can judge whether he was a Jew or a Gentile. The diction of those books in the New Testament, the gospel and the Acts, which are commonly ascribed to him, is such as to persuade some that he must have been a Jew. But St. Paul, writing to the Colossians, after mentioning all "of the circumcision" who had been a comfort unto him, adds the salutation of "Luke, the beloved physician" (Col. iv. 10-14). The plain conclusion is that Luke was not a Jew.

Luke is traditionally said to be a native of Antioch. When and where he became a Christian we have no means of deciding; whether, too, he was first a Jewish proselyte is equally unknown. That he accompanied St. Paul in some of his journeys is gathered from the use of the pronoun in the Acts. In Acts xvi. 10 the first person plural is used: Luke, therefore, proceeded to Philippi; and there he seems to have stayed, as the third person is resumed in xvi. 40, xvii. 1. In xx. 5, 6, he again includes himself in the narrative, as leaving Philippi with Paul. He went with Paul to Jerusalem, possibly was with him at Cæsarea, and certainly accompanied him to Rome, as the later chapters of the Acts prove. We find Luke at Rome with Paul during his first imprisonment (Col. iv. 14, Philem. 24), and even later (II. Tim. iv. 11). Nothing is certainly known of his death; some traditions making him suffer martyrdom, others asserting that he died a natural death. The story of his being a painter is of late origin.

This gospel commences with an inscription to Theophilus, which states the object of writing, viz. to put on record an authentic, orderly account of our Lord's history from his birth to his ascension (i. 1-4). There is then a narrative of Christ's birth with attendant circumstances, and particulars of his infancy and youth (5-ii. 52). Afterwards we have a notice of John's ministry, to his imprisonment (iii. 1-20). And then commences the history of Christ's public ministration, headed with a mention of his baptism (21, 22), his genealogy (23, 38), his temptation (iv. 1-13), his discourses, miracles, and transactions in Galilee (14-ix. 50). We have then his last journeyings towards Jerusalem, including the narrative of his passion, death, resurrection, and ascension, (ix. 51-xxiv. 53).

St. Luke wrote his gospel in Greek. His writings prove him to have been a man of education and attainment. His style is pure, copious, and flowing, more classical than that of the other evangelists: the preface, indeed, is altogether classical Greek. Still there are many Hebraisms, and certain peculiarities of diction apparent. The writer, moreover, evinces a thorough acquaintance with Jewish customs.

This is not surprising in so clear-sighted an observer, especially as he certainly visited, and perhaps, more than once, resided in Palestine. He had, too, the close intimacy of the apostle Paul, and was possibly, but, as already remarked, not certainly, a Jewish proselyte. A singular propriety has been observed in the way in which he names and describes the various diseases he has occasion to mention. The thoughtful comments, too, which he frequently makes upon the circumstances he records, with the notice of the causes which led to particular events, admirably correspond with what we might expect from a well-informed professional man.

St. Luke refers to the narratives which others had previously drawn up (Luke i. 1): but these were not the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, but transient writings not preserved by the churches. It has been thought by some that he derived assistance from St. Paul.

It is worthy of note, that the account of the institution of the Lord's supper in Luke xxii. 19, 20, is remarkably similar to that in I. Cor. xi. 23-25, and further that St. Paul appears to cite Luke's Gospel as Scripture (Luke x. 7 compared with I. Tim. v. 18).

The time when this Gospel was composed must have been prior to the composition of the Acts (Acts i. 1), possibly two or three years earlier; and it is not unlikely that it was written at Cæsarea. Dr. Alford places its composition at Philippi. Though addressed to an individual, it was not intended for him alone, more likely for Gentiles, or indeed with an universal aspect. And so it is characteristically a history, the most complete in itself of any of the Gospels. Some attempts have been made to impugn the authenticity of certain portions, especially Chaps. i., ii.: but they are futile.

GOSPEL OF JOHN.

JOHN was one of the sons of Zebedee and Salome (iv. 21, xxvii. 56; Mark xv. 40). Perhaps this family were residents of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter. Certainly they must have lived in the neighborhood; for they pursued the occupation of fishermen, in partnership with the brothers just named, on the lake of Gennesaret. John had a brother James, whether older or younger the Scripture does not state; it is usually imagined, however, that John was the younger. Zebedee must have been a man of some property; for we find that he had hired servants to carry on his business (i. 20), that Salome ministered to the Lord of her substance (xv. 40, 41), and that John had some personal acquaintance with the high priest Caiaphas (xviii. 15, 16).

John was probably one of those disciples of the Baptist who, hearing his remarkable testimony to Jesus, followed the new teacher to his residence and abode with him the rest of the day (i. 35-39). Then was made on the mind of the susceptible son of Zebedee an impression never to be effaced. He doubtless accompanied Jesus to Galilee, and was one of the party present at the marriage at Cana (ii. 2). When Jesus again visited Judea, the little band who had attached themselves to him attended his steps, and passed with him on his return in the way from Jerusalem through Samaria (iv. 3, 4). It is difficult to trace chronologically the course of events; but most probably, when, after his Judean ministry, our Lord was again in Galilee, rejected at Nazareth and removing to Capernaum, John and his brother, like Peter and Andrew, resumed their ordinary occupation. And it was when so engaged that they received the special call (Matt. iv. 18-22; Mark i. 16-20; Luke v. 1-11) to be continually with Jesus, which was supplemented by their appointment as apostles (Matt. x. 2; Mark iii. 16, 17; Luke vi. 12, 14). Afterwards we find John one of the especially favored three who witnessed the Lord's shining glory and his agonizing grief, and before whom, apart from the rest, his most wonderful works were performed (Matt. xvii. 1-9, xxvi. 36-45; Mark v. 35-43, ix. 2-10, xiv. 32-42; Luke viii. 49-56, ix. 28-36). John it was who was sent with Peter to prepare the last supper (xxii. 8), and John, the disciple whom Jesus loved, reclined next him at the meal, and at Peter's hasty nod put the question, most likely in a whisper, "Lord, who is he that shall betray thee?" (John xii. 23-26).

We get from several incidental notices a clear perception of John's character. Tenderly attached to the person of his Master, he was of an aspiring and impetuous temper. More refined perhaps in his conceptions than some of the other disciples, he yet did not fully apprehend the extent and grandeur of Messiah's kingdom. Anxious for the Lord's honor, he would have had it vindicated by supernatural judgments, and limited with formal restrictions. Christ had marked this temper when, at the call to the apostleship, he had designated James and John "the sons of thunder," and had sometimes to moderate their ambition by a rebuke, while their brethren occasionally resented their forwardness (Matt. xx. 20-24; Mark x. 35-41; Luke ix. 49, 54-56). Of Zebedee their father we hear nothing after they became apostles; but of their mother Salome, that she encouraged their aspirations. A lesson is read us how the finest qualities in fallen man prompt many a worldly and sinful thought; and how on the other hand, directed and controlled by divine grace, they shine with increased lustre. John was an apt scholar: he drank in of his Master's spirit; and we see in his writings how his more ardent imaginations were softened and interpenetrated by divine love. He had a capacity for the lofty and the sublime; and he found food for his high-reaching desires in contemplating the majesty, the holiness, the unutterable goodness of the exalted Saviour.

A few more particulars are recorded of this apostle in Scripture. He stood by the Lord's cross; and to him was committed the care of the Virgin: he was to be a son to her, and to comfort her in that bitter grief, in which, as she had long before been told, the sword would pierce through her soul (Luke ii. 35). In all probability he removed her at once to his residence; but he must himself have returned to the awful scene, as he witnessed the piercing of the Redeemer's side after he had expired (John xix. 25-27, 32-35). On the news of the resurrection he ran with Peter to the tomb, outstripped him, looked in, but with reverent amazement did not enter till Peter had gone in. Then went John in too and believed (xx. 2-8). He was present on the memorable morning when Jesus appeared by the side of the lake Genesaret. His quick eye first recognized the Lord; though Peter, with characteristic vehemence, plunged into the water to reach him first. And then it was that the mysterious words were uttered which led so many of the disciples to believe that John should never die (xxi. 22, 23). After the ascension he was frequently Peter's companion (Acts iii., iv. 1-23), with whom he was sent by the apostles to Samaria (viii. 14-17).

John probably did not quit Palestine so long as the Virgin mother lived. He did not, it seems, always reside in the capital: it is rather likely that he took her to his Galilean home. For he was not at Jerusalem when Saul was brought to the apostles (ix. 26-28; Gal. i. 18, 19); and when he was there subsequently it would seem to have been on occasion of the meeting of the council (Acts xv. 6; Gal. ii. 9).

That John subsequently went into Asia and dwelt at Ephesus (most likely not till after the death of Paul) we can hardly doubt; but many legendary stories are told of him which rest on very uncertain grounds. Admitting the genuineness of the epistles which bear his name, and that he was author of the Apocalypse, we are assured that he exercised pastoral superintendence over the Asiatic churches, that he was banished to Patmos, and that he had to contend against arrogant and erroneous teachers in the church. We may safely conclude, too, that he died, in extreme old age, a natural death, and that Ignatius and Polycarp were among his personal disciples. But the story of his being thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil at Rome at the Latin gate, from which he came forth unharmed, and others of a similar kind (see Gieseler, Kirchengesch., cap. iii. § 34, vol. i. p. 139) are worthy of little credit. Some of them, however, one could wish to believe; as that the apostle sought a robber chief, formerly his scholar, and melted him into repentance; and that, when through infirmity he could say nothing more, he used to reiterate in Christian assemblies the touching words, "Little children, love one another." There is a strange tradition also that he wore on his forehead a golden plate with the sacred name upon it. We may perhaps infer from Scripture that John was not married; but no doubt the accounts of his ascetic mode of life are exaggerated.

Some attempts have been made by modern critics to prove that this Gospel was not from the pen of the apostle John. They have chosen to suppose that there was an irreconcilable difference between the Gentile and the Jewish types of Christianity, represented by Paul and Peter respectively; and certain books of the New Testament they think were written to bridge over this difference. The fourth Gospel they consider one of them; and they have invented in their wisdom the hypothesis that, about the middle of the second century, a Gentile Christian composed it under the name of the apostle, to recommend love as higher than faith, and to show how the Jewish system was fulfilled in Christ, the true paschal lamb. The church, according to their notion, was easily deceived, and hailed the production as the genuine work of St. John. But surely most men will think that it is the critics who are credulous, and easily deceived. For, to glance at the external evidence, not only have we the testimony of Jerome and Eusebius in the fourth century after Christ, but in the beginning of the third and end of the second we find the leading writers in various parts of the Christian world recording their belief of the authenticity of St. John's Gospel. Of these Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, and Irenæus may be specified. The last-named writer, in whose life-time the forgery if real must have been committed, was acquainted with the state of the church in the east and the west: he had known Polycarp, St. John's disciple, and may therefore be taken as a most competent witness. Now he declares that in his time the fourth Gospel was universally received, and has an argument about the four Gospels—just so many and no more—being the necessary pillars of the truth. How is this compatible with the theory that the work had just been fraudulently concocted? There are yet earlier testimonies. Justin Martyr, born in St. John's life-time (about 89 A. D.) quotes this Gospel. Further, it is found in the Peshito Syriac version, and in the Muratorian canon; and additional proof may be obtained even from the early heretics. More it is impossible to say on this part of the question here; but it may fairly be asked "if it was possible for a history of Christ, falsely pretending to be from the pen of the apostle John, to be brought forward twenty, thirty, or forty years after his death, be introduced into all the churches east and west, taking its place everywhere in the public services of Sunday? Was there no one to ask where this new Gospel came from, and where it had lain concealed? Was there no one of the many who had personally known John to expose the gigantic imposture, or even to raise a note of surprise at the unexpected appearance of so important a document of which they had never heard before? How was the populous church at Ephesus brought to accept this work on the very spot where John had lived and died?"

We may reasonably conclude from a consideration of the external evidence that fraud was a moral impossibility. This conclusion is strengthened by a view of the internal evidence. For there are repeatedly assertions made that John was the author (John xix. 35, xxi. 24); and, even if we admit, as has been imagined, that the last chapter is a later appendix, the testimony is not thereby weakened. There is also the graphic minuteness of detail, with the many touches clearly indicative of an eye-witness, of which xiii. 22 may be taken as an example. The structure of this Gospel, too, is far different from what we should suppose a forger would have devised. The variations from the other Gospels bespeak an independent witness; a forger would have servilely followed them; and the wonderful discourses recorded of our Lord, the loftiness of his character portrayed, the emphatic maintaining of his Deity, are all such as the beloved disciple, looking back under the light of Christ's glorification to the days and months of his familiar earthly converse with him, may well be supposed to have most diligently pondered, and to have been most anxious to record for the church's guidance and consolation; while a forger would have been utterly incompetent for such a delineation; and his attempt would have proved a glaring failure. Indeed, looking only at this book as a composition, and discovering the master's hand that penned it, we may well ask, if St. John was not the author, who was that greater than St. John who has produced such a marvelous work, and yet has left no name or trace of his existence? Besides, from its tone and character it is incredible that it should have been composed in the second century. Let any one who doubts this read along with it the apostolic and immediately succeeding fathers, and see the mighty difference between them and this writer. It is indeed alleged that the very sublimity of this Gospel places it at a distance from the three preceding ones, so that, if they be accepted, it could not proceed from one of the same company of Christ's immediate followers. To argue this question at length would be impracticable here; it must suffice to say that it has been most satisfactorily handled, and the objection proved to be without weight. For full information the reader may be referred to Dr. Alford's Prolegomena to St. John's Gospel, sect. ii., vi., and the books there named; to Westcott's Introd. to Gospels, chap. v. pp. 262-286; and, further, to the very able article on the Genuineness of the Fourth Gospel, in Biblioth. Sac. pp. 225-284.

The date of this Gospel has been variously assigned; and it is questioned whether it was written at Ephesus or at Patmos. The former supposition is the more probable. Dr. Alford places its composition sometime between the years 70 and 85 A. D.; others bring it down as late as 96 or 97.

The Gospel of St. John may be considered in some measure supplementary to the other three. Some critics, indeed, are disposed to deny that this evangelist was acquainted with the works of the rest. But there is a great antecedent improbability in this. Surely we must suppose them welcomed by the church. They would soon circulate through Palestine and Asia Minor. It would be strange indeed if, after the lapse of several years, they never reached the hands of St. John, resident in one of these countries. And, though some of the events narrated by the other evangelists are given also by John, yet there are omissions in his work—a notice of the transfiguration for instance—for which it is hard to account if he was not aware that this had been already chronicled. But his Gospel is not a mere supplement. It was called forth on sufficient occasion. It had a great object, the revealing to the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, in his most deep and solemn teaching, and in the mystery of his person.

Errors, too, were creeping in, and found encouragement among the motley population of Ephesus, where doctrinal truth had to contend with Jewish prejudice and heathen philosophy and luxurious idolatry. Cerinthus was one of the heretics who was corrupting the faith. He was a Jew, imbued with Alexandrian philosophy, and he devised a monstrous combination of Christianity with Jewish and Gnostic ideas. He taught that the Most High God dwelt in a remote heaven with certain spirits or æons, and that he was unknown before our Lord's appearance; that he generated an Only Begotten, who begat an Inferior, the Word; that there were two high æons, Life and Light, to whom Christ was inferior; that from the invisible æons lower orders of spirits proceeded; that one of these, Demiurgus, ignorant of the true God, created the visible world out of eternal matter, and was the God of the Israelites; his laws being intended to be of perpetual obligation; that Jesus was but a man on whom the æon Christ descended at his baptism, endowing him with supernatural powers; that the æon Light had similarly entered John the Baptist; that it was Jesus who at the instigation of the Jewish Deity, whom he opposed, alone died; the æon Christ ascending up on high; but that he will return, be reunited to Jesus, and reign in Palestine a thousand years, bestowing on his disciples exquisite sensual delights. Some have imagined that Cerinthus borrowed his terms from this Gospel. Whether this were so, or whether John intended to refute the heretic, he manifestly has refuted the errors of Cerinthus and of Gnosticism in its widest sense, "in its Ebionitish form, as denying the divinity and preëxistence of Christ, and in its Docetic, as denying the reality of his assumption of the human nature" (Alford, Proleg., sect. iii.)

This Gospel was written in Greek of considerable purity; its style is characterized by unaffected simplicity and tenderness; the peculiarities of its composition are well pointed out by Westcott (ubi supr., pp. 241-252). It exhibits a regular plan, so that Westcott says that "the treatment of the subject satisfies the conditions of variety, progress, and completeness, which, when combined with the essential nature of the subject itself, make up the notion of a true epic" (p. 253). Compare Stowe's Origin and History of the Books of the Bible, pp. 185-201.

It must be added that the closing chapter was probably added as a kind of appendix at a later date, and we may well believe by the apostle himself. Also there is a section (vii. 53, viii. 11) which has occasioned much discussion. It is not easy to decide on it. It is found, but not in exactly the same words, in some good manuscripts and important early versions. Bishop Ellicott expresses his belief that it is not from St. John's pen; he would rather ascribe it to St. Luke, and observes that it cannot be too strongly impressed on the general reader that no reasonable critic throws doubt on the incident, but only on its present place in the sacred narrative" (Hist. Lect., pp. 253, 310).

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

THE book so called is the fifth and last of the historical books of the New Testament; it connects the Gospels with the Epistles, being a fitting supplement to the former and a valuable introduction to the latter.

There can be no reasonable question that St. Luke was the writer of this book. It must have been composed by one man, because there is an unity of purpose traceable in it, and the style (which is very perspicuous) and manner are remarkably homogeneous. The Greek is comparatively classical, with peculiarities of diction resembling the third Gospel; while the turn of thought, also, is similar in the two treatises. When it is added that the second begins where the first ends, so that put together they form a continuous history, and that the author of the last expressly refers to a book he had previously written—a book just such as the Gospel—the two being, further, dedicated to the same individual, there is surely the strongest evidence that both were from the same pen. And these internal proofs are corroborated by the testimony of the early churches, which unanimously ascribes the Acts of the Apostles to the evangelist St. Luke.

Its date is pretty well determined by the time at which its narrative closes—two years after St. Paul's being brought a prisoner to Rome. We may, therefore, with much probability, assign it to 63 A. D.

The title "Acts of the Apostles," by which this book is commonly known, would seem to be a later addition. It does not describe accurately the contents. For the object of the evangelist was neither to give a complete history of the church during the period comprised, nor to record generally the labors of the apostles; it was rather to exhibit the fulfilment of promise in the descent of the Holy Spirit, and the consequent planting and growth of the Christian church among Jews and Gentiles by the establishment of centers of influence in various provinces of the empire, beginning at Jerusalem and ending at Rome. Keeping this idea steadily in view, we shall see that all the events recorded fall naturally into their places, and that any seeming abruptness is sufficiently accounted for.

This book divides itself into two main parts; each being grouped around a central figure.—1. The planting and extension of the church among the Jews by the ministry of Peter (i.–xii.) Subdivisions are (1) the organization of the church in Jerusalem (i.–vii.); (2) the branching forth of the Gospel in various directions from the mother church (viii.–xii.)—2. The planting and extension of the church among the Gentiles by the ministry of Paul (xiii.–xxviii.) Subdivisions are (1) Paul's ministry at large (xiii.–xxii. 26); (2) his ministry in bonds (xxii. 27–xxviii.) It must be carefully observed that these two parts are closely connected as belonging to one great system. For it is Peter who first introduces a Gentile convert into the church; and Paul during the whole of his ministrations is careful to proclaim the Gospel, in every place where he has opportunity, first to the Jews and afterwards to the Gentiles.

There is on the face of it a truthfulness in this book which strongly commends itself to the reader. Thus the speeches attributed to different individuals are in full accordance with their respective characters and the circumstances in which they stood. The author was himself present at several of the events which he narrates—and this he carefully notes by change of person both in the verbs and pronouns he uses; he had, moreover, as a companion of the apostles, the best opportunity of knowing accurately the things he did not personally witness. From information so acquired he was guided by the Holy Spirit to place on record those facts which testified to the divine origin of Christianity, and showed that the Gospel was indebted for its success not to fraud or human favor, but to the wonder-working power of God, and the efficacy of the saving truths it promulgated. These were the same truths which were revealed in the Gospels, and illustrated in the apostolic letters, truths thoroughly adapted to the wants of those, both Jews and Gentiles, to whom they were brought. And the unity of God's purpose is exhibited in the frequent appeals made to the ancient Scriptures; and the supernatural power possessed by the Gospel is attested by the miracles which we find the apostles, in accordance with Christ's promise, were enabled to work.

It may be added that the researches of antiquaries, and the investigations of travelers, remarkably confirm in a variety of details the accurate truthfulness of the Acts of the Apostles.

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

WHEN Paul wrote this epistle he had not been at Rome himself, though subsequently he twice visited the city and suffered martyrdom there about A. D. 66 or 68. We are not informed in Scripture how or when the Gospel was first preached in Rome. But, as we find in the assemblage whom Peter addressed on the day of Pentecost "strangers of Rome," that is, Roman Jews who were then at Jerusalem (Acts ii. 10), we may very well conceive that some would carry back the glad tidings to their people in the great city, and that thus the religion of Jesus would be known there. In no long time the word of God would increase; and disciples would be gathered into the church. We have every reason to believe this to be the fact, because St. Paul writing to them declares that they had gained a noble reputation; for their "faith" was "spoken of throughout the whole world," (Rom. i. 8.) And this was no recent burst of Christian teaching and Christian zeal: for years there had been believers in Rome. Again and again the apostle had purposed visiting them (13): it was his desire, he expressly says, "for many years" (xv. 23). This church was made up mainly of Gentile converts; for, when St. Paul, some years after his letter was despatched, was actually in Rome, and had called together the chief Jews there, neither their language nor behavior was that of a community out of whom members had joined the Christian church, (Acts xxviii. 17-29). They seem rather to have kept aloof from the movement. And perhaps the greater number of converts in Rome were of Greek origin. No great stress indeed is to be laid on the fact that the apostle wrote to them in Greek; Greek being then almost an universal language throughout the empire. But on examining the names of those whom he salutes (Rom. xvi. 3-15) we discover but two or three that were really Roman: the great majority were Jewish or Greek. And the epistle itself confirms this view. From the topics urged and the course of arguing we may reasonably conclude that the Roman church included some Jews but more Gentiles—Gentiles, however, not unacquainted with Jewish modes of thought.

From the earliest times the evidence is plain and continuous that this epistle was written by Paul. Bleek would find allusions to it in the epistle to the Hebrews and in the first of St. Peter. More certainly may such be discovered in the epistles of Clement of Rome and Polycarp; and somewhat later the testimonies of Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian are distinct enough, (see Alford, Proleg., sect. 1.) But, though no one has denied the Pauline origin of this letter generally, yet certain modern critics, imitating in some respect the ancient heretic Marcion, have questioned Rom. xv., xvi., and some other portions, not so much denying that they were written by Paul as supposing that they were separate compositions adjoined to the epistle. It is not worth while to notice such theories.

The date and place of writing may be readily ascertained. The apostle was then on his way to Jerusalem (xv. 25), and was lodging with Gaius, (xvi. 23). But Gaius belonged to the Corinthian church (I. Cor. i. 14); and Paul, we are told (having left Ephesus), “abode three months in Greece,” just before he proceeded to Jerusalem, which he hoped to reach by Pentecost, (Acts xx. 1-3, 16). Putting these notices together, and observing that prior to his quitting Ephesus he had expressed his intention of going to Rome (xix. 21), and that he commends to the Christians there the deaconess Phoebe of Cenchrea, (a port of Corinth,) who appears to have been the bearer of the letter (Rom. xvi. 1), we can not doubt that it was written at Corinth about the beginning of 58 A. D.

The object with which the apostle wrote is evident from the epistle itself. He had heard much of the Roman Christians (i. 8), of their faith, and of the difficulties with which they were beset from the mixed character of their body, and their peculiar position in the capital. Moreover, it was specially fitting that he, the apostle of the Gentiles, should have his mind directed to that mainly Gentile community, and the Gentile population around them. Yet further, from the salutations already noticed, it would seem that many of Paul’s helpers and probably disciples were the most prominent of the Roman believers, and had been the instruments, if not of first planting the Gospel there, yet certainly of guiding and adding to the converts at Rome. Yet again, they had never been visited by an apostle. For else Paul would not, according to his maxim (xv. 20), have been so anxious to see them. Spiritual gifts, therefore, for their establishment (i. 11) were needed. And it is a noteworthy remark of Bleek that there could not have been at the time a regularly constituted church at Rome. For he does not address the “church” (7) as he so generally does, or speak of “bishops and deacons (comp. Phil. i. 1), appointed ministers; some of his expressions importing that there were only private communities (Rom. xvi. 5, 14, 15) instead of a public body.” We may well understand, then, how necessary it was to lay down and enforce the great principles of Christian doctrine, exhibiting the relative position of Jew and Gentile, and leading them to realize their union in Christ (Rom. xv. 5-9). The epistle to the Galatian church had been written—it is probable—not very long before. The apostle had had his mind filled with that great gospel truth, justification by faith, which he had expounded to them, to correct the errors introduced by a Judaizing party. He would surely feel that a still more elaborate exposition of the doctrine was needed for the Romans in their position, not indeed meant for them only but to form that magnificent body of Christian teaching which should be for all time the standard of truth as far as the word of the Gospel should extend. Here was a noble object: the opportunity was offered during the stay at Corinth; and we have the result in these precious words, not alone of man’s wisdom, but according to the mind of the Spirit; the particular directions of other epistles appearing here in their most expanded form.

The style of the epistle is full and energetic. The zeal of the apostle’s character appears in his writings. He hurries on regardless of nicely-accurate and formal expressions, placing in the strongest light the idea he wishes to illustrate, propounding and answering objections, and frequently involving himself in long parentheses, which yet he marvelously succeeds in making to forward his main argument. He evinces much rhetorical power; and, with a fondness for antitheses and play upon words, he soars occasionally into the highest flights of eloquent demonstration, and invests his great subject with such a glow of divine radiance that the reader takes no note of the roughness of language. But it is not always rough; it is moulded by a skilful hand, and made thoroughly expressive, while sometimes it flows on in long drawn harmony with cadences of grandeur which no ear will willingly forget. Even had not Paul been an inspired apostle, he would have stood in a very prominent rank among the mighty masters of speech: see Rom. vii. 7-25, viii. 22-39, xi. 25-36.

Various divisions of this epistle have been proposed. Perhaps the more natural arrangement is to regard it as having:

I. An introduction (Rom. i. 1-15).

II. Doctrinal teaching (16-xi. 36); comprising the general statement that salvation to Jew and Gentile comes by faith (i. 16, 17). This proposition is proved by show-

- ing, 1. That all are under condemnation (18—iii. 20); 2. That the righteousness revealed by the Gospel being of faith, is universal (21—v. 19); 3. The moral consequences of justification are exhibited (20—viii. 39); 4. The rejection of the Jews is discussed, the reason of it stated, while it is shown not to be final (ix. 1—xi. 36).
- III. The hortatory or practical part (xii. 1—xv. 13). 1. Inculcating holiness of life (xii., xiii.); 2. With instructions how to behave towards the weaker brethren (xiv. 1—xv. 13).
- IV. The conclusion (14—xvi. 27), includes 1. Personal explanations (xv. 14—33); 2. Salutations (xvi. 1—23); 3. Benediction and doxology (24—27). Stowe's Origin and History, etc., pp. 335—347.

EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS.

The First Epistle.—That the first of these epistles was written by St. Paul was never doubted; the evidence of its genuineness and authenticity being abundant and distinct. It is cited by Clement of Rome, Polycarp, Irenæus, Cyprian, Athenagoras, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and other ancient writers. The place where it was written is clearly specified (I. Cor. xvi. 8). It was at Ephesus, at the end of the apostle's long sojourn in that city; and, as there is some reason to think (v. 6—8) that it was about the time of the paschal feast, we may date the composition in the spring of 57 or 58 A. D. The occasion of writing was two-fold. The Corinthians had applied to St. Paul for information, perhaps by Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus (xvi. 17), on the subjects of marriage, of eating meats offered to idols, etc. (vii., viii., etc.); and, besides, he had learned by special information (from Chloe's family) (i. 11) that various abuses, dissensions, immoralities, etc., had been practised among them. Full of anxiety for those over whom his bowels yearned, the apostle applies himself immediately to repress the evils that had arisen, and to solve the questions submitted to him. Corinthian Christians were mainly Gentiles (xii. 2); still there were many Jews among them (Acts xviii. 4, 8); and Jewish jealousy of Paul, and the Grecian profligacy and philosophic spirit, combined to endanger the purity of the faith, and to debase the holiness of character which ought to have been maintained.

The plan and structure of this epistle is easily exhibited. After an introduction, and brief expression of thankfulness for the blessings they had received (i. 1—9), the apostle proceeds to rebuke the spirit of dissension which prevailed, vindicating his authority, and intimating his purpose of visiting them, strongly censuring the case of the incestuous person, whom he commanded to be put out of the church, and enforcing that purity which in such a city was especially likely to be corrupted, (10—vi. 20). He next replies to the questions sent to him, placing before them his own moderation as an example to be followed, in subserviency to the great example of Christ (vii. 1—xi. 34); and then, after discussing the right use of spiritual gifts (xii., xiii., xiv.), he maintains in an admirable section the truth of Christ's resurrection, and illustrates the resurrection of the body, in which the final victory is gained by the believer over the last enemy (xv.), and concludes with directions for a contribution to be sent to Jerusalem, a notice of his own motions, and various greetings, (xvi.)

It should be added that much difficulty has been felt in regard to v. 9, whether or no a prior epistle had been written. The best critics are now inclined to answer in the affirmative. It is not, however, to be supposed that anything has been lost from the canon. An earlier letter, even if written by inspiration and no longer extant, had accomplished its end. It was no more the divine purpose that everything written by Paul or Peter or others should be preserved for the church, than it was that every word uttered by a prophet should be chronicled forever. What God's good providence designed for perpetual use we have.

The Second Epistle.—The authority of the second epistle to the Corinthians is equal to that of the first. It is cited by Irenæus, Athenagoras, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and others. Soon after the first epistle was despatched St. Paul left Ephesus (II. Cor. i. 8), and proceeded to Troas, where he expected to meet Titus with intelligence of the effect produced by the admonitions he had given. Disappointed there, he went on into Macedonia, in some city of which he found Titus, and was cheered by the news he brought, (ii. 12—14). Paul in consequence wrote this second letter to prepare the Corinthians for his approaching visit to them. It was probably composed, therefore, in the summer or autumn of the same year in which the first epistle had been written. The exact place of writing cannot be ascertained: we can only say it was in Macedonia, (vii. 5, viii. 1, ix. 2).

Though the impression made by the first epistle was generally favorable, yet it had evidently stirred up the passions of those who were not friendly to St. Paul; and, therefore, in now writing, after his usual introduction (i. 1, 2), he justifies himself from the imputations made against him, touches on his integrity in the discharge of his ministry, and shows how he was influenced not by worldly interest, but by affection towards his converts, (i. 3—vii. 16). He then speaks of the collection (viii., ix.), and afterwards defends his apostolic authority, (x. 1—xiii. 10). Salutations and a solemn benediction conclude, (xiii. 11—14).

It is questioned (xiii. 1) whether the apostle had previously paid two visits to Corinth; the second recorded in the Acts (xx. 2, 3) being evidently after this second epistle was written. It seems most probable that a short visit was paid during the lengthened residence at Ephesus. St. Luke's omitting to record it is no proof that there was no such visit.

The two epistles to the Corinthians are full of interest. A singular variety of topics is treated: the changes are rapid, and the details minute. Irony, rebuke, consolation present themselves in turn; and in no other of his writings are the extraordinary powers of the apostle's mind more evidently displayed.

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

THE Gospel had been originally preached by St. Paul to the Galatians, who had received it with readiness, and had evinced the most remarkable affection for the apostle (Gal. iv. 14, 15). But when he was absent a change had occurred. Judaizing teachers had depreciated his apostolic authority, and had endeavored to enforce the necessity of circumcision. The Galatians, true to their impulsive character, had eagerly given ear to the fresh teachers; the news of which reaching Paul caused him to write in order to check the growing mischief.

This epistle may be distributed into three sections: I. (i., ii.) This is apologetic, in which he maintains his own position as an apostle, independent of those in Jerusalem, and as having received the Gospel by special revelation, with a peculiar commission to preach to the Gentiles, so that he had not hesitated, in defence of his principles, to rebuke Peter himself when he showed symptoms of wavering. II. The next section (iii. 1—v. 15) is controversial. Here St. Paul argues the question of justification, maintains that men can not be justified before God by works of law, that Abraham's righteousness was by faith, that his true children who inherit his blessing are those who are of faith, that the law was given as a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ, but that if they looked to it for justification they cut themselves off from the benefit of Christ's work, for by their circumcision they would become bound to keep the whole law. III. A practical and hortatory conclusion (v. 16—vi. 18), in which the apostle gives various admonitions, touches again on the main subject of the letter, observes how, contrary to his custom, he had written (probably) the whole with his own hand, and conveys his apostolical blessing.

It will be observed that this epistle is addressed to the churches of Galatia (i. 2); it was intended, therefore, for all the believing communities through the province. The date of its composition has been much questioned. It has been placed early by many critics, not long after St. Paul's first visit to the country. The expression "so soon removed" (i. 3) countenances this; and it must be confessed that it is the obvious inference from the passage. Nevertheless, by a careful putting together of various hints which are scattered through the epistle (i. 9, iii. 2-5, iv. 13, 16, v. 7, vi. 6), it would seem probable that some time had elapsed since the conversion of the Galatians, and also that the reference is rather to the apostle's second visit than to his first. Many of the best critics, therefore, decide that this epistle could not have been written before that residence of St. Paul at Ephesus which is recorded in Acts xix. Absolute certainty it is perhaps not possible to attain; but on the whole the balance of probabilities would seem in favor of this view. And there is another consideration which may have some influence on the question. There is a great similarity between this epistle and that to the Romans. In the last named, indeed, the subject is treated more comprehensively, expanded into a complete theological argument; while here, as the dealings and the teachings of the Judaizers furnished the occasion of writing, so they are continually met with special reference to the influence they had acquired among the Galatians. It is clear, therefore, that the epistle to the Galatians precedes that to the Romans. How long it is not easy to say. Some have placed them in point of time very close together. But St. Paul wrote to the Romans from Corinth, not till after his nearly three years' residence at Ephesus. To imagine that the letter to the Galatians was not composed till he reached Corinth is certainly not in harmony with the expression "so soon" (Gal. i. 3), already referred to. Perhaps, therefore, while still connecting this epistle with that to the Romans, the latter being the filling out of the sketch in the former, we may not improperly suppose that St. Paul addressed the Galatians from Ephesus about 54 or 55 A. D. This letter is composed with great force and energy of language, mingled with touching pathos. The genuineness and authenticity of it have been universally acknowledged. It is expressly cited by Irenæus; and there are repeated allusions to it by various early fathers. The objections which have been brought against it are quite unworthy of notice.

EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

THAT the epistle so designated was really the composition of the apostle Paul cannot be reasonably doubted. It is true that some modern critics have chosen to question it, but upon utterly unsubstantial grounds. For the very earliest and most trustworthy Christian writers either name St. Paul as the author, or substantially acknowledge his authorship of the letter by referring to it as canonical Scripture. Of these, to say nothing of Ignatius (Ad Ephes. 12), and Polycarp (Ad Philip. 1, 12), we have the express testimony of Irenæus (Adv. Hær., lib. i. 8, 5, lib. v. 2, 3), of Clement of Alexandria (Pæd., lib. i. cap. 5, p. 108; Strom., lib. iv. pp. 592, 593, edit. Potter), of Tertullian (De Præsc. Hær., 36; Adv. Marcion., lib. v. 11, 17), and of many others (see Alford, The Greek Test., vol. iii. Proleg. chap. ii. sect. 1); even heretics not denying its genuineness.

No doubt can be felt as to the time and place of writing. The apostle repeatedly calls himself a prisoner (Eph. iii. 1, iv. 1, vi. 20), and yet he was not, it would seem, precluded from preaching the Gospel (vi. 19, 20). These circumstances suit better with his confinement at Rome, when all who chose had access to him (Acts xxviii. 30, 31), than with that stricter duration in which he was held at Cæsarea, where merely his acquaintances might visit him (xxiv. 23). We may therefore date this epistle from Rome in the earlier and less severe part of his imprisonment there, about 61 or 62 A. D.

There has been much discussion as to the church or persons to whom this letter was addressed. It has been thought strange that, if writing to the Ephesians, among whom the apostle had himself so diligently labored, he should have conveyed no personal greetings. But analogy tells the other way. There are no express salutations in several of the epistles to churches (e. g. II. Cor., Gal., Phil. I. and II. Thess.) where St. Paul had preached and resided: there are such salutations to those (e. g. Rom., Col.), which it is known he had not at the time of writing visited. Again, it is said that he speaks only by hearsay of the faith and love of those he was addressing; which could not be made to agree with the circumstances of the Ephesian church. The reply is very natural. St. Paul had heard much of the Ephesians since he had last been with them, just as he had "heard" of the faith and love of Philemon, to whom nevertheless he had been a spiritual father (Philem. 5, 19). In fact, internal evidence speaks strongly for the Ephesians as the church addressed. For, not to insist on the peculiar propriety of a figurative reference to a temple (Eph. ii. 20-22) to persons who dwelt where there was a temple the wonder of the world, there are delicate, yet very noteworthy, resemblances between the address to the Ephesian elders at Miletus (Acts xx. 18-35) and expressions in this epistle. Examples are given by Dr. Alford (ubi. supr. sect. 2). It is, however, urged that the words "at Ephesus" (Eph. i. 1) are omitted, or supplied in a later hand, in the margin of some important manuscripts, such as the Vatican and the recently discovered Sinaitic codex. Some of the ancient fathers, too, are supposed not to have had these words in their copies. But the grammatical construction of the text would be most peculiar, hardly defensible at all, if the words in question, or similar ones, were not found there. Hence, as the heretic Marcion considered the epistle written to the Laodiceans, two theories have found support; one that this was the epistle referred to in Col. iv. 16. But this is merely conjectural, and is contrary to the whole current of ancient testimony. For, whether or no the words "at Ephesus" should be inserted, antiquity, with the single exception of Marcion, agrees in the belief that the epistle was intended for the Ephesians. The other hypothesis is that the letter was a circular, and that "at Ephesus," "at Laodicea," or the like, might appear in different copies, according to the places to which they were respectively transmitted. Many eminent critics regard this hypothesis with favor; and it must be confessed that it would solve some part of the difficulty. But it is probable that had the apostle intended this epistle for the immediate use of several churches, he would simply have added a direction, as he did to that to the Colossians, that it should be read elsewhere. On the whole the most reasonable conclusion is that it was addressed, according to the general belief of the church, to the Christians at Ephesus.

This letter was written at the same time with those to the Colossians and to Philemon, and despatched by the same messenger. It is very similar in many respects to the epistle to the Colossians. Yet there is a marked difference—for the one is controversial, in the other the apostle teaches the most sublime truths with little or no reference to the enemies who would debase the gospel. We may fairly believe, then, that, having first, according to the circumstances of the church of Colosse, delivered the needful instructions and warnings, he was prompted with a more enlarged scope to exhibit to those to whom he had for so long testified "publicly and from house to house" with tenderest love, the widest view of the great mystery of godliness. "He might pour forth to his Ephesians," Dr. Alford well observes, "all the fullness of the Spirit's revelations and promptings, on the great subject of the spouse and body of Christ. To them, without being bound to narrow his energies evermore into one line of controversial direction, he might lay forth, as he should be empowered, their foundation in the counsel of the Father, their course in the satisfaction of the Son, their perfection in the work of the Spirit."

As the subject of this epistle is great, the style is animated and lofty. There are two principal divisions, (1) the doctrinal portion (i., ii., iii.), and (2) the practical (iv., v., vi.)

I. In the first, after a short address to the faithful in Ephesus (i. 1, 2), the apostle breaks forth into an ascription of praise to the Father who had chosen his people in Christ, and introduced them to the privileges of his family; it being his will to unite all in Christ, in whom those who believed were sealed for their eternal inheritance by the Spirit to God's glory (3-14). He then prays that they might be enlightened to know fully the hope of God's calling, the riches of the glorious heritage he bestows, and the mighty power displayed in raising Christ to the headship of the church, which is his body (15-23). He proceeds to remind them that they were delivered from the death of sin to the living fellowship with Christ by God's grace, not of their own desert (ii. 1-10); they must, therefore, remember their former state, and that it was by the blood of Christ they were brought nigh, in whom as the Peace both Jews and Gentiles were united, and built into a noble temple which God by his Spirit would deign to inhabit (11-22). Knowing, then, the gracious call to the Gentile world, which, once hidden, was now revealed, and which the apostle, in spite of opposition, was to proclaim, they were not to be discouraged at the troubles he on that account endured (iii. 1-13); indeed he prayed that they might have inward strength to know the love of Christ, and be filled with the fulness of God (14-19). A doxology concludes this part (20, 21).

II. In the second part the apostle intreats believers to walk worthy of their calling, showing how they, though each had his several place, were to be one body for mutual edification in love (iv. 1-16). They were to walk in newness of life (17-24), in all holy conduct and Christian joy (25-v. 21). He then enforces relative duties (22-vi. 9); and, after a noble exhortation to war a good warfare (10-20), he notices the coming of Tychicus (21, 22), and concludes with a double benediction (23, 24).

EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

A TIE of peculiar affection seems to have existed between the apostle Paul and the Philippian church. In their city he had suffered grievous wrong at the hands of the heathen magistrates, and from the disciples there he had, contrary to his general custom, twice accepted gifts soon after his departure from them (Phil. iv. 15, 16: comp. II. Cor. viii. 1-6). Nor, when the apostle was far away a prisoner at Rome, did the Philippians forget him. They sent him a present by Epaphroditus (Phil. iv. 18); on whose return he despatched this letter, pouring out his heart in warm affection towards those who had so tenderly shown their love to him.

We may arrange this epistle in three sections:—I. After an affectionate introduction (i. 1-11), the apostle gives an account of his condition at Rome (12-26), and then exhorts to unanimity and Christian humility (27-ii. 16), adding an expression of his hope of visiting them, with a notice of Epaphroditus's sickness and recovery (17-30).—II. The apostle cautions the Philippians against Judaizing teachers, and confirms his warning by a special reference to his own experience, and thence, having shown how he renounced all self-dependence, he takes occasion to exhort to heavenliness of mind (iii. 1-iv. 1).—III. He gives various admonitions (2-9), then expresses his thanks for the present sent him (10-20), and concludes with a salutation and benediction (21-23).

It has been already noted that this epistle was written while St. Paul was a prisoner at Rome: it would seem not impossible to fix more precisely the date of it. Some time must obviously have elapsed after St. Paul's arrival in the great city. For the Philippians had become acquainted with his necessity there: they had then sent to him by Epaphroditus, who had been sick at Rome. We can not determine how long the sickness lasted; but we learn that the Philippians heard of it; and the news of their sorrow on hearing had traveled back to Rome, and had troubled Epaphroditus, not then it would seem convalescent, his mind being perhaps enfeebled by what he had suffered (ii. 25-28). His illness, therefore, was not a short one. Now, however, he was well and was the bearer of this letter. Again, for two years Paul dwelt in his own hired house, and preached the gospel without interruption (Acts xxviii. 30, 31). This was the case when he wrote to the Ephesians (Eph. vi. 19, 20). It is otherwise while writing to Philippi (Phil. i. 12). The apostle is not in his own house. He is in what is called (13) "the palace," i. e., the prætorium, or guard-house of the prætorian bands attached to Nero's palace. For it may be observed that attempts to make out that it was "Herod's judgment-hall" (Acts xxiii. 35), and that the epistle was written from Cæsarea, are futile. Hence the salutation from those "of Cæsar's household" (Phil. iv. 22). And it is evident that the apostle felt that a crisis was come (i. 20, 30, ii. 23, 27). He hopes indeed that he shall be delivered (i. 25, ii. 24); but he is in great anxiety, such as would naturally be felt by one, however strong in faith, to whom the awful expectation of martyrdom was very close. Indications of this kind point to the period after the death of Burrus, the prætorian prefect under whose charge the apostle had been, and the change for the worse in Nero's government. We may, therefore, reasonably fix the date of the epistle toward the close of St. Paul's imprisonment, about the middle of 63 A. D.

Its genuineness has been generally acknowledged. It is referred to by Polycarp, and cited by Irenæus and Clement of Alexandria, and other early writers. The fancies of some modern critics in opposition are not worth notice. The style is animated and affectionate, occasionally abrupt, but in a strain of almost unqualified commendation. The Judaizers whom Paul had to oppose elsewhere had, it is true, attempted to gain influence here—and it was perhaps as much a desire to warn the Philippians against them as to acknowledge the present he received, that induced him to write—but they had not succeeded. There were, indeed, some tokens of disagreement; and therefore the apostle earnestly presses unity upon them; but his admonitions are conceived and expressed in the tenderest spirit. They were, we may trust, not ineffective.

EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

THERE can be no reasonable doubt that this epistle is from the pen of St. Paul. It is cited by Justin Martyr and Theophilus of Antioch, and distinctly ascribed to the apostle by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen. The notion of a few modern critics that it contains phrases and ideas drawn from heretical philosophers of later times will not bear examination. It must also be conceded that it was written from Rome, most probably in the earlier and freer period of St. Paul's imprisonment, when he was allowed to dwell in his own hired house, and to preach the gospel without molestation (Acts xxviii. 30, 31; Col. iv. 3, 4). The date may, therefore, be fixed at about 61 or 62 A. D. It has, indeed, been thought by some that this epistle was written from Cæsarea, during the apostle's two years' confinement under Felix; but it does not appear, though the governor "communed with him" (Acts xxiv. 26), that he had then any general liberty of preaching.

The believers at Colossæ were mainly Gentiles (i. 27, ii. 13); and the letter to them seems to have been occasioned by information which Epaphras and Onesimus had conveyed. St. Paul, therefore, while rejoicing in the proofs he had of the fruitfulness of the gospel among them (i. 6), felt it necessary to caution them against that spirit of erroneous philosophy, Judaistic and oriental, fostered by the superstitious tendencies of the Phrygian character, which was derogatory to the glory of Christ, and which tended to the fatal Gnosticism which afterwards so corrupted the faith.

After his usual introduction (i. 1, 2) the apostle expresses his joy for what he had heard of the Colossians (3-8), prays for their further improvement (9-11), and specially that they might be thankful to the Father for having translated them into the kingdom of his dear Son, whose dignity he emphatically describes (12-20) as the reconciler of all things. He then enlarges on their being partakers of the reconciliation, reminding them that they were once alienated, but now settled in a blessed hope through that mystery of the gospel of which he was a minister, and for which he suffered (21-29); it being his anxious desire that they might come to the full knowledge of Christ, not deceived by plausible sophistries (ii. 1-7). He warns them, therefore, against the vain philosophy which would separate them from Christ, and would have them soar above creature-worship, and carnal observances, to those high principles which, if risen with Christ, they should remember ought to rule in them (8-iii. 4). He adds many special admonitions to a holy life, inculcating relative duties (5-iv. 6), and concludes with some private directions and greetings (7-18).

The striking similarity of the epistles to Ephesus and Colossæ should not be unnoticed. They were written about the same time, probably that to the Colossians first; and neighboring cities were likely to need the same kind of address. The two should be read together, and carefully compared.

EPISTLES TO THE THESSALONIANS.

WHEN St. Paul was obliged to quit Thessalonica he went to Athens. Anxious to visit the Thessalonians again, he found himself unable (I. Thess. ii. 18) and in consequence sent Timothy (iii., 1, 2). When Timothy rejoined him at Corinth (Acts xviii. 1-5; I. Thess. iii. 6), he wrote the first epistle.

Of the genuineness of this letter there can be no reasonable doubt. It is distinctly cited by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian; and its authority was never seriously questioned till of late years. The arguments produced against it have been most satisfactorily disproved. The occasion of writing is easily gathered from notices in the epistle. St. Paul was gratified at the report he received from Timothy (6-10). Nevertheless there were some drawbacks. Opposition from the Jews as well as Gentiles (Acts xvii. 5-8; I. Thess. ii. 14-16, iii. 2-4) had been experienced. And the Thessalonians were disquieted in regard to the Lord's appearance: they were restless, neglecting the daily duties of life, a conscientious discharge of which is the needful preparation for that day, and they imagined that believers who were already dead were somehow likely to be excluded from the full blessing of the manifestation of Christ's kingdom (iv.) Now notions of this kind would materially interfere with that sober, circumspect, holy walk and conversation in which graces are more valued than gifts, and victory is obtained in the spiritual conflict. The apostle therefore wrote to confirm the Thessalonians in the faith, to strengthen them against persecution, to rectify mistakes, and to inculcate purity of life.

The epistle consists of two main parts. I. After an inscription (i. 1) Paul celebrates the grace of God in their conversion and advancement in the faith (2-ii. 16), and then expresses his desire to see them and his affectionate solicitude for them (17-iii. 13). II. In the hortatory part he calls to holiness and brotherly love (iv. 1-12), he speaks of Christ's advent (13-v. 11), and adds various admonitions (12-24). He then concludes with a charge that the epistle be generally read, with greetings, and a benediction (25-28).

This is the earliest of St. Paul's letters, and may be dated at the end of 52 or beginning of 53 A. D.

The second epistle was written not long after the first; for Silas and Timothy were still with him (II. Thess. i. 1), probably in 53 A. D., and from the same place, Corinth. The evidence for it is quite as conclusive as for the first. It is alluded to by Polycarp, cited by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian, and, indeed, has never been doubted till (very groundlessly) in the present century. This letter is supplementary to the first. That had been in some measure misapprehended; and the coming of Christ was taken to be close at hand. Moreover, an unauthorized use had been made of the apostle's name. He therefore wrote to correct these mistakes, and to check the evil results which had flowed from them in disorderly conduct.

This letter comprises, besides the inscription and conclusion, three sections. I. A thanksgiving and prayer for the Thessalonians (i. 3-12). II. The rectification of their mistakes, and the doctrine of the man of sin (ii). III. Sundry admonitions (1) to prayer, with a confident expression of his hope respecting them (iii. 1-5); (2) to correct the disorderly (6-15). He then concludes with salutation and apostolical benediction, adding a remarkable authentication of his letters (16-18).

The style of these epistles is generally the same; and attempts to make out a diversity have failed. It is for the most part plain and quiet, save, as might be expected, in the prophetic section (ii. 1-12). For the interpretation of this prophecy other works must be consulted.

EPISTLES TO TIMOTHY.

THE two epistles to Timothy and that to Titus are termed pastoral epistles, as containing directions for the ministry and superintendence of churches.

In the early church they were unhesitatingly received as written by the apostle Paul; allusions to them are found in Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Polycarp, and others; they are expressly cited as Paul's by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, etc.; they are contained in the Peshito Syriac version; and in short it was only by heretics such as Marcion that their authority was disputed. But of late years critics have again opened the question. It is alleged that they show a state of things, especially in church government, later than the times of the apostles, that the mode of thought and the diction are in marked contrast to those of Paul's recognized epistles, and that it is well-nigh impossible to find any place in his history to which we can suppose these letters to belong (see Bleek, Einleitung in das N. T., pp. 464, 465). The objections ought to be very strong to overcome the force of the external evidence, which, as just observed, is very early and very decided. And it must be noted that those who think these epistles spurious rest their opinion mainly upon the supposed necessity of bringing them down to a later period than St. Paul's life-time, to a period in fact almost close upon the testimony given of their genuineness. It would obviously be more difficult for a forger of the second century to escape detection, than for one of an earlier date. So that it is hard indeed, if the letters be spurious, to account for their immediate and general reception by all but heretics, who on the supposition would be more gifted with spiritual discernment than the orthodox. But in truth the objections will not bear examination. It is impossible to institute such an examination here; it must suffice to refer the reader to authors where he may find the matter at large discussed, as Conybeare and Howson, Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. ii. pp. 553-557; Davidson, Introduction to the New Testament, vol. iii. pp. 100-153; Alford, The Greek Testament, Prolegomena, vol. iii. pp. 69-86. The result alone can be stated, that the best qualified critics believe the external evidence most satisfactory, and that the objections that have been urged are not sufficient to raise even a doubt of the genuineness of these letters. It is fair to say that some critics, such as Bleek (ubi. supr., pp. 485-497), admit that St. Paul wrote the second epistle to Timothy and that to Titus, though they assign the first to Timothy to a later penman.

The time when these pastoral epistles were composed has been the subject of keen dispute. Some fix them to the Roman imprisonment mentioned in the Acts, and deny that St. Paul was ever liberated. But certainly it would be hard to make the directions, e. g. in II. Tim. iv., fit in with such a theory. The state of things, too, at Ephesus, which may be gathered from what the apostle says, betokens a later period, when the "grievous wolves" of which he forewarned the church there (Acts xx. 29, 30) were beginning to appear, with the "perverse" men of their own body. Besides, the testimony of ecclesiastical history to St. Paul's liberation and a second imprisonment which was terminated by martyrdom seems too strong to be set aside. It is not unreasonable therefore to suppose that the apostle paid a visit to Ephesus, where he left Timothy, that after passing through Macedonia he was in Crete, assigning Titus a charge there, that he thence went into Asia Minor, and intended to winter at Nicopolis, but, being there very probably seized, was sent again a prisoner to Rome. If his death be placed in 66 A. D., the first epistle to Timothy might be written from Macedonia (or after quitting it) in 64 or 65, that to Titus soon after, perhaps from Asia, and the second to Timothy from Rome in the latter part of 65. Dr. Alford, as noted above, places the dates still later.

The first epistle to Timothy, after an inscription (I. Tim. i. 1, 2), reminds him of the charge entrusted to him to preserve the purity of the gospel in opposition to false teachers who perverted God's law (3-11). Having mentioned the gospel, the apostle dilates on the mercy which made him a minister of it (12-17), and reiterates his charge to Timothy (18-20); he next gives directions respecting the order of public worship (ii.), prescribes the qualifications of ministerial officers (iii.); and then, after foretelling the corruptions of the latter days (iv. 1-5), he instructs Timothy how to behave himself in his office (6-16), how to admonish and direct others (v. 1-vi. 2); a censure of false teachers follows, with a warning against the love of money (3-10); then, with a reiterated charge to Timothy himself, and a benediction, he concludes (11-21). The reference to Timothy's youth (iv. 12) has been supposed to militate against the late date of the epistle. But he could hardly, on any supposition, be more than thirty-four or thirty-five, young to be placed over such a church as Ephesus.

In the second epistle, after the inscription (II. Tim. i. 1-5), there are exhortations to diligence and firmness in holding sound doctrine (6-18), to fortitude under affliction, and purity of life (ii.), with a warning against false teachers and corrupters who should abound in the last times (iii., 1-13); Paul next exhorts to diligence in ministerial labor, and touches on his own good hope (14-iv. 8), then charges Timothy to join him shortly, and concludes with various directions, salutations, and a blessing (9-22). The style and tone are just what might be expected from an affectionate father to a beloved son.

EPISTLE TO TITUS.

THE short letter to Titus, after an inscription (Tit. i. 1-4) explains why the apostle had left him in Crete, and gives him instructions for his behavior there in ordaining elders (5-9), in censuring the evil disposed (10-16), in admonishing various classes, being himself an example to all, and enforcing his counsels with the highest sanction (ii.) He was also to urge obedience to constituted authorities, and holiness of life generally, from the consideration of God's infinite love in Christ (iii. 1-8): foolish questions were to be avoided, and heretics rejected (9-11). An invitation to join the apostle at Nicopolis, and some special directions and salutations, conclude the letter (12-15). The inhabitants of Crete were noted for their avarice, fraud, mendacity, and general depravity. It was no light charge, therefore, that was committed to Titus; and very precious to him would be the fatherly counsels of the apostle for his guidance among such a people.

The date of this epistle and the place of writing have been much controverted. Some would assign it to a comparatively early period, while others with more probability suppose that it was penned nearly at the close of St. Paul's life. It very much resembles the first epistle to Timothy; and the reasons which indicate the time of writing that will decide in regard to this letter. (See Epistles to Timothy.) Perhaps we may suppose it written, about 65 A. D., in Asia Minor, while the apostle was on his way to Nicopolis. Its genuineness is amply established. Besides earlier references, we have the distinct testimonies of Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian; and in fact, if the epistles to Timothy be received, it is impossible to reject that to Titus.

EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

THIS, the shortest of St. Paul's letters, bears upon its face decisive proof of its authorship. There is also abundant testimony to it given by early writers. And, though some have disputed its genuineness, and would exclude it from the canon on the ground of its being addressed to an individual on a private matter, yet the evidences for its canonicity are too plain, and the arguments adduced against its authority too superficial to require further notice here. The occasion on which this letter was written is clear from the contents. Onesimus, Philemon's slave, had absconded after robbing his master (18). Having fled to Rome, the providence of God had brought him into contact with the apostle, then in confinement; and the fugitive was led to Christ (10, 11). He was now ready to return to his earthly master; and St. Paul furnished him with this letter, in which he asked for him a favorable reception by Philemon, not now as a worthless slave, but as a brother beloved in the Lord. We cannot but conclude that the request of the apostle was granted. This epistle was written from Rome at the same time with those to the Colossians and Ephesians, i. e. about 61 or 62 A. D. It was probably altogether in St. Paul's own hand-writing, and is a beautiful specimen of tenderness, delicacy, and judgment. The style is natural and easy, and the topics are arranged with inimitable skill.

EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

THIS letter, placed in our Bibles after those which bear the name of St. Paul, is popularly ascribed to that apostle. There are, however, many questions connected with the authorship, canonical authority, the place in which, and the time when it was written, which have called forth the keenest discussions, and on which biblical critics are by no means as yet agreed.

It will be desirable to examine first, so far as space can be allowed in the present work, the authorship of this composition. Setting aside the supposed reference to it in II. Pet. iii. 15, 16, we must acknowledge that the apostolic fathers were acquainted with it. Foster (Apost. Author. of Ep. to Hebr., pp. 541-613) maintains that Barnabas, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, and Polycarp, all cite or allude to it. But none of these mentions the author's name. Pantænus, the head of the celebrated Christian school at Alexandria (about 180 A. D.) is the first who distinctly asserts the Pauline authorship. His successor, Clement, expresses the same belief. Origen is another witness. But this eminent man is hardly quite consistent; and his testimony may merely amount to this, that, while he believed the substance of the epistle to be Paul's, and considered the authority of tradition distinct in favor of its direct Pauline origin, he yet, impressed with the difference of style as compared with Paul's acknowledged writings, imagined that some one else, he is not able to say who, was the actual penman, not as an amanuensis, writing from dictation, but clothing Paul's sentiments in his own words. And this would seem to be the theory generally favored in the Alexandrian church. Eusebius, later, though acknowledging that it had been questioned by some, expresses his own conviction of the Pauline origin of the epistle. And indeed, through Syria, Palestine, and Greece, it was generally ascribed to Paul before the rise of the Arian controversy, and afterwards almost universally the eastern Christians agreed in this belief. But in other parts of the church there was a difference of opinion. Justin merely alludes to it. Tertullian calls Barnabas the author; Cyprian does not appear to acknowledge it; and it may be safely said that prior to the fourth century it was not considered in the west to be a genuine work of St. Paul's. The sum, therefore, of ancient testimony may be taken to be this, that, while the epistle was recognized in the earliest age, the authorship was not distinctly stated, that the eastern church soon began to ascribe it to St. Paul, while the western church denied or doubted that he was the writer, that there sprung up in Egypt first a belief, which afterwards spread, that, while the thoughts were certainly Paul's, they were expressed by some other person as the actual writer. After the fourth century the epistle was received as St. Paul's in the west; and this has since been generally the belief of Christendom, though the absence of his name, and the persuasion that another hand is apparent in the style of writing, have caused its place in the New Testament collection to be after Paul's acknowledged epistles.

Dr. Wordsworth, indeed, uses the diversity of opinions respecting the style and language of this epistle as a corroboration of St. Paul's authorship. "They show that the question . . . had even then been discussed and examined. And this uniformity of independent witnesses (that the substance was Pauline), who differ from each other as to the minor matter of its phraseology, and whose testimony reaches back to primitive times, and comes from the most learned school of ancient Christendom (the Alexandrian), will not easily be shaken by any conjectural theories of later criticism" (The New Test., Introd. to Ep. to Hebrews, p. 357).

If Paul be not the author, it is impossible to decide who was. Barnabas, Silas, Apollos, and others have been suggested. But these have for the most part been but guesses, and can only be so treated. In Germany, indeed, one or other has been adopted by eminent writers, Apollos most frequently, as by Tholuck and Bleek; and Dr. Alford among ourselves, after careful examination of the pretensions of the rest, has declared his judgment to be in favor of Apollos, on the ground that the author, a Jew, must have been a Hellenist, imbued with the thoughts and phraseology of the Alexandrian school, intimately acquainted with St. Paul, belonging, however, to the second rank of apostolic men, not a dweller near Jerusalem, but of note and influence with those to whom he wrote (Proleg. sect. i. 148-191). Yet it may be fairly said that the general opinion of men, at least in this country, best competent to decide, is in favor of the Pauline authorship. See Stowe's Origin and Hist., etc., pp. 379-389.

The doctrine of this epistle must be compared with that of St. Paul's acknowledged letters. Of course there is an agreement, and unity of teaching, through the whole compass of the Sacred Scriptures, which all proceeded from the same informing Spirit. But yet in different writers we see truth in different aspects; and, if we can discover the same line of teaching in various compositions, the presumption is not weak that these flowed from the same pen. Now we are to take into account that the object of the epistle to the Hebrews was peculiar, and that it was addressed to a class of persons not the same with those to whom St. Paul writes in other letters. If, notwithstanding, we can trace the same kind of sentiments, the inference of identity of authorship will be so much the stronger. Observe, then, how the author exhibits the superiority of Christianity to Judaism, both in the Jewish dispensation being a type of the Christian (comp. Heb. viii. 5, x. 1 with Col. ii. 17), and also in the rites and observances of the law serving for an example of gospel blessings, which are far more complete and lasting (comp. Heb. vii. 15, 16, 19, viii. 1-9, ix. 9, with Gal. iii. 23-25, iv. 3, 9). No such coincidences with Paul can be found in the writings of Peter, James, or John. Then, further, the person, work, and offices of Christ are similarly set forth here and in Paul's acknowledged compositions. For Christ's person comp. Heb. i. 3 with II. Cor. iv. 4; Phil. ii. 6; Col. i. 15. See also how creation is attributed to him (comp. Heb. i. 2, 3, 10 with I. Cor. viii. 6; Eph. iii. 9; Col. i. 16, 17). So again as to the relation between his humiliation and exaltation (comp. Heb. ii. 9, xii. 2 with Phil. ii. 8, 9); and Dr. Davidson observes that the idea "that Jesus not only passed, through suffering obedience, to an exalted state, but obtained it as a reward for obedience unto death" is found in the New Testament only in the epistles of Paul (Introd. to N.T., vol. iii. pp. 211, 212). Similarly the idea that, through Christ's death, both death and the influence of Satan were destroyed occurs here and in the acknowledged Pauline epistles (comp. Heb. ii. 14 with I. Cor. xv. 26, 56, 57; II. Tim. i. 10). See, further, how the sacrifice of Christ and its effects are spoken of (comp. Heb. ix. 26, 28, x. 12 with Rom. vi. 9, 10; and Heb. ix. 15 with Rom. iii. 25). So, also, as to Christ's exaltation, and access to the Father by him (comp. Heb. i. 3 with Rom. viii. 34; Heb. ii. 8 with I. Cor. xv. 27; Heb. iv. 14, vii. 26, with Eph. iv. 10; Heb. x. 19, 20 with Rom. v. 2; Eph. ii. 18). Then, again, the way in which faith, hope, and love are conjoined is thoroughly Pauline (comp. Heb. vi. 10-12 with I. Thess. i. 3; II. Thess. i. 4; and Heb. x. 22-24 with I. Cor. xiii. 13). Many more such coincidences might be produced; the above may serve for a sample; and it is submitted that, if any singly are of little weight, taken together they furnish no contemptible proof of the Pauline authorship.

Another point must not be overlooked. The structure of St. Paul's epistles exhibits usually a particular type. There is first the doctrinal discussion, with occasional strains of hortatory application, or highly raised feeling. Afterwards the practical admonitions follow, the prayer for those he addresses, the apostolical blessing, and the greetings. It is needless to say that these various parts are seen in the letter to the Hebrews. To be sure, personal matters are lightly touched; and the name does not appear. It may be hard to account for this; but there would be an almost equal difficulty in accounting for any early disciple withholding his name. Dr. Wordsworth, indeed, considers that the omission is more intelligible in St. Paul's case than it would be if any other man of that age were the writer. "The divinely inspired author," he says, "whoever he was, whose consummate wisdom is apparent from the epistle itself, was guided by God's Spirit, not only in writing the epistle, but in not prefixing his name to it. And, if St. Paul had written such an epistle as this, we recognize strong and sufficient reasons why he should have been restrained from following his usual practice, and that of other writers of epistles, and from inserting his own name at its commencement. But we do not see similar reasons of equal force for the suppression of the name of Apollos, or Barnabas, or Clement, or of any other person, to whom the epistle has been ascribed. Therefore the non-appearance of the author's name in the epistle to the Hebrews does not diminish, but rather increases, the probability that its author was St. Paul (ubi. supr., p. 361).

The mode in which citations are made from the Old Testament deserves notice. Doubtless there are some variations from Paul's ordinary manner; but there are also some extraordinary points of resemblance. The whole subject can not be investigated here; but the reader is requested to mark that Hab. ii. 4 is cited only in the Hebrews (x. 38), and, in a similar way, in Paul's acknowledged epistles (Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11), and that there is a still more remarkable coincidence between Heb. x. 30, and Rom. xii. 19; in both which places the Hebrew text and the Septuagint are departed from.

Prof. Robbins sums up his investigations with the following remarks: "The amount and value of the external evidence is, to say the least, strongly in favor of Paul as the author of the Hebrews. Internal evidence, though not perhaps in any one point taken by itself, so clear as not to admit of question, yet, in almost every particular, is sufficient to render the composition by the apostle Paul probable. Circumstances alluded to in the epistle, if they do not point to the apostle to the Gentiles as the author, do not, certainly, any more clearly suggest any other author. The sentiment and doctrines of the epistle, when its object and aim are taken into view, seem to us strikingly Pauline. . . . The general characteristics of form are the same in the Hebrews and acknowledged Pauline epistles, with, however, many differences, such as we should expect in any encyclical letter purposely anonymous. While some of the formulas of quotation are unlike those most commonly used in some of the acknowledged epistles of Paul, as those epistles differ among themselves, still there are forms of reference to the Old Testament strikingly indicative of the same hand; and passages quoted with peculiarities which scarcely admit the supposition of diversity of authorship. . . . The superiority of style so generally attributed to the Hebrews, when brought to the test of a critical comparison, does not only not seem to demand diversity of authorship but indicates a higher and more studied effort of the same mind and pen. Similarity, rather than diversity, in the Hebrews and acknowledged epistles of Paul, in the use of particular words and phrases, is now generally acknowledged."

In regard to the canonicity of this epistle little need be said. If the Pauline origin be taken as proved, the canonical authority will not be doubted. But, if it be supposed that Apollos, or other such writer, penned this letter, still the early testimonies above referred to, without naming the writer, sufficiently show how it was regarded from the beginning. It was included in the Peshito Syriac version. And, though for a while in the west certain doubts were felt, or it was left without notice, yet the testimony of the Greek and eastern churches was so strong that, from the days of Jerome and Augustine who received it, it was generally in the west also accounted canonical.

As to the time and place of writing, of course those who hold the Pauline authorship must differ from those who deny it. If St. Paul was the writer, it was perhaps sent from Rome about the close of his first imprisonment, 63 or 64 A. D. If it was the work of some other inspired man, it must still have been written before the destruction of Jerusalem, perhaps 68 A. D. from, Dr. Alford guesses, Ephesus.

That this epistle was no translation, but written as we have it in Greek, may be considered certain. But it is a matter of dispute to whom it was addressed. To Jewish Christians indisputably; but to what special community of them? Here again we have a wide circle of conjectures; and there is hardly a country where Jews may be supposed to have settled, from Spain to Greece and Asia, which some critic has not discovered to be the original destination of this letter. It was sent probably to the Jewish Christians in Palestine.

The epistle itself sufficiently explains its object and the occasion of its being written. The enmity of the unconverted Jews to the gospel involved believers in a two-fold danger, that of persecution and that of apostasy. The writer would meet this by proving the superiority of Christianity to the earlier covenant. Hence he exhibits from the Old Testament, and from the nature of the case, the superiority of Jesus to the high priests of the law, and the consequent superiority and sufficiency of his sacrifice as a means of reconciliation with God. The most intimate understanding of the Mosaic ritual is evinced; and the reasonings are intermingled with various solemn warnings, and earnest encouragements to perseverance in the faith.

The epistle may be thus distributed: 1. A demonstration of the deity of Christ by explicit proofs from the Old Testament; his superiority to angels (i., ii.), to Moses and Aaron, to the whole Jewish priesthood, is insisted on (iii.-viii.) and the typical nature of the legal ceremonies shown (ix. 1-10); Christ's sacrifice being that true and only sacrifice by which all the Levitical sacrifices are superseded (ix. 11-x. 18). 2. The application of the preceding arguments and proofs; those addressed are warned of the danger of apostasy, and exhorted to steadfastness in the faith of Christ, being encouraged thereto by the examples of ancient worthies, also to patience, peace, holiness, etc. (x. 19-xiii. 19).—3. Conclusion, comprising a prayer and apostolical salutations (xiii. 20-25).

EPISTLE OF JAMES.

THE author of this epistle, if not James the son of Zebedee, must be that prominent James, who was most probably the son of Alphaeus and the Lord's brother. He addressed it to Hebrew Christians of the dispersion (James i. 1), to those primarily that were scattered throughout Judea (Acts viii. 4), but with a further purpose of reaching generally those of Abraham's seed who anywhere had embraced the faith of Christ. His object was to fortify the minds of the disciples against the trials to which for their faith they were exposed, and to warn them against the sins of which as Jews they were specially in danger.

Bengel divides this epistle into three parts:—I. The inscription (i. 1). II. The exhortation (i. 2-v. 18), enforcing (1) patience against external trials and inward temptations (i. 2-15); (2), and then, from regard to the divine goodness (16-18), the importance of being "swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath" (19-21); the special admonitions for each being that hearing must be accompanied by doing (22-25), in silence (26), with compassion and self-denial (27), without regard of persons in public assemblies (ii. 1-13), so that generally faith must not be separated from works (14-26); that speech must be bridled (iii. 1-12); that wrath, with other swelling passions, must be restrained (13-iv. 17); (3), patience again, which the coming of the Judge, with the consequent destruction of the wicked (v. 1-6), and the deliverance of the just (7-12) should encourage, and which prayer will cherish (13-18). III. The conclusion, in which the apostle, having shown his care for the spiritual welfare of those he addresses, would have them diligent for the salvation of others (19, 20).

The time when this epistle was composed is uncertain. Some critics, believing that if written after the council of Jerusalem there would have been allusion to that, place it early, 45 A. D.: others, seeing a reference to the name of Christian (ii. 7), to what Paul had written upon faith, and to the near destruction of Jerusalem, think its date later, perhaps 61 or 62 A. D. The last supposition seems the more reasonable. The place of writing was doubtless Jerusalem. The canonicity of this epistle has been doubted. Eusebius ranks it among the New Testament books that were excepted against, but testifies that it was acknowledged and read as genuine in very many churches (Hist. Eccles., lib. ii. 23). It formed a part of the ancient Syriac version, which omitted some other of the questioned epistles, and was at length generally acknowledged. At the time of the Reformation doubts were again entertained of it; but they arose mainly from a notion that it did not harmonize with the epistles of St. Paul. On this topic little can be here said. The two apostles had each his own aspect of a cardinal truth; and their expressions have reference to the special need of those they respectively addressed. St. Paul vindicates the power of a living faith: St. James shows that if it be not a living faith it is worthless. The two are not at variance. The style of this epistle is earnest; the Greek comparatively free from Hebraisms.

EPISTLES OF PETER.

THERE are two epistles in the canon of Scripture which bear the name of St. Peter.

Of the genuineness of the first there has scarcely ever been a doubt. The early testimonies to it are numerous and decisive. Polycarp and Papias cite it. Irenæus quotes it, expressly naming Peter as the author; also Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen. And, though not introduced into the Muratorian canon, which when it speaks of Peter is confused and obscure, it appears in every other ancient catalogue (see Westcott Canon of the New Test., app. D. pp. 565–584). It is in the early Peshito Syriac version; and in short so conclusive is the proof that few have ever questioned it save some modern critics, whose arguments, such as they are, have been disposed of by Dr. Alford, Proleg., sect. i. vi.

The apostle writes to “the strangers (i. e., pilgrims on earth, comp. I. Pet. ii. 11) scattered (i. e., of the dispersion) throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.” From the mention of the dispersion we may probably conclude that, as he regarded Jerusalem still as the central point of holy worship, that city was not yet destroyed (see Wieseler, Chronol. des Apost. Zeitalt., pp. 559–563). Still it must not be supposed that St. Peter was writing only to Jews: various passages (e. g., I. Pet. i. 14, 18, ii. 9, 10, iii. 6, iv. 3) are applicable mainly to those who had been heathens, but were now converted to the faith of Christ. And then the churches generally in the provinces which Peter names had been planted by St. Paul, who had ever instructed them that all, both Jews and Gentiles, were one in Christ (Gal. vi. 15; Eph. ii. 14–18, iii. 6, iv. 3–6). Peter, writing to these communities with the purpose of confirming them in the doctrine they had previously learned, would never, we may be sure, pick out, so to speak, the Jewish believers from the Gentiles, and direct his counsels to them apart from their brethren.

The place from which this epistle was written was “Babylon” (I. Pet. v. 13), whether Babylon literally or Babylon symbolically (that is, Rome) has been questioned. Now Rome is called Babylon only in the poetic and highly symbolical book of the Revelation (e. g., Rev. xvii. 5, 18). It is not likely that it would be so termed in a prose matter-of-fact epistle, where other places or countries have their ordinary names. Besides, the order in which (I. Pet. i. 1) those countries are ranked is that which would naturally occur to one writing on the banks of the Euphrates, ranging generally from north-east to south and west; while it would be unsuitable to one sojourning in Italy. It was in the highest degree probable, seeing that Judea and Babylonia were in close intercourse, and many Jews had settled in the last-named country (Josephus, Antiq., lib. xv. 3, § 1), that the apostle of the circumcision would carry the gospel thither. And certain causes which had tended to unsettle the Jews there—as a persecution by Caligula, and a plague—had by this time passed away.

We can with much probability approximate to the time when this letter was written. The following notes may be laid together. Jerusalem, as already observed, was still standing. And Silas (Silvanus) and Mark were with the apostle (I. Pet. v. 12, 13). Now Silas was St. Paul’s companion, and did not leave him till he quitted Corinth (Acts xviii. 5, 18; II. Cor. i. 19). It was after that date, then, that Silas joined Peter. Again, Mark was in Rome with Paul when the epistle to the Colossians was written, in which there is an intimation that Mark would visit Asia (Col. iv. 10), while at a later date Paul desires that he may return to him in Rome (II. Tim. iv. 11). It is very likely that it was in the interval that he was with Peter. Still further, while Paul was at large, Peter would hardly have violated the compact of Gal. ii. 7–9. But, if Paul was in prison, unable to remedy the evils growing in the churches he had founded and might be said to govern, Peter, who probably had seen the epistles Paul wrote out of his Roman prison, might readily feel himself bound to confirm those churches in the faith. We may not unfairly conclude that Mark, having visited the Asiatic churches soon after the epistle to the Colossians was written, carried the news of their condition to Peter, and that this apostle under the guidance of the divine Spirit wrote to them by Silas, charging them to continue in that true faith in which they had been grounded (I. Pet. v. 12). The expressions in regard to persecution do not require us to bring the date down to the time of that of Nero: for they imply rather trial impending than actually present (ii. 12, iii. 13), and no greater amount of opposition than Christ’s disciples had always had to meet. Besides, it is not certain that the Neronian persecution extended to the Asiatic provinces. The probable inference from all this is that the epistle may be dated 62 or 63 A. D.

The purport of the apostle's writing is indicated in the verse just referred to (v. 12). Now the "true grace" wherein they stood, since we have no proof that Peter had himself visited these churches, must necessarily have been that body of doctrine which had been delivered to them by Paul and his associates. Keeping this in mind, and seeing that the strain of Peter's admonition was to fortify and encourage the disciples in the prospect of that more desperate struggle into which they were likely to be brought with the rulers of the world, we shall see that the various parts group well round the central design. St. Peter did not mean to teach elementary truth, but rather, recognizing the fundamental doctrines of the gospel which St. Paul had inculcated, to supplement the last-named apostle's teaching. He could do this with the more effect as the apostle of the circumcision, the one especially looked up to by those who imagined that Paul was inclined to undervalue the authority of the law. Peter thus strengthens his brethren (Luke xxii. 32). His address is very earnest; his mind ever dwelling on his Master, his labors and sufferings, and his expected manifestation to the joy of his now struggling people. All is in accordance with what we know of Peter's character, and resembles very strikingly his addresses as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. It has been already said that Peter must have been acquainted with St. Paul's epistles: he adopts their form of doctrine, and often reproduces their sentiments; so that tables have been constructed to exhibit the similarity by a comparison of passages. Similar coincidences have been pointed out between this epistle and those of St. James and St. John (De Wette, Einleit. in N. T., § 172; Alford, Proleg., sect. vi.). Thus one mind pervades the whole Scripture, one Spirit "dividing to every man severally as he will" (I. Cor. xii. 11).

It is not easy to arrange this letter into distinct parts; so many of the admonitions running into each other. The following is Bengel's distribution of it: it will illustrate the composition and connection as well as any:—

I. The inscription (I. Pet. i. 1, 2).

II. The stirring up of a pure mind. He stirs up the elect.

- (a) As begotten again of God. Here he mentions both the benefits of God to the faithful, and the obligations of the faithful towards God: these he interweaves and presses by three urgent considerations, to which force is added from the mystery of Christ:—
 (A). God hath begotten again to a lively hope, to an inheritance of glory and salvation; therefore hope to the end (3–13). (B). As obedient children yield forth the fruit of faith to your holy Father (14–21). (C). Purified by the Spirit love with a pure heart blamelessly (22—ii. 10).

(b) As strangers in the world they must abstain from fleshly lusts (11): (A). With an honest conversation (12); i. particularly (1) subjects (13–17), (2) servants after Christ's example (18–25), (3) wives (iii. 1–6), (4) husbands (7); ii. generally all (8–15): (B). by a good profession; i. by an answer for the truth and the avoidance of evil association (15—iv. 6). (The whole career of Christ from his passion to his death adds force to this); ii. by virtues and the good stewardship of God's gifts (7–11).

- (c) As participators of future glory they must endure afflictions. This all must do, (1) In the general position of Christians (12–19), (2) In the individual position of each (v. 1–11).

III. Conclusion (12–14).

The second epistle of St. Peter has perhaps less amount of ancient testimony than any other of the books in the sacred canon. And it is freely acknowledged by early writers that its authority was doubted. Still there are probable references to it in Justin Martyr, Theophilus of Antioch, and Irenæus. Origen and Firmilian distinctly mention or allude to it; and in the fourth century after Christ it was generally received, and thenceforward appears in the catalogues of canonical books. And we are bound in fairness to believe, as the fathers of that time were aware that this epistle had been objected to, that they did not receive it without satisfying themselves, by such evidence as they could command, that the objections were untenable. Olshausen has very carefully and temperately examined the whole question. He is quite ready to give up every testimony prior to that of Origen. But he reminds us of the very early classification of various books of the New Testament—the Gospels—the Pauline epistles—the epistles called catholic; which gradually coalescing formed with the Acts and the Apocalypse a single volume. So that, if not individually named, it by no means follows that this was unknown or rejected. And he shows that it may reasonably be supposed to have been included in the collection of catholic epistles. Even those who mention the objections to it received it themselves. And the objections had no definite ground: they arose rather from men's speculations about the contents. Olshausen's deliberate conclusion, therefore, is—"1. That our epistle, as far as we can ascertain from history, was used by the church, and was generally read, along with the other catholic epistles: 2. There were those who denied that Peter was the author of this epistle, but they were influenced particularly by critical and, perhaps, by doctrinal reasons: 3. That there were historical considerations which led them to assail our epistle is not probable; certainly it can not be demonstrated. History, then, avails scarcely anything in overthrowing the authority of our epistle" (Integr. and Authent. of Second Epistle of Peter, transld. in Amer. Bibl. Repos., July 1836, pp. 123–131).

Schott disposes of the argument taken from the alleged difference between the first and second epistles in regard to subject, and shows how by the working of the evil leaven in the churches, there necessarily would be a difference; each letter being suitable to the circumstances of the time when it was penned. He ridicules the idea that in the short compass of sixty-one verses the distinctive characteristics of the first epistle must reappear, and maintains that with equal wisdom the epistles to the Romans and to the Ephesians might be supposed not to be from the same pen; for, though the letter to the Romans is a regular exposition of Pauline doctrine, that idea of the church which is so prominent in that to the Ephesians does not once appear. A person of any religious sensibility would, I think, find it impossible to read the first chapter of this epistle with any care, and believe it to be the work of an impudent impostor, intending to deceive, and palm himself off on the credulity of simple believers as the venerable apostle whose name and position he assumes. Neither such sentiments nor such language could possibly proceed from such a mind. (Compare Stowe's Origin and History, etc., pp. 406-411.)

Of the time and place of writing nothing certain can be said. That it was penned not long before the apostle's death is evident; but where he was at the time we can only conjecture.

This epistle would seem to have been addressed to the same persons to whom the former was written, being intended as a kind of supplement to that (II. Pet. iii. 1), with the purpose of stirring up and confirming in the knowledge of the truth, with special reference to certain dangerous errors in both doctrine and practice, which were even then developing themselves, and which would spread and strengthen to the last days. For surely no pen could more accurately describe those whom we now behold, whose great principle is that "all things continue as they were," and who scorn the notion of the great God ever coming to touch the orderly mechanism of the universe (3, 4).

The following is Bengel's distribution of this epistle:

I. The inscription (i. 1, 2).

II. The repeated stirring up of a pure mind; in which—

1. He exhorts those who are partakers of faith, that, increased with divine gifts, they should show forth all zeal for growth in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ (3-11).—2. He adds motives; (a) from the constancy of true teachers (12-21); (b) from the evil of false teachers (ii. 1-22)—3. He warns against scoffers; (a) confuting their error (iii. 1-9); (b) describing the last day, with fitting exhortations (10-14).

III. Conclusion; in which—1. He declares his accordance with Paul (15, 16)—2. And concludes with an exhortation (17-18).

As to the question which is the earliest, II. Peter or Jude, there is one fact which ought decidedly to give the priority to Peter. In speaking of the heretics, Peter uses the future tense, that they were then to come, while Jude uses the past and present tenses, as if they had already come; and Peter's notices are very brief, while Jude's are quite in detail. The second epistle of Peter having been written in his old age, and addressed to churches in the remote and comparatively little known regions of Northern Asia Minor, was naturally somewhat late in its recognition by other churches.

EPISTLES OF JOHN.

THERE are three epistles ascribed to St. John.

There can be no reasonable doubt that the first epistle proceeded from the beloved disciple. There is abundant external evidence. Thus, a passage in it (I. John iv. 3) is cited by Polycarp, St. John's disciple; and, indeed, the universal voice of antiquity agrees in maintaining its canonicity. The internal evidence is equally conclusive; so that in confidently ascribing this work to the author of the fourth Gospel, Dr. Alford says, "To maintain a diversity of authorship would betray the very perverseness and exaggeration of that school of criticism which refuses to believe, be the evidence never so strong" (Proleg., sect. i.)

Some have imagined this not properly an epistle, but rather a treatise supplementary to the Gospel; the answer to which is that the Gospel is obviously complete, and needed no such appendix. There has also been a notion that it was directed to the Parthians. This, however, is groundless; it is a letter addressed generally to a cycle of churches mainly consisting of Gentile converts, among whom the apostle had labored, and with whose spiritual condition he was intimately acquainted. It was designed to certify them of the reality of the things they believed, to guard them against erroneous and licentious tenets, and to animate them to communion with God and to a holy life. It is characterized by artless and loving simplicity, blended with singular modesty and candor, together with a wonderful sublimity of thought. It is the production of an aged man, and, as presupposing an acquaintance with Christian doctrine, was probably written after the Gospel. Nothing more precise can be said as to the date.

Various arrangements of the subject-matter have been proposed. Thus the epistle has been distributed into six sections. I. An assertion of the true divinity and humanity of Christ, urging the union of faith and holiness of life as necessary to the enjoyment of communion with God (i. 1-7). II. The announcement that all have sinned, with an explanation of Christ's propitiation for sin. Hence the marks of true faith are exhibited, obedience to God's commandments, and love to the brethren; the love of the world being inconsistent with the love of God (8-ii. 17). III. Assertion, in opposition to false teachers, that Jesus is the same with Christ (18-29). IV. The privileges of true believers, their consequent happiness and duties, and the marks by which they are known to be the sons of God (iii.) V. Criteria by which to distinguish antichrist and false Christians (iv.) VI. Exhibition of the connection between faith in Christ, regeneration, love to God and his children, obedience to his commandments, and victory over the world; with a declaration that Jesus Christ is truly the Son of God, able to save, and to hear and answer prayer (v.-16). The concluding summary shows how inconsistent a sinful life is with true Christianity, asserting the divinity of Christ, and cautioning against idolatry (17-21).

It is necessary to add a brief notice of the disputed clause, "in heaven, the Father, the Word, and Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth" (v. 7, 8). The proofs relied on in favor of it are that it has (1) external evidence; for it is found in the old Latin version, and in most MSS. of the Vulgate, in the confession of faith and liturgy of the Greek church, in the primitive liturgy of the Latin church, and in citations by Latin fathers; also (2) internal evidence, for the connection requires it, also the grammatical structure of the Greek, especially the right doctrine of the Greek article; it is said, further, that the mode of thinking it exhibits is peculiar to St. John, and that its omission, if genuine, could be more easily accounted for than its insertion, if spurious. On the other hand (1) it is not found in a single genuine Greek manuscript earlier than the fifteenth century, nor is it admitted into the best critical editions of the New Testament; it occurs in no other ancient version than the Latin, and not in the best MSS. of that: it is cited by no Greek father, even when it would have seemed most natural to cite it; and, as to the Latin fathers, the earliest real citation (though this is not without suspicion) is that by Vigilius in the fifth century; and, where it appears in the liturgies, it is a late interpolation. (2) Again, it is argued that the words are alien from the context, and, in themselves incoherent, betraying therefore another hand. Internal evidence, even if it were thought favorable to the clause, must here give way. Internal evidence may show that a passage is spurious, when external evidence is in its favor, but no amount of internal evidence can prove a passage genuine when external evidence is plain against it. That is the case here; and, accordingly, scholars have with almost one consent pronounced against the clause in question. But it is well to mark that its rejection neither does nor can diminish the force of evidence which other undisputed passages of Holy Writ afford for the doctrine of the Trinity.

The second and third epistles of St. John may be considered together. They are clearly from the same pen. Eusebius classed them among the disputed books; he, however, himself received them. They were probably not included in the Peshito Syriac version. Yet many of the very early Christian writers cite or allude to them; we may therefore say that there is evidence sufficient to prove their authority, and that the reason of their being at first questioned was the fact that they were addressed to private individuals—less likely, therefore, to attract notice than if they had been sent to a community or church. There is no force in the argument, that the writer, by calling himself "the elder," meant to show that he was not the apostle John (comp. Philem. 9; I. Pet. v. 1).

As to the date or place of writing, it is useless to say more than that probably they were composed when St. John was residing at Ephesus, towards the close of his life.

The second epistle is addressed to a lady, "the elect lady" in our translation. Possibly one or other of the words used may be a proper name, and the lady in question be either "the elect Kyria" or "the lady Electa." She is commended for her piety, and warned against the delusions of false teachers; the commandment of Christian love being also pressed upon her.

The third epistle is directed to Gaius, or Caius. The name was a very common one; and it is impossible to say whether the person here intended was one of those mentioned elsewhere (Acts xix. 29, xx. 4; Rom. xvi. 23; I. Cor. i. 14). The scope of the letter is to commend his steadfastness in the faith, and his hospitality, to caution him against Diotrophes, and to recommend Demetrius to him, reserving other matters to a personal interview.

EPISTLE OF JUDE.

THAT this epistle was penned by the Jude, or Judas, who was one of the apostles, is here adopted as, on the whole, the more probable opinion. It is peculiarly a catholic epistle, for no special community is specifically addressed in it; it is, therefore, vain to conjecture who were meant. We can only say that there is a Jewish cast of thought; so that perhaps Jewish believers rather than Gentiles were in the author's mind. The place and time of writing are equally uncertain.

The design of it is to warn against unbelieving men, licentious, and mockers, who had crept into the church, though it is doubtful whether any as yet occupied the place of teachers. The vile character of such is shown, as well as their impending destruction, by a reference to the fallen angels, to the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, and to other presumptuous sinners of old time. The faithful were not to be alarmed at such an outbreak of evil; they had been apprised of its approach; but they must themselves persevere in faith and godliness, and seek to rescue others from the snares of the ungodly. The authority of this, as of several others of the catholic epistles, was not at first acknowledged; nor was Jude in the old Syriac translation. It is, however, cited by Tertullian as the work of Judas the apostle (De Hab. Mul., cap. 3,) and by many others of the early fathers. There is now little question in regard to it.

The alleged references to apocryphal writings in this letter have caused some perplexity. Passing over the notice of the contention of Michael with the devil about the body of Moses (9), of which the most probable explanation is that there were facts well known in the church which yet no earlier inspired writer had chronicled (comp. Acts xx. 35; II. Tim. iii. 8), it must be admitted that there is an apocryphal book extant which contains the words of Jude 14, 15. This is called the book of Enoch; and if it were published before Jude wrote, it would be hard to prove that he did not cite it.

But the probability is that this apocryphal work was written at a later period; and therefore the author might draw his statements, not unlikely, from the epistle of Jude itself.

BOOK OF REVELATION.

THE closing book of the New Testament, the only one therein which can strictly be called prophetic. It has its name as the translation of a Greek word, which is sometimes (slightly Anglicized) and used as its designation—Apocalypse.

It can not be doubted that the writer wished to identify himself with the apostle John. For no other eminent man of the name is said to have been in the early times of the gospel banished to Patmos (Rev. i. 9), and the expression used in i. 2 certainly points to the same hand that penned John i. 14, xix. 35. Accordingly, we find evidence, as soon as we could reasonably look for it, that this book was regarded in the church as the work of the apostle. At first the voice of ecclesiastical writers seems to be unanimous. It commences with those who actually knew St. John. Thus there is the evidence, more or less direct, of Justin Martyr, of Melito of Sardis, of Theophilus of Antioch, of Irenæus—a most important witness, who, having given an interpretation of the mystical number of the beast, appeals thereon to the testimony of those who had seen the apostle. Tertullian and others might also be adduced. But by-and-by the unanimity is disturbed; and Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria 248–265 A. D., a pupil of Origen, first expresses doubts whether St. John was the author of the book. He does not deny its high authority; but he thinks, from the way in which the name of the writer is put forward, and especially from the diction, so inferior in accuracy to that of the gospel and of the first epistle, that it could not have proceeded from the same pen with them, but must, as there were many Johns, have been the work of another of the same name. The testimony of Dionysius is by far the most adverse of early times. Doubts however increased; and the result may be generally stated that in the eastern church the authorship of the apostle was questioned or denied, while after the fifth century it was almost universally allowed by the western church. Internal evidence has been carefully examined. The faults of the diction have been exaggerated; nevertheless it is certainly a problem how the same individual could have at various times expressed himself so differently. Other arguments taken from the subject matter may be satisfactorily explained. Dr. Alford has elaborately examined the whole question, and—observing that the external evidence is of the highest and most satisfactory kind: it was unanimous in very early times: it came from those who knew and had heard St. John himself: it only began to be impugned by those who had doctrinal objections to the book: the doubt was taken up by more reasonable men on internal and critical grounds; but no real substantive counter-claimant was ever produced—he expresses his conviction, in spite of certain difficulties arising from the style and other phenomena of the book,

“that the author was the apostle and evangelist St. John” (Proleg., sect. i.) The reader may be referred also to an able disquisition in the Bibliotheca Sacra, April, 1864, pp. 319–347; also Stowe's Origin and History, etc., pp. 470–498.

With regard to the place where this work was composed, St. John distinctly declares that he was in Patmos when he had the apocalyptic visions (Rev. i. 9): the only question is whether he recorded them immediately, or not till after his liberation and return to Ephesus. In favor of the first branch of the alternative is x. 4, where he describes himself as at once beginning to write. But we can scarcely come to a certain conclusion on this point. As to the date, critics are not agreed whether St. John was banished under Nero or under Domitian. The testimony of Irenæus is distinct for the last named emperor. It has been thought, however, that some passages (as i. 7, ii. 9, iii. 9, vi. 12, 16, xi. 1) were composed before the destruction of Jerusalem; and expositors who interpret the seven kings (xvii. 10) of Roman emperors cannot afford to go so far as Domitian. But there is little force in the supposition referred to; and the application of the prophecy to individual monarchs is doubtful, to say the least. Besides, it is very doubtful whether Nero's persecution extended to the east. The only reason of any weight is taken from the language, more rough, as has been noted above, than that of the other works of St. John. Indisputably, if the Revelation were written early, we might well imagine the apostle using his Hebrew Greek in it; while his long residence in Asia Minor would influence his speech, and dispose him to compose his gospel in a more classical style. It must be allowed that there is force in this; but the style of the Revelation is purposely the style of the Hebrew prophets. We may venture to place the date in 95 or 96 A. D.

The scope of this book is indicated in i. 19: it was to make known the existing state of the Asiatic churches, “the things which are,” and to reveal the future history of the Christian church through its long pilgrimage to its eternal resting-place, “the things which shall be hereafter.” Hence we thus distribute the contents:

After the title (i. 1–3) and introduction (4–9) we have—

I. The first vision, in which epistles with suitable warnings, exhortations, reproofs, and promises are dictated to the seven churches in Asia (10—iii. 22).

II. Other visions, unfolding the mystery of God in the future fortunes of the church, and the downfall of all her enemies, till the final glorious triumph (iv. 1—xxii. 5).

III. In conclusion there is a solemn asseveration of the truth of what had been spoken, a blessing on those who keep the sayings of this prophecy, corresponding to that in i. 3, and a warning to expect their speedy accomplishment, with a final benediction (xxii. 6–21).

Of course no interpretation of this book can be given here; and the reader must be referred to the works of professed commentators. It can only be said that there have been three main schools of expositors:—

1. The historical, who interpret according to the course of events from the earliest age to the present time, marking fulfilments in the successive facts of history.

2. The præterists, who consider that the whole or nearly all was long ago fulfilled in the victory of Christianity over heathenism and Judaism.

3. The futurists, who believe that, with the exception of the seven epistles, the prophecy refers exclusively to things which have not yet come to pass.

But every devout reader, even though he may be unable fully to unravel the symbolic visions of the book, will find enough in it for profit. He can not fail to see somewhat of the conflict in which the Christian church has to struggle, and to learn the glorious rewards of victory. He will be stirred up therefore to a circumspect and holy walk, and will be encouraged by the gracious invitations and remarkable promises abounding therein to press onwards in holy hope towards the blessed end. An historical interpretation by no means excludes a higher spiritual fulfilment.

It is, moreover, a fact worthy of special notice, that, notwithstanding all the misapprehensions and misinterpretations and extravagant perversions to which this book has been subjected in every period of its history, it has always admirably accomplished the exact purpose which it was originally designed to accomplish, to wit, the sustaining and encouraging of Christians in times of distress and persecution.

CONCISE ACCOUNT OF EACH ONE OF THE APOCRYPHAL BOOKS.

THE word apocrypha signifies generally "secret" or "hidden," but it came by degrees to have a bad sense, and to mean "spurious" or "forged." Various reasons have been alleged for the use of the term. Dismissing others as untenable, we may fairly suppose that books were denominated "apocryphal" either because they were not read in public, being kept, as it were, in the background, or else because they were regarded as containing mysterious doctrines which were to be withheld from the multitude, and to be communicated only to those of understanding, to the initiated. Some there were of mythical character beyond any in the collection now known as "Apocrypha:" to these such a designation would still more fitly apply. And, as several such books claimed to be the productions of illustrious men, prophets, and inspired, whose names, it was soon evident, were falsely assumed, both the propriety of the term is obvious, and the natural consequent depravation of its meaning readily accounted for. The last-named reason, therefore, for the application of the word "Apocrypha" would seem the more probable one.

Though the apocryphal books had not the high sanction of the canonical Scriptures, and never formed a part of the Jewish canon, they yet were treated with respect by early Christian writers. They were cited, sometimes indeed as Scripture was cited, and they received generally the name of "ecclesiastical," "uncanonical," or "not fully received," rather than that of "apocryphal," a term more specially given to writings of an inferior cast. It was as the light of the reformation began to dawn that the question stood out more definite and distinct. The imperfect authority of these works was more fully exposed; while the church of Rome, on the other hand, gave them that formal sanction which they had never before received, pronouncing all but the two books of Esdras, and the Prayer of Manasseh, sacred Canonical Scripture, and anathematizing those who should not so receive them (Concil. Trid. Sess. iv. Decret. de Canon. Script.). In the Romish canon, therefore, Tobit and Judith have their place with the historical books of Scripture, Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus with the writings of Solomon: the Rest of Esther is made a part of the genuine book of that name: the story of the Three Children, Susanna, and Bel and the Dragon, are united to the canonical Daniel; and Baruch immediately follows Jeremiah. Whereas, in Protestant Bibles, in which these books find a place, they are relegated into a separate group, as peculiarly "the Apocrypha," and appended at the conclusion of the Old Testament.

There are particular characteristics which more or less distinguish one of these compositions from another. But the following remarks will apply to the whole of them.

They are not extant in Hebrew. And, though it has been conjectured on probable grounds that some were composed in Hebrew, or were based upon some Hebrew fragments, yet of a large proportion the original language, so far as it can be ascertained, was Greek; and there is the significant fact on all hands admitted that the biblical Hebrew terminates with the last canonical writer.

The prophetic spirit seems to have departed. In the canonical Scriptures, contemporary and running along with the historical records, there was the chain of prophets, men who announced authoritatively the messages of the Lord of Hosts, in the days of Israelitish independence, during the captivity, and after the return. And the latest in time, as the last in position, is that solemn strain which seems to close the sacred utterances with the warning that not again, till the day of Messiah was at hand, should the heavenly voice sound forth, and God's word be heard once more by men. The apoeryphal writers, allowedly posterior in time, nowhere take up the fallen cadence. The prophetic tone is not even assumed. There is no burning word from the Lord in them, making itself heard above the voices of men, and foretelling things to come. Evidently none of them has rekindled the lamp of the sanctuary.

There is a feeble and apologetic tone in these books. They do not teach with authority. The simple grandeur of even the Scripture narrative is wanting. So far from claiming inspiration, they sometimes bewail the want of it, and make excuse for the imperfection of their own writings (Eccus. Prologue 2; I. Macc. iv. 46, ix. 27, xiv. 41; II. Macc. ii. 23-32, xv. 38).

There is, further, an evident purpose, before alluded to, to father these productions on ancient distinguished men. Leaving the books of Esdras out of the question, which, as already noted, even the church of Rome gives up, we find pieces attributed to Solomon, to Jeremiah, to Daniel, to Baruch, when it is positively certain that they could not be the works of those writers.

There is the introduction of fictitious speeches, doubtful letters, and a romancing air in what seems intended to be a historical narrative. Even if the stories of Tobit, Judith, Bel and the Dragon, etc., could be made to fit in with known facts, there are yet unbecoming embellishments, mythological notions, careless inaccuracies, which betray not merely a lack of inspiration, but a lack of truth. See Tob. vi. 7, 14, viii. 2, 3; Rest of Esth. xvi. 10, 14; II. Macc. i., etc., etc.

We may go farther. There are inexplicable contradictions, and demonstrable falsehoods, in many parts of the Apocrypha. Thus Nabuchodonosor and Balthasar, i. e., Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, are represented (Bar. i. 3, 9-12) as both alive at the time when Jerusalem was taken; which, if we are to adopt the view that Belshazzar is the Bil-shar-uzur of Sir H. Rawlinson's discovery, is impossible. Also it is declared that no prophet was living at the time of the Babylonish captivity (Song of the Three Children, 15). Two different and contradictory accounts, moreover, are given of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes (I. Macc. vi. 1-16; II. Macc. ix.) And a statement is made (I. Macc. viii. 16) that the Romans had but a single yearly magistrate. Many other such examples might be produced.

Doctrines, again, alien from those in Scripture are inculcated; as the efficacy of prayers for the dead (II. Macc. xii. 43-45), and of prayers offered by the dead (Bar. iii. 4); a transmigration of souls, etc. (Wisd. viii. 20). There are also many assertions not in harmony with the doctrine of justification by faith (Tob. xii. 8, 9; Eccus. iii. 3, 30, xvii. 22, xxxv. 3). Further, an act of suicide is mentioned in terms of strong commendation (II. Macc. xiv. 41-46).

It is, moreover, a significant fact that neither our Lord nor his disciples quoted the apoeryphal books as they did those of the canonical Scriptures. The most formal quotation, indeed, would have given them no authority; since even heathen writers were sometimes cited by the apostles (Acts xvii. 28). It must not be concealed that some continental critics have of late diligently examined the Apocrypha, and have maintained that there are numerous allusions in the apostolic writings, and reminiscences, evidencing a familiarity with the Apocrypha. We may well admit this. It is reasonable to suppose that the Jews in our Lord's time were, many of them, well acquainted with so important a part of their national literature as the apoeryphal compositions. But, if we grant, as demanded, that the New Testament writers showed their familiarity with them by reminiscences and allusions, the argument is materially strengthened against their canonical authority. For we can hardly believe that, with these books in their minds, the apostles would never once have cited them as the Lord's word, as sacred Scripture, if they had really been the Word of God, the Scripture of truth. How is it that a sentence, a clause, is never introduced into the New Testament with the decisive, "It is written?"

It is conceived that considerations like these tell very powerfully against any claim that can be advanced for including the Apocrypha among the canonical Scriptures. But, in repudiating such a claim, there is no intention of unduly depreciating these books. They are very valuable as exhibiting the current of Jewish thought in the interval between the cessation of Old Testament prophecy and the advent of Messiah. They contain, several of them, many noble thoughts, and admirable maxims and precepts. They furnish a large contribution to an interesting period of Jewish history. Take them for what they really are, without requiring undue estimation for them, place them with other human writings, to be examined and sifted by the Sacred Record, without exalting them to an equality with that Word, as a coördinate judge, and we may well thank God for them, and may gather from their treasury many goodly pearls.

ESDRAS.

ESDRAS is the Greek form of Ezra (I. Esdras viii. 1; II. Esdr. i. 1, and elsewhere).

Of the canonical authority of these books there is no occasion to speak. For, though there is some respect paid to them by ancient writers, and one at least may have been included in some of the old catalogues, yet they are not received even by the church of Rome, being excluded from the canon as settled by the council of Trent. In the sixth article of the church of England they are denominated "the third and fourth books of Esdras," as the canonical Ezra and Nehemiah were, according to the old nomenclature, the first and second books.

The first apoeryphal book is for the most part a translation of the genuine Ezra, prefaced by the last two chapters of Chronicles, with a piece of Nehemiah at the end. The order, however, of Ezra is departed from; the reading of the law, too, is placed at an earlier date, with no reference to Nehemiah; and the translator took great liberties with the original text; if, indeed, his copy was conformable to that which we have. But one part (iii. 1—v. 6) is original, narrating a contest said to have taken place before Darius on the question, What is the strongest? Zorobabel was the victor, and as a reward had permission for the Jews to return and rebuild their city and temple. There are contradictions discoverable; and it seems likely that the book in its present state is fragmentary and incomplete. The compiler is supposed to be a Greek-speaking Jew or Hellenist, resident in Palestine. And, as Josephus was acquainted with it, and followed it, the book may probably be assigned to the first century before Christ. The style is good; but the work is of no historical, but only of some philological and critical, value. There are several versions extant, Latin, Syriac, and Armenian.

The second book of Esdras is a curious specimen of what is called the Jewish apocalyptic literature. It well deserves attention as illustrating the state of the Jewish mind in special reference to the Messianic anticipations. It consists of an introduction (i., ii.), then a series of visions (iii.—xiv.), concluding with an appendix (xv., xvi.) But the introduction and appendix have no real connection with the intermediate chapters, and are, there is every reason to believe, of later date. The original portion is, as has been said, a series of visions, in which the writer, who assumes to be Ezra, is instructed in certain mysteries of the moral world, and receives assurance that the righteous will finally triumph. A variety of extraordinary legends are included. Mr. Westcott contrasts Esdras with the book of Enoch of possibly an earlier date; "The fundamental difference of tone between the two"—the earlier expressed joyous anticipation—"appears to explain their divergencies in detail. The burden of Esdras is throughout, 'How long, O Lord?' The present world is utterly corrupt; a few only shall share in the promised redemption. Fasting and tears are the preparation for his visions; and the seer no longer looks upon the mysteries of heaven, but listens to them as they are revealed by the ministry of angels. Everywhere the language is that of an exile among the foul corruptions of Egypt, to whom the promised land is no longer the gathering field of nations, 'the joy of the whole earth.' The 'woes of the Messiah' are described with a terrible fulness which is hardly exceeded by the despairing traditions of the Talmud" (Introd. to the Gospels, chap. ii. pp. 102, 103). The date of this composition is undetermined. Some place it in the first century before Christ (from 40 to 25 B. C.); others long after (94 or 95 A. D.) Perhaps the earlier date is more probable. But the introduction and appendix are clearly of Christian times; and there is much reason to believe that in the visions some interpolations have been made by a Christian pen. The original appears to have been in Greek; this, however, is lost; and the Latin version was for a long time the only one known. An Arabic text of uncertain date, and not yet printed, was discovered in two Bodleian MSS. in the seventeenth century; likewise an Ethiopic text, not older than the fourth century, found also in a Bodleian MS., was printed by the late archbishop Lawrence in 1820. These Arabic and Ethiopic texts do not contain chaps. i., ii., xv., xvi., or the interpolations supposed to be of Christian origin in the visions. There are some other slight variations. The different parts of the book were all written in Egypt. It has been suggested that it was of the date of Macrinus; comp. xi., xii. with Gibbon, Decl. and Fall, chap. vi.

TOBIT.

It is questioned whether the account of Tobit is historically true—whether it has a basis of truth with legendary stories grafted thereupon, or whether it is altogether fabulous. But the improbabilities, the inconsistencies of the narrative, and contradictions to what authentic history proves and to what we know of geography, are so great and glaring, that it is not easy to arrive at any other conclusion than that the whole is a fiction (see Journ. of Sac. Lit., Jan. 1858, pp. 373–382).

The object of this work is to show that a truly pious man, who relies on God and is diligent in prayer and good works, will secure the divine favor and be delivered out of difficulties. The author was in all probability a Jew of Palestine; and, though no certainty can be arrived at as to the date of the composition, it may not unreasonably be placed before our Lord's time—perhaps about the Maccabean period, or even much earlier. And very likely the language in which this book was originally written was Hebrew. Several translations were made, some of them at an early date; and various texts, more or less differing, are now extant. Of these may be enumerated (1) Jerome's Latin, rendered as he says from the now lost Chaldee. But he probably consulted also some other text. This is the Vulgate, adopted by the Roman Catholics: Luther translated from it; (2) The Greek of the LXX., which some have believed to be the original; (3) A revised incomplete Greek text, printed by Tischendorf in 1846; (4) The Syriac, made from the Greek, in the London Polyglott; (5) The ante-Hieronymian Latin, published by Sabatier, of which some variations have since appeared; (6) The Hebrew text of Sebastian Munster, first printed at Basil in 1542; (7) The Hebrew of Paulus Fagius, of the same date, but which appeared originally at Constantinople in 1517.

The natural air of this story and the curious incidents it relates have always made it popular; and it was referred to or cited with respect by many of the early fathers. But it was not deemed to have a place in the sacred canon. The ancient lists almost unanimously are silent, or expressly exclude it. The small evidence which has been produced in its favor is very dubious. It is probably the first novel, in point of time, that was ever written.

JUDITH.

THIS apocryphal work professes to relate the history of a great deliverance of the Jews from the Assyrians by the instrumentality of Judith. The narrative is agreeably written; but, though some critics have imagined that it carries with it an air of truth, yet when examined there are difficulties chronological, historical, and geographical so great that its authority is now all but universally given up. It does not, however, by any means follow that it was written without a purpose. It may have been intended by an allegorical representation to stir up the Jews to a bold resistance against the enemies that then threatened them. Perhaps the names introduced, Judith, a Jewess, the daughter of Judah, Bethulia, the virgin of Jehovah, etc., may be taken to strengthen this view. Too much stress, however, Hebrew names being generally significant, must not be laid on this. The original language of the book was probably the vernacular Syro-Chaldee of Palestine at the time of its composition. And from it the existing Greek text seems to have been translated. Of this Greek there is a Syriac version extant. The Latin text is of a different cast, with various additions, transpositions, and omissions. Jerome in making his translation would seem to have taken the old Latin as the basis of his work, though he used a copy of the book in Chaldee. It is from the Greek, it may be added, that the English version was made: Luther's version follows the Latin text. As to the date of this book, it may be assigned to the first, or with yet greater probability to the second, century before Christ. The author was, no doubt, a Palestinian Jew. It is referred to by Clement of Rome (Epist. i. 55), and by several subsequent early writers. It is a very good didactic novel.

ESTHER.

CERTAIN additions in the Greek and Vulgate Bibles to the canonical book of Esther. Of the Greek there are two texts. These additions are by the church of Rome included in the sacred canon. But, as they are not extant in Hebrew, and did not form part of the Jewish canon, they are deservedly rejected by Protestants. They were probably the work of a Hellenistic Jew.

WISDOM OF SOLOMON.

THIS book is rightly placed among the apocryphal writings. For, though it bears the name of Solomon, it can not possibly have been written by that monarch. There can be little doubt that the original language was Greek. The style is free, and not at all like a version; and there are examples of paronomasia, or play upon words, to which Hebrew expressions would not correspond. And there are passages (e. g., Wisd. xv. 14) evidently betokening a later time than that of Solomon.

The real author it is impossible to identify. Some have ascribed the book to the celebrated Philo, who lived about our Lord's time, and some (as in Philo's time the Alexandrian philosophy was more developed than in this work) to an older person of the same name. Then again it has been surmised (from iii. 13, etc., xvi. 28) that the writer belonged to the ascetic sect of the Therapeutæ; but the grounds alleged are not sufficient to support the notion. Wilder conjectures have been indulged in. But all that can be said with any show of certainty is that the work was composed by an Alexandrian Jew, probably about 120 B. C., or some time in the reign of Ptolemy Physcon, or Euergetes II., 145–116 B. C. (see De Wette, Einleit., § 314).

This book has always been (and with justice) highly regarded. It has been called Panaretos, or "the treasury of virtue." Mr. Westcott characterizes it as "the noble expression of a mind which might have sought rest and joy in meditative life" (Introd. to Gosp., chap. i. pp. 75, 76). It was called forth by the circumstances of the times when many of the Jews were located in Egypt under a foreign lord, and required the comfort which the remembrance of God's dealings with their fathers was well calculated to impart. Hence the writer dilates on the perfections of God, and the ways of his providence, in order to confirm the faithful, and give them hope of deliverance from their trials. The precepts are of excellent moral tendency; and the whole work a valuable exhibition of the contemporary Jewish religious mind, tinged with Alexandrianism, and possibly in a degree evincing an oriental cast of thought. Some have imagined the book of Wisdom the production of more than one author, or that it has come down to us in a fragmentary shape; but careful investigation will demonstrate its unity and completeness. It falls naturally into three divisions.—I. An encomium on wisdom, with an earnest exhortation to strive after it (Wisd. i.–vi.)—II. An instruction concerning the means of obtaining it, its source, its nature, and its blessings (vii.–ix.)—III. A recommendation of it by the examples of Israelitish history (x.–xix.) Some divide it into two parts, i.–ix., x.–xix.; and some distribute into three, i.–v., vi.–ix., x.–xix. The writer speaks in the person of Solomon, perhaps not intending a forgery, but because the wise king was pre-eminently regarded in after ages as the fount and teacher of wisdom. The style is unequal, sometimes turgid, sometimes simple, and occasionally even sublime.

It has been asserted that the book of Wisdom is cited or alluded to in the New Testament. Some of the instances produced will be found by comparing Wisd. iii. 7 with Matt. xiii. 43; ii. 18 with Matt. xxvii. 43; xiii. 1 with Rom. i. 20; v. 18, 19, vii. 26, ix. 13 with Rom. xi. 34, Eph. vi. 13, 14, Heb. i. 3; etc., etc. Many of these, however, are doubtful; still, as profane authors are cited in the New Testament, it can not be thought incongruous or surprising if allusion is made to Jewish uninspired literature. Clement of Rome cites the book (Epist. i. ad Cor., 3, 27); and other fathers treat it with great respect. There are versions of it, Latin, Syriac, Arabic, etc., etc.

ECCLESIASTICUS.

THE title given in the Latin version to the wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach, which has often been regarded and cited as a genuine work of Solomon. Solomon's, however, it can not be; for the division of the kingdom after his death, and the sins of Israel deservedly punished by the captivity, are recorded in xlvi. 13-25 (comp. xlviii.-l.); nor was it ever admitted into the Jewish canon.

The notices in the book itself and in the prologues show that it was the work of one Jesus, a Palestinian Jew, who was thoroughly conversant with the Old Testament, and had collected many wise maxims, some perhaps ascribed to Solomon, all which he blended with observations of his own, in order to produce an ethical treatise which might be useful to his countrymen. This work was not finished when he died, and he left it to his son, from whom it passed to his grandson, another Jesus. This last reduced it to order, translated, and published it.

There seems nothing to throw serious doubt upon this statement: and then the question is to ascertain the date of the composition. Now, there are two indications of this; but each involves a difficulty. For the grandson says he came into Egypt in the reign of Euergetes; but there were two of the Ptolemies who bore that title. And (l. 1) Simon the high priest, son of Onias, is commended; but there were two high priests named Simon, and the father of each was Onias. The first of these Simons (about 310-290 B. C.) was the more distinguished man, and bore the appellation of the Just. It is the most reasonable supposition that he is the person commended; and then, as it would seem that Jesus the grandson visited Egypt in the thirty-eighth year of the reigning king, and this can apply only to Ptolemy Physcon, the second Euergetes, who, including his usurpation, reigned 169-117 B. C., we may suppose that the translation was made about 130 B. C., and the original compilation perhaps 180 B. C. This conclusion will still be most probable, if we believe that the 38th year spoken of was that of the writer's age, not of a king's reign. The Talmud mentions a Ben Sira, the author of a moral book which it classes under one division of sacred writings. Some of the sentiments there quoted from Ben Sira resemble passages in Ecclesiasticus; but, though by this name doubtless Sirach is meant, no satisfactory conclusion can hence be reached. The alphabetical collections of proverbs still extant ascribed to Ben Sira, are probably later compilations; and perhaps we may most reasonably suppose that the reputation of the son of Sirach caused various maxims of wisdom resembling his genuine production to be attributed to him. The original language of Ecclesiasticus was either Hebrew, or the Syro-Chaldaic vernacular of Palestine. Certain mistakes in the Greek text sufficiently prove this. This original, possibly seen by Jerome, has disappeared; but three ancient versions (besides the Greek) have been printed, in Syriac, Arabic, and Latin; and there appears to be another Syriac translation, yet only in manuscript, at Milan. The Greek text is not in a very satisfactory state: the readings and arrangement differ in various MSS. and editions.

Ecclesiasticus is a book of very considerable value, frequently cited in the church by honorable names, and, though not a part of canonical Scripture, yet occasionally read in the service of the English church. There is a general resemblance in it to the book of Proverbs; from which, as well as other sources, the compiler borrowed. But topics are sometimes discussed more connectedly and at greater length than by Solomon. There is little definite order, however, in the work; nor would it be easy to arrange its contents. The best division is that which distinguishes three parts: I. A commendation of wisdom, with precepts of general application for the regulation of life (i.-xliii.); II. An encomium on the patriarchs, prophets, and other Hebrew worthies (xliv.-l.); III. A prayer and exhortation to the pursuit of wisdom (l.) The style is poetical; and there is much acuteness of thought and beauty of expression in this work. Reference to it has been supposed in the New Testament (e. g., James i. 19 to v. 10, 11; Luke xii. 19 to xi. 18, 19); but such reference is more than doubtful. The fathers, from the end of the second century, repeatedly cite it.

BARUCH.

THE author of this book obviously claims to be the same with Jeremiah's friend; but forgery is apparent on the face of it. For, though it is not agreed what date is intended in i. 2, yet if it were the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, Jerusalem was not then burnt; if the time of the capture and destruction of Jerusalem be meant, Baruch was not then in Babylon; it is questionable whether he was there in the fifth year after; and, besides, the temple worship was then at an end, whereas this is represented (7, 10) as still subsisting. Moreover, there was no such high priest at that time as Joachim. Other proofs fatal to the authority of the book might be produced; but these are sufficient.

It at present exists in Greek and in some translations from it. But it has been maintained that the original language was Hebrew. Among the reasons alleged for this opinion is the fact that (i. 14) we find a direction that the book should be read in the temple; and it is scarcely conceivable that any one writing in Greek would have introduced such an injunction. But then there are linguistic differences between the former and latter portions of the work. It is not improbable, therefore, that the original of i. 1-iii. 8, was Hebrew, and that another writer, perhaps the Septuagint translator of Jeremiah (the same peculiarities of language found in both being hardly otherwise to be accounted for), took up this fragment, turned it into Greek, and completed the book as we have it in that tongue. For that in its present shape it proceeded from one hand cannot reasonably be doubted. The date of this production can only be conjectured: it has been thought that the Hebrew portion was composed towards the end of the period of the Persian rule, and that the last author rendered and completed it in the time of the Maccabean wars, about 160 B. C. Chap. vi., or "The Epistle of Jeremy," is a separate later piece. The Jews have never esteemed the book of Baruch: there are no references to it in any of the apostolic fathers; but Irenæus and subsequent writers occasionally quote it (including the epistle of Jeremy); and it is found in some of the early catalogues of canonical books. According to bishop Cosin, however, "the book of Baruch" does not necessarily intend this apocryphal work, but "those passages of him which are comprehended in the book of Jeremy" (Hist. of Canon, chap. vi. No. lxi.) It was placed in the Romish canon by the council of Trent; but Protestants justly deny its canonical authority. There are Syriac and Arabic versions of Baruch, a Syro-hexaplaric text from the celebrated MS. in the Ambrosian library at Milan, and two Latin translations: that of the Vulgate is very literal.

This book consists of two portions:—I. i. 1–iii. 8, comprising introduction (i. 1–14), confession and prayer (15–iii. 8); II. iii. 9–v. 9, containing an address to Israel (iii. 9–iv. 8), Jerusalem's lament (9–29), and a response of consolatory exhortation to her (30–v. 9). Chap. vi. is entitled "The Epistle of Jeremy." There is no reason why it should be appended to Baruch. It seems to have been written in Greek, perhaps in the first century before Christ; though some respectable critics would place it much earlier. It is a declamation against idolatry. In the Paris and London polyglotts there is a first epistle of Baruch to the nine and half tribes, printed in Syriac and Latin. This is supposed to be the production of a Syrian monk.

APOCRYPHAL ADDITIONS TO DANIEL.

THESE are the Song of the Three Children, the story of Susanna, and that of Bel and the Dragon, pieces which are found in the ancient Greek translations of Daniel, the first introduced between vs. 23, 24 of chap. iii.; the others, one at the beginning of the book and one at the end, in some editions, while other editions place them at the end as chaps. xiii. xiv. Jerome separated them and expressly noted that he had not found them in the original Hebrew, but had translated them from the Greek version of Theodotion. They appear, however, in the Vulgate without this cautionary notice, and have been received as canonical by the council of Trent. They were not so received by the Jews, nor by the Christian fathers who adhered to the Hebrew canon. Though occasional references to them are found in early writers, they are generally (the last two) treated as fables; and it may be added, as an additional proof of the small veneration paid them, that they appear to have been amplified after their first composition. Of their origin nothing can be said with certainty. The Song of the Three Children, consisting of a prayer and a canticle of praise, is believed by De Wette to have been written in Chaldee. But the reasons he adduces establish hardly more than a faint presumption. He thinks also, by a comparison of vs. 15, 31, 32, 62, 63, that the whole did not proceed from a single hand. The stories of Susanna and of Bel and the Dragon were indisputably written in Greek. There is a play on words in the first of them, which holds only in that language. But the legend of Habbacuc appended to the last (33–42) was perhaps originally Hebrew. Possibly there may have been some such person as Susanna; but this can be merely conjectured. The other piece is clearly fictitious. It describes a kind of idolatrous worship which did not exist in Babylon.

THE PRAYER OF MANASSES.

THIS is to express the penitent feelings which the king might have had while justly suffering for his sins. That he did so humble himself, and pray, and that his prayer was preserved among the ancient records of the kingdom we know (II. Chron. xxxiii. 18, 19). But the composition now in existence is certainly not genuine. For it was written originally not in Hebrew but in Greek: it is not certainly mentioned by any writer prior to the so-called Apostolical Constitutions in the fourth century after Christ, and it never was accounted canonical by the church. Yet it embodies pious thoughts: it is found in the Codex Alexandrinus, and, though allowed to be spurious by the church of Rome, is in the Vulgate. It is, however, not known by whom the Latin translation was made; nor can the date of the original be determined with any exactness.

THE BOOKS OF MACCABEES.

THE two historical books so designated have their name as containing the history of the gallant exploits of the Maccabean family in behalf of their countrymen the Jews.

The first book is a valuable document, comprising a history of events from the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes to the death of the high priest Simon 175–135 B. C. After an introduction and account of the Maccabean family to the death of the father Mattathias (I. Maec. i., ii.), the narrative relates first the achievements of Judas (iii. 1–ix. 22); next the events under the administration of his brother Jonathan (23–xii. 53); and thirdly, the establishment of Jewish freedom under Simon (xiii.—xvi.) This part closes with a notice that, though Simon had fallen by treachery, his son succeeded to his power, and maintained the position he had won.

It would seem that the author drew from written sources (ix. 22, xvi. 24); he has also inserted many documents (viii. 22–28, x. 18–20, 25–45, and elsewhere). Some of the documents are expressly called copies, and may therefore be supposed transcripts of the originals; of others it is said that they were "to this effect;" the writer has given therefore only the substance of them. We can hardly suppose that he was himself engaged in the events he records; but he may very well have had the intelligence from those who were. He has used his materials fairly and truthfully: and his geographical details are minute and accurate, exhibiting the pains which had been taken with the work. Still there are many errors arising from imperfect information: and the brevity of some parts of the narrative renders it occasionally obscure. Examples of inaccuracy are the statements that Antiochus the Great was taken prisoner by the Romans (viii. 7), that a single annual magistrate governed the Roman commonwealth (16); and many others might be added. The tone of the book is simple and natural; the style is easy and unaffected. In a religious point of view it differs widely from such Hebrew annals as the books of Samuel and Kings. The author did not feel himself empowered to describe the divine purposes and interpositions; and in one noteworthy passage (ix. 27) he acknowledges that the prophetic spirit had ceased among the chosen people.

There is every probability that the first book of Maccabees was originally written in Hebrew; and it must have been the work of a Palestinian Jew. From the closing sentences we may place the date of it either towards the end of the administration of John Hyrcanus or shortly after his death. We may therefore venture to assign it to some point between 110 and 90 B. C. The author of the Greek translation is not known. There are Syriac and old Latin versions, closely rendered from the Greek.

The second book of Maccabees is very inferior to the first; it is far less simple and trustworthy.

It commences with two letters purporting to be written by the Jews in Palestine to their Alexandrian brethren (II. Macc. i. 1—ii. 18). Then follows an abridgment of a work of Maccabean history, in five books, by one Jason of Cyrene, prefaced by an introduction (19–32), and closed with a brief epilogue (xv. 38, 39). The intervening part (iii. 1—xv. 37) begins with the narrative of an attempt to plunder the temple by Heliodorus, under King Seleucus Nicator, and terminates with the death of Nicanor, made governor of Judea. The period comprised may be reckoned as extending from 176–161 B. C. Nothing certain is known of Jason, the author of the larger work; but it has been conjectured that he lived between 120 and 100 B. C. As little is known of the epitomizer, who may have lived between 100 and 50 B. C. The two letters at the beginning were probably prefixed by him to his compilation from another source. The original language must have been Greek of an Alexandrian cast.

The history in this second book is a more full account of a part of the time comprised in the first; but the statements do not always agree. Moreover, there are demonstrable inaccuracies and contradictions in the book itself. Thus the account of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes (i. 13–16) is quite different from that in ix. This book, too, is peculiar in its religious tone. It contains legends, and records of supernatural events. The style is embellished and exaggerated; and the narrative is interspersed with moralizing observations. There are Syriac and old Latin translations. It may be added that neither Philo nor Josephus allude to the book.

These two books of Maccabees were acknowledged as canonical by the council of Trent; the proofs of their inaccuracy are sufficient to show the impropriety of that decision.

There are other three books, bearing the titles respectively of the third, the fourth, and the fifth books of Maccabees. As these were never received even into the Romish canon, it is unnecessary to give any account of them here.

Belief in the Bible.

No books of antiquity, no books of modern times, even, that have more than a generation or two of age, stand so clearly proved as to authenticity of origin and general correctness of text as the books of the Old and New Testament. Even Shakspeare and Milton, as to many of their works, stand far below the Bible in regard to these points.

It is not true, as has been often alleged, that we receive the Bible from Councils, who have met and deliberated and decided what is Bible and what is not. True, Councils have met and deliberated and decided, but in this, as a general thing, they have only expressed the convictions already existing in the great body of Christians. They took their ideas from the great Christian body which they represented, and did not impose any peculiar notions of their own upon the Christian community. I speak of the ancient Councils, the real Christian Ecumenical Councils of the first six centuries, and not of the usurping shams which followed them.

It is not true, that we have received the Bible from any particular church, as the Romish church claims that we have received it from them. No such thing; if from any church, it was from the Greek rather than the Roman; but we have not accepted it from either of them, nor from any other church. We have received the Bible on the unimpeached and unimpeachable testimony of competent witnesses, and these witnesses are of all creeds and of no creed, and the value of their testimony depends not at all on their belief or unbelief or misbelief, but wholly on other considerations, as is manifest, if one will look at it, from the very nature of the case itself. As to the genuineness and integrity of the Scriptures as we now have them, the testimony of Celsus and Porphyry, two Pagans, of Basilides and Heracleon, two heretics, of Josephus and Philo, two Jews, is just as important and just as decisive as that of Polycarp and Irenæus, of Origin and Tertullian, of Jerome and Augustine, Chrysostom and Basil, or any other pair of orthodox Christians whatever. It is this, to wit: What were the books which were received by the apostles, and by the communities in which the apostles labored, and on apostolic authority, as books of divine inspiration and permanent canonicity? This is the whole basis of a legitimate argument on the subject, and it is the only basis. We know from the New Testament itself that the Hebrew Scriptures, as they stood in the time of Christ and the apostles, were received by Christ and his apostles as the pure oracles of God, as books of divine inspiration and divine authority; and we know from the Scriptures themselves, and from such witnesses as Philo and Josephus, Celsus and Porphyry, Basilides and Heracleon, Polycarp and Irenæus, Jerome and Augustine, etc., what these books were, what they contained, and that they were identical with those we now have under the general title of the Old Testament. We know also from the New Testament itself, and from unimpeachable witnesses, pagans and Jews, heretics and orthodox Christians, what the books of the New Testament were and what they contained, and that they were identical with the books which we now have under the general title of the New Testament.

The few apocryphal books which were received by the Council of Trent never had commanded the general assent of either Jews or Christians as being of canonical authority. [See this subject fully discussed and all the needed authorities cited in Stowe's Origin and History of the Books of the Bible, pp. 541-583.] Catholic scholars themselves, of competent learning and candor, such as Jahn and others, do not place these books on an equality with the other Scriptures, but designate them as deutero-canonical, or canonical only in a secondary sense, and not as of prime authority.

But plain unlettered Christians, who always have been, now are, and always will be, the great majority of Christian believers, have neither the time nor the means to pursue these investigations or found their belief upon them; and how shall plain unlettered Christians be assured as to what is Bible and what is not? It is of the utmost importance that they should have this assurance,—more important than for any other class, for they always have been and always will be vastly the numerical majority. It is needful, however, only that they have this assurance for themselves, not that they be able to communicate it to others; that is to be left to the teachers whom God hath appointed in the church, and who should have all the means of full investigation, and faithfully use them and communicate the results.

How then stands the matter with the unlettered private Christian? Christ says, If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God; and the inspired apostle says, The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal: The Lord knoweth them that are His; and let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

Let the Christian be morally right, and in all that is essential in this important matter, he cannot be intellectually wrong.

This is as it should be; the Scriptures, the great truths of revealed religion, are for all classes and conditions of men, and not for the cultivated few; and they should be put in a position where all sorts of men can come at them; and this, as matter of fact, has always been true from the beginning of revelation to the present hour, and always will be.

But how is it true? The human soul is from God—normally it sympathises with God; it is only by depravity that it is estranged from God. Whatever, therefore, comes from God meets with a response in the unperverted human soul, and is received without reluctance or hesitation, whether the reason for it can be given in words or not. The sanctified soul has communion with God, it knows God's heart. Our Saviour Christ says: I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine, even as the Father knoweth me and I know the Father. The English translation here fails to give the full meaning of the original, which is, that there is just the same kind of connection and intimate knowledge between Christ and his flock that there is between him and the Father, and that is the reason why believers are inseparable from himself. So he says, The sheep follow him, for they know his voice, but a stranger will they not follow, because they know not the voice of strangers. And to the unbelieving Jews he says, Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. (John x. 4, 5, 14, 15, 26, 27.)

But this is mysticism, say some. True enough; and so the Bible is mysticism, and the whole Christian system is a mystical system.* It takes for granted an immediate communion between the soul and God; and he who has not this communion, especially he who denies the existence of it, cannot understand the Christian system, and is incapable of pronouncing a correct judgment in regard to it. But the Christian believer can be an irrefragible proof in regard to himself, if he cannot be in regard to others. He hath the witness in himself.

Moreover, even unbelievers are more convincingly affected by the subjective confidence of the experienced Christian, than by all the logic and arguments of the critic and the theologian. This is matter of fact. Human souls, in regard to essentials, are much the same, and the same things touch them in a similar way. He fashioneth their hearts alike.

If this be so, how then are there such diversities of opinion among Christians? The deviations are in regard to side issues, and not in regard to the great principle of salvation. In conversation once with a very zealous ultramontane Italian Catholic priest, I asked him, "What, after all, is really the ground of your hope?" He immediately replied, directly and unequivocally, "The mercy of God in Jesus Christ." Here is just where we all come together; there is no diversity on this point. Human infirmity and human short-sightedness and human selfishness lead men astray in a thousand different and devious paths; but all true Christians stand together here, The mercy of God in Christ. Here is the rallying point, this is the roll-call; all who belong to Christ muster here, as soon as the trumpet sounds and the drum beats. Before this power of the world to come, objections fade away, words are impotent, the Bible is read with the light of heaven, and the Christian rises to God with chariot and horses of fire. This is no fiction; it is a living reality, and has been so from the beginning, is now, and will be to the time of the end. We have the sure word of prophecy, whereto we do well to take heed, till the day dawn and the day star arise in our hearts; that is, till we arrive at that point of inward experience in which external proof is no longer sought for or needed!

* The dictionaries say that "Mysticism is a view of or tendency in religion, which implies a direct communication between man and God through the inward perception of the mind."

Moral objections are sometimes urged against the Bible.

For example, the conquest of Canaan, by the Israelites, has sometimes been denounced as unjustifiable and cruel. Objectors have chosen to forget that God taught thereby the great moral lesson that depravity deserves and must suffer punishment. As well might every other procedure of his providence be censured—the famine, the pestilence, the death which prevail in the world. Sin introduced these evils: sin rendered the inhabitants of Canaan liable to punishment; and God was not unrighteous in taking vengeance and employing human instruments as his executioners. To assert this would be to strip him of his authority over the world he made. The question is well argued by Dr. Fairbairn, Typol. of Script., book iii., chap. iv., sect. i., vol. ii., pp. 428–438. It was no more cruel, it was no more directly under the command of God, than the destruction of Lisbon or Peru by earthquake, than the overthrow of the old Italian cities by a volcano, than the ravages of pestilence, famine and fire, bringing indiscriminate destruction on the innocent as well as the guilty, sparing neither the infant at the breast nor the harmless and loving mother who is nursing it. All calamities of every kind that afflict and destroy the human race are equally under the control of God; and if any one of them is a wrong to his creatures, they are all wrong and equally so. It is said also, by way of objection, that the Bible relates gross immoralities even of men generally correct and God-fearing. This is true, for good men sometimes fall into sin, and the Bible is perfectly truthful. It neither conceals, nor excuses, nor palliates the faults of its best friends, nor exaggerates those of its worst enemies; in this, differing wonderfully from all human histories. It never commends, but always most pointedly condemns all the vices of men, to whatever class or party they may belong; and sets forth in fearful colors the shocking consequences of such vices even in this life; as in the sad stories of the families of Eli and Samuel and David. The right-minded man sees here most clearly the Divine hand. God and the Bible can always afford to be truthful, and they know it.

HISTORICAL CONNECTION BETWEEN THE OLD AND THE NEW TESTAMENT.

ARTAXERXES LONGIMANUS, king of Persia, who in his twentieth year had commissioned Nehemiah to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, being dead, was succeeded, after the short reigns of Xerxes the second and Sogdianus, by

B. C. 423. his son Darius Nothus. In the eleventh year of this prince's reign died Eliashib the high priest, after having filled the sacred office for thirty-four or forty years; and was succeeded by his son Jehoiada, or Joiada, the father of that Manasseh whom Nehemiah forced to retire to Samaria, on account of his attachment to an idolatrous wife. It is uncertain how long Nehemiah lived at Jerusalem after his important reformatations; but after his death Judea seems to have been added to the prefecture of Syria, and became wholly subject to the governor of that province. Darius Nothus

B. C. 405. was succeeded by Artaxerxes Mnemon; in the thirty-fourth year of whose reign, Jeshua being appointed by the Persian governor of Syria to supersede his brother Johanan, or Jonathan, who had succeeded his father Joiada in the high priesthood, was slain by him in the inner court of the temple. For this atrocious act, the governor imposed a fine of fifty drachmas on every lamb that should be offered in sacrifice; the total amount of which has been calculated at somewhat more than 1700*l.* per annum. The payment of this fine, however, continued only till the death of Artaxerxes Mnemon, which happened seven years after. But the Jews were not long allowed to enjoy a state of peace B. C. 359. and prosperity, for Oehus, who succeeded Artaxerxes, having subdued the greater part of Phœnicia, with which Lesser Asia and Syria had revolted on his accession to the throne, marched into Judea, took Jericho, and carried away a great number of captives; part of whom he sent into Egypt, and settled the rest in Hyrcania, along the shores of the Caspian Sea. After an interval of ten years, died Johanan the high priest, and was succeeded by his son Jaddua. B. C. 341. About three years after this event, the Persian monarch was poisoned, and the late king's youngest son, Arsaces, or Arsēs, was placed on the Persian throne; but, being also poisoned about three years afterwards, he was succeeded by the unfortunate Darius Codomannus. He had not long ascended the throne, before the infamous Bagoas, finding he was not one who would answer his purpose, resolved to remove him by the same means he had used to destroy his two predecessors. But Darius, being apprised of his design, made him drink the poisonous draught himself, and thereby became firmly settled in the kingdom, without further difficulty.

At this eventful period, Alexander the Great, at the age of twenty, succeeded to the throne of Macedon, and caused himself to be appointed general of the Grecian forces against the Persians. With a comparatively small army he

^{B. C. 334.} crossed the Hellespont, and passed into Asia; and having defeated the immense army of Darius at the river Granicus, he speedily made himself master of all Asia Minor. The next year Darius advanced to meet him with an army of 600,000 men; but, near Issus, he was again utterly defeated by Alexander. The battle of Issus was followed by the reduction of all Syria and Phœnicia; and Alexander marched into Judea, to punish the Jews for granting the Tyrians supplies of provisions, and refusing them to him, during the siege of Tyre. While he was rapidly advancing to the metropolis, the high priest Jaddua, as well as the great body of the people, by sacrifices, oblations, and prayers, humbly besought God to avert the threatened danger. It being communicated to Jaddua in a dream, that he should go and meet the conqueror in his pontifical robes, at the head of all the priests in their proper habits, attended by a numerous body of the people dressed in white, he ordered the gates of the city to be thrown open, and marched in solemn procession to an eminence called Sapha, which commanded a prospect of the temple and of the whole city. As soon as the king approached the venerable pontiff, he was struck with profound awe at the spectacle, and hastening forward, saluted him with a religious veneration. While all stood amazed at this behaviour, Parmenio asked the reason of such unexpected homage; to which Alexander replied, that it was not offered to the priest, but to his God, in grateful acknowledgment for a vision with which he had been favored at Dio, in Macedonia; in which this very person, and in this very habit, appeared to him, promising him the empire of Persia. Having kindly embraced Jaddua, he entered Jerusalem, and offered up sacrifices to God in the temple; where the high priest having shewn him the prophecies of Daniel, which predicted the overthrow of the Persian empire by a Grecian king, he went thence with greater assurance of success, not doubting but he was the person meant in the prophecies. At his departure, he granted the Jews the free exercise of their religion and laws, and exemption from the payment of tribute every seventh year. Egypt having quickly submitted to the conqueror, the following year he marched against Darius; and coming to a decisive battle at Arbela, he routed his immense army of about 1,100,000 men; and Darius being forced to fly for his life, was soon after assassinated by the treachery of Bessus. Having thus, according to the prophecies of Daniel, completely subverted the Persian empire, he rapidly extended his conquests from the Euphrates to the Indus, and from the Caspian Sea to the Southern Ocean. About six years afterwards, in the thirty-second year of his age, and the twelfth of his reign, he died at Babylon, ^{B. C. 323.} either in consequence of excessive drinking, or from having been poisoned.

After the death of Alexander, his empire was divided among his four remaining generals. Cassander had Macedonia and Greece; Lysimachus had Thraee, Bithynia, etc.; Seleucus Nicator had Syria, Armenia, and other eastern countries; and Ptolemy Lagus had Egypt, Libya, etc. In the first partition of the empire, Palestine, with Cœle-Syria and Phœnicia, had been given to Laomedon, one of Alexander's generals; but having been deprived of the two latter by Ptolemy, the Jews, over whom Onias son of Jaddua was then high priest, refused to submit to this new master, from their religious sense of the oath of allegiance which they had taken. In consequence of this, Ptolemy marched into Judea, took Jerusalem, and carried 100,000 of them captive to ^{B. C. 320.} Egypt; but there, considering their loyalty to their former conquerors, he used them so kindly, even promoting them to places of trust and power, that many followed them of their own accord. About six years afterwards, he was deprived of Judea, Cœle-Syria, and Phœnicia, by Antigonus; and having again made himself master of these provinces, he immediately afterwards lost them ^{B. C. 312.} by the defeat of Ciltes, one of his generals. They continued in the possession of Antigonus till his defeat and death at the battle of Ipsus, by the confederated forces of Ptolemy, Cassander, Lysimachus, and Seleucus; after ^{B. C. 301.} which they were assigned to Ptolemy, along with Egypt, Libya, and Arabia. Some time after the recovery of Judea by Ptolemy, died Simon the Just, son of Onias, and high priest of the Jews, in the ninth year of his pontificate; and was succeeded by his brother Eleazar. ^{B. C. 292.} He was distinguished for his wisdom and virtues; and is said to have completed the sacred canon of the Old Testament. Ptolemy Philadelphus having succeeded his father on ^{B. C. 284.} the throne of Egypt, the Jews found in him as generous a protector as they had experienced in Ptolemy Soter. During his reign was made the important translation of the Old Testament into Greek, afterwards called the Septuagint version; which event has tended more to disseminate the knowledge, and confirm the authenticity of the sacred Scriptures, than any other which happened from the time of their completion to the commencement of the Christian era. Antiochus Theos having succeeded his father Antiochus Soter, son of Seleucus, on the throne of Syria, maintained a ^{B. C. 261.} long and sanguinary war with Ptolemy Philadelphus, which they at last agreed to terminate by a treaty of marriage; in which it was stipulated, that Antiochus was to di-voree his wife Laodice, and marry Berenice, Ptolemy's daughter. But on the death of Philadelphus, about two years afterwards, Antiochus put away Berenice, and recalled Laodice; who fearing another change, caused him to be poisoned, cut off Berenice, her son, and all her Egyptian attendants, and placed her own son Callinicus on the throne. Ptolemy Euergetes, who had succeeded his father on the throne of Egypt, in revenge for his sister's death, slew Laodice, and subdued all Syria and Cilicia. Callinicus, two years afterwards, in attempting to recover his dominions from Ptolemy, was overthrown in battle; but Ptolemy, hearing that his brother Antiochus was preparing to join Seleucus against him, came to an agreement with Callinicus; and peace was concluded between them for ten years. The Jews at this time were subject to Ptolemy, and Judea was taxed at the annual tribute of twenty talents. Not long after, Antiochus the Great, taking advantage of the accession of the profligate prince Ptolemy Philopater, seized upon Cœle-Syria. In the following year, Ptolemy forced Antiochus to retreat to Antioch. Ptolemy then made a progress through Syria; and coming to Jerusalem, he offered victims, and made many valuable presents to the temple. But having been hindered from entering the Holy of Holies by Simon the high priest, who had succeeded his father Onias II., Ptolemy departed to Egypt full of rage against the Jews; where he deprived them of the privileges they enjoyed, and acted with great cruelty towards them. Ptolemy, having made peace with Antiochus, died soon after, worn out by intemperance and debauchery, and was succeeded by his infant son Ptolemy Epiphanes. Antiochus thinking this a favorable opportunity, entered into a league with Philip, king of Macedon, to divide the dominions of the king of Egypt between them; and Antiochus having marched with an immense army into Cœle-Syria and Palestine, he speedily subdued those provinces. Soon afterwards, however, the Egyptians took advantage of Antiochus being engaged in war with Attalus, king of Pergamos, and sent Scopas with an army into Palestine and Cœle-Syria; where he was so successful, that he took several cities, reduced all Judea, and put a garrison in Jerusalem. But the following year Antiochus marched against Scopas, and soon rendered himself again master of all Cœle-Syria and Palestine. Among others, the Jews willingly submitted to him; and rendered him such essential services, that he gave orders that their city should be repaired, and that those who had been dispersed should return and inhabit it; and, among other important favors, confirmed them in all the privileges which had been granted by Alexander the Great. After this, being intent on his war with the Romans, he married his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy Epiphanes, and gave in dowry with her the provinces of Cœle-Syria and Palestine. But not long afterwards, Antiochus having attempted to seize upon Egypt, was totally defeated by the Romans, and condemned to pay 12,000 talents for defraying the expenses of the war. Covered with shame, he retired to Antioch; and being unable to raise the money which he had stipulated to pay the Romans, he marched into his eastern provinces to collect tribute, and amass what treasure he could; and attempting to rob the rich temple at Elymais, he was assaulted and slain by the inhabitants of the country. B. C. 167.

Antiochus was succeeded on the Syrian throne by his son Seleucus Philopater, who was remarkable for little else than raising of taxes, to defray the tribute which the Romans had exacted from his father. Being informed that great treasures were deposited in the temple, he sent to seize them; but, when on the point of entering the sacred temple, the Syrians were struck with awe, and desisted. Soon afterwards, Seleucus was destroyed, and Antiochus, his brother, having heard of his death, and the attempt of Heliodorus, his murderer, to usurp the throne; and finding that there was another party forming for Ptolemy Philometor, king of Egypt, and that both of them were agreed "not to give unto him the honor of the kingdom," as the prophet Daniel had foretold; he applied to Eumenes, king of Pergamos, and Attalus his brother, and "by flattering speeches," and great promises of friendship, prevailed with them to help him against Heliodorus. Having by their means suppressed the usurper, he was quietly placed on the throne; and peaceably obtained the kingdom, as had been predicted in the same prophecy. Upon his accession to the throne he took the name of Epiphanes, or the Illustrious; but being in every respect "a vile person," as Daniel foretold of him, he was styled Epimanes, or the Madman. He was scarcely seated on the throne, when, being pressed by the Romans to raise their heavy tribute, among other means he deposed the good and pious high priest Onias, and sold the pontificate to his brother Jason for the yearly sum of 360 talents; and afterwards he deposed Jason, and sold it to his brother Menelaus for 600 talents. Incensed that the curators of young Ptolemy should have demanded for their master the provinces of Phœnicia, Cœle-Syria, and Palestine, which had been assigned for the dowry of Cleopatra, Antiochus marched towards the frontiers of Egypt, and meeting the forces of Ptolemy near Pelusium, they came to a battle, in which Antiochus obtained the victory. He afterwards routed the Egyptians, took Pelusium, ascended as far as Memphis, and made himself master of all Egypt, except Alexandria. The governor of Cyprus revolted from Ptolemy, and delivered up that important island to Antiochus; and the effeminate monarch of Egypt, having done little for the defence of himself and subjects, fell into the hands of the conqueror. While Antiochus was in Egypt, a false report having been spread of his death, Jason marched with a thousand men to recover the high priesthood, surprised the city of Jerusalem, drove Menelaus into the castle, and cruelly put to death all those whom he considered his adversaries. Antiochus being informed of these events, and supposing that the whole Jewish nation had revolted, hastened out of Egypt to quell the rebellion; and being told that the inhabitants of Jerusalem had made great rejoicings at the news of his death, he was so provoked, that having taken it by storm, he slew 40,000 persons, sold as many more for slaves, plundered the temple of gold and furniture to the amount of 800 talents of gold, entered the Holy of Holies, and sacrificed a sow upon the altar of burnt offerings, and caused the broth of it to be sprinkled all over the temple. He then returned to Antioch, laden with the spoils both of Egypt and Judea; appointing one Philip, a barbarous and cruel man, governor of Judea; and continuing Menelaus in the high priesthood. Antiochus hearing that the Alexandrians had made Physeon king in the stead of Philometor, under pretext of restoring the deposed king, made a third expedition into Egypt, and marched directly towards Alexandria to lay siege to the place. But finding that the civil war raging between the brothers would quickly render the country an easy prey to him, he seemingly again restored the kingdom to Philometor, excepting only Pelusium, and returned to Antioch. Suspecting his designs, however, Philometor and Physcon agreed to reign jointly in peace; which so enraged Antiochus, that he again invaded Egypt, ravaged and subdued it as far as Memphis, and advanced to besiege Alexandria. But Roman ambassadors charged him to withdraw his forces from Egypt, if he regarded the friendship of their state. Mad with rage at this disappointment, while marching back through Palestine, he detached from his army 20,000 men under the command of Apollonius, with orders to destroy Jerusalem, to put all the men to the sword, and to make slaves of the women and children. These orders were most rigorously put in execution on a sabbath day, when all the people were assembled at public worship, so that none escaped but such as could hide themselves in caves or reach the mountains by flight. After having spoiled the city of all its riches, they set it on fire in several places, demolished the houses, and pulled down the walls round about it; and then, with the ruins, they built a strong fortress on Aera, an eminence which overlooked and commanded the temple. After the infuriated monarch had returned to Antioch, he issued a decree to oblige all people in his dominions to conform to the religion of the Greeks, and sent one Athenæus, a Greeian idolator, to initiate the Jews in the idolatrous rites, and to punish with the most cruel deaths those who refused. On his arrival at Jerusalem, assisted by the apostate Jews, he caused all sacrifices to the God of Israel to cease, suppressed all the observances of the Jewish religion, polluted the temple itself, and made it unfit for the worship of God, profaned their sabbaths and festivals, forbade their children to be circumcised, burned every copy of the law which could be found, dedicated the temple to Jupiter Olympius, erected his statue on the altar of burnt offerings, and put every one to death who was found to have acted contrary to what the king had decreed.

Mattathias, great-grandson of Asmonæus, from whom the family were called Asmonæans, retired with his five sons from the persecution at Jerusalem to his native place, in the tribe of Dan. Apelles, however, one of the king's officers, came to the place of their retreat, in order to enforce the execution of the king's commands; and having called the people together, he addressed himself to Mattathias, to persuade him to embrace idolatry, promising him great favor and riches. This the good priest not only scornfully rejected, but slew the first Jew who dared to approach the idolatrous altar; and then, turning upon the king's commissioner, he dispatched him and all his attendants, with the assistance of his sons, and those that were with him; and putting himself at the head of his family, and as many Jews as he could collect, he broke down the idols and altars of the heathen, and retired into the mountains. Here being joined by numbers, who were strict adherents to the law of their God, and especially by those termed Asideans, and having thus gathered together such a company as made the appearance of a small army, he came out of his fastnesses and took the field; and marching round the cities of Judah, pulled down the heathen altars, restored circumcision, cut off all apostates, destroyed all persecutors wherever he came, and again re-established the true worship of God in all places where he prevailed.

But Mattathias, worn out with old age and fatigue, died the next year; and his son Judas, surnamed Maccabæus, according to the appointment of his father, succeeded to the command of the army. Judas, however, sufficiently compensated for the loss they had sustained by the death of the venerable priest; for having successively vanquished the various governors and commanders who appeared against him, he recovered the temple, repaired and purified it, restored the worship of God, appointed the feast of the dedication to be kept annually, and repaired Jerusalem, which had almost been reduced to a heap of ruins. Antiochus at this time was engaged in an expedition against the Persians, who, with the Armenians, had revolted from him; and when returning, having heard of the success of the Jews under Judas, and the defeat of his generals, he threatened utterly to destroy the whole nation, and make Jerusalem their common burial-place. But while these proud words were in his mouth, the judgments of God overtook him; for he was smitten with an incurable disease, being seized with grievous torments in his bowels, and a most intolerable ulcer, which terminated in his death. He was succeeded in the kingdom by his son Antiochus Eupator, a minor of nine years old, under the tuition of Lysias, the Syrian governor; who combined with the Idumeans and other neighboring nations to destroy the whole race of Israel. Judas, informed of this, carried the war into the enemies' country; and for some years proved a terrible scourge to the Idumeans, Syrians, and Arabs, and other heathen nations, till he was slain by the general of Demetrius Soter.

He was succeeded in the command by his brother

Jonathan; who, with his brother Simon, continued to rectify with astonishing bravery and prudence the disorders both in church and state; and Onias the high priest having settled in Egypt, where he afterwards built a temple for the use of his countrymen, according to the form of that in Jerusalem, they officiated in Judea both as high priests and civil governors, during the reigns of Alexander Balas and Demetrius during the preceding reign, contended for the crown and high priesthood against Hyrcanus, his elder but indolent brother, and succeeded in dispossessing him after a reign of only three months. Aretas, king of Arabia, having assisted Hyrcanus, besieged Aristobulus in the temple; but Aristobulus calling in the assistance of the Romans, he was obliged to withdraw his troops. Having, however, applied to Pompey, the Roman general, he decided for Hyrcanus, took Jerusalem, and seated him in the government, though he would not permit him to wear the diadem, and made CHRIST. In the interval, he built many cities, and to ingratiate himself with the Jews, almost rebuilt the temple.

His cruel attempt to murder the infant Saviour is recorded by the evangelist; and soon afterwards he died most miserably. After some years, during which the dominions of Herod were governed by his sons, Judea became a Roman province, and the sceptre departed from Judah, for Shiloh was come; and after being under the government of Roman procurators for some years, the whole Jewish state was at length subverted by Titus, the son of Vespasian. A. D. 79.

AUTHOR OF "A POPULAR COMMENTARY ON LUKE," "THE CHURCHES OF THE VALLEY," "A GUIDE TO THE ORACLES," ETC., ETC.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1870, by JOHN E. POTTER & CO., in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

A'aron. The son of Amram and Jochebed, and the elder brother of Moses and Miriam (Num. xxvi. 59; xxxiii. 39). He was a Levite, and is first mentioned in Ex. iv. 14 as one who could "speak well." He was appointed by Jehovah to be the Interpreter and "mouth" (Ex. iv. 16) of his brother Moses, who was "slow of speech," and accordingly he was not only the organ of communication with the Israelites and with Pharaoh (Ex. iv. 30; vii. 2), but also the actual instrument of working most of the miracles of the Exodus. (See Ex. vii. 19, etc.) Aaron was consecrated by Moses to the new office of the high-priesthood. The order of God for the consecration is found in Ex. xxix., and the record of its execution in Lev. viii. Aaron's death took place on Mount Hor, after the transference of his robes and office to Eleazar (Num. xx. 28). This mount is still called the "Mountain of Aaron." The wife of Aaron was Elisheba (Ex. vi. 23), and the two sons who survived him, Eleazar and Ithamar.

TOMB OF ABSALOM.

Ab'ana. A river of Damascus, one of those which Naaman in his pride preferred to the waters of Israel (2 Kings v. 12). It has been identified with the modern Barada. It rises in the beautiful plain of Zebedany, issuing from a little lake, and receiving in its course the waters of two or three fountains.

Ab'arim. A mountain or range of highlands on the east of the Jordan, in the land of Moab, facing Jericho, and forming the eastern wall of the Jordan valley at that part. Its most elevated spot was "the Mount Nebo, 'head' of 'the' Pisgah," from which Moses viewed the Promised Land before his death. These mountains are mentioned in Num. xxvii. 12; xxxiii. 47, 48; Deut. xxxii. 49.

Ab'ba. A Syriac word, signifying a beloved father. It was used by our Lord in his agony (Mark xiv. 36), and by Paul in recounting to the believers in Rome and Galatia their glorious privileges (Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 6).

Abed'nego. The Chaldean name given to Azariah, one of the Hebrew captives at the court of Babylon (Dan. i.; iii.), who was miraculously saved from the fiery furnace.

A'bel. The second son of Adam, murdered by his brother Cain (Gen. iv. 1-16). Jehovah showed respect for Abel's offering, but not for that of Cain, because, according to the Epistle to the Hebrews (xi. 4), Abel "by faith offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." The expression "sin," i. e., sin-offering "heth at the door" (Gen. iv. 7), seems to imply that the need of sacrifices of blood to obtain forgiveness was already revealed. Our Lord ings (20-23; xxiii. 6, 9; xxx. 7). Through David's reign Abiathar was high-priest, and the king's faithful counsellor (1 Chron. xxvii. 34). He linked himself, however, with the party of Adonijah (1 Kings i. 7), it may be through some jealousy of Zadok, who, perhaps placed in the high-priesthood by Saul, had not joined David till that monarch's death (1 Chron. xii. 28), and who is generally afterward mentioned with Abiathar (2 Sam. viii. 17; xx. 25). Zadok was of the house of Eleazar, the elder and more powerful; Abiathar of that of Ithamar, the younger branch, from which the high-priesthood was to pass on account of Eli's sin. And therefore, though Abiathar seems to have continued chief, yet Zadok is generally named before him. Abiathar's offence was forgiven; and we still, when Solomon was on the throne, find him named as in his office (1 Kings iv. 4). But shortly after Adonijah made his second attempt, and Solomon, knowing or inferring Abiathar's connecspoke of Abel as the first martyr (Matt. xxiii. 35); so did the early Church subsequently.

Abi'athar. The son of Ahimelech, the high-priest whom Saul put to death on the charge of inquiring of the Lord for David (1 Sam. xxii. 11-19). Abiathar escaped to David "with an ephod in his hand," and accompanied him in his wander-tion with it, deposed and banished him to Anathoth (ii. 26).

Abiga'il. 1. The beautiful wife of Nabal, a wealthy owner of goats and sheep in Carmel. When David's messengers were slighted by Nabal, Abigail supplied David and his followers with provisions, and succeeded in appeasing his anger.

Ten days after this Nabal died, and David sent for Abigail and made her his wife (1 Sam. xxv. 14, etc.). By her he had a son, called Chileab, in 2 Sam. iii. 3; but Daniel in 1 Chron. iii. 1. 2. A sister of David, married to Jether the Ishmaelite, and mother, by him, of Amasa (1 Chron. ii. 17).

Abim'elech. The title of the kings of Philistia, as PROLEMY was of the kings of Egypt, and CÆSAR of the emperors of Rome (Gen. xxi. and xxxvi.). It was also the name of a very wicked ruler in Israel, in the time of the Judges (Judg. ix.); and of a high-priest in the time of David (1 Chron. xviii. 16), who was the same as Ahimelech (2 Sam. viii. 17), and probably the same as Abiathar (1 Sam. xxii. 20).

Abisha'i. The eldest of the three sons of Zeruiah, David's sister, and brother to Joab and Asahel (1 Chron. ii. 16). Like his two brothers, he was the devoted follower of David. He was his companion in the desperate night expedition to the camp of Saul (1 Sam. xxvi. 6-9). On the outbreak of Absalom's rebellion he remained true to the king, and commanded a third part of the army in the decisive battle against Absalom. He rescued David from the hands of a gigantic Philistine, Ishbi-benob (2 Sam. xxi. 17). His personal prowess on this, as on another occasion when he fought single-handed against three hundred, won for him a place as captain of the second three of David's mighty men (2 Sam. xxiii. 18; 1 Chron. xi. 20).

Ab'ner. Son of Ner, who was the brother of Kish (1 Chron. ix. 36), the father of Saul. Abner, therefore, was Saul's first cousin, and was made by him commander-in-chief of his army (1 Sam. xiv. 51; xvii. 57; xxvi. 3-14). After the death of Saul, and Ishbosheth was proclaimed king, Abner led the men of Israel against those of Judah under Joab, and was defeated. Afterward, incensed at the ingratitude of his king, he inclined to the side of David, by whom he was eventually received. He was at last treacherously murdered by Joab and his brother Abishai, at the gate of Hebron. As a token of respect David followed the bier, and poured forth a simple dirge over the slain (2 Sam. iii. 33, 34).

Abomination. An object of detestation. Sin is called an abomination. Various gross practices are so called. Wearing the dress of the opposite sex (Deut. xxii. 5). Lying (Prov. xii. 22). False weights (Isa. lxvi. 3). False doctrines (Rev. xvii. 4). Idols (Deut. vii. 26). Proud persons (Prov. xvi. 5). The sacrifices, ways, and even thoughts of the wicked (Prov. xv. 8, 9, 26). And "he that turneth away his ears from hearing the law, even his prayers shall be an abomination."

ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION is mentioned by our Saviour as a sign of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, with reference to Dan. ix. 27; xi. 31; xii. 11. The allusion is to the Roman armies, which, as heathen, were hateful to the Jews.

A'braham. A wandering shepherd of vast wealth and pre-eminent piety. He was born A.M. 2008, only two years after the death of Noah, though there were nine generations between them. Some learned chronologers place his birth sixty years before Noah's death. Being the progenitor of all the Jews, and the brightest example of justifying faith, he was called the "Father of the faithful." His name Abram, or "high father," was changed, when God promised him a great posterity, into Abraham, or "father of a multitude" (Gen. xvii. 4, 5). His history is one of deep interest, and is given in Genesis at great length.

A'braham's Bosom. A figurative expression, not implying pre-eminent favour to one individual (as in John xiii. 23), but denoting the happy condition in the future state of all Abraham's real children (Luke xvi. 23).

Ab'salom. 1. Third son of David, by Maachah, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur. After David committed his great crime (2 Sam. xi.), he appears as the instrument by whom was fulfilled God's threat, that "evil should be raised up against him out of his own house, and that his neighbour should lie with his wives in the sight of the sun" (2 Sam. xii. 11). By his order his servants murdered his half-brother Amnon, for having violated his sister Tamar. Afterward, through his beauty, luxuriant hair (2 Sam. xiv. 25, 26), splendid retinue, fair speeches and courtesies, he "stole the hearts of the men of Israel" (xv. 2-6), and rebelled against his father. At first he was successful and occupied Jerusalem, taking possession of David's harem, David having fled over the Jordan. At last, after being anointed king, he crossed the Jordan to attack his father, who had rallied a force about him. A decisive battle was fought in the wood of Ephraim. Absalom was defeated, his long hair became entangled in the branches of a terebinth (or oak), where he was left hanging, his mule running away from him. He was despatched by Joab. An existing monument in the Valley of Jehoshaphat bears the name of Absalom's Tomb, but it no doubt belongs to a later period. 2. The father of Matthias (1 Mac. xi. 70), and Jonathan (1 Mac. xiii. 11).

Ac'cho. A seaport town on the coast of Palestine, situated on the northern headland of a bay to which it gives name; Mount Carmel being at the other extremity. Aecho was subsequently called Ptolemais (Acts xxi. 7), and is mentioned in the wars of the Maccabees. By the Romans it was made a colony; in modern times it is known by the name of St. Jean d'Acre, and is still a place of importance.

Acel'dama. "The field of blood;" the name given by the Jews of Jerusalem to a field near Jerusalem, purchased by Judas with the money which he received for the betrayal of Christ, and so called from his violent death therein (Acts i. 19). This is apparently at variance with the account of St. Matthew (xxvii. 8), according to which the "field of blood" was purchased by the priests with the thirty pieces of silver, after they had been cast down by Judas, as a burial-place for strangers, the locality being well known at the time as "the field of the potter." The spot is still used by the Armenians for a graveyard. It is now about one hundred feet long and seventy feet broad, and is called Campo Santo. It is surrounded by a wall, and is, in fact, a vast vault arched over.

HORNED CERASTES.

A'chan. An Israelite of the tribe of Judah, who, when Jericho and all that it contained were accursed and devoted to destruction, secreted a portion of the spoil in his tent. For this sin Jehovah punished Israel by their defeat in the attack upon Ai. When Achan confessed his guilt, and the booty was discovered, he was stoned to death, with his whole family, by the people in a valley situated between Ai and Jericho, and their remains, together with his property, were burnt (Josh. vii. 16-22). From this event the valley received the name of Achor (i. e., trouble).

A'chish. A Philistine king of Gath, who in the title to the 34th Psalm is called Abimelech. David twice found a refuge with him when he fled from Saul. On the first occasion, being recognized by the servants of Achish as one celebrated for his victories over the Philistines, he was alarmed for his safety, and feigned madness (1 Sam. xxi. 10-13). [DAVID.] From Achish he fled to the cave of Adullam. On a second occasion David fled to Achish with six hundred men (1 Sam. xxvii. 2), and remained at Gath a year and four months.

ADORATION.—ANCIENT EGYPTIAN.

Ach'sah. The daughter of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh. To excite some brave warriors to wrest Kirjath-sepher from the Canaanitish giants, Caleb proffered Achsah as his reward. On these terms, Othniel, her cousin, quickly obtained her. In her way home to her husband's residence, she alighted from her ass, threw herself at her father's feet, and begged that, as he had portioned her with a south, a dry land, he would give her some moist field, abounding with springs of water; he gave her one, or perhaps two fields thoroughly moist. Josh. xv. 16-19; Judg. i. 12-15.

A'dah. 1. The first mentioned of the two wives of Lamech, by whom were born to him Jabal and Jubal (Gen. iv. 19). 2. A Hittite, one of the three wives of Esau, mother of Eliphaz (Gen. xxxvi. 2, 10, 12, 16). In Gen. xxvi. 34 she is called BASHEMATH.

PLOUGH AND IMPLEMENTS USED IN ASIA MINOR.

Ad'am. The name given in Scripture to the first man. It apparently has reference to the ground from which he was formed, which is called in Hebrew Adamah. The idea of redness of colour seems to be inherent in either word. The creation of man was the work of the sixth day. His formation was the ultimate object of the Creator. It was with reference to him that all things were designed. He was to be the "roof and crown" of the whole fabric of the world. In the first nine chapters of Genesis there appear to be three distinct histories relating more or less to the life of Adam. The first man was a true man, with the powers of a man and the innocence of a child. He is, moreover, spoken of by St. Paul as being "the figure of Him that was to come," the second Adam, Christ Jesus (Rom. v. 14). Through the subtlety of the serpent, the woman who was given to be with Adam was beguiled to partake of the fruit of the forbidden tree and gave it to her husband. Adam is stated to have lived nine hundred and thirty years. His sons mentioned in Scripture are Cain, Abel, and Seth: it is implied, however, that he had others.

Adder (Toxica of Egypt). This word is used as the representative of four Hebrew names of poisonous serpents, viz., Achshab, Pethen, Tsepha or Tsiph'oni, and Shēphāphōn. As the Jews were probably acquainted with only five or six species of poisonous serpents, and as Pethen and Shēphāphōn were probably the Egyptian Cobra and the Horned Viper, Achshab may be the Toxica of Egypt and Northern Africa, called by naturalists the Echis arenicola.

Adjure. To bind one by oath, as under the penalty of a fearful curse (Josh. vi. 26; Mark v. 7). It was a custom among the Jews to adjure, which was by a form of execration laid on the person if he did not answer truly. It was the same as administering an oath is now; so that whom David surrendered to the Gibeonites in satisfaction for the endeavours of Saul to extirpate them (2 Sam. xxi. 8).

Adul'mam. City of Judah, and a place of great antiquity. Fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chron. xi. 7), it was one of the towns recaptured by the Jews after their return from Babylon (Neh. xi. 30), and still a city in the times of the Maccabees (2 Mac. xii. 38).

Adultery. A general term for every species of unchastity, but now generally restricted to impurity by married persons. In a spiritual sense it means idolatry (Jer. iii. 9; Ezek. xxiii. 37).

Agriculture. This, though preminent in the scriptural narrative concerning Adam, Cain and Noah, was little cared for by the patriarchs. The pastoral life was the means of keeping the sacred race, whilst yet a family, distinct from mixture and locally unattached, especially whilst in Egypt. When, grown into a nation, they conquered their future seats, agriculture supplied a similar check on the foreign intercourse and speedy demoralization, especially as regards idolatry, which commerce would have caused. Thus agriculture became the basis of the Mosaic commonwealth.

Ploughing. The kind of plough used was probably very light, one yoke of oxen usually sufficing to draw it. Mountains and steep places were hoed (Isa. vii. 25).

Reaping and Threshing. The wheat, etc., were reaped by the sickle or pulled up by the roots. They were bound in sheaves—a process prominent in Scripture. Oxen, etc., forbidden to be muzzled (Deut. xxv. 4), trampled out the grain. At a later time the Jews used a threshing-sledge called morag (Isa. xli. 15; 2 Sam. xxiv. 22; 1 Chron. xxi. 23), probably resembling the nôreg, still employed in Egypt.

ALTAR OF BURNT-OFFERING.

A'gur. The son of Jakeh, an unknown Hebrew sage, who uttered or collected the sayings of wisdom recorded in Prov. xxx.

Ahasue'rus. There were several kings of this name: 1. ASTYAGES, the Mede (Dan. ix. 1); 2. CAMBYSES, king of Persia (Ezra. iv. 6, 7); 3. DARIUS HYSTASPES, the husband of Esther (Esth. i. 1), who died A. M. 3519.

Ahim'aaz. Son of Zadok, the high priest in David's reign, and celebrated for his swiftness of foot. During Absalom's rebellion he carried to David the important intelligence that Ahithophel had counselled an immediate attack upon David and his followers, and that, consequently, the king must cross the Jordan without the least delay (2 Sam. xv. 24-37; xvii. 15-22). Shortly afterward he was the first to bring to the king the good news of Absalom's defeat, suppressing his knowledge of the death of his son, which was announced soon afterward by another (2 Sam. xviii. 19-33).

Ahim'elech. Son of Ahitub (1 Sam. xxii. 11, 12), and high priest at Nob in the days of Saul. He gave David the shew-bread to eat, and the sword of Goliath; and for so doing was, upon the accusation of Doeg the Edomite, put to death with his whole house by Saul's order. Abiathar alone escaped. [See ABIATHAR.]

Ahin'oam. 1. The daughter of Ahimaaz and wife of Saul (1 Sam. xiv. 50). 2. A native of Jezreel who was married to David during his wandering life (1 Sam. xxv. 43). She lived with him and his other wife, Abigail, at the court of Achish (xxvii. 3), was taken prisoner with her by the Amalekites when they plundered Ziklag (xxx. 5), but was rescued by David (18). She is again mentioned as living with him when he was king of Judah in Hebron (2 Sam. ii. 1), and was the mother of his eldest son Amnon (iii. 2).

SUPPOSED FORM OF ALTAR OF INCENSE.

A'i. A city lying east of Bethel and "beside Bethaven" (Josh. vii. 2; viii. 9). It was the second city taken by Israel after the passage of the Jordan, and was "utterly destroyed" (Josh. vii. 3-5; viii. ix. 3; x. 1, 2; xii. 9).

Alexan'der. 1. Son of Simon the Cyrenian, who was compelled to bear the cross for our Lord (Mark xv. 21). 2. One of the kindred of Annas the high priest (Acts iv. 6). 3. A Jew at Ephesus, whom his countrymen put forward during the tumult raised by Demetrius the silversmith (Acts xix. 33), to plead their cause with the mob. 4. An Ephesian Christian, reproached by St. Paul in 1 Tim. i. 20, as having, together with one Hymenæus, put from him faith and a good conscience, and so made shipwreck concerning the faith. This may be the same with—5. ALEXANDER the copper-smith, mentioned by the same apostle (2 Tim. iv. 14) as having done him many mischiefs.

Alexan'dria. (3 Mac. iii. 1; Acts xviii. 24; vi. 9.) The Hellenic, Roman, and Christian capital of though Jesus held his peace when merely interrogated, he acknowledged, when adjured, that he was the Son of God (Matt. xxvi. 63).

Adonibe'zek. The king of BEZEK. Just before Joshua entered the land of Canaan, Adonibe'zek had waged a furious war with his neighbouring kings: seventy of them he had taken captives, and cutting off their thumbs and great toes, had caused them, like dogs, to feed on the crumbs that fell from his table. After Joshua's death, the tribes of Judah and Simeon, finding themselves pent up by the Canaanites, resolved to clear their cantons of these accursed nations; among others they fell upon Adonibe'zek, took his capital and made himself prisoner, and cut off his thumbs and great toes; he thereupon acknowledged the just vengeance of Heaven upon him for his cruelty toward his fellow-princes. They brought him along with them to Jerusalem, where he died about A. M. 2570 (Judg. i. 4-7).

Adoni'ram. By contraction ADORAM (2 Sam. xx. 24), also HADORAM (2 Chron. x. 18), chief receiver of the tribute during the reigns of David, Solomon and Rehoboam. This last monarch sent him to collect the tribute from the rebellious Israelites, by whom he was stoned to death.

Adoption. The act of taking into the family for a child. Pharaoh's daughter adopted Moses; Mordecai thus received Esther. Many other instances occur in Scripture. The double parentage thus created has greatly confused chronologers. True believers in Christ, being regenerated by the Spirit, and freely justified by grace, are said to be brought into this state of adoption (2 Cor. vi. 18).

Adoration. The acts and postures by which the Hebrews expressed adoration bear a great similarity to those still in use among Oriental nations. To rise up and suddenly prostrate the body was the most simple method, but, generally speaking, the prostration was conducted in a more formal manner, the person falling upon the knee, and then gradually inclining the body until the forehead touched the ground. Such prostration was usual in the worship of Jehovah (Gen. xvii. 3; Ps. xlv. 6).

Adram'melech. 1. The name of an idol introduced into Samaria by the colonists from Sepharvaim (2 Kings xvii. 31). 2. Son of the Assyrian king Sennacherib, who, together with his brother Sharezer, murdered their father in the temple of Nisroch at Nineveh, after the failure of the Assyrian attack on Jerusalem. The parricides escaped into Armenia (2 Kings xix. 37; 2 Chron. xxxii. 21; Isa. xxxvii. 38). The date of this event was B. C. 680.

A'driel. Son of Barzillai, to whom Saul gave his daughter Merab, although he had previously promised her to David (1 Sam. xviii. 19). His five sons were among the seven descendants of Saul

Egypt, was founded by Alexander the Great, B. C. 332, who himself traced the ground-plan of the city. Its importance as one of the chief corn-ports of Rome secured for it the general favour of the first emperors. Its population was mixed from the first. According to Josephus, Alexander himself assigned to the Jews a place in his new city. The Septuagint translation was made for their benefit, under the first or second Ptolemy. According to the common legend, St. Mark first "preached the Gospel in Egypt, and founded the first Church in Alexandria." At the beginning of the second century the number of Christians at Alexandria must have been very large.

Allelu'ia. So written in Rev. xix. 1-6, or more properly HALLELUJAH, "praise ye Jehovah," as it is found in the margin of Ps. civ. 35; ev. 45; cvi.; cxi. 1; cxli. 1; cxlii. 1 (comp. Ps. cxlii. 9; cxv. 18; cxvi. 19; cxvii. 2). The literal meaning of "Hallelujah" sufficiently indicates the character of the Psalms in which it occurs, as hymns of praise and thanksgiving.

Al'lon. A large, strong tree of some description, probably an oak. The word is found in two names in the topography of Palestine: 1. ALLON, more accurately ELON, a place named among the cities of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 33). [See ELON.] 2. AL'LOH-BA'CHUTH ("oak of weeping"), the tree under which Rebekah's nurse, Deborah, was buried. (Gen. xxxv. 8.)

Alpha. The first letter of the Greek alphabet. Used in connection with Omega, the last letter, to express the eternity of Christ (Rev. i. 8, 11).

Alpha'us. The father of the Apostle James the Less (Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13), and husband of that Mary who, with the mother of Jesus and others, was standing by the cross during the crucifixion (John xix. 25). [See MARY.] In this latter place he is called Clopas.

GATE OF ST. PAUL, ANTIOCH.

Altar of Burnt-Offerings. It differed in construction at different times. 1. In the tabernacle (Ex. xxvii.) it was square, five cubits in length, the same in breadth, and three cubits high. It was made of planks of shittim (or acacia) wood, overlaid with brass. (See Ex. xxvii.; xxviii. 2.) 2. In Solomon's Temple the length and breadth were near twenty cubits, and the height was ten (2 Chron. iv. 1). It was entirely of brass (1 Kings viii. 64; 2 Chron. vii. 7).

Altar of Incense. This was called also the golden altar, to distinguish it from the altar of burnt-offerings, which was called the brazen altar (Ex. xxviii. 30). That in the tabernacle was made of acacia wood, overlaid with pure gold. Its shape was square, being a cubit in length and breadth, and two cubits in height. It had horns at the four corners. It stood in the holy place (Ex. xxx. 6; xl. 5).

Amen. Literally, "true;" and used as a substantive, "that which is true," "truth" (Isa. lxxv. 16); Christ is called THE AMEN, because he is the God of truth (Rev. iii. 14).

Ammin'adab. Son of Ram or Aram, and father of Nahshon, or Naasson (as it is written, Matt. i. 4; Luke iii. 32), who was the prince of the tribe of Judah at the first numbering of Israel in the second year of the Exodus (Num. i. 7; ii. 3; Ruth iv. 19, 20; 1 Chron. i. 10). He was the fourth generation after Judah, the patriarch of his tribe, and one of the ancestors of JESUS CHRIST.

Am'mon, Am'monites, Children of Ammon.

A people descended from Ben-Ammi, the son of Lot by his younger daughter (Gen. xix. 38; comp. Ps. lxxxiii. 7, 8), as Moab was by the elder; and dating from the destruction of Sodom. The near relation between the two peoples indicated in the story of their origin continued throughout their existence (comp. Judg. x. 6; 2 Chron. xx. 1; Zeph. ii. 8, etc.). The hatred in which the Ammonites were held by Israel is stated to have arisen partly from their opposition, or rather their denial of assistance (Deut. xxiii. 4), to the Israelites on their approach to Canaan. But whatever its origin, the animosity continued in force to the latest date. The last appearances of the Ammonites in the biblical narrative are in the book of Judith (v., vi., vii.), and in that of 1 Maccabees (1 Mac. v. 6, 30-43). The divinity of the tribe was Molech, generally named in the O. T. under the altered form of Milcom—"the abomination of the children of Ammon," and occasionally as Maleham.

Amos. Called by God, he began to prophesy a little before Hosea, and continued a while contemporary with that prophet, during the reign of Uzziah, about 890 years B. C. The Book of Amos reproves the wickedness of the Hebrews, who abandoned themselves to every evil, pronounces the ruin of the neighbouring nations, judgment on the Jews, and the final prosperity of Messiah's kingdom.

Amphip'olis. A city of Macedonia (Acts xvii. 1). It is almost surrounded by the river Strymon, whence its name, which means "a city surrounded." It is now called Emboli.

Anam'melech. An idol of the Sepharvaites, a tribe of the Samaritans (2 Kings xvii. 31).

Anani'as. 1. A high priest in Acts xxiii. 2-5; xxiv. 1. 2. A disciple at Jerusalem, husband of Sapphira (Acts v. 1-11). Having sold his goods for the benefit of the Church, he kept back a part of the price. St. Peter denounced the fraud, and Ananias fell down and expired. 3. A Jewish disciple at Damascus (Acts ix. 10-17) of high repute (Acts xxii. 12), who sought out Saul during the period of blindness and dejection which followed his conversion, and announced to him his future commission as a preacher of the Gospel. Tradition makes him to have been afterward bishop of Damascus, and to have died by martyrdom.

Anath'ema. Which literally means a thing suspended, is the equivalent of the Hebrew word signifying a thing or person devoted. The word anathema frequently occurs in St. Paul's writings, and is generally translated accursed.

An'drew. One among the first called of the Apostles of our Lord (John i. 40; Matt. iv. 18); brother (whether elder or younger is uncertain) of Simon Peter (ibid.). He was of Bethsaida, and had been a disciple of John the Baptist. On hearing Jesus a second time designated by him as the Lamb of God, he left his former master, and, in company with another of John's disciples, attached himself to our Lord. In the catalogue of the Apostles, Andrew appears, in Matt. x. 2; Luke vi.

14, second, next after his brother Peter; but in Mark iii. 16; Acts i. 13, fourth, next after the three, Peter, James and John, and in company with Philip. And this appears to have been his real place of dignity among the Apostles. The traditions about him are various. He is said to have been crucified at Patræ in Achaia.

Ank'let. Anklets are referred to in Isa. iii. 16, 18, 20. They were fastened to the ankle-band of each leg, were as common as bracelets and armlets, and made of much the same materials; the pleasant jingling and tinkling which they made as they knocked against each other formed no doubt one of the reasons why they were admired. They are still worn in the East.

An'na. A "prophetess" in Jerusalem at the time of our Lord's presentation in the Temple (Luke ii. 36). She was of the tribe of Asher.

Ant. This insect is mentioned twice in the O. T.: in Prov. vi. 6; xxx. 26. In the former of these passages the diligence of this insect is instanced by the wise man as an example worthy of imitation; in the second passage the ant's wisdom is especially alluded to, for these insects, "though they be little on the earth, are exceeding wise."

Antioch. The capital of the Greek kings of Syria, and afterward the residence of the Roman governors of the province which bore the same name. No city, after Jerusalem, is so intimately connected with the history of the apostolic Church. The chief interest of Antioch is connected with the progress of Christianity among the heathen. Here the first Gentile Church was founded (Acts xi. 20, 21); here the disciples of Jesus Christ were first called Christians (xi. 26). It was from Antioch that St. Paul started on his three missionary journeys. The city was founded in the year 300 B. C., by Seleucus Nicator. Jews were settled there from the first in large numbers, were governed by their own ethnarch, and allowed to have the same political privileges with the Greeks. Antioch grew under the successive Seleucid kings till it became a city of great extent and of remarkable beauty.

Antipa'tris. A town to which the soldiers conveyed St. Paul by night on their march (Acts xxiii. 31).

Apol'los A Jew from Alexandria, eloquent

(which may also mean learned) and mighty in the Scriptures: one instructed in the way of the Lord, according to the imperfect view of the disciples of John the Baptist (Acts xviii. 25), but on his coming to Ephesus during a temporary absence of St. Paul, A. D. 54, more perfectly taught by Aquila and Priscilla. After this he became a preacher of the Gospel, first in Achaia and then in Corinth (Acts xviii. 27; xix. 1), where he watered that which Paul had planted (1 Cor. iii. 6). It has been supposed by some that Apollos was the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Apoc'rypha. The collection of books to which this term is popularly applied includes the following (the order given is that in which they stand in the English version):—I. 1 Esdras; II. 2 Esdras; III. Tobit; IV. Judith; V. The rest of the chapters of the book of Esther, which are found neither in the Hebrew nor in the Chaldee; VI. The Wisdom of Solomon; VII. The Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus; VIII. Baruch; IX. The Song of the Three Holy Children; X. The History of Susanna; XI. The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon; XII. The Prayer of Manasses, king of Judah; XIII. 1 Maccabees; XIV. 2 Maccabees. The primary meaning of Apocrypha, "hidden, secret," seems, toward the close of the second century, to have been associated with the signification "spurious," and ultimately to have settled down into the latter.

Aq'uila. A Jew whom St. Paul found at Corinth on his arrival from Athens (Acts xviii. 2). He was a native of Pontus, but had fled, with his wife nations. Michael was considered the patron of the Jews (Dan. x. 13, 21). The name is never used in the plural, and some learned men think it means Jesus Christ (1 Thess. iv. 16).

Archip'us. A Christian teacher in Colosse (Col. iv. 17), called by St. Paul his "fellow-soldier" (Philem. 2). He was probably a member of Philemon's family.

ROMAN SLINGER.

A'riel. A designation given by Isaiah to the city of Jerusalem (Isa. xxix. 1, 2, 7). Its meaning is obscure. We must understand by it either "Lion of God," or "Hearth of God."

Aristar'chus. A Thessalonian (Acts xx. 4; xxvii. 2), who accompanied St. Paul on his third missionary journey (Acts xix. 29). He was with the apostle on his return to Asia (Acts xx. 4); and again (xxvii. 2) on his voyage to Rome. We trace him afterward as St. Paul's fellow-prisoner in Col. iv. 10, and Philem. 24.

Aristobu'lus. 1. A Jewish priest (2 Mac. i. 10), who resided in Egypt in the reign of Ptolemaeus VI. Philometor. There can be little doubt that he is identical with the peripatetic philosopher of that name, who dedicated to Ptol. Philometor his allegoric exposition of the Pentateuch. 2. A resident at Rome, some of whose household are greeted in Rom. xvi. 10. Tradition makes him one of the seventy disciples, and reports that he preached the Gospel in Britain.

Armaged'don. "The hill, or city of Megiddo" (Rev. xvi. 16). The scene of the struggle of good and evil is suggested by that battlefield, the plain of Esdraelon, which was famous for two great victories—of Barak over the Canaanites, and of Gideon over the Midianites; and for two great disasters—the deaths of Saul and Josiah.

Arms, Armour. There were—1. Offensive weapons. 2. Defensive weapons. Of the first class were—1. The Chereb, or Sword. Very little can be gathered as to its shape, size, material, or mode of use. Perhaps it was lighter and shorter than the modern sword. 2. The Cidôn or Javelin. When not in action the Cidôn was carried on the back of the warrior (1 Sam. xvii. 6). 3. The Sling. This is first mentioned in Judg. xx. 16. (See 2 Kings iii. 25.) Of the second class—1. The Breast-plate (1 Sam. xvii. 5). 2. The Hubergeon. (See Ex. xxviii. 32; xxix. 23.) 3. The Helmet (1 Sam. xvii. 5; 2 Chron. xxvi. 14; Ex. xxvii. 10). 4. Greaves (1 Sam. xvii. 6). 5. Two kinds of Shields—the large one encompassing the whole person (Ps. v. 12), the smaller one called the buckler or target, probably for use in hand-to-hand fighting (1 Kings x. 16, 47; 2 Chron. ix. 15, 16).

A'sa. Son of Abijah, and third king of Judah (B. C. 956–916). In his zeal against heathenism he did not spare his grandmother Maachah, who occupied the special dignity of "king's mother," to which great importance was attached in the Jewish court. Asa burnt the symbol of her religion (1 Kings xv. 13), and threw its ashes into the brook Kidron, and then deposed Maachah from her dignity. He also placed in the temple certain gifts which his father had dedicated, and renewed the great altar which the idolatrous priests apparently had desecrated (2 Chron. xv. 8). In his old age Asa suffered from the gout. He died greatly loved and honoured in the forty-first year of his reign.

A'saph. A Levite, son of Berechiah, one of the leaders of David's choir (1 Chron. vi. 39). Psalms l. and lxxiii.–lxxxiii. are attributed to him; and he was in after times celebrated as a seer as well as a musical composer (2 Chron. xxix. 30; Neh. xii. 46).

As'enath. Daughter of Potipherah, priest, or possibly prince, of On [see POTIPHERAH], wife of Joseph (Gen. xli. 45), and mother of Manasseh and Ephraim (xli. 50; xlv. 20).

Ash'dod, or Azotus. A strong city on the south-east coast of the Mediterranean Sea, about twenty-five miles, or, according to Diodorus, thirty-four north of Gaza, thirteen or fourteen south of Ekron, and thirty-four west of Jerusalem. It was the property of the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 47), but the Philistines either retained or retook it. Here stood the famous temple of Dagon. Here the captive ark of God was first brought, and broke to pieces that idol, and plagued the inhabitants (1 Sam. v. 1–6). Here Philip the Evangelist early preached the gospel; and a Christian Church continued till perhaps the ravages of the Saracens (Zeph. ii. 4; Zech. xi. 6; Acts viii. 4).

Ash'kelon, As'kelon. One of the five cities of the lords of the Philistines (Josh. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. vi. 17), but less often mentioned and apparently less known to the Jews than the other four. Samson went down from Timnath to Ashkelon (Judg. xiv. 19), as if to a remote place whence his exploit was not likely to be heard of. In the post-biblical times Ashkelon rose to considerable importance. The soil around was remarkable for its fertility. Ashkelon played a memorable part in the struggles of the Crusades.

Asp. The Hebrew word pethen occurs in the six following passages: Deut. xxxii. 33; Job xx. 14, 16; Ps. lvi. 5; xci. 13; Isa. xi. 8. That some kind of poisonous serpent is denoted by it is clear from these passages. As the Egyptian Cobra is more frequently than any other species the subject upon which the serpent-charmers of the Bible lands practice their art, and as it is fond of concealing itself in walls and in holes (Isa. xi. 8), it appears to have the best claim to represent the pethen.

Ass. The species of this animal known to the HEAVY-ARMED ANCIENT WARRIOR.

Priscilla, from Rome, in consequence of an order of Claudius commanding all Jews to leave the city. He became acquainted with St. Paul, and they abode together, and wrought at their common trade of making the Cilician tent or hair-cloth. On the departure of the apostle from Corinth, a year and six months after, Priscilla and Aquila accompanied him to Ephesus. There they remained, and there they taught Apollos.

Ar'arat. A mountainous district of Asia mentioned in the Bible in connection with the following events: 1. As the resting place of the Ark after the deluge (Gen. viii. 4). 2. As the asylum of the sons of Sennacherib (2 Kings xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 38). 3. As the ally, and probably the neighbour, of Minni and Ashchenaz (Jer. li. 27). It is of volcanic origin. The summit of Ararat was long deemed inaccessible. It was first ascended in 1829, by Parrat, who approached it from the north-west. Arguri, the only village known to have been built on its slopes, was the spot where, according to tradition, Noah planted his vineyard. Lower down, in the plain of Araxes, is Nachdjevan, where the patriarch is reputed to have been buried.

Archangel. The chief angel. The Jews supposed that there are seven, greater in power than the rest, and having the guardianship of particular Jews are Asinus Hemippus, which inhabits the deserts of Syria, Mesopotamia, and the northern parts of Arabia; the Asinus Vulgaris of the north-east of Africa, the true onager or aboriginal wild ass, whence the domesticated breed has sprung; and probably the Asinus Onager, the Koulan or Ghorkhur, which is found in Western Asia from 48° north latitude southward to Persia, Beloochistan and Western India. Mr. Layard remarks that in fleetness the wild ass (Asinus Hemippus) equals the gazelle, and to overtake it is a feat which only one or two of the most celebrated mares have been known to accomplish.

As'sos or As'sus. A seaport of the Roman province of Asia, in the district anciently called Mysia. It was situated on the northern shore of the Gulf of Adramyttium, and was only about seven miles from the opposite coast of Lesbos, near Methymna (Acts xx. 13, 14).

Ath'ens. The capital of Attica, and the chief seat of Grecian learning and civilization during the golden period of the history of Greece. St. Paul visited it in his journey from Macedonia, and appears to have remained there some time (Acts xvii. 14-34; comp. 1 Thess. iii. 1). The Acropolis, or citadel of Athens, was a square craggy rock rising abruptly about one hundred and fifty feet, with a flat summit of about one thousand feet long from east to west, by five hundred feet broad from north and through these nations the Israelites were seduced to the worship of this god under the particular form of Baal-Peor (Num. xxv. 3-18; Deut. iv. 3). In the times of the kings the worship of Baal spread greatly, and together with that of Asherah became the religion of the court and people of the ten tribes (1 Kings xvi. 31-33; xviii. 18, 22).

Bab'ylon. In the Apocalypse is the symbolical name by which Rome is denoted (Rev. xiv. 8; xvii.; xviii.) The power of Rome was regarded by the later Jews as that of Babylon by their forefathers (comp. Jer. li. 7 with Rev. xiv. 8), and hence whatever the people of Israel be understood to symbolize, Babylon represents the antagonistic principle.

Ba'ca, the Valley of. A valley in Palestine, through which the exiled Psalmist sees in vision the pilgrims passing in their march toward the sanctuary of Jehovah at Zion (Ps. lxxxiv. 6).

Ba'laam. The son of Beor, a man endowed with the gift of prophecy (Num. xxii. 5). He belonged to the Midianites, and perhaps as the prophet of his people possessed the same authority that Moses did among the Israelites. When the Israelites were encamped in the plains of Moab, Balak, the king of Moab, sent for Balaam to curse them. Balaam was prohibited by God from going. The king of Moab, however, sent again to him. The prophet again refused, but was at length allowed to go. Balaam therefore proceeded on his journey

EGYPTIAN COBRA.

Azari'ah. A common name in Hebrew, and especially in the families of the priests of the line of Eleazar, whose name has precisely the same meaning as Azariah.

The principal persons who bore this name were: 1. Son of Ahimaaz (1 Chron. vi. 9). 2. Azariah, the son of Oded (2 Chron. xv. 1). 3. The high priest in the reign of Uzziah, king of Judah, whose name, perhaps from this circumstance, is often corrupted into Azariah (2 Kings xiv. 21, xv. 1, 6, 7, 8, &c.) The most memorable event of his life is that which is recorded in 2 Chron. xxvi. 17-20. When King Uzziah, elated by his great prosperity and power, "transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense," Azariah the priest, accompanied by eighty of his brethren, went in boldly after him and withstood him.

Az'za. The more accurate rendering of the name of the well-known Philistine city, Gaza (Deut. ii. 23; 1 Kings iv. 24; Jer. xxv. 20).

B.

Ba'al. The supreme male divinity of the Phœnician and Canaanitish nations, as ASHTORETH was their supreme female divinity. The word Baal is in Hebrew a common noun of frequent occurrence, having the meaning Lord, not so much, however, in the sense of Ruler as of Master, Owner, Possessor. There can be no doubt of the very high an-with the messengers of Balak. But God's anger was kindled at this manifestation of determined self-will, and the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him. "The dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet" (2 Pet. ii. 14). Balaam predicted a magnificent career for the people whom he was called to curse, but he nevertheless suggested to the Moabites the expedient of seducing them to comto south. Mars' Hill, the hill of Mars or Ares, better known by the name of Areopagus, was a rocky height opposite to the western end of the Acropolis, from which it is separated only by an elevated valley, above which it rises fifty or sixty feet.

Augus'tus Cæ'sar. The first Roman emperor. He was born A. U. C. 691, B. C. 63. His father was Caius Octavius; his mother Atia, daughter of Julia, the sister of C. Julius Cæsar. He was principally educated by his great-uncle Julius Cæsar, and was made his heir. After his murder, the young Octavius, then Caius Julius Cæsar Octavianus, was taken into the Triumvirate with Antony and Lepidus, and, after the removal of the latter, divided the empire with Antony. The struggle for the supreme power was terminated in favour of Octavianus by the battle of Actium, B. C. 31. On this victory he was saluted Imperator by the senate, who conferred on him the title Augustus (B. C. 27). The first link binding him to N. T. history is his treatment of Herod after the battle of Actium. That prince, who had espoused Antony's side, found himself pardoned, taken into favour and confirmed, nay even increased, in his power. After Herod's death in A. D. 4, Augustiquity of the worship of Baal. We find it established amongst the Moabites and their allies the Midianites in the time of Moses (Num. xxii. 41), mit fornication. The effect of this is recorded in ch. xxv. A battle was afterward fought against the Midianites, in which Balaam sided with them, and was slain by the sword of the people whom he had endeavoured to curse (Num. xxxi. 8).

Balm. The Hebrew word thus rendered occurs in Gen. xxxvii. 25; xliii. 11; Jer. viii. 22; xli. 11; li. 8; and Ezra xxvii. 17. It is impossible to identify it with any certainty. It may represent the gum of the Pistacia lentiscus, or that of the Balsamodendron opobalsamum. Hasselquist has given a description of the true balsam tree of Mecca. He says that the exudation from the plant "is of a yellow colour, and pellucid. It has a most fragrant smell, which is resinous, balsamic and very agreeable. It is very tenacious or glutinous, sticking to the fingers, and may be drawn into long threads."

Barab'bas. A robber (John xviii. 40) who had committed murder in an insurrection (Mark xv. 7; Luke xxiii. 19) in Jerusalem, and was lying in prison at the time of the trial of Jesus before Pilate.

Ba'arak. Son of Abinoam of Kedesh, a refugee in Mount Naphtali, was incited by Deborah, a prophetess of Ephraim, to deliver Israel from the yoke of Jabin (Judg. iv.). He utterly routed the Canaanites in the plain of Jezreel (Esdraelon).

Barbarian. "Every one not a Greek is a barbarian" is the common Greek definition, and in this strict sense the word is used in Rom. i. 14: "I am debtor both to Greeks and barbarians." It often retains this primitive meaning, as in 1 Cor. xiv. 11 (of one using an unknown tongue), and Acts xxviii. 2, 4 (of the Maltese, who spoke a Punic dialect).

Bar'nabas. A name signifying "son of prophecy" or "exhortation," given by the apostles (Acts iv. 36) to Joseph (or Joses), a Levite of the Lord passed out of Jericho on his last journey to Jerusalem.

Ba'ruch. Son of Neriah, the friend (Jer. xxxii. 12), amanuensis (Jer. xxxvi. 4-32) and faithful attendant of Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvi. 10; B.C. 603) in the discharge of his prophetic office. He was of a noble family (comp. Jer. li. 59; Bar. i. 1), and of distinguished acquirements; and his brother Seraiah held an honourable office in the court of Zedekiah (Jer. li. 59). His enemies accused him of influencing Jeremiah in favour of the Chaldeans (Jer. xliii. 3; cf. xxxvii. 13); and he was thrown into prison with that prophet, where he remained till the capture of Jerusalem, B.C. 586.

Ba'shan. A district on the east of Jordan. It is sometimes spoken of as the "land of Bashan" (1 Chron. v. 11; and comp. Num. xxi. 33; xxxii. 33), and sometimes as "all Bashan" (Deut. iii. 10, 13; Josh. xii. 5; xiii. 11, 30), but most commonly without any addition. It was taken by the children of Israel after their conquest of the land of Sihon from Arnon to Jabbok.

Bash'emath. Daughter of Ishmael, the last married of the three wives of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 3, 4, 13). In Gen. xxviii. 9 she is called Mahalath.

Bath, Bathing. This was a prescribed part of the Jewish ritual of purification in cases of accidental, leprosy or ordinary uncleanness (Lev. xv. 2; xvi. 28; xxii. 6; Num. xix. 5, 19; 2 Sam. xi. 2, 4; 2 Kings v. 10); as also after mourning, which always implied defilement (Ruth iii. 3; 2 Sam. xii. 20). With bathing, anointing was customarily joined; the climate making both these essential alike to health and pleasure, to which luxury added the use of perfumes (Susan. 17; Jud. x. 3; Esth. ii. 12).

Bathshe'ba (2 Sam. xi. 3, etc.; also called Bathshua in 1 Chron. iii. 5). The daughter of Eliam (2 Sam. xi. 3), or Ammiel (1 Chron. iii. 5), the son of Ahithophel (2 Sam. xxiii. 34), and wife of Uriah the Hittite. The child which was the fruit of her adulterous intercourse with David died; but after marriage she became the mother of four sons, Solomon (Matt. i. 6), Shimea, Shobab and Nathan.

Bdellium. A gum or resin somewhat resembling myrrh. It is found in single drops of a very irregular size, some of which are as big as a hazelnut. Its colour is dusky, and its taste bitterish. It powerfully softens and cleanses when it is new and fresh.

There was plenty of it near the river Pison (Gen. ii. 12); and the manna resembled it in colour (Num. xi. 7). Bochart considers it to be the pearl; Reland calls it crystal (Gen. ii. 12; Num. xi. 7).

Bear (1 Sam. xvii. 34; 2 Sam. xvii. 8). The Syrian bear (Ursus Syriacus), which is without doubt the animal mentioned in the Bible, is still found on the higher mountains of Palestine. During the summer months these bears keep to the snowy parts of Lebanon, but descend in winter to the villages and gardens; it is probable also that at this period in former days they extended their visits to other parts of Palestine.

Bed and Bed-Chamber. We may distinguish in the Jewish bed five principal parts: 1. The mattress, which was limited to a mere mat, or one or more quilts. 2. The covering, which was a finer quilt. 3. Some fabric woven or plaited of goat's hair, and which served as a pillow (1 Sam. xix. 13). 4. The bedstead was not always necessary; the divan, or platform along the side or end of an Oriental room, sufficing as a support for the bedding. 5. The ornamental portions were pillars and a canopy, ivory carvings, gold and silver, and probably mosaic work, purple and fine linen (Esth. i. 6; Cant. iii. 9, 10).

Beel'zebul. The title of a heathen deity, to whom the Jews ascribed the sovereignty of the evil spirits (Matt. x. 25; xii. 24; Mark iii. 22; Luke xi. 15). The correct reading is without doubt Beel- zebul, and not Beelzebub as given in the Syriac, the Vulg., and some other versions. Some connect the term with zebul, habitation, thus making Beelzebul (Matt. x. 25) the lord of the dwelling, whether as the "prince of the power of the air" (Eph. ii. 2), or as the prince of the lower world, or as inhabiting human bodies, or as occupying a mansion in the seventh heaven, like Saturn in Oriental mythology.

SYRIAN BEAR.

Others derive it from zebel, dung, thus making Beelzebul, literally, the lord of dung, or the dung-hill; and in a secondary sense, as zebel was used by the Talmudical writers, as idol or idolatry, the lord of idols, prince of false gods.

Beer-she'ba. The name of one of the old places in Palestine which formed the southern limit of the country. There are two accounts of the origin of the name: 1. According to the first, the well was dug by Abraham, and the name given, because there he and Abimelech, the king of the Philistines, "swore" both of them (Gen. xxi. 31). 2. The other narrative ascribes the origin of the name to an occurrence almost precisely similar, in which both Abimelech, the king of the Philistines, and Phicol, his chief captain, are again concerned, with Isaac instead of Abraham (Gen. xxvi. 31-33). There are at present on the spot two principal wells and five smaller ones. The two principal wells lie just a hundred yards apart. The larger one is about twelve and a half feet in diameter, and the masonry reaches down twenty-eight and a half feet. The curb-stones around the mouth are worn into deep grooves by the action of the ropes of so many centuries, and "look as if fluted or fluted all round."

Be'hemoth. There can be but little or no doubt that by this word (Job xl. 15-24) the hippopotamus is intended, since all the details descriptive of the behemoth accord entirely with the ascertained habits of that animal. Since, in the first part of Jehovah's discourse (Job xxxviii.; xxxix.), land animals and birds are mentioned, it suits the general purpose of that discourse better to suppose that aquatic or amphibious creatures are spoken of in the last half of it; and since the leviathan, by almost universal consent, denotes the crocodile, the behemoth seems clearly to point to the hippopotamus, his associate in the Nile.

EASTERN BEDS.

Be'ka. A half shekel; its value, twenty-five cents. Every Jew paid a beka annually for the support of the temple (Ex. xxx. 13).

Be'la. 1. One of the five cities of the plain, which was spared at the intercession of Lot, and received the name of Zoar (Gen. xiv. 2; xix. 22). 2. Son of Beor, who reigned over Edom in the city island of Cyprus, who was early a disciple of Christ. In Acts ix. 27 we find him introducing the newly-converted Saul to the apostles at Jerusalem, in a way which seems to imply previous acquaintance between the two. He was ordained with Paul for the missionary work (A.D. 45), after which he laboured with that apostle until a variance took place between them. The Epistle attributed to Barnabas is believed to have been written early in the second century.

Bar'sabas. 1. JOSEPH JUSTUS was perhaps one of Christ's seventy disciples; it is certain he was an eye-witness of Christ's public work of the ministry. He stood candidate alone with Matthias for the apostleship, instead of Judas, but was not chosen of God (Acts i. 21-26). 2. BARSABAS JUDAS. He was a member of the synod at Jerusalem, and was sent along with Paul, Barnabas and Silas to publish the decrees thereof among the Gentile churches. After preaching a while at Antioch, he returned to Jerusalem (Acts xv. 22-34).

Barthol'omew. One of the twelve apostles of Christ (Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 14; Acts i. 13). It has been not improbably conjectured that he is identical with Nathanael (John i. 45). He is said to have preached the gospel in India—that is, probably, Arabia Felix—and according to some in Armenia.

Bartimæ'us. A blind beggar of Jericho who (Mark x. 46) sat by the wayside begging as our of Dinhabah, eight generations before Saul, king of Israel, or about the time of the Exodus.

Be'lial. A worthless, lawless fellow. The term as used in 2 Cor. vi. 15 is generally understood as an appellative of Satan as the personification of all that was bad.

Belshaz'zar. The last king of Babylon. According to the well-known narrative in Dan. v., he was slain during a splendid feast in his palace. Similarly, Xenophon tells us that Babylon was taken by Cyrus in the night, while the inhabitants were engaged in feasting and revelry, and that the king was killed. On the other hand, the narratives of Berosus in Josephus and of Herodotus differ from the above account in some important particulars. Berosus calls the last king of Babylon Nabonnedus or Nabonadius, and says that in the seventeenth year of his reign Cyrus took Babylon, the king having retired to the neighbouring city of Borsippus or Borsippa. According to Herodotus the last king was called Labynetus. These discrepancies have lately been cleared up by the discoveries of Sir Henry Rawlinson. From the inscriptions it appears that the eldest son of Nabonnedus was called Bel-shar-azar, contracted into Belshazzar, and admitted by his father to a share in the government. So that Belshazzar, as joint king with his father, may have been governor of Babylon when the city was attacked by the combined forces of the Medes and Persians, and may have perished in the assault which followed; while Nabonnedus leading a force to the relief of the place was defeated, and obliged to take refuge in Borsippa.

Bena'iah. 1. The son of Jehoiada, the chief priest (1 Chron. xxvii. 5), set by David (1 Chron. xi. 25) over his bodyguard (2 Sam. 18; 1 Kings i. 38; 1 Chron. xviii. 17; 2 Sam. xx. 23), and occupying a middle rank between the first three of the "mighty men" and the thirty "valiant men of the armies" (2 Sam. xxiii. 22, 23; 1 Chron. xi. 25; xxvii. 6). The exploits which gave him this rank are narrated in 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, 21; 1 Chron. xi. 22. Benaiah remained faithful to Solomon during Adonijah's attempt on the crown (1 Kings i. 8, 10, 32, 38, 44), and was raised into the place of Joab as commander-in-chief of the whole army (ii. 35; iv. 4). 2. BENAIAH the PIRATHIONITE; an Ephraimite, one of David's thirty mighty men (2 Sam. xxiii. 30; 1 Chron. xi. 31).

Ben-am'mi. The son of the younger daughter of Lot, and progenitor of the Ammonites (Gen. xix. 38).

Benjamin. The youngest of the children of Jacob, and the only one of the thirteen who was born in Palestine. His birth took place on the road between Bethel and Bethlehem, a short distance from the latter, and his mother Rachel died in the act of giving him birth, naming him with her last breath Ben-oni, "son of my sorrow." This was by Jacob changed into Benjamin (Gen. xxxv. 16-18). Until the journeys of Jacob's sons and of ment. Sopater, one of them, attended him to Asia (Acts xvii. 10-13, and xx. 4).

Berni'ce. The daughter of Agrippa the Great. She was first betrothed to Mark, the son of Alexander, governor of the Jews at Alexandria. She next married her own uncle, Herod, king of Chalcis. After his death she married Polemon, king of Pontus, on condition of his being circumcised. She quickly after abandoned him, and returned to Agrippa, her brother, with whom it is supposed she lived in habitual incest. They both appeared with great pomp to hear Paul's defence at Caesarea (Acts xxv. 13, 23, and xxvi.).

Beth. The most general word for a house or habitation.

Beth-ab'ara. A place beyond Jordan, in which John was baptizing (John i. 28). If this reading be correct, Bethabara may be identical with Beth-barah, the ancient ford of Jordan, or, which seems more likely, with Beth-nimrah, on the east of the river, nearly opposite Jericho.

or tank, with five "porches," close upon the sheep-gate or "market" in Jerusalem (John v. 2). The porches—i. e., cloisters or colonnades—were extensive enough to accommodate a large number of sick and infirm people, whose custom it was to wait there for the "troubling of the water." The large reservoir Birket Israil, within the walls of the city, close by the St. Stephen's Gate, and under the north-east wall of the Haram area, is generally considered to be the modern representative of Bethesda.

Beth'lehem (house or dwelling of bread). A city of Judah (Judg. xvii. 7), perhaps metaphorically house of plenty, in allusion to the fertility of the circumjacent country. It is distant from Jerusalem, by the Jaffa gate, about two hours' journey, the road over the valley of Rephaim, a wild, uncultivated tract, being very beautiful and full of interest. Bethlehem is rendered memorable and holy as the birth-place of David and of Jesus Christ. It is at present a large straggling village,

THE VILLAGE OF BETHANY.

Beth'any. A village which, seanty as are the notices of it contained in Scripture, is more intimately associated in our minds than perhaps any other place with the most familiar acts and scenes of the last days of the life of Christ. Bethany is now known by a name derived from Lazarus—el' Azariyeh or Lazarieh. It lies on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, fully a mile beyond the summit, and not very far from the point at which the road to Jericho begins its more sudden descent toward the Jordan valley. El' Azariyeh is a ruinous and wretched village, a wild mountain hamlet of some twenty families. Bethany has been commonly explained the "House of Dates," but it more probably signifies "House of Misery."

Beth-ba'rah. A place where Gideon called the Ephraimites to post themselves, to stop the flying Midianites. If this be the same with Bethabara, it seems plain that it was south of the Galilean Sea, as there the Midianites crossed the Jordan, and there the borders of Ephraim were (Judg. vii. 24).

Beth'el. A city about eight, some say twelve, miles northward of Jerusalem, and a mile westward of Ai. The place was originally called Luz, from the almond and hazel bushes that grew here. Here Jacob lodged under the open sky as he went to Padan-aram. An eminent vision he had, made him call it BETHEL, the house of God. Our Lord alludes to this vision (John i. 51). In Bethel, Jeroboam set up one of his idolatrous calves, on which account it was called Aven, or Beth-aven, the temple of idols, or wickedness. Bethel was wrested from the Israelites by Abijah (2 Chron. xiii. 19), but soon after retaken. The Assyrians made terrible slaughter and ravage in it (Hos. x. 8).

Bethesda. The Hebrew name of a reservoir with one principal street. The population is about three thousand, and consists entirely of Christians. In the magnificent church of the Nativity, said to have been built by the Empress Helena over the very birth-place of our Saviour, two spiral staircases, each of fifteen steps, lead down to the grotto of the Nativity, which is some twenty feet below the level of the church. This crypt, which is thirty-nine feet long, eleven feet broad and nine feet high, is hewn out of the rock.

Beth'-peor. A place, no doubt dedicated to the god Baal-peor, on the east of Jordan, opposite Jericho, and six miles above Libias or Beth-haran. It was in the possession of the tribe of Reuben (Josh. xiii. 20). One of the last halting-places of the children of Israel is designated, "the ravine over against Beth-peor" (Deut. iii. 29; iv. 46).

Beth'-phage. The name of a place on the Mount of Olives, on the road between Jericho and Jerusalem. It was apparently close to Bethany (Matt. xxi. 1; Mark xi. 1; Luke xix. 29), and to the eastward of it. No remains, however, which could answer to this position have been found, and the traditional site is above Bethany, halfway between that village and the top of the mount. Here our Saviour obtained the ass for his lowly triumph (Matt. xxi. 1).

Beth-sa'ida. 1. "Bethsaida of Galilee" (John xii. 21), a city which was the native place of Andrew, Peter and Philip (John i. 44; xii. 21), in the land of Gennesaret (Mark vi. 45; comp. 53), and therefore on the west side of the lake. Dr. Robinson places Bethsaida at Ain et-Tabigah, a short distance north of Khan Minyeh, which he identifies with Capernaum. 2. By comparing the narratives in Mark vi. 31-53 and Luke ix. 10-17, it appears certain that the Bethsaida at which the five thou-

Jacob himself into Egypt we hear nothing of Benjamin. Henceforward the history of Benjamin is the history of the tribe. And up to the time of the entrance on the promised land that history is as meagre as it is afterward full and interesting.

Bere'a. A city of Macedonia: it was a little distant from Pella, where Alexander was born. Here Paul preached with great success; and his hearers were exceeding careful to compare what they heard with the Scriptures of the Old Testasand were fed must have been a second place of the same name on the east of the lake. Such a place there was at the north-eastern extremity, formerly a village, but rebuilt and adorned by Philip the Tetrarch, and raised to the dignity of a town under the name of Julias, after the daughter of the emperor. Here in a magnificent tomb Philip was buried.

GROTTO OF THE NATIVITY, BETHLEHEM.

Beth'uel. The son of Nahor by Milcah; nephew of Abraham, and father of Rebekah (Gen. xxii. 22, 23; xxiv. 15, 24, 47; xxviii. 2). In xxv. 20 and xxviii. 5 he is called "Bethuel the Syrian."

Beu'lah. "Married," the name which the land of Israel is to bear when "the land shall be married" (Isa. lxii. 4).

Bez'aleel. The son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, and one of the architects of the tabernacle (Ex. xxxi. 1-6). His charge was chiefly in all works of metal, wood and stone.

Be'zer in the Wilderness. A city of the Reubenites, with suburbs, set apart by Moses as one of the three cities of refuge in the downs on the east of the Jordan.

Big'than and Big'thana. An eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus; one of those "who kept the door" and conspired with Teresh against the king's life (Esth. ii. 21). The conspiracy was detected by Mordecai.

Bil'dad. The second of Job's three friends. He is called "the Shuhite," which implies both his family and nation (Job ii. 11).

Bil'hah. Handmaid of Rachel (Gen. xxix. 29), and concubine of Jacob, to whom she bore Dan and Naphtali (Gen. xxx. 3-8; xxxv. 25; xli. 25; 1 Chron. vii. 13). [See REUBEN.]

Birth-days. The custom of observing birth-days is very ancient (Gen. xl. 20; Jer. xx. 15); and in Job i. 4, etc., we read that Job's sons "feasted every one his day." It is very probable that in Matt. xiv. 6 the feast to commemorate Herod's accession is intended, for we know that such feasts were common, and were called "the day of the king" (Hos. vii. 5).

Birth-right. The advantages accruing to the eldest son were not definitely fixed in patriarchal times. Great respect was paid to him in the household, and, as the family widened into a tribe, this grew into a sustained authority, undefined save by custom, in all matters of common interest. A "double portion" of the paternal property was allotted by the Mosaic law (Deut. xxi. 15-17). The first-born of the king was his successor by law (2 Chron. xxi. 3); David, however, by divine appointment, excluded Adonijah in favour of Solomon.

Bishop. A shepherd, or overseer. It seems to be synonymous with Elder or Presbyter (Acts xx. 17, 20; Titus i. 5, 7; 1 Pet. v. 1, 2). The word is applied to Christ himself (1 Pet. ii. 2).

Bitter Herbs. The Israelites were commanded to eat the paschal lamb "with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs" (Ex. xii. 8). These may well be understood to denote various sorts of bitter plants, such particularly as belong to the cruciferae, as some of the bitter cresses, or to the chicory group of the compositae, the hawkweeds, and sow-thistles and wild lettuces which grow abundantly in the peninsula of Sinai, in Palestine and in Egypt.

Blains. Violent ulcerous inflammations, the sixth plague of Egypt (Ex. ix. 9, 10), and hence called in Deut. xxviii. 27, 35, "the botch of Egypt." It seems to have been the black leprosy, a fearful kind of elephantiasis.

Blasphemy. In its technical English sense signifies the speaking evil of God, and in this sense it is found Ps. lxxiv. 18; Isa. lii. 5; Rom. ii. 24, etc. But according to its derivation it may mean any species of calumny and abuse: see 1 Kings xxi. 10; Acts xviii. 6; Jude 9, etc. Blasphemy was punished with stoning, which was inflicted on the son of Shelomith (Lev. xxiv. 11). On this charge both our Lord and St. Stephen were condemned to death by the Jews. It only remains to speak of "the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost," which has been so fruitful a theme for speculation and controversy (Matt. xii. 32; Mark iii. 28). It consisted in attributing to the power of Satan those unquestionable miracles which Jesus performed by "the finger of God" and the power of the Holy Spirit.

Boaner'ges. A name, signifying "sons of thunder," given by our Lord to the two sons of Zebedee, James and John (Mark iii. 17). See Luke ix. 54; Mark ix. 38; comp. Matt. xx. 20, etc.

Bo'az. 1. A wealthy Bethlehemite, kinsman to Elimelech, the husband of Naomi. He married Ruth, and redeemed the estates of her deceased husband Mahlon (iv. 1). Boaz is mentioned in the genealogy of Christ (Matt. i. 5), but there is great difficulty in assigning his date. 2. BOAZ, the name of one of Solomon's brazen pillars erected in the temple porch. [See JACHIN.] It stood on the left, and was eighteen cubits high (1 Kings vii. 15, 21; 2 Chron. iii. 15; Jer. lii. 21).

Boll'ed. A word which occurs but once in the Bible (Ex. ix. 31). "The flax was balled," which seems to mean that it was nearly ripe, and the round seed-vessels fully developed.

Bonnet. A covering for the head worn by Jewish priests. Josephus says that the bonnet worn by the private priests was composed of several rounds of linen cloth turned in and sewed together. The whole was entirely covered with another piece Canaan no captives were to be made (Deut. xx. 14 and 16); beyond these limits, in case of warlike resistance, all the women and children were to be made captives, and the men put to death. The law of booty is given in Num. xxxi. 26-47. As regarded the army, David added a regulation that the baggage-guard should share equally with the troops engaged (1 Sam. xxx. 24, 25).

Bottle. 1. The skin bottle, made of goat-skins. When the animal is killed they cut off its head and its feet, and they draw it in this manner out of the skin without opening its belly (Ps. cxix. 83; Matt. ix. 17). 2. The bottle of earthen or glass ware, both of them capable of being closed from the air. Such vessels were used among the Greeks, Egyptians, Etruscans and Assyrians, and also no doubt among the Jews, especially in later times (Jer. xix. 1). The Jews probably borrowed their manufactures in this particular from Egypt.

Boz'rah. 1. In Edom—the city of Jobab the son of Zerah, one of the early kings of that nation (Gen. xxxvi. 33; 1 Chron. i. 44). There is no reason to doubt that its modern representative is el-Busaireh, which lies in the mountain district to the south-east of the Dead Sea. 2. In his catalogue of the cities of the land of Moab, Jeremiah (xlviii. 24) mentions a Bozrah as in "the plain country" (ver. 21), i.e., the high level downs on the east of the Dead Sea.

Bracelet. A bracelet is commonly worn by the Oriental princes as a badge of power and authority. This was probably the reason that the Amalekite brought the bracelet which he found on Saul's arm, along with his crown, to David (2 Sam. i. 10). It was a royal ornament, and belonged to the regalia of the kingdom. The bracelet, it must be acknowledged, was worn both by men and women of different ranks; but this ornament was worn by kings and princes in a different manner from their subjects. It was fastened above the elbow, and was commonly of great value.

Brass. In most places of the O. T. the correct translation would be copper, although it may sometimes possibly mean bronze, a compound of copper and tin. Indeed, a simple metal was obviously intended, as we see from Deut. viii. 9; xxxi. 25, and Job xxviii. 2. Copper was known at a very early period (Gen. iv. 22).

Brazen Serpent. Was an image of polished brass, in the form of one of those fiery serpents which were sent to chastise the murmuring Israelites in the wilderness, and whose bite caused violent heat, thirst and inflammation. By Divine command "Moses made a serpent of brass," or copper, and "put it upon a pole; and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the Bridegroom. A betrothed or new-married man. Among the Arabs, brides appear with great reverence before their bridegrooms, and often cast themselves down at their feet (Gen. xxiv. 64, 65; Ps. xlv. 10, 11). Christ is called a Bridegroom. In the council of peace and in the day of his power he unites his people to himself, rejoices over them, and feasts them with his love, and will quickly come to receive them home to his heavenly mansions (Matt. xxv. 1-10).

Brig'andine. An ancient kind of mail worn in battle to secure the soldiers from sword-cuts (Jer. xli. 4).

Bulrush (Ex. ii. 3; Job viii. 11; Isa. xviii. 2; xxxv. 7). A plant growing on the banks of the ate it as a feast, and invited widows, orphans, Levites, etc., to partake.

Bus'rah, or Bos'tra. A Roman city in Bashan, full sixty miles from Heshbon.

Butter. Is taken in Scripture, as it has been almost perpetually in the East, for cream or liquid butter (Prov. xxx. 33; 2 Sam. xvii. 29). The ancient way of making butter in Arabia and Palestine was probably nearly the same as is still practiced by the Bedoween Arabs, and Moors in Barbary, and which is thus described by Dr. Shaw: "Their method of making butter is by putting the milk or cream into a goat's skin turned inside out, which they suspend from one side of the tent to the other; and then pressing it to and fro in one uniform direction, they quickly separate the unctuous and wheyey parts. In the Levant they tread upon the skin with their feet, which produces the same effect." The last method of separating the butter from the milk perhaps may throw light upon a passage in Job of some difficulty: "When I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured me out rivers of oil" (Job xxxi. 6). The method of making butter in the East illustrates the conduct of Jael, the wife of Heber, described in the book of Judges: "And Sisera said unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink, for I am thirsty: and she opened a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him." In the song of Deborah, the statement is repeated: "He asked water, and she gave him milk; she brought forth butter in a lordly dish" (Judg. iv. 19; v. 25).

Buz. 1. A son of Abraham's brother Nahor (Gen. xxii. 21). 2. A Gadite (1 Chron. v. 14).

Bu'zi. A priest, the father of Ezekiel the prophet (Ezek. i. 3).

Bu'zite. Elihu is so designated (Job xxxii. 2, 6); the descendant probably of Buz, the son of Nahor (Gen. xxii. 21).

C.

Cab, or Kab. A measure for things dry, mentioned in 2 Kings vi. 25. The rabbins make it the sixth part of a seah or satum, and the eighteenth part of an ephah. This would be nearly two quarts English measure.

Cæ'sar. The appellation of a noble Roman family, the most distinguished of whom, Caius Julius Cæsar, obtained supreme power as dictator. This power was consolidated by his grand-nephew Caius Octavius (who assumed the name or title of Augustus), and transmitted to successors at first of his own family. By Cæsar in the New Testament is always understood the Roman emperor, as the actual sovereign of the country (John xix. 15). To serpent of brass, he lived" (Num. xxi. 6-9). This brazen serpent was preserved as a monument of the Divine mercy, but in process of time became an instrument of idolatry.

Bread. Is a word used in Scripture for food in general (Gen. iii. 19; Ex. ii. 20). Bread was made in various ways. As it was generally made by the Jews in thin cakes, it was not cut but broken, which gave rise to the phrase, "breaking of bread," to signify eating.

Breastplate. A part of the high priest's fine apparel. It was about ten inches square, and consisted of a folded piece of the same rich embroidered stuff whereof the robe of the ephod was formed. It was set with twelve different precious stones, fastened in ouches of gold, one for every Hebrew tribe. These were set in four rows; in the uppermost were a sardius, topaz and carbuncle, for Reuben, Simeon and Levi; in the second, an emerald, sapphire and diamond, for Judah, Dan and Naphtali; in the third, a ligure, an agate and amethyst, for Gad, Asher and Issachar; in the lowest, a beryl, onyx and jasper, for Zebulun, Joseph and Benjamin. This was fastened on the high priest's breast. By the two upper corners it was fastened to his shoulders; by the two below it was fastened to the girdle of the ephod; by wearing it he carried the twelve tribes, as on his heart, before God.

Brick. In the walls of Babylon clay dug out of the ditch was made into bricks as soon as it was carried up, and burnt in kilns. The bricks were cemented with hot bitumen, and at every thirtieth row crates of reeds were stuffed in (comp. Gen. xi. 3). The Babylonian bricks were more commonly burnt in kilns than those used at Nineveh, which are chiefly sun-dried, like the Egyptian. They are usually from twelve to thirteen inches square, and three and a half inches thick. They thus possess more of the character of tiles (Ezek. iv. 1). The Jews learned the art of brick-making in Egypt, and we find the use of the brick-kiln in David's time (2 Sam. xii. 31), and a complaint made by Isaiah that the people built altars of brick instead of unhewn stone, as the law directed (Isa. lxv. 3; Ex. xx. 25).

Nile and in marshy grounds. The stalk rises to the height of six or seven cubits, besides two under water—is triangular, and terminates in a crown of small filaments. This reed was of the greatest use to the inhabitants of the country where it grew; the pith contained in the stock served them for food, and the woody part for building vessels, figures of which are to be seen on the engraven stones and other monuments of Egyptian antiquity.

Bu'rial. The Jews uniformly disposed of the corpse by entombment where possible, and, failing that, by interment, extending this respect to the remains even of the slain enemy and malefactor (1 Kings xi. 15; Deut. xxi. 23); in the latter case by express provision of law. A natural cave enlarged and adapted by excavation, or an artificial imitation of one, was the standard type of sepulchre. Coffins were but seldom used, and if used were open, but fixed stone sarcophagi were common in tombs of rank. It was the office of the next of kin to perform and preside over the whole funeral office, but a company of public buriers (Ezek. xxxix. 12-14) had apparently become customary in the times of the N. T. (Acts v. 6, 10).

Burnt-Offering. A "whole burnt-offering" was a sacrifice in which the victim was wholly consumed on the altar. A "burnt-offering" was the fat of the intestines and kidneys, and the fat tail of sheep, burnt after being sprinkled with salt. The right fore quarter was the portion of the priest, and the rest was given back to the offerer, who commonly him tribute was paid; to him Roman citizens had the right of appeal. So far as the historical part of the New Testament reaches, the events fall within the reigns of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius and Nero (Luke ii. 1; iii. 1; Acts xi. 28; xxv. 11; Phil. iv. 22). In the two places last referred to Nero is intended. Caligula is not mentioned at all in Scripture.

Cæsare'a. A celebrated city of Palestine lying on the Mediterranean sea-coast, on the great road from Tyre to Egypt, about seventy miles north-west of Jerusalem. All memorial of it has perished. Cæsarea was built in ten years by Herod the Great, who named it in honour of the Emperor Augustus; it was sometimes called Cæsarea Stratonis, or Cæsarea Palestina, to distinguish it from Cæsarea Philippi. Josephus describes it as a magnificent city, and speaks of an artificial harbour formed by a noble pier or breakwater, with convenient landing-wharves. There can be no doubt that Cæsarea was large and populous, and many of its buildings imposing. There was a temple conspicuous from the sea, dedicated to Cesar and to Rome.

Cai'aphas. In full, JOSEPH CAIAPHAS, high priest of the Jews under Tiberius (Matt. xxvi. 3, 57; John xi. 49; xviii. 13, 14, 24, 28; Acts iv. 6). The Procurator Valerius Gratus appointed him to the dignity. He was son-in-law of Annas. [See ANNAS.]

Cain. The first-born of Adam and Eve. He was so named (the word signifying acquisition) because at his birth Eve said, "I have acquired a man from Jehovah," or "even Jehovah." It is generally thought that Eve regarded the child as obtained from or by the help of the Deity, and but an earnest of a future greater Seed. Cain was a tiller of the ground, and, jealous that his brother Abel's burnt-offering was accepted while his own oblation of fruits, a mere thank-offering, was rejected, he murdered Abel, for which he became an exile, and settled in the land of Nod, where he built a city. His descendants are noted as herdsmen, artificers and musicians (Gen. iv.) The "mark set upon" Cain was probably no more than the promise given him—a guarantee that the life of the first murderer would be untouched by the building also encloses within its spacious walls several other places reputed sacred. The places which claim the chief attention of the Christian visitant of this church, and those only perhaps which can be relied on, are the spot on which the crucifixion took place, and the sepulchre in which our Lord was afterward laid.

Cam'el. A well-known ruminant quadruped, whose native regions are Central and Western Asia.

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN FUNERAL PROCESSION.

The scriptural allusions must all be considered as referring to the same species, that with a single hump, known to naturalists as the Arabian camel. The term dromedary is not, as is often supposed, a distinction of species, but of breed. The word indicates merely a swift breed, bearing about the same relation to "camel" as our word "racer" does to a "horse." There is another species of camel, the Bactrian camel, distinguished by having two humps on the back, but the native regions of this kind are the steppes of Tartary and Central Asia. From very early times the camel has been the great medium of commerce in the East.

Ca'na. A town of Galilee, where Jesus performed his first miracle (John ii. 1, 2, etc.). It lay in the tribe of Zebulun, not far from Nazareth. A modern traveller says "It is worthy of note that, in walking among the ruins of a church, we saw sanctuary. There are two very particular descriptions of it (Ex. xxv. 31-40; xxxvii. 17-24). It was of pure gold, and required a talent (5475*l.*) for its construction.

Capernaum. A place in Upper Galilee on the borders of Zebulun and Naphtali (Matt. iv. 13), by the Sea of Gennesaret (John vi. 17), not far from the influx of the Jordan into it. Capernaum appears to have lain on the great commercial route from Damascus to the Mediterranean; and it has been suggested that we have here the explanation of "the receipt of custom" (Matt. ix. 9), duties being levied on the commodities carried along this road. Capernaum was a town of importance: it had a synagogue, in which Jesus taught (John vi. 59), and it was for some time our Lord's ordinary residence after quitting Nazareth (Matt. iv. 13; Luke iv. 30, 31); so that it was called his "own city" (Matt. ix. 1; Mark ii. 1, where "in the house" means at home). Here, therefore, many of his miracles were wrought (Matt. viii. 5-17; ix. 1-8; Mark i. 23-27); here, by the lake-side, he called Simon and Andrew, James and John (16-21); here, too, he called Matthew (Matt. ix. 9); here, indeed, so many wonders were performed, and so much Divine teaching was delivered, that Capernaum incurred more guilt by the impenitence and unbelief it manifested than even Sodom, and fearful was the doom which the Lord denounced against it (xi. 23, 24). That sentence was executed. The once flourishing and favoured Capernaum has been so brought down that the site of it cannot be perfectly ascertained.

Cappado'cia. A province in the north-eastern part of Asia Minor. It was famous for horses, mules and flocks, and traded in these with the Tyrians (Ezek. xxvii. 14). Christianity was introduced here in the days of the apostles (Acts ii. 9).

BACTRIAN CAMEL.

Car'mel (the park, or the well-wooded place). Mount Carmel is more properly an elevated ridge than a mountain in the ordinary sense. It forms one of the more striking and attractive features in Central Palestine. It is altogether fully twelve miles long, and on the side toward the sea juts out into a bluff promontory or headland, the only thing that deserves the name on the sea-coast of Palestine. This headland lies a few miles to the south hand of man. Cain is repeatedly alluded to in the New Testament (Heb. xi. 4; 1 John iii. 12; Jude 11).

Ca'leb. 1. The son of Hezron, of the tribe of Judah, and the father of Hur (1 Chron. ii. 9, where Chelubai, 18, 19, 42, 46, 48). 2. The son of Jephunneh, a chief selected from Judah, with one of every other tribe, to search the land of Canaan. He is also called the Kenezite (Num. xxxii. 12; Josh. xiv. 6, 14). By his three sons, Iru, Elah and Naam, Caleb had a numerous posterity, who maintained an honourable rank among their brethren. See Num. xiii.; Josh. xiv. 6-15; xv. 13-19; Judg. i. 9-15; 1 Chron. iv. 15-20.

Cal'amus (Ex. xxx. 23; Cant. iv. 14; Isa. xliii. 24; Jer. vi. 20; Ezek. xxvii. 19). An aromatic reed, growing in moist places in Egypt, in Judea near Lake Gennesaret, and in several parts of Syria. It grows to about two feet in height, bearing from the root a round knotted stalk, containing a soft white pith. The whole is of an agreeable aromatic smell, and when cut down, dried and powdered, it makes an ingredient in the richest perfumes. It was used for this purpose by the Jews.

Cal'vary. Or, as it is called in Hebrew, Golgotha, "a skull," or "place of skulls," supposed to be thus denominated from the similitude it bore to the figure of a skull or man's head, or from its being a place of burial. It was a small eminence or hill to the north of Mount Sion, and to the west of old Jerusalem. Upon it our Lord was crucified. The ancient summit of Calvary has been much altered, by reducing its level in some parts and raising it in others, in order to bring it within the area of a large and irregular building called "The Church of the Holy Sepulchre," which now occupies its site. But in doing this care has been taken that none of the parts connected with the crucifixion should suffer any alteration. The same large massy stone pots, answering the description given of the ancient vessels of the country; these were not preserved nor exhibited as relics, but lying about, disregarded by the present inhabitants, as antiquities with whose original use they were unacquainted. From their appearance, and the number of them, it was quite evident that a practice of keeping water in large stone pots, each holding from eighteen to twenty-seven gallons, was once common in the country."

Ca'naan. The son of Ham. The Hebrews believe that Canaan, having first discovered Noah's nakedness, told his father Ham, and that Noah when he awoke, having understood what had passed, cursed Canaan, the first author of the offence. Others are of opinion that Ham was punished in his son Canaan (Gen. ix. 25).

The posterity of Canaan was numerous. His eldest son, Sidon, founded the city of Sidon, and was father of the Sidonians and Phœnicians. Canaan had ten other sons, who were fathers of as many tribes dwelling in Palestine and Syria; namely, the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Girgasites, the Hivites, the Arkites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, the Zemarites, and the Hethathites. It is believed that Canaan lived and died in Palestine, which from him was called the land of Canaan.

Ca'naan, the Land of. "Lowland," a name denoting the country west of the Jordan and Dead Sea, and between those waters and the Mediterranean. It is only in later notices, such as Zeph. ii. 5 and Matt. xv. 22, that we find it applied to the low maritime plains of Philistia and Phœnicia (Mark vii. 26).

Candle. The word occurs often in our version (Job xviii. 6; Ps. xviii. 28, and elsewhere, where rather a lamp is meant). So also in the New Testament. But candles made of wax or tallow, with of Ptolemais or Aere. It is in various parts of quite easy ascent from the sea, and on that side is only about six hundred feet above the level of the sea; as it stretches toward the south-east it rises higher, and toward the eastern extremity it reaches an elevation of about sixteen hundred feet (Cant. vii. 5; Isa. xxxv. 2; Amos i. 2; 2 Kings i. 9).

Cap'tain. The rendering of a Hebrew word generally signifying a military officer. There were various ranks, from the captains of fifty to the captain of the host, or commander-in-chief (1 Sam. xvii. 13; 2 Sam. xix. 13; 2 Kings i. 9; xi. 15). Captains of the guard are also mentioned (Gen. xxxvii. 36; 2 Kings xxv. 8). There is another Hebrew word translated sometimes "captain" (Josh. x. 24), sometimes "ruler" (Isa. iii. 6). The captain of the temple (Luke xxii. 4; Acts iv. 1; v. 24) was not a military man, but the chief of the priests and Levites that watched in the temple at night (Ps. cxxxiv. 1). The word "Captain" applied to our Lord (Heb. ii. 10) has not a military signification.

Car'buncle (Ex. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 10; Ezek. xxviii. 13). A very elegant and rare gem, known to the ancients by the name signifying coal, because, when held up before the sun, it appears like a piece of bright burning charcoal; the name carbunculus has the same meaning. It is mentioned among the glorious stones of which the new Jerusalem is figuratively said to be built.

Car'pus. The friend and host of Paul when he was at Troas (2 Tim. iv. 13). He is thought to have been one of the disciples.

LAKE OF TIBERIAS FROM TELL HUM, ONE OF THE SUPPOSED SITES OF CAPERNAUM.

Car'riage. This word only occurs six times, and signifies what we now call "baggage." In the margin of 1 Sam. xvii. 20 and xxvi. 5-7—and there only—"carriage" is employed in the sense of a wagon or cart.

Cart (Gen. xlv. 19, 27; Num. vii. 3, 7, 8). A vehicle drawn by cattle (2 Sam. vi. 6), to be distinguished from the chariot drawn by horses. Carts and wagons were either open or covered (Num. vii. 3), and were used for conveyance of persons (Gen. xlv. 19), burdens (1 Sam. vi. 7, 8), or produce (Amos ii. 13). In the monuments of ancient Egypt representations are found of carts with two wheels having four or six spokes, used for carrying produce, and of one used for religious purposes having four wheels with eight spokes.

Cas'sia. Two Hebrew words are translated cassia; one, implying to "split" (Ex. xxx. 24; Ezek. xxvii. 19); the other has the sense of peeling (Ps. xlv. 8). The rind or bark of an aromatic plant not so fine or fragrant as cinnamon, but much resembling it. This may be the Cinnamomum cassia, a native of India and China. Cassia was one of the ingredients in the holy anointing oil; it was used to perfume garments, and was an article of merchandise at Tyre.

Cas'tle (Acts xxi. 34, 37; xxii. 24; xxiii. 10, 16, 32). A fortress at the north-west corner of the temple in Jerusalem. It was called by Herod the tower of Antonia, in honour of his patron, Mark Antony.

Cas'tor and Pol'lux (Acts xxviii. 11). The twin sons of Jupiter and Leda, regarded as the tutelary divinities of sailors. In art they were sometimes represented as young men on horseback, with conical caps and stars above them. Such figures were probably painted or sculptured at the bow of the ship.

Ce'dar. There is little doubt that the Hebrew erez (the firmly-rooted and strong tree), invariably rendered "cedar," does stand for that tree in most of the passages where the word occurs (Isa. ii. 13; Ezek. xxxi. 3; 1 Kings v. 6, 10; Isa. xlv. 14). As far as is at present known, the cedar of Lebanon is confined in Syria to one valley of the Lebanon range, viz.: that of the Kedisha river, which flows from near the highest point of the range west to the Mediterranean, and enters the sea at the port of Tripoli.

Ce'dron. The N. T. name of the brook Kidron, in the ravine below the eastern wall of Jerusalem (John xviii. 1, only). [See KIDRON.]

Cen'chrea (accurately Cenchreae). The eastern harbour of Corinth. St. Paul sailed from Cenchreae (Acts xviii. 18) on his return to Syria from his second missionary journey; and when he wrote his Epistle to the Romans in the course of the third journey an organized church seems to have been formed here (Rom. xvi. 1).

Cen'ser. A small portable vessel of metal fitted to receive burning coals from the altar, and on which the incense for burning was sprinkled (2 Chron. xxvi. 18; Luke i. 9). Distinct precepts regarding the use of the censer are found in Num. iv. 14 and in Lev. xvi. 12.

Centu'ron. The commander of a century, of which there were sixty in a Roman legion. At first there were, as the name implies, one hundred men far as Ur, called Ur of the Chaldees. This country had also the name of Shinar.

Cham'berlain. Erastus, "the chamberlain" of Corinth, was one of those whose salutations to the Roman Christians are given at the end of the Epistle addressed to them (Rom. xvi. 23). The office which he held was apparently that of public treasurer. The office held by Blastus, "the king's chamberlain," was different from this (Acts xii. 20). It was a post of honour which involved great intimacy and influence with the king.

Chap'iter. The capital of a pillar; also possibly a roll moulding at the top of a building or work of art.

Char'ger. A shallow vessel for receiving water or blood, also for presenting offerings of fine flour with oil (Num. vii. 79). The daughter of Herodias brought the head of St. John the Baptist in a charger (Matt. xiv. 8), probably a trencher or platter.

Che'bar. A river in the "land of the Chal-

deans" (Ezek. i. 3), on the banks of which some of the Jews were located at the time of the captivity, and where Ezekiel saw his earlier visions (Ezek. i. 1; iii. 15, 23, etc.).

Che'dorlao'mer. A king of the Elamites, who were either Persians or people bordering upon the Persians. This was one of the four confederated kings who made war upon the five kings of the Pentapolis of Sodom; and who, after having defeated them, and made themselves masters of a great booty, were pursued and dispersed by Abraham (Gen. xiv.).

Che'mosh. The national deity of the Moabites (Num. xxi. 29; Jer. xlviii. 7, 13, 46). In Judg. xi. 24 he also appears as the god of the Ammonites. Solomon introduced, and Josiah abolished, the worship of Chemosh at Jerusalem (1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13).

Cher'ethites and Pel'ethites. The life-guards of King David. It is plain that these royal guards were employed as executioners (2 Kings xi. 4) and as couriers (1 Kings xiv. 27).

Cher'ub. It appears from Gen. iii. 29 that this is a name given to angels; but whether it is the name of a distinct class or the same as the seraphim, we have no means of determining. The term cherubim generally signifies the figures Moses was commanded to make and place at each end of the mercy-seat, and which covered the ark with expanded wings in the most holy place of the Jewish tabernacle and temple (Ex. xxv. 18, 19). The word in Hebrew is sometimes taken for a calf or ox; and Ezek. x. 14 sets down the face of a cherub as synonymous to the face of an ox.

Chest'nut tree. Of the beech kind. There are four sorts of it. That which is most regarded is a beautiful and tall tree, with a thick shade. Its fruit is a kind of nut useful for food. Jacob's peeled rods for marking the embryos of the cattle were partly of chestnut (Gen. xxv. 37, 39). The Assyrian king and his empire are likened to a chestnut tree, for their glory, power and influence (Ezek. xxxi. 8).

Chil'dren. The blessing of offspring, especially of the male sex, is highly valued among all East-in each century; subsequently, the number varied according to the strength of the legion (Matt. viii. 5; xxvii. 36; Acts x. 1; xxii. 25; xxiii. 23; xxvii. 1).

Chal'cedony (Rev. xxi. 19). A precious stone. It is said it was so called from Chalcedon, and was in colour like a carbuncle. Some have supposed this also to be the stone designated by the Hebrew word which is translated "emerald" (Ex. xxviii. 18).

Chalde'a, or Babylo'nia. The country lying on both sides of the Euphrates, of which Babylon was the capital; and extending southward to the Persian Gulf, and northward into Mesopotamia, at least as ern nations, while the absence is regarded as one of the severest punishments (Gen. xvi. 2; Dent. vii. 14; 1 Sam. i. 6; 2 Sam. vi. 23; 2 Kings iv. 14; Isa. xlvii. 9; Jer. xx. 15; Ps. cxxvii. 3, 5). As soon as the child was born it was washed in a bath, rubbed with salt and wrapped in swaddling-clothes. Arab mothers sometimes rub their children with earth or sand (Ezek. xvi. 4; Job xxxviii. 9; Luke ii. 7). The period of nursing appears to have been sometimes prolonged to three years (Isa.

with the character of SON. Compare Luke i. 32, 35 with 16, 17, 46, 47; John iii. 31, 35, 36 and i. 18; vi. 46 and ix. 35-38; Matt. xi. 27; xiv. 33, and xxvii. 54. His character of SON is also plainly distinguished from his official character of CHRIST. See John i. 49; vi. 66, 67 and vii. 29; Matt. xvi. 15, 16. By his silence he plainly conceded to his enemies that his claim to be the Son of God imported his asserting himself equal with God (John v. 17, 18, 19; x. 31-39 and xix. 7).

and the return of the Jews from Babylonish captivity. They embrace a period of three thousand four hundred and sixty-eight years.

Chu'shan-Rishatha'im. The king of Mesopotamia who oppressed Israel, and whose yoke was broken from the neck of the people of Israel at the end of eight years by Othniel, Caleb's nephew (Judg. iii. 10), after which nothing more is heard of Mesopotamia as an aggressive power.

Cilic'ia. A country in the south-east of Asia Minor, and lying on the northern coast, at the east end of the Mediterranean Sea: the capital city thereof was Tarsus, the native city of Paul (Acts xxi. 39).

Cin'namon. An agreeable aromatic; the inward bark of the cahella, a small tree of the height of the willow. It is mentioned (Ex. xxx. 23) among the materials in the composition of the holy anointing oil; and in Prov. vii. 17; Cant. iv. 14; and Rev. xviii. 13 among the richest perfumes. In the days of Moses it was brought probably from Arabia or some neighbouring country. We learn, however, from Pliny, that a species of it grew in Syria.

Circumcis'ion. Peculiarly, though not exclusively, a Jewish rite. It was enjoined upon Abraham, the father of the nation, by God, at the institution, and as the token, of the covenant, which assured to him and his descendants the promise of the Messiah (Gen. xvii.) It was thus made a necessary condition of Jewish nationality. Every male child was to be circumcised when eight days old (Lev. xii. 3), on pain of death. If the eighth day were a sabbath, the rite was not postponed (John vii. 22, 23). Slaves, whether home-born or purchased, were circumcised (Gen. xvii. 12, 13); and foreigners must have their males circumcised before they could be allowed to partake of the passover (Ex. xii. 48) or become Jewish citizens. It seems to have been customary to name a child when it was circumcised (Luke i. 59). The use of circumcision by other nations besides the Jews is to be gathered almost entirely from sources extraneous to the Bible. The attitude which Chris-xlix. 15; 2 Mace. vii. 27). The time of weaning was an occasion of rejoicing (Gen. xxi. 8). Daughters usually remained in the women's apartments till marriage, or, among the poorer classes, were employed in household work. The first-born male children were regarded as devoted to God, and were to be redeemed by an offering (Ex. xiii. 13; Num. xviii. 15; Luke ii. 22). The authority of parents, especially of the father, over children was very great, as was also the reverence enjoined by the law to be paid to parents.

Chora'zin. One of the cities in which our Lord's mighty works were done, but named only in his denunciation (Matt. xi. 21; Luke x. 13). Its site is uncertain.

Christ Je'sus. The Lord and Saviour of mankind. He is called CHRIST, or MESSIAH, because he is anointed, sent and furnished by God to execute his mediatorial office; and is called JESUS, because, by his righteousness, power and Spirit, he is qualified to save, to the uttermost, them that come unto God through him; he is appointed of God for that end, and freely given in the offer of the gospel (Isa. lxi. 1, 2, 3; Matt. i. 21). He is the eternal Son of God, equal with his adored Father in every unbounded perfection. No man that doubts of his being the only true and most high God can, in consistency with common sense, allow himself to be a Christian. If Jesus be not the supreme God, he was a setter-up of idolatry, encouraging men to worship himself; and Mohammed, who zealously opposed such worship, must be a valuable reformer. If Christ be not God, the Jews did well to crucify him as a noted blasphemer that made himself equal with God; they did well to persecute his apostles, who represented him as the object of worship. If Christ be not God, the whole of the mystery of our redemption is erroneous or trifling. Where is the divine love in sending a merely nominal God to redeem us? or what can his death avail us who are not nominal but real transgressors against infinite Majesty? If Christ be not the supreme God, how obscure, false, absurd and impious must the language of the Holy Ghost be, particularly in the predictions relative to him! If Christ be not God, what is the whole Christian religion but a mere comedy and farce, in which one appears in the character of God who is not really so? What are its miracles, predictions and mysteries but a system of magic, invented or affected by Satan, to promote the blasphemous adoration of a creature?

Nor is his eternal generation and divine Sonship less clearly marked in Scripture. A great number of texts represent him as God's proper and only-begotten Son, prior to all donation of him (Rom. viii. 3, 32; John i. 14, and iii. 16). Acts proper only to God are ascribed to him when marked Chris'tian. A follower of the religion of Christ. It is probable that the name Christian, like those of Nazarenes and Galileans, was given to the disciples of our Lord in reproach or contempt. They were denominated Christians, A. D. 42 or 43; and though the name was at first given reproachfully, they gloried in it, as expressing their adherence to Christ, and they soon generally assumed it.

Chron'icles, First and Second Books of. The name originally given to the record made by the appointed historiographers in the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. In the LXX. these books are called Paralipomena (i. e., things omitted), which is understood as meaning that they are supplementary to the book of Kings. The Vulgate retains both the Hebrew and Greek name in Latin characters, Dibre jemmim, or hajamim, and Paralipomenon. The constant tradition of the Jews is that these books were for the most part compiled by Ezra. In fact, the internal evidence as to the time when the book of Chronicles was compiled seems to tally remarkably with the tradition concerning its authorship. The first book traces the Israelites from Adam to David. The second relates the progress and dissolution of the kingdom of Judah tianity at its introduction assumed toward circumcision was one of absolute hostility, so far as the necessity of the rite to salvation, or its possession of any religious or moral worth, was concerned (Acts xv.; Gal. v. 2).

Cis'tern. A reservoir chiefly for rain-water. Numbers of these are still to be seen in Palestine, some of which are a hundred and fifty paces long and sixty broad. The reason of their being so large was that the cities were many of them built in elevated situations; and the rain falling only twice in the year—namely, spring and autumn—it became necessary for them to collect a quantity of water, as well for the cattle as for the people. A broken cistern would of course be a great calamity to a family, or in some cases even to a town; and with reference to this we may see the force of the reproof (Jer. ii. 13).

Cities of Refuge. Six Levitical cities specially chosen for refuge to the involuntary homicide until released from banishment by the death of the high priest (Num. xxxv. 6, 13, 15; Josh. xx. 2, 7, 9).

rendered, "He suddenly went away from them," the word being often applied by the Greek writers to those who in any way, but especially suddenly and abruptly, withdraw from any one's company. No other actions of Cleopas are known.

Cock. In the N. T. the "cock" is mentioned in reference to St. Peter's denial of our Lord, and indirectly in the word "cock-crowing" (Matt. xxvi. 34; Mark xiv. 30; xiii. 35, etc.) We know that the domestic cock and hen were early known than among us, owing to the absence of moral stigma. The concubine's condition was a definite one. With regard to the children of wife and concubine, there was no such difference as our illegitimacy implies; the latter were a supplementary family to the former, their names occur in the patriarchal genealogies (Gen. xxii. 24; 1 Chron. i. 32), and their position and provision would depend on the father's will (Gen. xxv. 6). The state of concubinage is assumed and provided for by the law of Moses. A concubine would generally be either (1), a Hebrew girl bought of her father; (2), a Gentile captive taken in war; (3), a foreign slave bought, or (4), a Canaanitish woman, bond or free. The rights of (1) and (2) were protected by law (Ex. xxi. 7; Deut. xxi. 10-14), but (3) was unrecognized, and (4) prohibited.

Co'ney (Lev. xi. 5; Deut. xiv. 7; Ps. civ. 8 and Prov. xxx. 26). This curious animal is found in Ethiopia, and in great numbers on Mount Lebanon, etc. Instead of holes, they seem to delight in more airy places, in the mouths of caves or clefts in the rock. They are gregarious, and have something very mild, feeble-like and timid in their deportment. Many are the reasons to believe this to be the animal called saphan in Hebrew, and erroneously by our translators "the coney," or rabbit.

Cop'per. Rendered "brass," except in Ezra viii. 27 and Jer. xv. 12. It was almost exclusively used by the ancients for common purposes. We read of copper possessed in countless abundance in 2 Chron. iv. 18. [See BRASS.]

Cor'al (Job xxviii. 18; Ezek. xxvii. 16). A hard, cretaceous marine production. It is of different colours—black, white and red. The latter is the sort emphatically called coral, as being the most valuable and usually made into ornaments. This, though no gem, is ranked by the author of the book of Job (xxviii. 18) with the onyx and sapphire.

Cor'ban (Mark vii. 11). From a Hebrew word to offer, to present. It denotes a gift, a present made to God or to his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or by gifts offered to God (Matt. xxiii. 18). Jesus Christ reproaches the Jews with cruelty toward their parents in making a corban of what should have been appropriated to their use. For when a child was asked to relieve the wants of his father or mother, he would often say, "It is a gift" (corban) "by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me;" that is, I have devoted that

SITE OF ANCIENT CAESAREA.

There were three on each side of Jordan: 1. Kedesh, Shechem and Hebron; 2. On the east side of Jordan—Bezer, Ramoth-gilead and Golan.

Clau'dia. A Christian woman mentioned in 2 Tim. iv. 21 as saluting Timothy. There is reason for supposing that this Claudia was a British maiden, daughter of King Cogidubnus, an ally of Rome, who took the name of his imperial patron, Tiberius Claudius. She appears to have become the wife of Pudens, who is mentioned in the same verse.

Clem'ent (Phil. iv. 3). A fellow-labourer of St. Paul when he was at Philippi. It was generally believed in the ancient Church that this Clement was identical with the bishop of Rome who afterward became so celebrated.

Cle'opas. According to Eusebius and Epiphanius he was brother of Joseph, both being sons of Jacob. He was the father of Simeon, of James the Less, of Jude, and Joseph or Joses. Cleopas married Mary, sister to the blessed virgin. He was therefore uncle to Jesus Christ, and his sons were first cousins to him. Cleopas, his wife and sons were disciples of Christ. Having beheld our Saviour expire upon the cross, he, like the other disciples, appears to have lost all hopes of seeing the kingdom of God established by him on earth. The third day after our Saviour's death, on the day of his resurrection, Cleopas, with another disciple, departed from Jerusalem to Emmaus, and in the way discoursed on what had lately happened. Our Saviour joined them, appearing as a traveller, and taking up their discourse, he reasoned with them, convincing them out of the Scriptures that it was necessary the Messiah should suffer death previously to his being glorified. At Emmaus, Jesus seemed as if inclined to go farther, but Cleopas and his companion detained him, and made him sup with them. While they were at table Jesus took bread, blessed it, brake and gave it to them, and by this action their eyes were opened and they knew him. Upon his disappearing they instantly returned to Jerusalem to announce the fact to the apostles, who in their turn declared that "the Lord was risen indeed, and had appeared to Peter." In our translation of Luke xxiv. 31 it is said that Jesus "vanished out of sight;" but the original is more properly to the ancient Greeks and Romans, and as no mention is made in the O. T. of these birds, and no figures of them occur on the Egyptian monuments, they probably came into Judea with the Romans, who, as is well known, prized these birds both as articles of food and for cock-fighting.

Colos'se. A city of Phrygia Minor, which stood on the river Lyceus, at an equal distance between Laodicea and Hierapolis. These three cities, says Eusebius, were destroyed by an earthquake, in the tenth of Nero, or about two years after the date of St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossians. Laodicea, Hierapolis and Colosse were at no great distance from each other; which accounts for the Apostle Paul, when writing to his Christian brethren in the latter of these places, mentioning them all in connection with each other (Col. iv. 13).

Colos'sians, the Epistle to the. Written by the Apostle St. Paul during his first captivity at Rome (Acts xxviii. 16), addressed to the Christians of the city of Colosse, and delivered to them by Tychicus, whom the apostle had sent both to them (ch. iv. 7, 8) and to the Church of Ephesus (ch. vi. 21) to inquire into their state and to administer exhortation and comfort. The Epistle seems to have been called forth by the information St. Paul had received from Epaphras (ch. iv. 12; Philem. 23) and from Onesimus, both of whom appear to have been natives of Colosse. The main object of the Epistle is to warn the Colossians against a spirit of semi-Judaistic and semi-Oriental philosophy which was corrupting the simplicity of their belief, and was noticeably tending to obscure the eternal glory and dignity of Christ.

Con'cubine. The difference between wife and concubine was less marked among the Hebrews to God which you ask of me, and it is no longer mine to give (Mark vii. 11). Thus they violated a precept of the moral law through a superstitious devotion to Pharisaic observances.

Corian'der (Ex. xvi. 31; Num. xi. 7). A strongly aromatic plant. It bears a small round seed of a very agreeable smell and taste. The manna might be compared to the coriander seed in respect to its form or shape, as it was to bdellium in its colour. [See MANNA.]

Cor'inth. A celebrated city, the capital of Achaia. Its situation between two seas drew thither the trade of both the East and West. Christianity was first planted at Corinth by Paul, who resided here eighteen months between the years 51 and 53, during which time he enjoyed the friendship of Aquila and his wife Priscilla, two Jewish Christians, who had been expelled from Italy, with other Jews, by an edict of Claudius.

Corinth'ians, the Epistles to the. The first was written by Paul toward the close of his nearly three years' stay at Ephesus (Acts xix. 10; xx. 31), which we learn from 1 Cor. xvi. 8 probably terminated with the Pentecost of A. D. 57 or 58. This varied and highly characteristic letter was addressed not to any party, but to the whole nals, for announcing the "Jubilee" (Lev. xxv. 9), for proclaiming the new year, for the purposes of war (Jer. iv. 5, 19; comp. Job xxxix. 25), as well as for the sentinels placed at the watch-towers to give notice of the approach of an enemy (Ezek. xxxiii. 4, 5).

Crete. An island at the mouth of the Ægean Sea, between Rhodes and Peloponnesus (Acts xxvii. 7). It was the seat of legislature to all Greece. There were once one hundred cities on the island. The inhabitants were exceedingly addicted to lying (Tit. i. 12). The gospel converted many persons here (Tit. i. 5). It is now called Candia.

Crisp'ing-pins. Curling-irons for the hair (Isa. iii. 22).

COLOSSE, A CITY IN THE ROMAN PROVINCE OF ASIA (PHRYGIA).

body of the large (Acts xviii. 8, 10) Judæo-Gentile (Acts xviii. 4) Church of Corinth. The Second Epistle was written a few months subsequently to the first, in the same year; and thus, if the dates assigned to the former epistle be correct, about the autumn of A. D. 57 or 58, a short time previous to the apostle's three months' stay in Achaia (Acts xx. 3). The place whence it was written was clearly not Ephesus (see ch. i. 8), but Macedonia (ch. vii. 5; viii. 1; ix. 2), whither the apostle went by the way of Troas (ch. ii. 12), after waiting a short time in the latter place for the return of Titus (ch. ii. 13).

Cor'morant (Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 17). A large sea-bird. It is about three feet four inches in length, and four feet two inches in breadth from the tips of the extended wings. The bill is about five inches long, and of a dusky colour. It has a most voracious appetite, and lives chiefly upon fish, which it devours with unceasing gluttony. It darts down very rapidly upon its prey.

Corn. The most common kinds were wheat, barley, spelt (Ex. ix. 32, and Isa. xxviii. 25, "rie," Ezek. iv. 9, "fitches") and millet; oats are mentioned only by rabbinical writers. The many-eared stalk is also common in the wheat of Palestine, and it is of course of the bearded kind. From Solomon's time (2 Chron. ii. 10, 15), as agriculture became developed under a settled government, Palestine was a corn-exporting country. "Plenty of corn" was part of Jacob's blessing (Gen. xxviii. 28; comp. Ps. lxxv. 13).

Corne'lius. A Roman centurion of the Italian cohort stationed in Cesarea (Acts x. 1, etc.), a man full of good works and alms-deeds. With his household he was baptized by St. Peter, and thus Cornelius became the first-fruits of the Gentile world to Christ.

Cor'net. A loud-sounding instrument made of the horn of a ram or of a chamois (sometimes of an ox), and used by the ancient Hebrews for sig-

Cris'pus. Ruler of the Jewish synagogue at Corinth (Acts xviii. 8); baptized with his family by St. Paul (1 Cor. i. 14). According to tradition he became afterward Bishop of Ægina.

Cross. An ancient instrument of capital punishment. The cross was the punishment inflicted by the Romans on servants who had perpetrated crimes, on robbers, assassins and rebels; among which last Jesus was reckoned, on the ground of his making himself King or Messiah (Luke xxiii. 1-5, 13-15). The words in which the sentence was given were, "Thou shalt go to the cross." The person who was subjected to this punishment was then deprived of all his clothes, excepting something around the loins. In this state of nudity he was beaten, sometimes with rods, but more generally with whips. Such was the severity of this flagellation that numbers died under it. Jesus was crowned with thorns and made the subject of mockery, but insults of this kind were not among the ordinary attendant of crucifixion. They were owing in this case merely to the petulant spirit of the Roman soldiers (Matt. xxvii. 29; Mark xv. 17; John xix. 2, 5). The criminal, having been beaten, was subjected to the further suffering of being obliged to carry the cross himself to the place of punishment, which was commonly a hill near the public way and out of the city. The cross (from a Greek word signifying a post) consisted of a piece of wood erected perpendicularly, and intersected by another at right angles near the top, so as to resemble the letter T. The crime for which the person suffered was inscribed on the transverse piece near the top of the perpendicular one.

Crown. In Scripture there is frequent mention made of crowns, and the use of them seems to have been very common among the Hebrews. The high priest wore a crown, which was girt about his mitre or the lower part of his bounet, and was tied about his head. On the forepart was a plate of gold, with these words engraved on it: "Holiness to the Lord" (Ex. xxviii. 36; xxix. 6). New-married persons of both sexes wore crowns upon their wedding day (Cant. iii. 11); and, alluding to this custom, it is said that when God entered into covenant with the Jewish nation, he placed a beautiful crown upon their head (Ezek. xvi. 12).

Cruse. A vessel for holding water, such as was carried by Saul when on his night expedition after David (1 Sam. xxvi. 11, 12, 16), and by Elijah (1 Kings xix. 6).

Cu'bit. A measure used among the ancients. The Hebrews call it the mother of other measures. A cubit originally was the distance from the elbow to the extremity of the middle finger; this is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. The common cubit is eighteen inches. Capellus and others have asserted that there were two sorts of cubits among the Hebrews: one sacred, the other common; the sacred containing three feet, the common containing a foot and a half. Moses assigns to the Levites a thousand sacred cubits of land round about their cities (Num. xxxv. 4); and in the next verse he gives them two thousand common ones. It is probable that the cubit varied in different districts and at different times.

Cu'cubers (Heb. kishshuim). This word occurs in Num. xi. 5 as one of the good things of Egypt for which the Israelites longed. Egypt produces excellent cucumbers, melons, etc. The "lodge in a garden of cucumbers" (Isa. i. 8) is a rude shelter in which some one is placed to guard the plants from robbers, or scare away the foxes and jackals.

Cum'min (Isa. xxviii. 25, 27; Matt. xxiii. 23). This is an umbelliferous plant, in appearance resembling fennel, but smaller. Its seeds have a bitterish warm taste, accompanied with an aromatic flavour, not of the most agreeable kind. An essential oil is obtained from them by distillation. The Jews sowed it, and when ripe threshed it with a rod (Isa. xxviii. 25, 27).

Cup. The cups of the Jews, whether of metal or earthenware, were possibly borrowed, in point of shape and design, from Egypt and from the Phœnicians, who were celebrated in that branch of workmanship. Egyptian cups were of various shapes, either with handles or without them. The cups of the N. T. were often no doubt formed on Greek and Roman models. They were sometimes of gold (Rev. xvii. 4).

Cup'-bearer. An officer of high rank with Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, as well as Jewish monarchs (1 Kings x. 5). The chief cup-bearer, or butler, to the king of Egypt was the means of raising Joseph to his high position (Gen. xi. 1, 21; xli. 9). Nehemiah was cup-bearer to Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Persia (Neh. i. 11; ii. 1).

Cush. The name of a son of Ham, apparently the eldest, and of a territory or territories occupied by his descendants. 1. In the genealogy of Noah's children Cush seems to be an individual, for it is said "Cush begat Nimrod" (Gen. x. 8; 1 Chron. i. 10). 2. Cush as a country appears to be African in all passages except Gen. ii. 13. Terah the Cushite ("Ethiopian"), who was defeated by Asa, was most probably a king of Egypt, certainly the leader of an Egyptian army.

Cym'bal, Cym'bals. A percussive musical instrument. Two kinds of cymbals are mentioned in Ps. cl. 5, "loud cymbals" or castagnettes, and "high-sounding cymbals." The former consisted of four small plates of brass or some other hard metal; two plates were attached to each hand of the performer, and were struck together to produce a great noise. The latter consisted of two larger plates, one held in each hand, and struck together as an accompaniment to other instruments.

Cypress (Isa. xlv. 14). A large evergreen tree. The wood is fragrant, very compact and heavy. It scarcely ever rots, decays or is worm-eaten; for which reason the ancients used to make Judaism; and the great changes by which the nation was transformed into a church are clearly marked.

Da'gon (dag, a fish). The god of the Philistines. It is the opinion of some that Dagon was represented like a woman, with the lower parts of a fish, like a triton or siren. Scripture shows clearly that the statue of Dagon was human, at least the upper part of it (1 Sam. v. 4, 5). A temple of Dagon at Gaza was pulled down by Samson (Judg.

me a son; therefore she called his name Dan," i. e., "judge." The records of Dan are unusually meagre. Only one son is attributed to him (Gen. xlv. 23); but when the people were numbered in the wilderness of Sinai, his tribe was, with the exception of Judah, the most numerous of all, containing sixty-two thousand seven hundred men able to serve. 2. The well-known city, so familiar as the most northern landmark of Palestine, in the common expression, "from Dan even to Beersheba." The name of the place was originally Laish or Leshem (Josh. xix. 47). 3. Apparently the name of a city associated with Javan, as one of the places in Southern Arabia from which the Phœnicians obtained wrought iron, cassia and calamus (Ezek. xxvii. 19).

Dan'iel. A Hebrew prophet, contemporary with Ezekiel, but living longer than he. He was of the royal family, and, though carried a captive to Babylon B. C. 606, rose to wisdom and honour. His great eminence may be inferred from Ezek. xiv. 13, 14 and 28; ii. 3. The book which bears his name foretells not only the coming of Messiah, as other prophets, but the very time of his birth. Under the emblem of a great image of four materials, and of four beasts, the successive rise and fall of the four great monarchies of Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome are predicted; after which, the kingdom of Christ, like the stone from the mountain, shall fill the earth and continue for ever. The first six chapters are historical, and describe the carrying away of Daniel and other noble persons. The rest is strictly prophetic, extending to the advent and death of Messiah, and the ultimate universality of the Church.

Dark'ness. The darkness brought on Egypt as a plague was so thick as to be, as it were, palpable; so horrible that no one durst stir out of his place; and so lasting that it endured three days and three nights (Ex. x. 21, 22; Wisdom xvii. 2, 3). The darkness at our Saviour's death began at the sixth hour, or noon, and ended at the third hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon. Thus it lasted almost the whole time he was on the cross; compare Matt. xxvii. 45, with John xix. 14 and Mark xv. 25. That it was preternatural is certain, for, the moon being at full, a natural eclipse of the sun was impossible.

the statues of their gods with it. The unperishable chests which contain the Egyptian mummies are of cypress. The gates of St. Peter's Church at Rome, which had lasted from the time of Constantine to that of Pope Eugene IV.—that is to say, eleven hundred years—were of cypress, and had in that time suffered no decay.

Cy'prus. A large island in the Mediterranean, situated between Cilicia and Syria. Its inhabitants were plunged in all manner of luxury and debauchery. Their principal deity was Venus. The apostles Paul and Barnabas landed in the isle of Cyprus, A. D. 44 (Acts xiii. 4). While they continued at Salamis they preached Jesus Christ in the Jewish synagogues; from thence they visited all the cities of the island, preaching the gospel. At Paphos they found Bar-Jesus, a false prophet, with Sergius Paulus, the governor; Paul struck Bar-Jesus with blindness, and the proconsul embraced Christianity. Some time after Barnabas went again into this island with John surnamed Mark (Acts xv. 39). Barnabas is considered as the principal apostle and first bishop of Cyprus, where it is said he was martyred, being stoned to death by the Jews of Salamis.

Cy'rene. Was a city of Lybia in Africa, which, as it was the principal city of that province, gave to it the name of Cyrenaica. This city was once so powerful as to contend with Carthage for pre-eminence. It is mentioned in Holy Writ as the birth-place of Simon, whom the Jews compelled to bear our Saviour's cross (Matt. xxvii. 32; Luke xxiii. 26). Among the most inveterate enemies of Christianity, Luke reckons those of this province who had a synagogue at Jerusalem, and excited the people against St. Stephen (Acts xi. 20).

Cy'rus. The founder of the Persian empire (Dan. vi. 28; x. 1, 13; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23). The great kings with whom the Jews had been brought into contact had been open oppressors or seductive allies, but Cyrus was a generous liberator and a just guardian of their rights. An inspired prophet (Isa. xlv. 28) recognized in him "a shepherd" of the Lord, an "anointed" king (Isa. xlv. 1). The edict of Cyrus for the rebuilding of the temple (2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23; Ezra i. 1-4; iii. 7; iv. 3; v. 13, 17; vi. 3) was in fact the beginning of xvi. 23, etc.) In another, at Ashdod, the Philistines deposited the ark of God (1 Sam. v. 1-3).

Dalmanu'tha. St. Mark says that Jesus Christ embarked with his disciples on the Lake of Tiberias and came to Dalmanutha (Mark viii. 10), but St. Matthew calls it Magdala (Matt. xv. 39). It seems that Dalmanutha was near to Magdala, on the western side of the lake.

Dalma'tia. A mountainous district on the eastern coast of the Adriatic Sea. St. Paul sent Titus there (2 Tim. iv. 10), and he himself had preached the gospel in its immediate neighbourhood (Rom. xv. 19).

Dam'aris. An Athenian woman converted to Christianity by St. Paul's preaching (Acts xvii. 34). Chrysostom and others held her to have been the wife of Dionysius the Areopagite.

Damas'cus. A celebrated city of Asia, and one of the most venerable places in the world for its antiquity. It is supposed to have been founded by Uz, the son of Aram; and is at least known to have existed in the time of Abraham (Gen. xv. 2). It was the residence of the Syrian kings during the space of three centuries, and experienced a number of vicissitudes in every period of its history. Its sovereign, Hadad, whom Josephus calls the first of its kings, was conquered by David, king of Israel. In the reign of Ahaz it was taken by Tiglath-Pileser, who slew his last king, Rezin, and added its provinces to the Assyrian empire. It was taken and plundered, also, by Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, the generals of Alexander the Great, Judas Maccabæus, and at length by the Romans in the war conducted by Pompey against Tigranes, in the year before Christ 65. It was destroyed by Tamerlane, A. D. 1400, and was repaired by the Mamelukes when they gained possession of Syria, but was wrested from them by the Turks in 1506. The modern city is delightfully situated about fifty miles from the sea, in a fertile and extensive plain. Its streets are narrow; and one of them, called Straight, mentioned in Acts (ix. 11), still runs through the city, about half a mile in length.

Dan. 1. The fifth son of Jacob, and the first of Bilhah, Rachel's maid (Gen. xxx. 6). The origin of the name is given in the exclamation of Rachel—"God hath judged me (dánanni) . . . and given

EGYPTIAN, ASSYRIAN AND OTHER CROWNS.

Dari'us. The name of several kings of Media and Persia. Three kings bearing this name are mentioned in the O. T.: 1. Darius the Mede (Dan. xi. 1; vi. 1), "the son of Ahasuerus of the seed of the Medes" (ix. 1), who is probably the same as "Astyages" the last king of the Medes. 2. Darius, the son of Hystaspes, the founder of the Persian dynasty. 3. Darius the Persian (Neh. xii. 22).

Da'vid. The son of Jesse. Youngest son, probably the youngest child of a family of ten. His mother's name is unknown. His father was of a great age when David was still young (1 Sam. xvii. 12). He became the most eminent king of Israel, and one of the most distinguished persons mentioned in the Old Testament, both for his piety, talents, dignity and success. He wrote nearly all the Psalms. Christ, being a lineal descendant, is follows: Scythopolis, Hippos, Gadara, Pella, Philadelphia, Gerasa, Dion, Canatha, Damascus and Raphana. All the cities of Decapolis, with the single exception of Scythopolis, lay on the east of the Jordan. It would appear, however, from Matt. iv. 25 and Mark vii. 31, that Decapolis was a general appellation for a large district extending along both sides of the Jordan. Pliny says it reached Degrees, Songs of. A title given to fifteen Psalms, from cxx. to cxxiv. inclusive. Four of them are attributed to David, one is ascribed to the pen of Solomon, and the other ten give no indication of their author. With respect to the term rendered "degrees," the most probable opinion is that they were pilgrim songs, sung by the people as they went up to Jerusalem.

Delilah. A woman who dwelt in the valley of Sorek, beloved by Samson (Judg. xvi. 4-18). There seems to be little doubt that she was a Philistine courtesan. [See SAMSON.]

Deluge. [See NOAH.]

De'mas. A Thessalonian mentioned by Paul (2 Tim. iv. 10), who was at first a most zealous disciple of the apostle, and very serviceable to him at Rome during his imprisonment, but afterward (about A. D. 65) forsook him to follow a more secular life.

Deme'trius. 1. A goldsmith of Ephesus, who made niches, or little chapels, or portable models of the famous temple of Diana at Ephesus, which he sold to foreigners (Acts xix. 24). 2. Demetrius, mentioned by John as an eminent Christian (3 John xii.), is by some believed to be the same as the preceding, who had renounced heathenism to embrace Christianity. But this wants proof.

De'mon. Its usage in classical Greek is various. In the Gospels generally, in James ii. 19 and in Rev. xvi. 14, the demons are spoken of as spiritual beings, at enmity with God, and having power to afflict man, not only with disease, but, as is marked by the frequent epithet "unclean," with spiritual pollution also. They "believe" the power of God "and tremble" (James ii. 19); they recognize the Lord as the Son of God (Matt. viii. 29; Luke iv. 41), and acknowledge the power of His name, used in exorcism, in the place of the name of Jehovah, by His appointed messengers (Acts xix. 15); and look forward in terror to the judgment to come (Matt. viii. 29).

Demo'niacs. This word is frequently used in the N. T., and applied to persons suffering under called "the Son of David." When it is said of him, while yet a youth among the folds, that he was a man "after God's own heart," it means that God chose him to be king over Israel, and would qualify him for that purpose.

Da'vid, City of. [See JERUSALEM.]

Day. The Babylonians reckoned the day from sunrise to sunrise; the Umbrians from noon to noon; the Romans from midnight to midnight; the Athenians from sunset to sunset. The Hebrews adopted the latter reckoning (Lev. xxiii. 32, "from even to even shall ye celebrate your sabbath") from Gen. i. 5, "the evening and the morning were the first day." The Jews are supposed, like the modern Arabs, to have adopted from an early period minute specifications of the parts of the natural day. These are held to have been: 1. "The dawn." 2. "Sunrise." 3. "Heat of the day," about nine o'clock. 4. "The two noons" (Gen. xliii. 16; Deut. xxviii. 29). 5. "The cool (lit. wind) of the day," before sunset (Gen. iii. 8); so called by the Persians to this day. 6. "Evening."

Dead Sea. This name nowhere occurs in the Bible, and appears not to have existed until the second century after Christ. In the O. T. the lake is called "the Salt Sea" and "the Sea of the Plain," and under the former of these names it is described.

Deb'orah. A prophetess, wife of Lapidoth, judged the Israelites, and dwelt under a palm tree between Ramah and Bethel (Judg. iv. 4, 5). She sent for Barak, directed him to attack Sisera, and in the name of God promised him victory; but Barak refusing to go unless she went with him, she told him that the honour of this expedition would be given to a woman, and not to him. After the victory, Deborah and Barak sung a fine thanksgiving song, the composition probably of Deborah alone, which is preserved (Judg. v.).

Decap'olis (Matt. iv. 25; Mark v. 20, and viii. 31). Immediately after the conquest of Syria by the Romans (B. C. 65) ten cities appear to have been rebuilt, partially colonized, and endowed with peculiar privileges; the country around them was hence called Decapolis. Pliny enumerates them as from Damascus on the north to Philadelphia on the south, and from Scythopolis on the west to Canatha on the east. This region, once so populous and prosperous, from which multitudes flocked to hear the Saviour and through which multitudes followed His footsteps, is now almost without an inhabitant.

and the rebuilding of the altar after Judas Maccabæus had driven out the Syrians, B. C. 164. It is named only once in the Scriptures (John x. 22). It commenced on the twenty-fifth of Chislen, the anniversary of the pollution of the temple by Antiochus Epiphanes, B. C. 167.

the possession of a demon or evil spirit, such possession generally showing itself visibly in bodily disease or mental derangement. With regard to the frequent use of this word, three main opinions have been started: 1. That of the mythical school, making the whole account merely symbolic.

2. That our Lord and the Evangelists, in referring to demoniacal possession, spoke only in accommodation to the general belief of the Jews, without any assertion as to its truth or its falsity. It is concluded that since the symptoms of the affliction were frequently those of bodily disease (as dumbness, Matt. ix. 32; blindness, Matt. xii. 22; epilepsy, Mark ix. 17-27), or those seen in cases of ordinary insanity (as in Matt. viii. 28; Mark v. 1-5), and since also the phrase "to have a devil" is constantly used in connection with, and as apparently equivalent to, "to be mad" (John vii. 20; viii. 48; x. 20; and perhaps Matt. xi. 18; Luke vii. 33), the demoniacs were merely persons suffering under unusual diseases of body and mind. 3. That there are evil spirits, subjects of the Evil One, who, in the days of the Lord himself and his apostles especially, were permitted to exercise a direct influence over the souls and bodies of certain men. This last is the ordinarily accepted and literal interpretation of the numerous passages upon the subject.

Dena'rius. A Roman silver coin in the time of our Saviour. It was the principal silver coin of the Roman commonwealth. From the parable of the labourers in the vineyard it would seem that a denarius was then the ordinary pay for a day's labour (Matt. xx. 2, 4, 7, 9, 10, 13).

Dep'uty. The uniform rendering of the Greek word which signifies "proconsul" (Acts xiii. 7, 8, 12; xix. 38).

Der'be. A city of Lycaonia, to which Paul and DRESS OF AN EGYPTIAN.

Barnabas fled when expelled from Iconium (Acts xiv. 6).

Des'ert. The Hebrews, by midbâr, "a desert," mean an uncultivated place, particularly if mountainous. Some deserts were entirely dry and barren, others were beautiful, and had good pastures. Scripture speaks of the beauty of the desert (Ps. lxx. 12, 13).

Deuteronomy. From deuteros, second, and nomos, law; the last book of the Pentateuch or five books of Moses. As its name imports, it contains a repetition of the civil and moral law, which was a second time delivered by Moses with some additions and explanations, as well to impress it more forcibly upon the Israelites in general, as in particular for the benefit of those who, being born in the wilderness, were not present at the first promulgation of the law. It contains also severe reproaches and earnest exhortations. The Messiah is explicitly foretold in this book, and there are many remarkable predictions interspersed in it.

Dev'il. Literally a slanderer, a fallen angel or infernal spirit. Satan is, by way of eminence, called the devil, and the god of this world, from his power and influence (John xii. 31; 2 Cor. iv. 4). He has various titles given him in Scripture, expressive of his character: Satan (Job ii. 6); Beelzebub (Matt. xii. 24); Belial (2 Cor. vi. 15); Lucifer (Isa. xiv. 12); Dragon (Rev. xii. 7); Adversary (1 Pet. v. 8); Prince of Darkness (Eph. vi. 12); Apollyon, or Destroyer (Rev. ix. 11); Angel of the bottomless pit. He is represented as a sinner from the beginning (1 John iii. 8); a liar (John viii.

44); a deceiver (Rev. xx. 10); an accuser (Rev. xii. 10) and a murderer (John viii. 44).

Di'adem. What the "diadem" of the Jews was we know not. That of other nations of antiquity was a fillet of silk two inches broad, bound round the head and tied behind, the invention of which is attributed to Liber. Its colour was generally white; sometimes, however, it was blue, like that of Darius; and it was sown with pearls or other gems (Zech. ix. 16), and enriched with gold (Rev. ix. 7).

Di'al. Is not mentioned in Scripture before the reign of Ahaz. Interpreters differ concerning the form of the dial of Ahaz (2 Kings xx.) The generality of expositors think that it was a staircase so disposed that the sun showed the hours upon it by the shadow. Others suppose that it was a pillar erected in the middle of a smooth pavement, on which the hours were engraven. It would seem, indeed, that the most ancient sun-dial known is in the form of a half circle hollowed into the stone, and the stone cut down to an angle. This kind of dial was invented in Babylon, and was very probably the same as that of Ahaz.

Di'amond. A precious stone, the third in the second row on the breastplate of the high priest (Ex. xxviii. 18; xxxix. 11), and mentioned by Ezekiel (xxviii. 13) among the precious stones of the king of Tyre. Some suppose yahâlôm to be the "emerald."

Dian'a. This Latin word, properly denoting a Roman divinity, is the representative of the Greek Artemis, the tutelary goddess of the Ephesians, who plays so important a part in the narrative of Acts

xix. The Ephesian Diana was, however, regarded as invested with very different attributes, and is rather to be identified with Astarte and other female divinities of the East. The head wore a mural crown, each hand held a bar of metal, and the lower part ended in a rude block covered with figures of animals and mystic inscriptions. This idol was regarded as an object of peculiar sanctity, and was believed to have fallen down from heaven (Acts xix. 35).

Di'bon. 1. A town on the east side of Jordan, in the rich pastoral country, which was taken possession of and rebuilt by the children of Gad (Num. xxxii. 3, 34). 2. One of the towns which were re-inhabited by the men of Judah after the return from captivity (Neh. xi. 25), identical with Dimonah.

Didrach'ma. A Greek word, signifying a piece of money in value two drachmas; about fourteen pence English, or twenty-five cents. The Jews were by law obliged, every person, to pay two drachmas, that is, half a shekel, to the temple. To pay this, our Lord sent Peter to catch a fish, which probably had just swallowed such a coin (Matt. xvii. 24-27).

Di'nah. The daughter of Jacob by Leah (Gen. xxx. 21). She accompanied her father from Mesopotamia to Canaan, and, having ventured among the inhabitants, was violated by Shechem, the son of Hamor, the chieftain of the territory in which her father had settled (Gen. xxxiv.) Shechem proposed to make the usual reparation by paying a sum to the father and marrying her (Gen. xxxiv. 12). But in this case the suitor was an alien, and the crown of the offence consisted in its having been committed by an alien against the favoured people of God; he had "wrought folly in Israel"

Dionys'ius, the Areopagite. Is said in his youth to have been bred at Athens, and to have been instructed in all the arts and sciences for which that seat of the Muses was renowned; and at the age of five and twenty, to have travelled into Egypt, there to perfect himself in the study of astronomy. When Christ died, he is said to have been at Heliopolis, and observing the preternatural darkness which accompanied his crucifixion, he remarked that either God himself was suffering, or that he sympathized with some one that was suffering. Returning to Athens, he became one of the senators of the Areopagus, disputed with the Apostle Paul, and by him was converted into the Christian faith (Acts xvii.) According to ecclesiastical history, he became a presbyter of the Church of Athens, where he laboured much in the defence and propagation of the gospel, and after suffering greatly on account of his profession, he crowned his labours with a glorious martyrdom, being burnt to death in that city in the year of Christ 95.

Diot'rephes. A professed Christian, near Ephesus, who did not receive and kindly aid those missionaries to the heathen whom the apostle had sent to him, nor would he suffer others to do so. He is a perfect representative of the anti-missionary spirit in modern times. See 3 John 5-10.

Divination. An art much practiced among heathen. So sinful is it in the sight of God to resort to witches, magicians or diviners that the offence was made punishable with death (Deut. xviii.) The means by which diviners pretended on too weak ground, and declined the question of how to interpret the words of Moses.

Do'eg. An Idumean, chief of Saul's herdsmen. He was at Nob when Ahimelech gave David the sword of Goliath, and not only gave information to Saul, but when others declined the office, himself executed the king's order to destroy the priests of Nob, with their families, to the number of eighty-five persons, together with all their property (1 Sam. xxi. 7; xxii. 9, 18, 22; Ps. lii.)

Dog. A well-known animal, which, when properly domesticated and trained, is highly useful and intelligent. Under the law, the dog was not to be eaten, and the Jews held him in great contempt. Hence, when David and Mephibosheth would use the most humbling terms, they compared themselves to "a dead dog" (1 Sam. xxiv. 14; 2 Sam. ix. 8). Isaiah compares the false teachers of his day to dogs (Isa. lvi. 10, 11). It must have been a hard saying to the faith of the poor woman who applied to Christ for help, that it was not proper to "give children's bread to dogs" (Matt. xv. 26). To call a person a dog is still, in the East, expressive of the highest contempt. The dog was not, in those days, made a companion or rendered very useful. Few dogs had a particular owner, but lived as they could, chiefly by prowling at night for offal.

Do'than. A place first mentioned (Gen. xxxvii. 17) in connection with the history of Joseph, and apparently as in the neighbourhood of Shechem. It next appears as the residence of Elisha (2 Kings vi. 13). Later still we encounter it under the name of Dothaim. Its ruins have been discovered, still bearing its ancient name unimpaired.

Dove (Heb. Yónah). The first mention of this bird occurs in Gen. viii. The dove's rapidity of flight is alluded to in Ps. lv. 6; the beauty of its plumage in Ps. lxxviii. 13; its dwelling in the rocks and valleys in Jer. xlviii. 28 and Ezek. vii. 16; its mournful voice in Isa. xxxviii. 14; lix. 11; Nah. ii. 7; its harmlessness in Matt. x. 16; its simplicity in Hos. vii. 11, and its amateness in Cant. i. 15; ii. 14. Doves are kept in a domesticated state in many parts of the East. In Persia, pigeon-houses are erected at a distance from the dwellings, for the purpose of collecting the dung as manure. There is probably an allusion to such a custom in Isa. lx. 8.

Dove's Dung. It is doubtful whether this article mentioned (2 Kings vi. 25) was really pigeons' dung used for manure, as Josephus and Theodoret think, or what the Arabians call chick-peas, a kind of tare, or cicer, resembling doves' dung when parched. Some of the rabbins affirm that it was the grain taken from the crops of pigeons which, during the siege, filled themselves in the neighbouring fields.

Drachm (2 Mac. iv. 19; x. 20; xii. 43; Luke xv. 8, 9). A Greek silver coin, varying in weight on account of the use of different talents.

Drach'ma. The value of a common drachma was seven pence English, or twelve and a half cents. A didrachma, or double drachma, made very near half a shekel; and four drachmas made nearly a shekel, i. e., nearly half a dollar.

Drag'on signifies either a large fish, as the whale, or a crocodile, or great serpent. In some places it evidently means the deadly poisonous lizard called Gecko by the East Indians.

Dream. The Eastern people, and in particular the Jews, greatly regarded dreams. We see the antiquity of this custom in the history of Pharaoh's butler and baker (Gen. xl.), and Pharaoh himself and Nebuchadnezzar are also instances. God expressly forbade his people from observing dreams, and from consulting explainers of them. But they were not forbidden, when they thought they had a significative dream, to address the prophets of the Lord, or the high priest in his ephod, to have it explained. Under the Christian dispensation, while we read frequently of trances and visions, dreams are never referred to as vehicles of divine revelation. And where dreams are recorded as means of God's revelation to his chosen servants, they are almost always referred to the periods of their earliest and most imperfect knowledge.

Dress. This subject includes the following particulars: 1. Materials. 2. Colour and decorations. 3. Name, form and mode of wearing the various articles. 4. Special usages relating thereto. The simplest style of Oriental dress was a long loose shirt or tunic without a girdle, reaching nearly to the ankle, or the same robe with the addition of the girdle. In the ordinary dress of the modern Bedouin the tunic overlaps the girdle at the waist, leaving an ample fold, which serves as a pocket. The dress of the middle and upper classes in modern Egypt illustrates the customs of the Hebrews. Some of the peculiarities of female dress are illustrated by the Egyptian woman in her walking dress, as still worn by the peasants in the South of Egypt.

Drink, Strong. The Hebrew term shêcar, in its etymological sense, applied to any beverage that had intoxicating qualities. The following beverages were known to the Jews: 1. Beer, which was largely consumed in Egypt under the name of zythus. It was made of barley; certain herbs, such as lupin and skirret, were used as substitutes for hops. 2. Cider, which is noticed in the Mishna as apple-wine. 3. Honey-wine, of which there were two sorts—one consisting of a mixture of wine, honey and pepper; the other a decoction of the juice of the grape. 4.

to discover hidden things and foretell destiny were various; such as observing the flight of birds, examining the entrails of beasts, casting lots, etc. These signs were called omens. The word "divine" in Gen. xlv. 5, 15 seems to mean a natural sagacity in searching out and bringing to light hidden transactions.

Divorce. The law regulating this subject is found in Deut. xxiv. 1-4, and the cases in which the right of a husband to divorce his wife was lost are stated ib. xxii. 19, 29. The ground of divorce is a point on which the Jewish doctors of the period of the N. T. widely differed; the school of Shammai seeming to limit it to a moral delinquency in the woman, whilst that of Hillel extended it to trifling causes; e. g., if the wife burnt the food she was cooking for her husband. The Pharisees wished, perhaps, to embroil our Saviour with these rival schools by their question (Matt. xix. 3); by His answer to which, as well as by His previous maxim (v. 31), he declares that but for their hardened state of heart such questions would have no place. Yet from the distinction made, "But I say unto you" (v. 31, 32), it seems to follow that he regarded all the lesser causes than "fornication" as standing

Date-wine, which was also manufactured in Egypt. 5. Various other fruits and vegetables are enumerated by Pliny as supplying materials for factitious or home-made wine, such as figs, millet, the carob fruit, etc.

Drom'edary. A fleet animal, so called from the Greek word dromo, I run. It is smaller and more slender than a camel, but can carry a man a hundred miles in a day. It is governed by a bridle connected with a ring fixed in its nose; which illustrates the expression in 2 Kings xix. 23, meaning that Sennacherib should go back tamely and swiftly.

Drusil'la. The third daughter of Agrippa, was married to Azizus, king of the Emeseniens, whom she abandoned, that she might marry Claudius Felix, by whom she had a son named Agrippa. She was one of the most beautiful women of her age, but exceedingly licentious (Acts xxiv. 24).

Dul'cimer (Dan. iii. 5, 10). An instrument of music, as is usually thought; but the original word, sumpōnyāh, renders it doubtful whether it really meant a musical instrument, or a musical strain, chorus or accompaniment. The rabbins, however, describe it as a sort of bagpipe.

Dung. The uses of dung were twofold—as manure and as fuel. The manure consisted either of straw steeped in liquid manure (Isa. xxv. 10), or the sweepings (Isa. v. 25) of the streets and roads, which were carefully removed from about the houses and collected in heaps outside the walls of the towns at fixed spots (hence the dung-gate at Jerusalem, Neh. ii. 13), and thence removed in due course to the fields. The difficulty of procuring fuel in Syria, Arabia and Egypt has made dung in all ages valuable as a substitute; it was probably used for heating ovens and for baking cakes (Ezek. iv. 12, 15), the equable heat which it produced adapting it peculiarly for the latter operation. Cow's and camel's dung is still used for a similar purpose by the Bedouins.

Du'ra. The plain where Nebuchadnezzar set up the golden image (Dan. iii. 1) has been sometimes identified with a tract a little below Tekrit, on the left bank of the Tigris, where the name Dur is still found. M. Opert places the plain (or, as he calls it, the "valley") of Dura to the south-east of Babylon.

SITE OF EPHEBUS, CAPITAL OF THE ROMAN PROVINCE OF ASIA.

Eagle. The Hebrew word rendered "Eagle" is nesher. The magnificent birds of prey included under this generic title are spread over the whole world. Several species occur in Palestine and the surrounding regions, as the imperial eagle (Aquila heliaca), the golden eagle (A. chrysaetos), the spotted eagle (A. nana), and probably the white-tailed eagle (A. albicilla), (Mic. i. 16; Josh. xxxix. 27-30; Ez. xix. 4; Deut. xxxii. 12).

Ear. In Scripture the same as to till or plough, as "ear the ground" (1 Sam. viii. 12; Isa. xxx. 24).

Ear'rings. The material of which earrings were made was generally gold (Ex. xxxii. 2), and their form circular. They were worn by women and by youth of both sexes.

Earth'quake (1 Kings xix. 11). It is supposed that Korah and his companions were destroyed by an earthquake. The earthquake was among the fearful signs which attended the crucifixion of our Saviour. Travellers tell us that the rocks on Calvary are rent asunder, and evidently by some such convulsion as an earthquake; and very early tradition says it was by the earthquake which happened at the time of the crucifixion. That the scene was terrible may well be inferred from Matt. xxvii. 51-54. Severe earthquakes often visit Palestine. One in 1837 did awful damage in Tiberias, and about a third of its inhabitants perished. The earth was seen to open and close again. In this fearful catastrophe many thousands were killed in other places, and whole villages were laid in ruins. Earthquakes are mentioned among the calamities which should precede the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. xxiv. 7), and Josephus and other historians affirm the literal fulfilment of the prediction. Earthquakes, in prophetic language, denote revolutions and commotions in states and empires.

East. By the East the Hebrews frequently describe not only Arabia Deserta and the lands of Moab and Ammon, which lay to the east of Palestine, but also Assyria, Mesopotamia, Babylonia and Chaldea, though they are situated rather to the north than to the east of Judea. Balaam, Cyrus and the wise men who visited Bethlehem at the time Christ was born are said to have come from the East (Num. xxiii. 7; Isa. xli. 11; Matt. ii. 1).

Eas'ter. A word improperly put for passover. On this day some Christians commemorate our Saviour's resurrection. Different churches observe different days.

Eat'ing. The Hebrews in Joseph's day neither ate with the Egyptians nor the Egyptians with them (Gen. xliii. 32), nor, in our Saviour's time, with the Samaritans (John iv. 9). The Jews were scandalized at Christ's eating with publicans and sinners (Matt. ix. 11). As there were several sorts of meats the use of which was prohibited, they could not conveniently eat with those who partook of them, fearing to receive pollution by touching such food, or if by accident any particles of it should fall on them. The ancient Hebrews at their meals had each his separate table. Joseph, entertaining his brethren in Egypt, seated them separately, each at his particular table; and he himself sat down separately from the Egyptians who ate with him; but he sent to his brethren portions out of the provisions which were before him (Gen. xliii. 31, etc.) Elkanah, Samuel's father, who had two wives, distributed their portions to them separately (1 Sam. i. 4, 5).

E'bal. A celebrated mountain near Shechem, over against Mount Gerizim. These two mountains are within two hundred paces of each other, and separated by a deep valley, in which stood the town of Shechem. One of them is barren; the other covered with a beautiful verdure. Moses commanded the Israelites, as soon as they should have passed the river Jordan, to go directly to Shechem, and divide the whole multitude into two bodies, each composed of six tribes—one company to be placed on Ebal, and the other on Gerizim. The six tribes that were on Gerizim were to pronounce blessings on those who should faithfully observe the law of the Lord, and the six others on Mount Ebal were to pronounce curses against those who should violate it (Deut. xi. 29, etc.; xxvii. and xxviii.; Josh. viii. 30, 31).

E'bed-me'lech. An Ethiopian eunuch in the service of King Zedekiah, through whose interference Jeremiah was released from prison (Jer. xxxviii. 7; xxxix. 15).

Eb'ene'zer. The name of that field wherein the Israelites were defeated by the Philistines when the ark of the Lord was taken (1 Sam. iv. 1); also a memorial stone set up by Samuel to commemorate a victory over the Philistines. The word signifies the stone of help; and it was erected by the prophet, saying, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us."

Ecbat'ana, or Ecbat'ane. A Median city, mentioned only once in Scripture (Ezra vi. 2, marg., Achmetha being given in the text); and even there it has been doubted whether the word does not rather mean in a coffer, treasury or record-chest. There were two cities which bore the name of Ecbatana. These are sometimes confounded; and, indeed, as they were no very great distance apart, it is by no means easy to decide which of them an author refers to. One was the capital of Northern Media, or Media Atropatene; and it has been identified by Sir H. Rawlinson with the ruins of Takht-i-Suleiman. The other Ecbatana (2 Macc. ix. 3) was the metropolis of Media Magna, on the northern side of the mountain Orontes, now El-wend. It was the summer residence of the Persian kings from Darius Hystaspes, and later of the Parthian monarchs. It is still an important city, containing from twenty thousand to thirty thousand inhabitants, called Hamadan. The Jews point out the tombs of Esther and Mordecai in the neighbourhood.

Ecclesiast'ies. A canonical book of the Old Testament, of which Solomon was the author, as appears from the first sentence. The design of this book is to show the vanity of all sublunary things.

E'dar, Tower of. The place to which Jacob removed after the death of Rachel (Gen. xxxv. 21). It is called also the tower of the flocks (Mic. iv. 8). It was a place of fine pasture, about a mile from Bethlehem, supposed to be the very spot on which the shepherds received the announcement of the birth of Christ. It is very remarkable that the Targum of Jonathan calls it "the place where King Messiah shall be revealed in the end of days."

E'bal. A celebrated mountain near Shechem, over against Mount Gerizim. These two mountains are within two hundred paces of each other, and separated by a deep valley, in which stood the town of Shechem. One of them is barren; the other covered with a beautiful verdure. Moses commanded the Israelites, as soon as they should have passed the river Jordan, to go directly to Shechem, and divide the whole multitude into two bodies, each composed of six tribes—one company to be placed on Ebal, and the other on Gerizim. The six tribes that were on Gerizim were to pronounce blessings on those who should faithfully observe the law of the Lord, and the six others on Mount Ebal were to pronounce curses against those who should violate it (Deut. xi. 29, etc.; xxvii. and xxviii.; Josh. viii. 30, 31).

E'bed-me'lech. An Ethiopian eunuch in the VIEW OF THE THEATRE AT EPHEBUS.

E'den. 1. The first residence of man, called in the Septuagint Paradise. The latter is a word of Persian origin, and describes an extensive tract of pleasure land. Eden probably stood on the Euphrates, not far north of the Persian Gulf. Here is still the most fertile and pleasant part of the KUFA, OR BOAT OF WICKER-WORK, USED ON THE EUPHRATES.

Turkish empire, though now miserably cultivated. 2. One of the marts which supplied the luxury of Tyre with richly embroidered stuffs. 3. BETH-EDEN, "house of pleasure;" probably the name of a country residence of the kings of Damascus (Amos i. 5).

E'dom. The name Edom was given to Esau, the first-born son of Isaac, and twin brother of Jacob, when he sold his birth-right to the latter for a meal of lentil pottage. The peculiar colour of the pottage gave rise to the name Edom, which signifies "red" (Gen. xxv. 29-34). The country which the Lord subsequently gave to Esau was hence called the "field of Edom" (Gen. xxxii. 3), or "land of Edom" (Gen. xxxvi. 16; Num. xxxiii. 37).

E'domites. Descendants of Edom. Inveterate foes to Israel, they were rendered tributary by David, but revolted under Jehoram, and rendered themselves independent (2 Chron. xxi. 8-10).

Egg (Deut. xxii. 6; Job xxxix. 14; Isa. x. 14; lix. 5; Luke xi. 12). Eggs are considered as a very great delicacy in the East, and are served up with fish and honey at entertainments. As a desirable article of food the egg is mentioned (Luke xi. 12): "If a son ask for an egg, will his father offer him a scorpion?" It has been remarked that the body of the scorpion is very like an egg, Israelites, and was slain by Ehud (Judg. iii. 14, 21). It is thought to have been a common name of the kings of Moab, as Abimelech was of the Philistines.

Egypt. A country of Africa, called also in the Hebrew Scriptures the land of Mizraim and the land of Ham; by the Turks and Arabs, Masr and Misr; and by the native Egyptians, Chemi or the land of Ham. Mr. Faber derives the name from Ai-Capht, or the land of the Caphtorim, from which also the modern Egyptians derive their name of Cophts. Egypt was first peopled after the deluge by Mizraim, or Mizri; the son of Ham, who is supposed to be the same with Menes, recorded in Egyptian history as the first king. Everything relating to the subsequent history and condition of this country for many ages is involved in fable. Nor have we any clear information from heathen writers until the time of Cyrus and his son Cambyses, when the line of Egyptian princes ceased in agreement with prophecies to that effect. Manetho, the Egyptian historian, has given a list of thirty dynasties, which, if successive, make a period of five thousand three hundred years to the time of Alexander, or three thousand two hundred and eighty-two years more than the real time, according to the Mosaic chronology. But this is a manifest forgery, which has, nevertheless, been appealed to by infidel writers as authority against the veracity of the Mosaic history. The truth is, that this pretended succession of princes, if all of them can be supposed to have existed at all, constituted several distinct dynasties, ruling in different cities at the same time; thus there were the kingdoms of Thebes, Thin, Memphis and Tanis.

E'hud. Son of Gera of the tribe of Benjamin (Judg. iii. 15), the second judge of the Israelites. In the Bible he is not called a judge, but a deliverer (l. c.): so Othniel (Judg. iii. 9) and all the judges (Neh. ix. 27). He was chosen to destroy Eglon, who had established himself in Jericho. He was very strong, and left-handed. [See EGLON.]

Ek'ron. One of the five towns belonging to the lords of the Philistines (Josh. xiii. 3). Akir, the modern representative of Ekron, lies at about five (xxi. 9). It lay nearer Ekron than any other Philistine town.

E'lam. The eldest son of Shem, who settled in a country to which he gave his name (Gen. x. 22). It is frequently mentioned in Scripture. Before the captivity the Jews seem always to have intended Persia by the name of Elam.

El-beth'e'l. The name which Jacob is said to have bestowed on the place at which God appeared to him when he was flying from Esau (Gen. xxv. 7).

El'dad and Me'dad. Appointed by Moses among the seventy elders of Israel who were to assist in the government. Though not present in the general assembly, they were, notwithstanding, filled with the Spirit of God equally with those who were in that assembly, and they began to prophesy in the camp. Joshua would have had Moses forbid them, but Moses replied, "Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that God would pour forth his Spirit upon them" (Num. xi. 24-29).

E'l'der. A person advanced in age, chosen in early ages to bear rule. The Hebrew elders were the chiefs of the principal families, or persons of allowed wisdom and prudence. There seem to have been generally seventy of them. The term, as used in the New Testament, is the proper title of office to denote Christian pastors or presbyters (Acts xx. 17, 28; Tit. i. 5-7; 1 Pet. v. 1, 2).

Elea'zar. 1. Third son of Aaron, by Elisheba, daughter of Amminadab. After the death of Nadab and Abihu without children (Lev. x. 1; Num. iii. 4), Eleazar was appointed chief over the principal Levites (Num. iii. 32). He was invested on Mount Hor with the sacred garments, as the successor of Aaron in the office of high priest (Num. xx. 28). The time of his death is not mentioned in Scripture. 2. The son of Abinadab, of the hill of Kirjath-jearim (1 Sam. vii. 1). 3. The son of Dodo; one of the three principal mighty men of David's army (2 Sam. xxiii. 9; 1 Chron. xi. 12). 4. Surnamed AVARAN (1 Macc. ii. 5), the fourth son of Mattathias, who fell by a noble act of self-devotion in an engagement with Antiochus Eupator, B. C. 164 (1 Macc. vi. 43).

E'li. A high priest of the Hebrews, of the race of Ithamar, who succeeded Abdon, and governed the Hebrews, both as priest and judge, during forty years. How Eli came to the high priesthood, and how his dignity was transferred from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar, who was Aaron's youngest son, we know not. This much, however, is certain, that it was not done without an express declaration of God's will (1 Sam. ii. 27, etc.) In the reign of Solomon the predictions in relation to Eli's family were fulfilled; for the high priesthood was taken from Abiathar, a descendant of Eli, and given to Zadok, who was of the race of Eleazar (1 Kings ii. 26). Eli appears to have been a pious but indolent man, blinded by paternal affection, who suffered his sons to gain the ascendancy over him; and for want either of personal courage or zeal for the glory of God sufficient to restrain their licentious conduct, he permitted them to go on to as its head can scarcely be distinguished, especially if it be of the white kind, which is the first species mentioned by Ælian, Avicenna, and others. Bochart has produced testimonies to prove that the scorpions in Judea were about the bigness of an egg. So the similitude is preserved between the thing asked and the thing given.

Eg'lah. One of David's wives during his reign in Hebron, and the mother of his son Ithream (2 Sam. iii. 5; 1 Chron. iii. 3). According to the ancient Hebrew tradition, she was Michal.

Eg'lon. A king of Moab, who oppressed the miles south-west of Ramleh. In the Apocrypha it appears as ACCARON (1 Macc. x. 89).

E'lah. 1. The son and successor of Baasha, king of Israel (1 Kings xvi. 8-10). He was killed, while drunk, by Zimri, in the house of his steward Arza, who was probably a confederate in the plot. 2. Father of Hoshea, the last king of Israel (2 Kings xv. 30; xvii. 1).

E'lah, the Valley of. A valley in which the Israelites were encamped against the Philistines when David killed Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 2, 19). It is once more mentioned in the same connection their own and his ruin. Thus he carried his indulgence to cruelty, while a more dignified and austere conduct on his part might have rendered them wise and virtuous, and thereby have preserved himself and family. A striking lesson for parents! God admonished him by Samuel, then a child, and Eli received those awful admonitions with a mind fully resigned to the divine will. "It is the Lord," said he; "let him do what seemeth him good." God deferred the execution of his vengeance many years. At length, however, Hophni and Phineas, the sons of Eli, were slain by the Philistines, the ark of the Lord was taken, and Eli himself, hearing this melancholy news, fell backward from his chair and broke his neck, in the ninety-eighth year of his age (1 Sam. iv. 12, 18).

Eli'ab (1 Sam. xvii. 28). The eldest son of Jesse (1 Sam. xvii. 13), and a man of angry and envious temper, as appears from his treatment of his brother David.

Eli'akim. 1 (2 Kings xviii. 18). An officer in the court of Hezekiah, king of Judah, and one of the commissioners appointed to treat with the king of Assyria, who had laid siege to Jerusalem. We have a minute and deeply interesting account of the whole scene (2 Kings xviii. and xix.). 2 (2 Kings xxiii. 34). Son and successor of Josiah, king of Judah. His name was changed to Jehoiakim. [See JEHOIAKIM.]

Eli'as. N. T. name for Elijah.

Eli'ashib (Neh. xiii. 4). An officer of the temple. To oblige Tobiah, a relative, he took the stores out of one of the courts of the temple, and fitted it up for Tobiah's lodgings. As soon as Nehemiah knew of it, he caused all Tobiah's furniture to be cast out, the apartments to be thoroughly cleansed and the stores to be returned.

Eli'ezer, God's help (Gen. xv. 2). A name of frequent occurrence in the Old Testament. The most distinguished person who bore it was Abraham's steward and confidential servant (Gen. xxiv. 2). Abraham calls him the "steward of my house," or literally, "son of possession of my house," and speaks of him as his heir—as the "son of his house"—his heir-at-law. Probably he was a near relative or kinsman, and some are inclined to identify him with Lot.

Eli'hu. One of Job's friends, a descendant of Nahor (Job xxxii. 2).

Eli'jah. No person in the O. T. exercises on us a more remarkable fascination. "Elijah the Tishbite of the inhabitants of Gilead" is literally all that is given us to know of his parentage and locality. Of his appearance as he "stood before" Ahab, with the suddenness of motion to this day characteristic of the Bedouins from his native hills, we can perhaps realize something from the touches, few, but strong, of the narrative. His chief characteristic was his hair, long and thick, and hanging down his back; which, if not betokening the immense strength of Samson, yet accompanied powers of endurance no less remarkable. His ordinary clothing consisted of a girdle of skin round his loins, which he tightened when about to move quickly (1 Kings xviii. 46). But in addition to this he occasionally wore the "mantle" or cape of sheepskin which has supplied us with one of our most familiar figures of speech. In this mantle, in moments of emotion, he would hide his face (1 Kings xix. 13), or when excited would roll it up as into a kind of staff. The solitary life in which these external peculiarities had been assumed had also nurtured that fierceness of zeal and that directness of address which so distinguished him. It was in the wild loneliness of the hills and ravines of Gilead that the knowledge of Jehovah, the living God of Israel, had been impressed on his mind, which was to form the subject of his mission to the idolatrous court and country of Israel. What we may call the first act in his life embraces between three and four years—three years and six months for the duration of the drought, according to the statements of the New Testament (Luke iv. 25; James v. 17), and three or four months more for the journey to Horeb and the return to Gilead (1 Kings xvii. 1 to xix. 21). From this time forward his life is made up of miracles and remarkable events, until he is parted from Elisha and taken "up by the whirlwind into the skies."

Elim'elech. A man of the tribe of Judah, who dwelt in Bethlehem-ephraim in the days of the judges. In consequence of a great dearth in the land he went with his wife Naomi and his two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, to dwell in Moab, where he and his sons died without posterity (Ruth i. 2, 3, etc.).

Eli'iphaz. 1. The son of Esau and Adah, and father of Teman (Gen. xxxvi. 4; 1 Chron. i. 35, 36). 2. The chief of the "three friends" of Job. He is called "the Temanite." On him falls the main burden of the argument, that God's retribution in this world is perfect and certain, and that consequently suffering must be a proof of previous sin (Job iv.; v.; xv.; xxii.).

Eli'sabeth. The wife of Zacharias and mother of John the Baptist. She was herself of the priestly family, and a relation (Luke i. 36) of the mother of our Lord.

Elish'eus. The form in which the name Elisha appears in the Apocrypha and New Testament (Ecclus. xlviii. 12; Luke iv. 27).

Eli'sha. Son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah. The attendant and disciple of Elijah, and subsequently his successor as prophet of the kingdom of Israel. The earliest mention of his name is in the command to Elijah in the cave at Horeb (1 Kings xix. 16, 17). But our first introduction to the future prophet is in the fields of his native place. Elijah, on his way from Sinai to Damascus by the Jordan valley, lights on his successor engaged in the labours of the field. To cross to him, to throw over his shoulders the rough mantle—a token at once of investiture with the prophet's office and of adoption as a son—was to Elijah but the work of an instant. Elisha delayed merely to give the farewell kiss to his father and mother, and preside at a parting feast with his people, and then followed the great prophet on his northward road. Seven or eight years must have passed between the call of Elisha and the removal of his master, and during the whole of that time we hear nothing of him. But when that period had elapsed he reappears, to become the most prominent figure in the history of his country during the rest of his long life. The call of Elisha seems to have taken place about four years before the death of Ahab. He died in the reign of Joash, the grandson of Jehu. This embraces a period of not less than sixty-five years, for certainly fifty-five of which he held the important office of "prophet in Israel" (2 Kings v. 8).

Elish'ama. Son of Ammihud. From 1 Chron.

FIG OF PALESTINE.

vii. 26 we find that he was grandfather to the great Joshua.

Elish'e'ba. The wife of Aaron (Ex. vi. 23). She was daughter of Amminadab, and sister of Naashon, the captain of the host of Judah (Num. ii. 3).

E'lul. The sixth month of the Hebrew ecclesiastical year, and the twelfth of the civil year, answering to our August and part of September, containing twenty-nine days.

El'ymas. The Arabic name of the Jewish magus or sorcerer Bar-jesus, who was struck with blindness by Paul (Acts xiii. 6).

Embalm'ing. This consisted in opening the body, taking out the intestines and filling the place with odoriferous drugs and spices of a desiccative quality. Joseph gave orders for the embalming of the body of his father Jacob (Gen. l. 1, 2), and Moses informs us that the process took up forty days. Joseph himself also was embalmed (Gen. l. 26). Asa, king of Israel, seems to have been embalmed (2 Chron. xvi. 13, 14).

Em'erald (Ex. xxviii. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 16; xxviii. 13; Rev. xxi. 19; Eccles. xxxii. 6). This is generally supposed to be the same with the ancient smaragdus. It is one of the most beautiful of all the gems, and is of a bright green colour, without the admixture of any other. The true Oriental emerald is very scarce, and is only found at present in the kingdom of Cambay.

Em'erods. A disease the character of which is not exactly known. Most commentators consider it to be what is now called piles (Deut. xxviii. 27; 1 Sam. v. 12).

E'mims. Ancient inhabitants of the land of Canaan, beyond Jordan, who were defeated by Chedorlaomer and his allies (Gen. xiv. 5). The Emims were a warlike people of a gigantic stature, great and numerous, tall as the Anakims, and were accounted giants as well as they (Deut. ii. 10, 11).

Emman'uel, or Imman'uel, "God with us" (Isa. vii. 14; viii. 8; Matt. i. 23).

Emma'us. A village about eight miles northwest of Jerusalem, on the road to which two of the disciples were travelling in sorrow and disappointment after the resurrection, when our Lord appeared to them, and held that memorable conversion with them which is recorded by St. Luke xxiv. [See CLEOPAS.]

En. At the beginning of many Hebrew words, signifies a spring or fountain.

En'dor. A city in the tribe of Manasseh, where the witch resided whom Saul consulted a little before the battle of Gilboa (Josh. xvii. 11; 1 Sam. xxviii. 13). Mr. Bryant derives Endor from En-Ador, signifying fons pythonis, "the fountain of light," or oracle of the god Ador, which oracle was probably founded by the Canaanites, and had never been totally suppressed. That many such oracles existed in Canaan is evident from the number which Saul himself is said to have suppressed; and such a one was this at Endor. That, in this case, the real Samuel appeared is plain both from the affright of the woman herself and from the fulfilment of his prophecy. It was an instance of God's overruling the wickedness of men to manifest his own supremacy and justice.

Enged'i. A town in the wilderness of Judah (Josh. xv. 62), on the western shore of the Dead Sea (Ezek. xlvii. 10). Saul was told that David was in the "wilderness of Engedi," and he took "three thousand men, and went to seek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild-goats" (1 Sam. xxiv. 1-4). The vineyards of Engedi were celebrated by Solomon (Cant. i. 14).

E'noch. 1. The son of Cain (Gen. iv. 17), in honour of whom the first city noticed in Scripture was called Enoch by his father Cain, who was the builder. It was situated on the east of the province of Eden. 2. ENOCH, the son of Jared, and father of Methuselah. He was born A. M. 622, and being contemporary with Adam, he had every opportunity of learning from him the story of the creation, the circumstance of the fall, the terms of the promise and other important truths. An ancient author affirms that he was the father of astronomy; and Eusebius hence infers that he is the same with the Atlas of the Grecian mythology. Enoch's fame rests upon a better basis than his skill in science. The encomium of Enoch is that he "walked with God."

E'non. A place "near to Salim," at which John baptized (John iii. 23). It was evidently west of the Jordan (comp. iii. 22 with 26, and with i. 28), and abounded in water. This is indicated by the name, which is merely a Greek version of a Chaldee word, signifying "springs." E'non is given in the Onomasticon as eight miles south of Scythopolis, "near Salem and the Jordan."

Epæ'netus. A Christian at Rome, greeted by St. Paul in Rom. xvi. 5, and designated as his beloved and the first-fruit of Asia unto Christ.

Ep'aphras (contracted from Epaphroditus). A Christian, perhaps a Colossian by birth, who had ministered at Colosse, and probably founded the Church there (Col. i. 7; iv. 12). He was with St. Paul at Rome when the letter to the Colossians was written, and he is styled "fellow-prisoner" (Philem. 23). We know nothing more of him certainly. Tradition makes him bishop of Colosse, and martyr there.

E'phes-dam'mim. A place between Socoh and Azekah, at which the Philistines were encamped before the affray in which Goliath was killed (1 Sam. xvii. 1). Under the shorter form of PAS-DAMMIM it occurs once again in a similar connection (1 Chron. xi. 13).

Eph'esians, the Epistle to the. Was written by the Apostle St. Paul during his first captivity at Rome (Acts xxviii. 16), apparently immediately after he had written the Epistle to the Colossians [See COLOSSIANS, EP. TO], and during that period

SO-CALLED FOUNTAIN OF CANA.

(perhaps the early part of A. D. 62) when his imprisonment had not assumed the severer character which seems to have marked its close. This Epistle was addressed to the Christian Church at Ephesus.

Eph'esus. A very celebrated city, the metropolis of Ionia, and distant from Smyrna three hundred and twenty stadia, or near forty miles. Ephesus lay on the south of a plain, its buildings partly ascending steep hills. Under the Roman government it was a free city, with its own magistrates and other officers (the "town clerk" is specially mentioned in Acts xix. 35) and legal assemblies: thus it was what might be called an assize town, with court-days: we also read of "deputies," i. e., proconsuls, there (38). Ephesus, the civil and ecclesiastical centre of Asia Minor, the meeting-point of Oriental religions and Greek culture, was naturally looked at by the Apostle Paul as one of the most important places where the gospel could be planted. Accordingly, he visited it, resided there between two and three years, and addressed an Epistle to the Christians there. See Acts xviii. 19-28; xix.; xx. 16-38.

Eph'od. A vestment appropriated to the high priest (Ex. xxviii. 35). [See HIGH PRIEST.] An ephod is said to have been worn by Samuel (1 Sam. ii. 18), by the ordinary priests (xxii. 18), and by David (2 Sam. vi. 14; 1 Chron. xv. 27); but this vesture differed from the high priest's, both in the extraordinary ornaments of the latter and also in the material.

E'phraim. Was the name of Joseph's second son, by Asenath, Potiphar's daughter. He was born in Egypt, A. M. 2294. Ephraim, with his brother Manasseh, was presented by his father Joseph to Jacob on his deathbed (Gen. xlviii. 8, etc.) Jacob laid his right hand on Ephraim the younger, and his left on Manasseh the elder. Joseph was desirous to change his hands, but Jacob answered, "I know it, my son; Manasseh shall be multiplied, but Ephraim shall be greater." Ephraim was also the name of a city, into which Christ retired with his disciples a little before his passion (John xi. 54). It was situated in the tribe of Ephraim, near the river Jordan. There was also the wood or forest of Ephraim, situated on the other side Jordan, in which Absalom's army was routed and himself killed (2 Sam. xviii. 6).

Eph'ratah, or Eph'rath. 1. Second wife of Caleb, the son of Hezron, mother of Hur, and grandmother of Caleb the spy (1 Chron. ii. 19, 50). 2. The ancient name of Bethlehem-judah, as is manifest from Gen. xxxv. 16, 19; xlviii. 7.

Epicure'ans. A philosophic sect, which derived its origin from Epicurus, of Athenian descent, but born in Samos 341 B. C. He lived much in Athens, where he had a garden in which he delivered his lessons to his disciples; he died 270 B. C. He taught that the universe consists of matter reducible to atoms, and denied that there was a Creator of the world. He made good and evil depend on the increasing of pleasure and diminishing of pain, or the reverse. The soul, he taught, was indissolubly connected with the body. Hence it will be seen that the dogmas of Epicureanism, which in many degenerated into mere sensualism, were strongly in opposition to the truths of the gospel. Consequently the Epicureans at Athens, though differing from the Stoics in the rejection of absolute destiny, and on other points, yet equally with them ridiculed the doctrines of St. Paul (Acts xvii. 18).

Er. First-born of Judah. Er "was wicked in the sight of the Lord; and the Lord slew him" (Gen. xxxviii. 3-7; Num. xxvi. 19).

Erast'us. One of the attendants or deacons of St. Paul at Ephesus, who with Timothy was sent forward into Macedonia while the apostle himself remained in Asia (Acts xix. 22). He is probably the same with Erastus mentioned in the salutations to Timothy (2 Tim. iii. 20), though not the same with Erastus the chamberlain of Corinth (Rom. xvi. 23).

Esai'as. The form of the name of the prophet Isaiah in the N. T. [See ISAIAS.]

E'sar-had'don. Son of Sennacherib, and his successor in the kingdom of Assyria: called Sargon or Saragon (Isa. xx. 1). He reigned twenty-nine years. He made war with the Philistines, took Azoth, attacked Egypt, Cush and Edom (Isa. xx.; xxxiv.), took Jerusalem, and carried King Manasseh to Babylon, of which he had become master. He is said to have reigned twenty-nine or thirty years at Nineveh, and thirteen years at Babylon—in all forty-two years. He died A. M. 3336.

E'sau. The eldest son of Isaac, and twin-brother of Jacob. The singular appearance of the child at his birth originated the name (Esau means hairy, Gen. xxv. 25). Esau's robust frame and "rough" aspect were the types of a wild and daring nature. He was, in fact, a thorough Bedouin, a "son of the desert." An event occurred which exhibited the reckless character of Esau on the one hand, and the selfish nature of his brother on the other. Jacob took advantage of his brother's distress to rob him of that which was dear as life itself to an Eastern patriarch. Esau married at the age of forty, and his wives were both Canaanites (Gen. xxvi. 34, 35). The next episode in the history of Esau and Jacob was that Jacob, through the craft of his mother, secured irrevocably the covenant blessing. Esau vowed vengeance. He afterward married his cousin Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael (xxviii. 8, 9), and established himself in Mount Seir; still retaining, however, some interest in his father's property in Southern Palestine. He was residing in Mount Seir when Jacob returned from Padan-aram, and had then become so rich

Essenes. A Jewish sect, distinguished by an aspiration after ideal purity rather than by any special code of doctrines. There were isolated communities of Essenes, which were regulated by strict rules. All things were held in common, without distinction of property, and special provision was made for the relief of the poor. Self-denial, temperance and labour—especially agriculhad been concerted by the offended pride of Haman. There is great diversity of opinion concerning the author of this book; it has been ascribed to Ezra, to Mordecai, to Joachim and to the joint labours of the great synagogue; and it is impossible to decide which of these opinions is the most probable.

Eth'aním. One of the Hebrew months (1 Kings viii. 2). In this month the temple of Solomon was dedicated. After the Jews returned from the captivity, the month Ethaním was called Tisri, which answers to our September.

Ethio'pia. The country described as "Ethiopia" and as "Cush" lay to the south of Egypt, and embraced the modern Nubia, Sennaar, Kordofan and northern Abyssinia—the kingdom of Meroë. Syene marked the division between Ethiopia and Egypt (Ezek. xxix. 10). The inhabitants of Ethiopia were a Hamitic race (Gen. x. 6), divided into various tribes. Shortly before our Saviour's birth a native dynasty of females, holding the official title of Candace, held sway in Ethiopia, and even resisted the advance of the Roman arms. One of these is the queen noticed in Acts viii. 27.

Ethio'pian Woman. The wife of Moses is so described in Num. xii. 1. She is elsewhere said to have been the daughter of a Midianite, and in consequence of this some have supposed that the allusion is to another wife whom Moses married after the death of Zipporah.

Eubu'lus. A Christian at Rome mentioned by St. Paul (2 Tim. iv. 21).

Eu'nice. The mother of Timothy, who was a Jewess by birth, but married to a Greek, Timothy's father (2 Tim. i. 5). Eunice had been converted to Christianity by some other preacher (Acts xvi. 1, 2), and not by St. Paul; for when that apostle came to Lystra he found there Eunice and Timothy, already far advanced in grace and virtue.

Eu'nuch. The word signifies one who guards the bed. In the courts of Eastern kings the care of the beds and apartments belonging to princes and princesses was generally committed to eunuchs, but they had the charge chiefly of the princesses, who lived secluded. In Scripture the word often and powerful that the impressions of his brother's early offences seem to have been almost completely effaced. It does not appear that the brothers again met until the death of their father, about twenty years afterward. They united in laying Isaac's body in the cave of Machpelah. Of Esau's subsequent history nothing is known. [See EDOM.]

E'say. The form of the name of Isaiah in Ecclus. xlviii. 20, 22; 2 Esd. ii. 18.

Esdrae'lon, Plain of. By far the largest plain in the Holy Land, extending quite across the country, from Mount Carmel and the Mediterranean Sea to the southern extremity of the Sea of Galilee; about thirty miles in length and twenty in breadth. Here Barak, descending with his ten thousand men from Mount Tabor, which rises like a cone in the centre of the plain, defeated Sisera, with his "nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him" (Judg. iv.) Here Josiah, king of Judah, fell fighting against Necho, king of Egypt (2 Kings xxiii. 29). And here the Midianites and the Amalekites, who were "like grasshoppers for multitude, and their camels without number as the sand of the sea," encamped, when they were defeated by Gideon (Judg. vi.)

Es'dras. The form of the name of Ezra the scribe in 1 and 2 Esdras. The first book of Esdras is the first in order of the Apocryphal books in the English Bible. It was never known to exist in Hebrew, and formed no part of the Hebrew canon. The second book is included among those which are "read for examples of life" by the English Church; no use of it is there made in public worship.

Esh'col. One of Abraham's allies, who dwelt with him in the valley of Mamre, and accompanied him in the pursuit of Cheodorlaomer and the other confederated kings, who pillaged Sodom and Gomorrah and carried away Lot, Abraham's nephew (Gen. xiv. 24). Also the valley or brook of Eshcol was that in which the Hebrew messengers, who went to spy the land of Canaan, cut a bunch of grapes so large that it was as much as two men could carry. It was situated in the south part of Judah (Num. xiii. 24; xxxii. 9).

Esh'taol. A town in the low country of Judah, afterward allotted to Dan (Josh. xv. 33; xix. 41). Here Samson spent his boyhood, and hither after his last exploit his body was brought (Judg. xiii. 25; xvi. 31; xviii. 2, 8, 11, 12).

ture—were the marks of the outward life of the Essenes; purity and divine communion the objects of their aspiration. Slavery, war and commerce were alike forbidden. Their best-known settlements were on the north-west shore of the Dead Sea.

GAZA, A CHIEF CITY OF THE PHILISTINES—FROM THE SOUTH-EAST.

Es'ther. The book of Esther is so called because it contains the history of Esther, a Jewish captive, who by her remarkable accomplishments gained the affections of King Ahasuerus, and by marriage with him was raised to the throne of Persia; and it relates the origin and ceremonies of the feast of Purim, instituted in commemoration of the great deliverance which she, by her interest, procured for the Jews, whose general destruction denotes an officer belonging to a prince as a name of office and dignity. In the Persian and Turkish courts the principal employments are at this day possessed by real eunuchs. Our Saviour speaks of men who "make themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. xix. 12); that is, who, from a religious motive, renounced marriage or carnal pleasures.

Euphra'tes (the good and abounding river). A river most frequently denoted in the Bible by the term "the river," the largest, the longest, and by far the most important river of Western Asia. The Euphrates has at all times been of some importance as furnishing a line of traffic between the East and the West. Herodotus speaks of persons, probably merchants, using it regularly on their passage from the Mediterranean to Babylon. He of the Israelites in Egypt, and their miraculous deliverance by the hand of Moses; their entrance into the wilderness of Sinai; the promulgation of the law, and the building of the tabernacle.

Ex'orcist. One who drives away evil spirits or casts out devils. Our Saviour, when he sent out his disciples to preach the gospel, gave them power over unclean spirits, to cast them out (Matt.

history is presented in the book which bears his name, and also partially in the book of Nehemiah. From his account (Ezek. vii. 1-12) we learn that he was a priest, indeed descended from the line of the high priests, the nearest of his ancestors named in the list being Seraiah, who is, almost beyond the possibility of doubt, not his own father, but the father of that high priest who went into captivity in the time of Nebuchadnezzar. Josephus vaguely says, "he died an old man, and was buried in a magnificent manner at Jerusalem." The Talmud says he died at Zamzuma, a town on the Tigris, while on his way from Jerusalem to Susa. His reputed tomb is shown on the Tigris, about twenty miles above its junction with the Euphrates.

Ez'ra, Book of. Is a continuation of the books of Chronicles. Like these books, it consists of the contemporary historical journals kept from time to time, which were afterward strung together, and either abridged or added to, as the case required. The period covered by the book is eighty years, from the first of Cyrus, B.C. 536, to the beginning of the eighth of Artaxerxes, B.C. 456.

F.

Fair Ha'vens (Acts xxvii. 8). The name of a harbour or anchorage on the southern shore of the island of Crete. Its Greek name is so well preserved that it can be identified.

Fal'ow Deer. The Hebrew word, mentioned only in Deut. xiv. 5 as an animal allowed for food, and in 1 Kings iv. 23 as forming part of the provisions for Solomon's table, appears to point to the Antelope Bubalis, or Alcelaphus Bubalis, a species of antelope, about the size of a stag, and resembling both the calf and the stag. It is common in Northern Africa, and lives in herds.

Fam'ine. Scripture records several famines in Palestine and the neighbouring countries (Gen. xii. 10; xxvi. 1). The most remarkable one was that of seven years in Egypt, while Joseph was governor. It was distinguished for its continuance, extent and severity.

Famine is sometimes a natural effect, as when also describes the circular boats in use, of wicker-work coated with bitumen, sometimes covered with skins. Boats of this kind, called kufas, still abound on the river.

Euroc'lydon. The name given (Acts xxvii. 14) to the gale of wind which off the south coast of Crete seized the ship in which St. Paul was ultimately wrecked on the coast of Malta. It came down from the island, and therefore must have blown, more or less, from the northward.

Eu'tychus. A youth at Troas (Acts xx. 9) who, sitting in a window and having fallen asleep while St. Paul was discoursing far into the night, fell from the third story, and, being taken up dead, was miraculously restored to life by the apostle.

Evan'gelist. "The publisher of glad tidings." In Eph. iv. 11 the "evangelists" appear on the one hand after the "apostles" and "prophets;" on the other, before the "pastors" and "teachers." The apostles, so far as they evangelized (Acts viii. 25; xiv. 7; 1 Cor. i. 17), might claim the title, though there were many evangelists who were not apostles. In later liturgical language the word was applied to the reader of the Gospel for the day.

Eve. The first woman. She was called Eve (Gen. iii. 20), a word that signifies life, because she was to be the mother of all that live. Soon after the expulsion of the first pair from Paradise, Eve conceived and bare a son; and imagining, as is probable, that she had given birth to the promised seed, she called his name Cain, which signifies possession, saying, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." She afterward had Abel and some daughters, and then Seth. The Scriptures name only these three sons of Adam and Eve, but sufficiently inform us (Gen. v. 4) that they had many more, saying, that "Adam lived after he had begotten Seth eight hundred years, and begat sons and daughters." [See ADAM.]

E'vil-mer'odach (2 Kings xxv. 27). The son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar. He reigned but a short time, and was murdered by Neriglissar.

Ex'odus (from a Greek word signifying out, and another signifying a way). The name of the second book of Moses, and so called in the Greek version because it relates to the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt. It comprehends the history of about a hundred and forty-five years; and the principal events contained in it are the bondage

x. 1); by which gift they gained repute among the people, and gave proof that they were sent of God. But those Jewish exorcists mentioned in Acts xix. 14 were impostors, deluding the people by witchcraft or diabolical agency.

SOUTH-EAST VIEW OF OLD OLIVE TREES IN GETHESEMANE.

Eze'kiel. A descendant of Aaron, and of course belonging to the priesthood. Being carried away by Nebuchadnezzar among the captives, he settled on the banks of the Chebar in Mesopotamia, and was there favoured with his extraordinary revelations. He seems to have exercised his prophetic office about twenty years, and was contemporary with Jeremiah and Daniel.

Ez'ra. The famous scribe and priest, whose the Nile does not overflow in Egypt, or rains do not fall in Judea, at the customary seasons; or when caterpillars, locusts or other insects destroy the fruits. Famine was sometimes an effect of God's anger (2 Kings viii. 1, 2). The prophets frequently threaten Israel with the sword of famine or with war and famine. Amos (viii. 11) threatens another sort of famine.

Far'ting. A coin used by the Romans. Our translators give this English to the Greek words assarion and quadrantes; but these were different. The first was a tenth part of a Roman penny, or about two cents (Matt. x. 29). The latter was equal to two mites, and is about a fourth part of our cent (Mark xii. 42).

Fast. A solemn forbearance from food, accompanied by humiliation before God, prayer, and the reformation of life. Our Saviour did not appoint any fast days, but gave reasons why, after his death, his disciples should fast. Afflictions and perplexities soon became common to Christians, and then they fasted (2 Cor. vi. 5).

EL-JIB (GIBEON), ONE OF THE CITIES OF THE HIVITES.

Fat. In the ceremonial law it was ordered that "all the fat" was the Lord's; and the Jews were to eat "neither fat nor blood" (Lev. iii. 4-17). This does not mean the fat as intermixed with the lean, but all the fat parts; such as round the kidneys, etc.

Felix (CLAUDIUS). Succeeded Cumanus in the government of Judea in the days of the apostles. He married Drusilla, the sister of the young king Agrippa, having prevailed on her to leave her former husband, Azizus, king of the Emeseniensians. The character of Felix as delineated by his contemporaries is far from reflecting any honour upon his memory. "He was so oppressive," says Tacitus, "that he exercised the authority committed to him with all manner of cruelty and lewdness." He resided at the city of Caesarea when Paul was brought there for safety under an escort of the Roman soldiers (Acts xxiii. 26, 27; xxiv. 1, etc.). The apostle's address before him and his adulterous paramour has been universally admired, both for its being strikingly adapted to the characters and circumstances of his audience, and for the boldness with which this illustrious prisoner must have uttered it, though standing before the tribunal of a man who might have sentenced him to death.

Fenced Cities. Walled round about; fortified, and so made strong and difficult to be taken or hurt (2 Chron. xi. 10; Job x. 11). We can trace these back fifteen centuries before Christ, so early did man learn "the art of war." The walls were of stone or brick, and of great strength. The gates generally had towers built over them, in which were held courts and councils.

Fes'tivals. 1. The religious times ordained in the law were: (1.) Those formally connected with the institution of the Sabbath; (2.) The historical or great festivals; (3.) The Day of Atonement.—(1.) Immediately connected with the institution of the Sabbath are: (a) The weekly Sabbath itself. (b) The seventh new moon or Feast of Trumpets. (c) The Sabbatical year. (d) The Year of Jubilee. (2.) The great feasts are: (a) The Passover.

(b) The Feast of Pentecost, of Weeks, of Wheat-harvest, or of the First-fruits. (c) The Feast of Tabernacles, or of Ingathering. On each of these occasions every male Israelite was commanded "to appear before the Lord;" that is, to attend in the court of the tabernacle or the temple, and to make his offering with a joyful heart (Deut xxvii. 7; Neh. viii. 9-12). 2. After the captivity, the Feast of Purim (Esth. ix. 20) and that of the Dedication (1 Macc. iv. 56) were instituted.

Fes'tus Por'cius. Succeeded Felix in the government of Judea, A. D. 60. To oblige the Jews, Felix, when he resigned his government, had left Fir'kin. A Greek measure, equal, it is thought, to four gallons and a half; that is, about a fourth part of a bath. There is no certainty as to its size (John ii. 6).

Firm'ament. It is said (Gen. i. 7) that God made the firmament in the midst of the waters. The word signifies expansion, or something expanded. This expansion is properly the atmosphere, which encompasses the globe on all sides and separates the water in the clouds from that on the earth.

First-fruits. Oblations of part of the fruits of the harvest consecrated to God. Among the Hebrews when bread was kneaded in a family, a portion of it was set apart and given to the priest or Levite who dwelt in the place. If there were no priest or Levite there, it was cast into the oven and consumed by the fire. These offerings made a considerable part of the revenues of the priesthood (Lev. xxiii.; Ex. xxii. 29; Chron. xxiii. 19; Num. xv. 19, 20). Christ is called the first-fruits of them that slept; for as the first-fruits were earnest to the Jews of the succeeding harvest, so Christ's resurrection is an earnest of that of his people.

Fish. The Hebrews recognized fish as one of the great divisions of the animal kingdom. The Mosaic law (Lev. xi. 9, 10) pronounced unclean such fish as were devoid of fins and scales; these were and are regarded as unwholesome in Egypt. In Palestine, the Sea of Galilee was and still is remarkably well stored with fish. Jerusalem derived its supply chiefly from the Mediterranean (comp. Ezek. xlvii. 10).

Flag. A tall rush, common on the banks of the Nile, grateful to cattle as food, and made into ropes, etc., by the Egyptians (Gen. xli. 2, 18; Job viii. 11).

Flag'on. A word employed to render two distinct Hebrew terms: 1. Ashishuk (2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3; Cant. ii. 5; Hos. iii. 1). It really means a cake of pressed raisins. 2. Nebel (Isa. xxii. 24) is commonly used for a bottle or vessel, originally probably a skin, but in later times a piece of pottery (Isa. xxx. 14).

Flax. A well-known plant of which linen is made. Egypt carried on a great trade in linen (Ezek. xxvii. 7). Wrought into garments, it was the only raiment of the priests, and the principal article of dress of all the people. It was famous in all countries for its fineness; but this was because the art of spinning was then in so rude a state, for that which is now taken from the best mummies seems to us very coarse. The destruction of flax, in one of the plagues of Moses, must have been a great calamity (Ex. ix. 31). That it was grown in

GIER-EAGLE, OR EGYPTIAN VULTURE.

Paul in bonds at Caesarea in Palestine (Acts xxiv. 27), and when Festus arrived, he was entreated by the principal Jews to condemn the apostle or to order him up to Jerusalem, they having conspired to assassinate him in the way. Festus, however, answered that it was not customary with the Romans to condemn any man without hearing him, and promised to hear their accusations at Caesarea. But Paul appealed to Caesar, and so secured himself from the persecution of the Jews and the intentions of Festus, whom they had corrupted. Festus died in Judea, A. D. 62, and Albinus succeeded him.

Fig, Fig Tree. Both are denoted by the Hebrew te'endh, which signifies the tree Ficus Carica of Linnaeus, and also its fruit. The fig tree is very common in Palestine (Deut. viii. 8). Its fruit is a well-known and highly-esteemed article of food. In the East this is of three kinds: (1) the early fig, ripening about the end of June; (2) the summer fig, ripening in August; (3) the winter fig, larger and darker than No. 2, hanging and ripening late on the tree, even after the leaves were shed, and sometimes gathered in the spring. Mount Olivet was famous for its fig trees in ancient times, and they are still found there.

Fir. A very tall, straight, evergreen tree, of dense foliage, and abounding with a gum called rosin. Its fruit somewhat resembles burrs of the pine tree. The wood was anciently used for spears, musical instruments, building and furniture. It was the chosen abode of the stork (Ps. civ. 17).

Fire. Represented as the symbol of Jehovah's presence, and the instrument of his power, in the way either of approval or of destruction (Ex. iii. 2; xiv. 19, etc.). Parallel with this application of fire and with its symbolical meaning is to be noted the similar use for sacrificial purposes, and the respect paid to it. Fire for sacred purposes obtained elsewhere than from the altar was called "strange fire," and for the use of such Nadab and Abihu were punished with death by fire from God (Lev. x. 1, 2; Num. iii. 4; xxvi. 61).

Palestine even before the conquest of that country by the Israelites appears from Josh. ii. 6. That it was one of the most important crops in Palestine appears from Hos. ii. 5, 9.

Flay. To strip off the skin; a punishment used in some countries upon great offenders, by which they were slowly killed with the utmost suffering (Mic. iii. 3). Some of the early Christians were martyred in this manner.

Flea. An insect twice only mentioned in Scripture, viz.: in 1 Sam. xxiv. 14; xxvi. 20. Fleas are abundant in the East, and afford the subject of many proverbial expressions.

Flute. A musical instrument, sometimes mentioned in Scripture by the names Chalil, Machalath, Masrokoth and Huggab. The last word is generally translated organ, but Calmet thinks it was nothing more than a flute. There is notice taken in the Gospels of players on the flute, minstrels who were collected at funerals (Matt. ix. 23, 24).

Flux, Bloody (Acts xxviii. 8). The same as our dysentery, which in the East is generally epidemic and infectious, and then usually assumes its worst form.

Fly, Flies. 1. Zēbāb occurs only in Eccles. x.

LONG-EARED SYRIAN GOAT.

1 and in Isa. vii. 18, and is probably a generic name for any insect. 2. Arōb, the name of the insect or insects which God sent to punish Pharaoh (Ex. viii. 21-31; Ps. lxxviii. 45; cv. 31).

Food. The diet of Eastern nations has been in all ages light and simple. As compared with our own habits, the chief points of contrast are the small amount of animal food consumed, the variety of articles used as accompaniments to bread, the substitution of milk in various forms for our liquors, and the combination of what we should deem heterogeneous elements in the same dish or the same meal. The chief point of agreement is the large consumption of bread, the importance of which in the eyes of the Hebrew is testified by the use of the term lechem (originally food of any kind) specifically for bread, as well as by the expression "staff of bread" (Lev. xxvi. 26; Ps. cv. 16; Ezek. iv. 16; xiv. 13).

Fool. One who has not the use of reason or judgment. In the language of Scripture a sinner (2 Sam. xiii. 12; Ps. xxxviii. 5).

Foot (Deut. xi. 10), Feet (Gen. xlix. 33). In the first of these passages, the phrase, "wateredst with thy foot," is supposed to refer to some process by which the foot was employed in irrigating the soil; and very learned commentators trace the allusion to a machine for raising and distributing water. Others suppose that the allusion is to the small streams that irrigate the Eastern gardens, and which are turned aside or stopped by interposing a sod or a stone, which may be easily moved by the foot. Nakedness of the feet was a sign of mourning (Ezek. xxiv. 17) and of respect or reverence (Ex. iii. 5).

Fountain. Among the attractive features presented by the Land of Promise to the nation migrating from Egypt by way of the desert, none would be more striking than the natural gush of waters from the ground. The springs of Palestine, though short-lived, are remarkable for their abundance and beauty. In Oriental cities generally public fountains are frequent. Traces of such fountains at Jerusalem may perhaps be found in the names Ea-Rogel (2 Sam. xvii. 17), the "Dragon-well" or fountain, and the "gate of the fountain" (Neh. ii. 13, 14).

Fowl. Several distinct Hebrew and Greek words are thus rendered in the Bible. Of these the most common is 'ōph, which is usually a collective term for all kinds of birds. In the N. T. the word translated "fowls" is most frequently that which comprehends all kinds of birds (including ravens, Luke xii. 24).

Fox. The Hebrew word in Ps. lxiii. 10 evidently refers to jackals, which are ever ready to prey on the carcasses of the slain. Both the fox and the jackal are fond of grapes, and very destructive to vineyards (Cant. ii. 15); both have holes and burrows among ruins (Neh. iv. 3; Lam. v. 18; Matt. viii. 20; Luke ix. 58). The crafty rapacity of Herod might be represented by either (Luke xiii. 32; comp. Ezek. xiii. 4). The jackal of Palestine is no doubt the Canis Aureus, which may be heard every night in the villages.

Frankincense (Ex. xxx. 34). A dry, resinous, aromatic substance, of a yellow tinge, bitter and acrid to the taste, but exceedingly odoriferous. The tree, whence the gum is obtained by incision of the bark, grows in Arabia, and resembles the American sumach. It is also found in India, but of an inferior quality; and, as some suppose, it was found in the mountainous districts of Judea. It is sometimes called incense (Isa. lx. 6; Jer. vi. 20; Luke i. 9). It is called frank, because of the freedom with which it burns and gives forth its odours; and the pure incense is that which is first obtained and is freest from foreign admixture. Sweet incense (Ex. xxx. 7) might as well be rendered incense of spices, and is the composition mentioned in Ex. xxx. 34. The substance which is generally used in modern times as frankincense is the production of the Norway pine. The use of incense in the Jewish worship may be learned from Ex. xxx. 7 and Lev. xvi. 12, 13.

Frog. There are two species of frog, one of which lives in the water, and the other on the land. The former was made the plague of Egypt (Ex. viii.). As the frog in Egypt was the emblem of Osiris, it was held sacred by the people; and this plague is one of the many instances in which Jehovah punishes men by means of the very things which they improperly regard. Though the frog is not venomous, such legions of them penetrating every place, and filling their food and beds, rendered life intolerable. When it is said (Ps. lxxviii. 45), "He sent frogs and destroyed them," it probably means that the stench of them, when killed, infected the air and created a pestilence.

Frontlets, or Phylacteries (Ex. xiii. 16; Deut. vi. 8; xi. 18; Matt. xxiii. 5). These "frontlets" or "phylacteries" were strips of parchment, on which were written four passages of Scripture (Ex.

GOAT OF MOUNT SINAI.

xiii. 2-10, 11-17; Deut. vi. 4-9, 13-23) in an ink prepared for the purpose. They were then rolled up in a case of black calfskin, placed at the bend of the left arm. Those worn on the forehead were written on four strips of parchment. The Jews, regarding the command (Deut. vi. 8, 9) as intended literally, or being disposed to adopt the pagan custom of wearing amulets and talismans, wore these on their foreheads.

Fuel (Isa. ix. 5). So scarce in the East that the people resorted to every kind of combustible matter; even the withered stalks of herbs and flowers (Matt. vi. 28-30), thorns (Ps. lviii. 9; Eccles. vii. 6) and even excrements (Ezek. iv. 12-16).

Full'er. The trade of the fullers, so far as it is mentioned in the Scripture, appears to have consisted chiefly in cleansing garments and whitening them. The substances used for this purpose which are mentioned in Scripture are natrum (Prov. xxv. 10; Jer. ii. 22) and soap (Mal. iii. 2). Other substances also are mentioned as being employed in cleansing, which, together with alkali, seem to identify the Jewish with the Roman process, as urine and chalk. The process of whitening garments was performed by rubbing into them chalk or earth of some kind. The trade of the fullers, as causing offensive smells and also of requiring space for drying clothes, appears to have been carried on at Jerusalem outside the city.

GREEK MANNER OF WEARING THE HAIR.

Furnace (Gen. xv. 17). Furnaces were used for melting the precious metals (Prov. xvii. 3). Many of these furnaces, as seen in the Egyptian paintings, were small and portable. They were also used to punish criminals. The furnace into which Nebuchadnezzar cast the young Hebrews who refused to worship his image was probably an open furnace, or place of fire, sufficiently confined to concentrate the heat to the last extreme, and yet so open that what took place in the midst of it might be easily seen. Such places are now found in Syria, and were evidently used by idolaters as temples for the fires which represented their gods, and in which they offered sacrifices. The Persians were in the habit of using the furnace as a means of inflicting capital punishment (Jer. xxix. 22; 2 Macc. vii. 5; Hos. vii. 7).

G.

Gab'batha. A place where Pilate took his seat when he pronounced sentence upon our Lord (John xix. 13). It appears to have been outside the prætorium or "judgment-hall" (9). We may suppose, therefore, that the bema, or regular seat of justice, was in front of the prætorium, on an elevated platform, which was floored with a tessellated pavement. It could not have been the paved room in the temple, as has been sometimes imagined, where the Sanhedrim sat.

Gab'riel. This word, which is not in itself distinctive, but merely a description of the angelic office, is used as a proper name or title in Dan. viii. 16; ix. 21, and in Luke i. 19, 26. In the ordinary traditions, Jewish and Christian, Gabriel is spoken of as one of the archangels.

Gad. One of the sons of Jacob by Zilpah, Leah's maid. At his birth, Leah exclaimed, "A troop cometh" (Gen. xxx. 10, 11); but the rendering of several versions is, "In felicity."

Gad'ara. A strong city east of the Sea of Galilee; Josephus calls it the capital of Peræa. Gadara itself is not mentioned in the Bible, but it is evidently identical with the "country of the Gadarenes," or Gergesenes (Matt. viii. 28; Mark v. 1; Luke viii. 26, 37). The ruins of this city, now called Um Keis, are about two miles in circumference. Gadara derives its greatest interest from having been the scene of our Lord's miracle in healing the demoniacs (Matt. viii. 28-34; Mark v. 1-21; Luke viii. 26-40).

Gala'tia. A province of Asia Minor. The inhabitants were of Gallic and German origin. Their ancestors, after various wanderings, reached Asia Minor, and, defeated about 238 B.C. by Attalus I., king of Pergamos, settled in a district previously Phrygian, which obtained from them the name of Galatia, or Gallo-græcia, from their mixture with the Greeks.

Galatians, The Epistle to the. Was written by the Apostle St. Paul not long after his journey through Galatia and Phrygia (Acts xviii. 23). The Epistle appears to have been called forth by the machinations of Judaizing teachers, who, shortly before the date of its composition, had endeavoured to seduce the churches of this province into a recognition of circumcision (v. 2, 11, 12; vi. 12), and had openly sought to depreciate the apostolic claims of St. Paul (comp. i. 1, 11).

Gal'ilee. This name, which in the Roman age was applied to a large province, seems to have been originally confined to a little "circuit" of country round Kedesh-naphtali, in which were situated the twenty towns given by Solomon to Hiram, king of Tyre, as payment for his work in conveying timber from Lebanon to Jerusalem (Josh. xx. 7; 1 Kings ix. 11). They were then, or subsequently, occupied by strangers, and for this reason Isaiah gives to the district the name "Galilee of the Gentiles" (Isa. ix. 1). Galilee became one of the largest provinces of Palestine. The towns most celebrated in N. T. history are Nazareth, Cana and Tiberias (Luke i. 26; John ii. 1; vi. 1). Galilee was the scene of the greater part of our Lord's private life and public acts. His early years were spent at Nazareth; and when He entered on His great work He made Capernaum His home (Matt. iv. 13; ix. 1).

Gal'ilee, Sea of. Called also the Lake of Tiberias, or the Lake of Gennesaret. Its Old Testament name is the "Sea of Chinnereth," from the town of Chinnereth on its banks (Josh. xix. 35). According to Dr. Robinson, it is about (eleven and a half geographical or) thirteen English miles long, and five or six miles broad. Lieut. Lynch gives six hundred and fifty-three feet as its depression below the level of the Mediterranean. The whole scenery of the lake has a certain air of brightness and cheerfulness unknown elsewhere in Palestine. In the days of our Lord's ministry, its hills, now bare, were covered with vineyards, etc., its shores were studded with towns and villas, and its waters were a great highway, and brought the merchandise of Damascus to the South and the balm of Gilead to the West.

Gall. A general name for whatever is very bitter or nauseous.

Gal'lio. The brother of Seneca, the philosopher. The Jews were enraged at St. Paul for converting many Gentiles, and dragged him to the tribunal of Gallio, who, as proconsul, generally resided at Corinth (Acts xviii. 12, 13). They accused him of teaching "men to worship God contrary to the law." St. Paul being about to speak, Gallio told the Jews that if the matter in question were a breach of justice or an action of a criminal nature, he should think himself obliged to hear them; but as the dispute was only concerning their law, he would not determine such differences nor judge them. He was at length put to death by Nero.

Gama'iel. A celebrated rabbi and doctor of the Jewish law, under whose tuition the great apostle of the Gentiles was brought up (Acts xxii. 3). Barnabas and Stephen are also supposed to have been among the number of his pupils. Soon after the day of Pentecost, when the Jewish Sanhedrim began to be alarmed at the progress the Gospel was making in Jerusalem, and consequently wished to put to death the apostles, in the hope of checking its farther progress, they were apprehended and brought before the national council of which Gamaliel seems to have been a leading member. It is very probable that many zealots among them would have despatched the affair in a very summary manner, but their impetuosity was checked by the cool and prudent advice of Gamaliel; for, having requested the apostles to withdraw for a while, he represented to the Sanhedrim that if the apostles were no better than impostors, their fallacy would quickly be discovered; but on the other hand if what they were engaged in was from God, it was vain for them to attempt to frustrate it, since it was the height of folly to contend with the Almighty. The assembly saw the wisdom of his counsel, and very prudently changed the sentence, upon which they were originally bent, against the apostles' lives into that of corporal punishment.

Gar'lic. As the word thus rendered occurs only in Num. xi. 5, some doubts have arisen respecting the plant intended. From its being coupled with leeks and onions, there can be but little doubt that the garlic is meant in the place cited.

Gate. Among the special purposes for which gates were anciently used may be mentioned: 1. As places of public resort. 2. Places for public deliberation, administration of justice, or audience for kings and rulers or ambassadors. 3. Public markets. Sentences from the law were inscribed on and above the gates (Deut. vi. 9; Isa. xlv. 12; Rev. xxi. 21).

Gath. One of the five royal cities of the Philistines (Josh. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. vi. 17); and the native place of the giant Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 4, 23). It occupied a strong position (2 Chron. xi. 8) on the border of Judah and Philistia (1 Sam. xxi. 10; 1 Chron. xviii. 1). The ravages of war to which it was exposed appear to have destroyed it at a comparatively early period.

Ga'za. One of the five chief cities of the Philistines. It is the last place in the southwest of Palestine, on the frontier toward Egypt. It is remarkable for its continuous existence and importance from the very earliest times (Gen. x. 19; Josh. x. 41; Judg. iii. 2). The passage where Gaza is mentioned in the N. T. (Acts viii. 26) is full of interest. The modern town, called Ghuzzeh, contains about fifteen thousand inhabitants. It is situated partly on an oblong hill of moderate height, and partly on the lower ground. The climate of the place is almost tropical, but it has deep wells of excellent water.

Geha'zi. The minister or attendant on the prophet Elisha (2 Kings iv.). For his false and fraudulent conduct in regard to Naaman he was punished with incurable leprosy (v.).

Gehen'na. The Greek form of gēyhin-nóm, "the valley of Hinnom" (Josh. xv. 8), a ravine to the south of Jerusalem, where the Jews offered their children to Molech, and which was polluted by Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 10). In consequence of its gloomy appearance, of the fires burning there, and of its being a receptacle for foul things, the word was used as symbolizing the place of eternal punishment, and translated "hell" (Matt. v. 22, 29, 30; x. 28; xviii. 9; xxiii. 15, 33; Mark ix. 43, 45, 47; Luke xii. 5; James iii. 6). [See HINNOM.]

Geneal'ogy. An account or history of any person or family, showing the regular descent. The exactness of the Jews in this respect was ordered, that it might be certainly known of what tribe and family the Messiah was born. After the birth of Christ such circumspection was unnecessary; and if persisted in could only indicate an unchristian pride of ancestry, as will appear from the words of the Apostle Paul (1 Tim. i. 4; Tit. iii. 9). The difference in the genealogies of Christ as given by Matthew and Luke arose from one giving the line of Joseph, the other of Mary.

Gen'esis. The first book of the Law, or Pentateuch, so called from a Greek word signifying generation or beginning. It comprises a period of two thousand three hundred and sixty-nine years, and was written by Moses, probably during his exile in the land of Midian.

Gennes'aret, Sea of. [See GALILEE, SEA OF.]

Ger'izim. It is an important question whether Gerizim was the mountain on which Abraham was directed to offer his son Isaac (Gen. xxii. 2). The Samaritans, through whom the tradition of the true site of Gerizim has been preserved, are probably not wrong when they point out still—as they have done from time immemorial—Gerizim as the hill upon which Abraham's "faith was made perfect." The altar which Jacob built was not on Gerizim, as the Samaritans contend, though probably about its base, at the head of the plain between it and Ebal. Here was likewise his well (John iv. 6) and the tomb of his son Joseph (Josh. xxiv. 32), both of which are still shown.

Ger'shom. 1. The first-born son of Moses and Zipporah (Ex. ii. 22; xviii. 3). 2. The form under which the name Gershon is given in several passages of Chronicles.

Ger'shon. The eldest of the three sons of Levi, born before the descent of Jacob's family into Egypt (Gen. xlv. 11; Ex. vi. 16). At the census in the wilderness of Sinai the whole number of the males of the sons of Gershon was seven thousand five hundred (Num. iii. 22).

Gethsem'ane. A small place (Matt. xxvi. 36;

TOOLS OF AN EGYPTIAN CARPENTER.

Mark xiv. 32) situated across the brook Kedron (John xviii. 1), probably at the foot of Mount Olivet (Luke xxii. 39), to the north-west, and about a half or three-quarters of a mile English from the walls of Jerusalem. There was a "garden," or rather orchard, attached to it (Luke xxii. 39; John xviii. 2). A modern garden, in which are eight venerable olive trees, and a grotto to the north detached from it, and in closer connection with the Church of the Sepulchre of the Virgin. The probability would seem to be that these trees were planted by Christian hands to mark the spot; unless, like the sacred olive of the Acropolis, they may have reproduced themselves.

Gi'ant. A man of extraordinary stature or might. There were races of men in ancient times who far exceeded the present size of man (Gen. vi. 4; Num. xiii. 33; Deut. iii. 10 and xxi. 20). In the days of David there was a family of giants, of whom Goliath was one (2 Sam. xxi). After this we read no more of giants in Canaan. That the common size of man never differed much from what it is now, is clear.

Gib'eon. One of the four cities of the Hivites, the inhabitants of which made a league with Joshua

HARE OF MOUNT SINAI.

(ix. 3-15), and thus escaped the fate of Jericho and Ai (comp. xi. 19). It retains its ancient name almost intact—El-Jib. Its distance from Jerusalem is about five miles.

Gid'eon. The son of Joash, of the tribe of Manasseh. His place of residence was Ophrah. At a time when Israel was overrun by the Midianites, Gideon was threshing some corn, not on the usual "floor," but by a wine-press, that the invaders might not discover and seize it, when an angel appeared to him and announced that the Lord would deliver Israel by his hand. He at first hesitated to accept the commission, till he was convinced by a remarkable sign that his visitant was an angel. The same night he was commanded, perhaps in a dream, to destroy the altar and symbol of Baal, and to sacrifice a bullock upon an altar he was to build to the Lord. Afraid to do this by day, he did it by night; and the next morning, when the whole was discovered, the people of the city were inclined to put Gideon to death, but were restrained by Joash, his father (whom some have imagined to be Baal's priest), with the sarcastic observation that Baal might plead or avenge his own cause. Gideon hence had the name Jerubbaal (Judg. vi. 1-32).

Gier-eagle. An unclean bird mentioned in Lev. xvi. 18 and Deut. xiv. 17. There is no reason to doubt that the râchâm of the Hebrew Scriptures is identical in reality as in name with the racham of the Arabs—viz., the Egyptian vulture.

Gilbo'a. A mountain range rising on the east of the plain of Esdraelon, over against Jezreel, where Saul pitched just prior to his last fatal battle with the Philistines (1 Sam. xxviii. 4). His body was found upon the field, and the enemy stripped it and cut off the head, and fastened the corpses of the king and his sons to the wall of Beth-shan. Then it was that the men of Jabesh-gilead, remembering how the first act in the reign now so disastrously closed had been to deliver them from Nahash, king of the Ammonites, resolved to rescue the bodies. They marched by night to Beth-shan, and were successful. They returned to Jabesh, and buried there the royal bones, and fasted reverently seven days (xxxi.; 2 Sam. xxi. 12-14; 1 Chron. x.) David's beautiful lament over the slain is preserved in 2 Sam. i. 19-27.

Gil'ead. The name given to the monument erected by Laban and Jacob (Gen. xxxi. 47, 48). The hill upon which it was erected was called Mount Gilead (Cant. iv. 1; vi. 5; Jer. i. 19). The mountains of Gilead were part of that ridge of mountains which extends from Mount Lebanon southward, on the east of the Holy Land. The Scriptures speak of the balm of Gilead (Jer. viii. 22; xlv. 11; li. 8). The merchants who bought Joseph came from Gilead, and were carrying balm into Egypt (Gen. xxxvii. 25).

Gil'gal. The place where the Israelites first encamped in Canaan. It received its name from the circumcising of the people there, apparently at or near some hill, when the reproach of Egypt is said to have been rolled away (Josh. iv. 19, 20; v. 1-11; ix. 6; x. 6, 7, 9, 15, 43; xiv. 6). It was here that the men of Judah met David on his return from the country beyond Jordan, after the defeat of Absalom (2 Sam. xix. 15, 40).

Git'tites. The six hundred men who followed David from Gath, under Ittai the Gittite (2 Sam. xv. 18, 19), and who probably acted as a kind of body-guard.

Glean'ing. The gleaning of fruit trees, as well as of cornfields, was reserved for the poor (Lev. xix. 10; Deut. xxiv. 21).

Glede. The old name for the common kite (Deut. xiv. 13).

Goad. (Judg. iii. 31). The instrument still used in the countries of Southern Europe and Western Asia consists of a rod about eight feet long, brought to a sharp point, and sometimes cased with iron at the head.

Goat. There appear to be two or three varieties of the common goat at present bred in Palestine and Syria. The most marked varieties are the Syrian goat and the Angora goat with fine long hair.

God. The Supreme, Almighty and Eternal One, of whom are all things. The names applied to the Godhead in Scripture are various. The words Jehovah Elohim occur more than once in Genesis as the name of the Godhead. "And the Lord God (Jehovah Elohim) said, Behold, the man is become like one of us" (Gen. iii. 22). One of us unavoidably implies a plurality of persons. We may, in a general way, infer the power, goodness and some other attributes of God from the works of nature, but from the Scriptures only can we obtain any just ideas of his character and attributes. The Hebrews endeavour to avoid the use of the word God, substituting for it Lord, Most High, etc.

Gog and Ma'gog. Moses speaks of Magog, son of Japheth, but says nothing of Gog (Gen. x. 2). According to Ezekiel, Gog was prince of Magog (Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3, etc.; xxxix. 1, 2, etc.) Magog signifies the country or people, and Gog the king of that country—the general name of the northern nations of Europe and Asia, or the districts north of the Caucasus or Mount Taurus.

HARE OF MOUNT LEBANON.

The prophecy of Ezekiel (xxxix. 1-22) seems to be revived in the Apocalypse, where the hosts of Gog and Magog are represented as coming to invade "the beloved city," and perishing with immense slaughter likewise in Armageddon, "the mount of Mageddo," or Megiddo (Rev. xvi. 14-16; xx. 7-10).

Gol'gotha. [See CALVARY.]

Goli'ath. A famous giant of Gath, who "morning and evening for forty days" defied the armies of Israel (1 Sam. xvii.). He was possibly descended from the old Rephaim, of whom a scattered remnant took refuge with the Philistines after their dispersion by the Ammonites (Deut. ii. 20, 21; 2 Sam. xxi. 22). His height was "six cubits and a span," which, taking the cubit at twenty-one inches, would make him ten and a half feet high. The scene of his combat with David was the Valley of the Terebinth, between Shochoh and Azekah.

Gomor'rah (in the N. T. written Gomor'ra). One of the five "cities of the plain" that under their respective kings joined battle with Chedorlaomer (Gen. xiv. 2-8) and his allies, by whom they were discomfited till Abraham came to the rescue. Four out of the five were afterward destroyed by the Lord with fire from heaven (Gen. xix. 23-29). One of them only, Zoar (or Bela, which was its original name), was spared at the request of Lot, in order that he might take refuge there (Gen. xix. 18-23).

Gopher Wood (Gen. vi. 14). Two conjectures have been proposed: 1. That the "trees of gopher" are any trees of the resinous kind, such as pine, fir, etc. 2. That gopher is cypress.

Gos'shen. A part of Egypt where the Israelites dwelt for the whole period of their sojourn in that country. It is usually called the "land of Goshen," but also Goshen simply. It was between Joseph's residence at the time and the frontier of Palestine, and apparently the extreme province toward that frontier (Gen. xlv. 20).

Gos'pels. The name Gospel (good message or news) is applied to the four inspired histories of the life and teaching of Christ contained in the New Testament, of which separate accounts are given in their place. They were all composed during the latter half of the first century—those of St. Matthew and St. Mark some years before the destruction of Jerusalem; that of St. Luke probably about A. D. 64, and that of St. John toward the close of the century. Before the end of the second century there is abundant evidence that the four Gospels, as one collection, were generally used and accepted. As a matter of literary history, nothing can be better established than the genuineness of the Gospels.

Gourd. The plant, so called, that sheltered Jonah. It is somewhat probable it was the castor bean, improperly called palm christi. The wild gourd (2 Kings iv. 39) Celsius supposes to be the colocynthis, a species of cucumber, growing wild, excessively bitter and a most violent purgative.

Grass'hopper. [See LOCUST.]

Greece. In Gen. x. 2-5, Moses mentions the descendants of Javan as peopling the isles of the Gentiles. Prophetic notices of Greece occur in Dan. viii. 21, etc. It was probably peopled soon after the Flood. Few countries are more favoured by nature as to its soil, climate and productions. Many of the most famous statesmen, orators and generals of antiquity had their birth here. The arts and sciences in Greece attained a great eminence, as did also poetry and eloquence.

H.

Hab'akkuk. The eighth in order of the minor prophets. He probably delivered his prophecy about the twelfth or thirteenth year of Josiah (B. C. 630 or 629). He foretells the doom of the Chaldeans in general terms (ii. 4-6), and the announcement is followed by a series of denunciations pronounced upon them by the nations who had suffered from their oppression (ii. 6-20). The whole concludes with the magnificent psalm in chap. iii.

Haber'geon. A breastplate worn by soldiers in former times (Ex. xxviii. 33). The name seems to be given to a sort of lance or harpoon in Neh. iv. 16 and Job xli. 26).

Ha'dad. This title appears an official one, like Pharaoh.

Hadare'zer. Son of Rehob (2 Sam. viii. 3), the king of the Aramite state of Zobah, who was defeated by David, and defeated with great loss both of chariots, horses and men (1 Chron. xviii. 3, 4). After the first repulse Hadarezer sent his army to the assistance of his kindred. David himself came from Jerusalem to take the command of the Israelite army. As on the former occasion, the rout was complete.

Ha'gar. An Egyptian woman, the handmaid or slave of Sarah (Gen. xvi. 1), whom the latter gave as a concubine to Abraham, after he had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan and had no children by Sarah (xvi. 2 and 3). That she was a bondwoman is stated both in the O. T. and in the HEAD-DRESS OF AN EASTERN RIDING HORSE.

N. T.—in the latter as part of her typical character. It is recorded that "when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was despised in her eyes" (4), and Sarah, with the anger, we may suppose, of a free woman, rather than of a wife, reproached Abraham for the results of her own act. Hagar fled, turning her steps toward her native land through the great wilderness traversed by the Egyptian road. By the fountain in the way to Shur the angel of the Lord found her, charged her to return and submit herself under the hands of her mistress, and delivered the remarkable prophecy respecting her unborn child recorded in ver. 10-12. On her return she gave birth to Ishmael, and Abraham was then eighty-six years old. Mention is not again made of Hagar in the history of Abraham until the feast at the weaning of Isaac, when "Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had borne unto Abraham, mocking;" and in exact sequence with the first flight of Hagar we now read of her expulsion.

Hag'gai. Haggai is the tenth in order of the minor prophets, according to the arrangement of our Bibles, and the first of those who prophesied after the captivity. Very little is known of him, as neither his tribe nor residence is mentioned in Scripture. According to the pseudo Epiphanius he was born in Babylon, and returned to Judea with Zerubbabel: there he died and was buried among the priests: the inference is that he was a priest himself. He is said, too, to have been a member of what is called the Great Synagogue. All this, however, is merely traditional.

Hair. Among the Hebrews in times of affliction the hair was altogether cut off (Isa. iii. 17, 24; xv. 2; Jer. vii. 29). Tearing the hair (Ezra ix. 3) and letting it go dishevelled were similar tokens of grief. The usual and favourite colour of the hair was black (Cant. v. 11). A similar hue is probably intended by the purple of Cant. vii. 5. Pure white hair was deemed characteristic of the Divine Majesty (Dan. vii. 9; Rev. i. 14). The chief beauty of the hair consisted in curls.

COURT OF A HOUSE AT ANTIOCH.

Hail-stones. Among the plagues of Egypt (Ex. ix. 24). Also the means made use of by God for defeating an army of the kings of Canaan (Josh. x. 11). God's judgments are likened to a hail-storm in Isa. xxviii. 2. Also see Rev. xvi. 21.

Hallelu'jah. [See ALLELUIA.]

Ham. 1. The name of one of the three sons of Noah, apparently the second in age. It probably signifies "warm" or "hot." This is confirmed by the word KEM (Egypt), the Egyptian equivalent of Ham, which signifies "black," probably implying warmth as well as blackness. Of the history of Ham nothing is related except his irreverence to his father, and the curse which that patriarch pronounced. The sons of Ham are stated to have been "Cush and Mizraim and Phut and Canaan" (Gen. x. 6; comp. 1 Chron. i. 8). Egypt is recognized as the "land of Ham" in the Bible (Ps. lxxviii. 51; cv. 23; cvi. 22).

Ha'man. The chief minister or vizier of King Ahasuerus (Esth. iii. 1). After the failure of his attempt to cut off all the Jews in the Persian empire, he was hanged on the gallows which he had erected for Mordecai.

Ha'math. The principal city of Upper Syria, was situated in the valley of the Orontes, which it commanded from the low screen of hills which forms the watershed between the Orontes and the Litány—the "entrance of Hamath," as it is called in Num. xxxiv. 8; Josh. xiii. 5, etc., to the defile of Daphne, below Antioch. Antiochus Epiphanes changed its name to Epiphaneia. The natives, however, called it Hamath, even in Jerome's time, and its present name, Hamah, is but slightly altered from the ancient form. The population of the place is thirty thousand. Huge water-wheels raise water from the Orontes, which is conveyed by rude aqueducts to the gardens and houses in the upper town.

Hammeda'tha (Esth. iii. 1, 10; viii. 5; ix. 24). Father of the infamous Haman.

Han'aneel, the Tower of. A tower which formed part of the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. iii. 1; xii. 39). It stood between the sheep-gate and the fish-gate. This tower is further mentioned in Jer. xxxi. 38 and Zech. xiv. 10.

Hand'icraft (Acts xviii. 3; xix. 25; Rev. xviii. 22). Brief notices only can be given of such handicraft trades as are mentioned in Scripture: 1. Iron, working in brass, or rather copper alloyed and bronzed, are mentioned as practiced in antediluvian times (Gen. iv. 22). The smith's work and its results are often mentioned in Scripture (2 Sam. xii. 31; 1 Kings vi. 7; 2 Chron. xxvi. 14; Isa. xlv. 12; liv. 16). The worker in gold and silver found employment in very early times, as appears from the ornaments sent by Abraham to Rebekah (Gen. xxiv. 22, 53; xxxv. 4; xxxviii. 18; Deut. vii. 25).

2. The work of the carpenter is often mentioned in Scripture (Gen. vi. 14; Ex. xxxvii.; Isa. xlv. 13). That the Jewish carpenters must have been able to carve with some skill is evident from Isa. xli. 7; xlv. 13. In N. T. the occupation of a carpenter is mentioned in connection with Joseph, the husband of the Virgin Mary, and ascribed to our Lord himself by way of reproach (Mark vi. 3; Matt. xiii. 55). 3. Masons were employed by David and Solomon (1 Kings v. 18; Ezek. xxvii. 9). For ordinary building mortar was used; sometimes, perhaps, bitumen, as was the case at Babylon (Gen. xi. 3). The use of whitewash on tombs is remarked by our Lord (Matt. xxiii. 27). Houses infected with leprosy were required by the law to be replastered (Lev. xiv. 40-45). 4. Solomon built at Ezion-geber ships for his foreign trade (1 Kings ix. 26, 27; xxii. 48; 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37). 5. The arts of spinning and weaving both wool and linen were carried on in early times. One of the excellences attributed to the good housewife is her skill and industry in these arts (Ex. xxxv. 25, 26; Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxii. 11; 2 Kings xxiii. 7; Ezek. xvi. 16; Prov. xxxi. 13, 24). The loom, with its beam (1 Sam. xvii. 7), pin (Judg. xvi. 14), and shuttle (Job vii. 6), was, perhaps, introduced later, but as early as David's time (1 Sam. xvii. 7). We read also of embroidery, in which gold and silver threads were interwoven with the body of the stuff, sometimes in figure patterns, or with precious stones set in the needlework (Ex. xxvi. 1; xxviii. 4; xxxix. 6-13). 6. Besides these arts, those of dyeing and of dressing cloth were practiced in Palestine, and those also of tanning and dressing leather (Josh. ii. 15-18; 2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4; Acts ix. 43). Shoemakers, barbers and tailors are mentioned in the Mishna (Pesach. iv. 6); the barber or his occupation by Ezekiel (v. 1; Lev. xiv. 8; Num. vi. 5), and the tailor, plasterers, glaziers and glass vessels, painters and gold-workers are mentioned in the Mishna (Chel. viii. 9; xxix. 3, 4; xxx. 1). Tent-makers are noticed in the Acts (xviii. 3), and frequent allusion is made to the trade of the potters. 7. Bakers are noticed in Scripture (Jer. xxxvii. 21; Hos. vii. 4); and the well-known valley Tyropeon probably derived its name from the occupation of the cheese-makers, its inhabitants. Butchers, not Jewish, are spoken of in 1 Cor. x. 25.

Han'nah. One of the wives of Elkanah, and mother of Samuel (1 Sam. i., ii.)

ANCIENT ICONIUM—MODERN KONIËH.

Ha'ran. 1. The third son of Terah, and therefore youngest brother of Abram (Gen. xi. 26). Three children are ascribed to him—Lot (27, 31), and two daughters, viz., Milcah, who married her uncle Nahor (29), and Iscah (29). Haran was born in Ur of the Chaldees, and he died there while his father was still living (28). 2. Haran or Charran (Acts vii. 2, 4), the name of the place whither Abraham migrated with his family from Ur of the Chaldees. It was celebrated among the Romans, under the name of Charrae, as the scene of the defeat of Crassus.

Hare. The Hebrew word arnebeth occurs only in Lev. xi. 6 and Deut. xiv. 17, among the animals disallowed as food by the Mosaic law. There is no doubt that this word denotes a "hare," and probably the species Lepus Sinaiticus, occurring in the valleys of Arabia Petraea and Mount Sinai, and Lepus Syriacus, found in Lebanon, are those which were best known to the ancient Hebrews. The ship of this Epistle. There is no reason to doubt that at first, everywhere except in North Africa, St. Paul was regarded as the author. Tertullian names Barnabas as the reputed author, according to the North African tradition. Luther's conjecture that Apollos was the author has been adopted by many. The Epistle was probably addressed to the Jews in Jerusalem and Palestine. It was evidently written before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The date which best agrees with the traditional account of the authorship and destination of the Epistle is A.D. 63, about the end of St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome, or a year after Albinus succeeded Festus as procurator.

He'bron. A city of Judah (Josh. xv. 54), situated among the mountains (Josh. xx. 7), twenty Roman miles south of Jerusalem, and the same distance north of Beer-sheba. Hebron is one of the most ancient cities in the world still existing, and in this respect it is the rival of Damascus. It was built, says a sacred writer, "seven years before Zoan in Egypt" (Num. xiii. 22); and was a well-known town when Abraham entered Canaan three thousand seven hundred and eighty years ago (Gen. xiii. 18). Its original name was Kirjath-arba (Judg. i. 10), "the city of Arba," so called from Arba, the father of Anak, and progenitor of the giant Anakim (Josh. xxi.

11; xv. 13, 14). The chief interest of this city arises from its having been the scene of some of the most striking events in the lives of the patriarchs. Sarah died at Hebron, and Abraham then bought from Ephron the Hittite the field and cave of Machpelah to serve as a family tomb (Gen. xxiii. 2-20). The cave is still there, and the massive walls of the Haram or mosque within which it lies form the most remarkable object in the whole city. Abraham is called by Mohammedans el-Khalil, "the Friend," i. e., of God, and this is the modern name of Hebron. Hebron now contains about five thousand inhabitants, of whom some fifty families are Jews. It is picturesquely situated in a narrow valley surrounded by rocky hills. The valley runs from north to south, and the main quarter of the town, surmounted by the lofty walls of the venerable Haram, lies partly on the eastern slope (Gen. xxxvii. 14; comp. xxiii. 19). About a mile from the town, up the valley, is one of the largest oak trees in Palestine. This, say some, is the very tree beneath which Abraham pitched his tent, and it still bears the name of the patriarch.

Hell. The Greek word hades, rendered hell in our version, means literally "place of darkness," and corresponds to the Hebrew sheol. Critics find great difficulty in settling the exact meaning of these words, and on this meaning depends, in great measure, the doctrine of "the intermediate state," or condition of the dead before the resurrection. It seems to have been held by all the early Christians, and to have been the foundation of the Romanist doctrine of purgatory.

Hellenist. In the first Christian Church at Jerusalem (Acts vi. 1) two distinct parties are recognized, "Hebrews" and "Hellenists" (Grecians) (Acts ix. 29). The Hellenists included not only proselytes of Greek (or foreign) parentage, but Jews who, by settling in foreign countries, had adopted the current Greek civilization and the use of the Greek dialect.

Hen. The hen is nowhere noticed in the Bible except in Matt. xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34. It was common in Palestine.

Her'mas. A Christian at Rome, to whom St.

Paul sends salutation (Rom. xvi. 14). To him has been attributed a work called "The Shepherd of Hermas;" some, however, ascribe this to a later person of the same name, brother of Pius I., bishop of Rome.

Her'mes. A Christian mentioned in Rom. xvi. 14. According to tradition he was one of the seventy disciples, and afterward bishop of Dalmatia.

Her'mon. The most elevated summit in the range of the Anti-Libanus, ten thousand feet above the level of the sea. The Sidonians called it Sir-ion, and the Amorites, Shenir (Deut. iii. 9). Its dews are copious and refreshing (Ps. cxxxiii. 3). The snow lies on it during the summer, and was carried to Tyre, as ice is brought into our cities, and sold in summer as a luxury.

He'rod. This family, though of Idumean origin, and thus aliens by race, were Jews in faith. 1. Herod the Great, the second son of Antipater, was born about B.C. 70. He vanquished and extirpated the family of the Maccabees about B.C. 37. His character was exceedingly ferocious and sensual. His murders and temper rendered him miserable, and to occupy his thoughts, as well as to ingratiate himself with the Jews, he rebuilt their temple. When the wise men from the East made inquiry in Jerusalem for the new-born King of the Jews, he desired them to bring him back word where and how he might find him, being resolved to murder him while but an infant. Being disappointed, he ordered to be destroyed every child in and about Bethlehem under two years old, that he might make sure of murdering the Messiah among them. He died in a miserable manner a year or two after this atrocious action. 2. Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great, had the tetrarchy of Galilee and Perca by the last will of his father. He divorced his first wife, and took Herodias, the wife of Philip, who still lived. For reproving this incestuous marriage John was imprisoned and beheaded (Matt. xiv. 3-12). This was he to whom Pilate sent our Saviour, and by whom he was mocked and arrayed in a gorgeous robe (Luke xxiii. 8-11). He was uncle to Herod Agrippa. 3. Herod Agrippa, the son of Aristobolus, grandson of Herod the Great, was appointed to the government of Abilene. About A.D. 44, or perhaps 49, he caused the murder of James, the son of Zebedee. Observing the Jews pleased with this, he apprehare is at this day called arneb by the Arabs in Palestine and Syria. It was erroneously thought by the ancient Jews to have chewed the cud, from the habit it has of moving the jaw about.

Harp (Heb. kinnôr). The kinnôr was the national instrument of the Hebrews, and was well known throughout Asia. Moses assigns its invention to the antediluvian period (Gen. iv. 21).

Har'row. The verb rendered "to harrow" (Isa. xxviii. 24; Job xxxix. 10; Hes. x. 11) expresses apparently the breaking of the clods, and is so far analogous to our harrowing, but whether done by any such machine as we call "a harrow" is very doubtful.

Hart. The hart is reckoned among the clean animals (Deut. xii. 15; xiv. 5; xv. 22), and seems, from the passages quoted, as well as from 1 Kings iv. 23, to have been commonly killed for food. The Hebrew ayyal denotes some species of the deer tribe.

Hawk. A general name for several rapacious birds of the falcon family (Deut. xiv. 5). It was consecrated by the Greeks to Apollo. It is migratory (Job xxxix. 26).

Ha'zel. The Hebrew term lûz occurs only in Gen. xxx. 37. Authorities are divided between the hazel and the almond tree as representing the lûz. The latter is most probably correct.

Hea'then. A term which, like the word Gentile, was applied by the Jews to all who were not Hebrews. It now includes all those who are not Jews, Mohammedans or Christians.

Heave-offering. Portions of animals, grain, meal, fruits, etc., brought by the people for the use of the priests and Levites, and first heaved or waved before God as an offering and acknowledgment (Num. xv. 20).

Heav'en. There are four Hebrew words thus rendered in the Old Testament. St. Paul's expression, "third heaven" (2 Cor. xii. 2), has led to much conjecture. The Jews divided the heaven into three parts, viz.: 1. the air or the atmosphere, where clouds gather; 2. the firmament, in which the sun, moon and stars are fixed; 3. the upper heaven, the abode of God and his angels.

He'brew. This word first occurs as given to Abram by the Canaanites (Gen. xiv. 13), because he had crossed the Euphrates. The name is also derived from 'eber, "beyond, on the other side," but this is essentially the same with the preceding explanation, since both imply that Abraham and his posterity were called Hebrews in order to express a distinction between the races east and west of the Euphrates.

hended Peter, intending to murder him also. But Providence defeated his designs by cutting him off in a miserable manner at Caesarea, where he was flattered by the multitude crying out that he spoke like a god (Acts xii. and xxiii. 35). He reigned seven or ten years, and was the father of Agrippa, Bernice, Drusilla and Mariamne. 4. Herod Agrippa II., son of the preceding, is mentioned in the New Testament only by the name of Agrippa. He was born A.D. 20. Festus brought Paul before him, who almost persuaded him to be a Christian (Acts xxv. and xxvi.) After the destruction of Jerusalem he went to Rome, where he died at the age of seventy.

Hero'dias. Daughter of Aristobulus, one of the sons of Mariamne and Herod the Great, and sister of Agrippa I. She first married Herod Philip I.; then she eloped from him to marry Herod Antipas, her step-uncle, who had been long married to, and was still living with, the daughter of Aeneas or Aretas, king of Arabia. Aretas made war upon Herod for the injury done to his daughter, and routed him with the loss of his whole army. The head of John the Baptist was granted to the request of Herodias (Matt. xiv. 8-11; Mark vi. 24-28). According to Josephus, the execution

"This valley," says Dr. Thomson, "commences north-west of the Jaffa gate, above the upper pool of Gihon, and it terminates at Bir Eyub, where it joins the valley of Jehoshaphat. The cliffs on the south side especially abound in ancient tombs, and it was this part that was called Tophet."

Hi'ram, or Hu'ram. 1. The king of Tyre who sent workmen and materials to Jerusalem, first to build a place for David, whom he loved (1 Kings v. 1), and again to build the temple for Solomon, with whom he had a treaty of peace and commerce (1 Kings v. 11, 12). 2. Hiram was the name of the who fulfilled their hereditary sacerdotal duties at Shiloh. Their rapacity and lust (1 Sam. ii. 22, 12-17) filled the people with disgust and indignation, and provoked the curse (iii. 11-14). They were both cut off, and the ark which they had accompanied was lost (1 Sam. iv. 10, 11).

Hor, Mount. 1. The mountain on which Aaron died (Num. xx. 25, 27). The word Hor is probably an archaic form of Har, the usual Hebrew term for "mountain." It was "on the boundary line" (Num. xx. 23) or "at the edge" (xxxiii. 37) of the land of Edom. It is surmounted by a circular dome of the tomb of Aaron, a distinct white spot on the dark red surface of the mountain. The chief interest of Mount Hor consists in the prospect from its summit—the last view of Aaron—that view which was to him what Pisgah was to his brother. 2. A mountain named in Num. xxxiv. 7, 8. This "Mount Hor" is the great chain of Lebanon itself.

Horn. We find the original word for horn applied to a musical instrument. There are other uses of the term derived from a real or supposed resemblance to a horn. Thus the projections at the corners of the altar were called its "horns," a hill or peak was a horn, and elephants' teeth were "horns of ivory." We further find "horns" used symbolically in prophetic language, the horn being the emblem of strength or attacking force.

Horse. The animated description of the horse in Job xxxix. 19-25 applies solely to the war-horse. The Hebrews in the patriarchal age, as a pastoral race, did not stand in need of the services of the horse. David first established a force of cavalry and chariots after the defeat of Hadadezer (2 Sam. viii. 4). But the great supply of horses was subsequently effected by Solomon through his connection with Egypt (1 Kings iv. 26). The horses were not shod, and therefore hoofs as hard "as flint" (Isa. v. 28) were regarded as a great merit.

Hosan'na. An expression of joyful gratulation: it occurs in the original of Psalm cxviii. 25. At the feast of tabernacles it was customary for the Jews to recite the Great Hallel—viz., Psalms cxiii.-cxviii.—at certain points, waving the branches which they carried in their hands, and ejaculating Hallelujah, Hosanna, or Psalm cxviii. 25. Hence the branches, the prayers, the feast itself received the name Hosanna; and as it was not unusual for the mode of rejoicing then observed to be transferred to other occasions of national exultation, it was natural that our Lord's entry into Jerusalem should be so welcomed (Matt. xxi. 8, 9; Mark xi. 8-10; John xii. 12, 13).

Hose'a. Hosea is stated (Hos. i. 1) to be the took place in a fortress called Machærus, looking down upon the Dead Sea from the south. She accompanied Antipas into exile to Lugdunum.

Hero'dion. A relative of St. Paul, to whom he sends his salutations among the Christians of the Roman Church (Rom. xvi. 11).

He'ron. The Hebrew andphah appears as the name of an unclean bird in Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18. It was probably a generic name for a well-known class of birds. The only point on which any two commentators seem to agree is that it is not the heron.

Heth. The forefather of the nation of the HITTITES, a Hamite race, neither of the "country" nor the "kindred" of Abraham and Isaac (Gen. xxiv. 3, 4; xxviii. 1, 2).

Hezeki'ah. Twelfth king of Judah, son of the apostate Ahaz and Abi (or Abijah), ascended the throne at the age of twenty-five, B.C. 726. Hezekiah was one of the three most perfect kings of Judah (2 Kings xviii. 5; Eccles. xlix. 4). The numerous events of his life are fully given in the books of Isaiah and 2 Kings.

High Priest (Lev. xxi. 10). The head of the Jewish priesthood. All the male descendants of Aaron were by divine appointment consecrated to the priesthood; and the first-born of the family, in regular succession, was consecrated in the same manner to the office of high priest. The ordinance of consecration is described in Ex. xxiv. The ceremony was minute and impressive, and typical of the character and work of Him who is the great High Priest of our profession. The dress of the high priest was much more costly and magnificent than that of the inferior order of priests. It is described in Ex. xxxix.

Hin. A liquid measure, containing about three of our quarts. It was the sixth part of an ephah.

Hin'nom (perhaps lamentation). The valley of Hinnom was the place where children were made "to pass through the fire to Molech," and was defiled by Josiah, in order to extinguish for ever such detestable rites (2 Kings xxiii. 10; 2 Chron. xxviii. 3; xxxiii. 6; Jer. vii. 31, 32; xix. 2, 6; xxxii. 35).

principal architect and engineer sent by King Hiram to Solomon.

Holofer'nes. A general of Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Assyrians (Jud. ii. 4), who was slain by the Jewish heroine Judith during the siege of Bethulia.

Holy Ghost. The third person of the Trinity. The proofs of his essential divinity are—1. He is expressly called God (Acts v. 3, 4). 2. Attributes peculiar to Jehovah are ascribed to him, as eternity (Heb. ix. 14), omniscience (1 Cor. ii. 10, 11), omnipresence (Ps. cxxxix. 7). 3. Works which only God can perform are ascribed to him (Ps. liii. 6; Job xxvi. 13; Luke i. 35; 2 Pet. i. 21; John xvi. 13; Rom. xv. 16). 4. The same divine worship is paid to him as to the Father and the Son (Matt. xxviii. 19; 2 Cor. xiii. 14; 2 Thess. iii. 5). 5. By him sinners are convicted (John xvi. 9), enlightened (Eph. i. 17, 18), regenerated (John iii. 5, 6), sanctified (1 Pet. i. 2). The baptism of the Holy Ghost, which was enjoyed in the apostolic age, and is described in Acts ii. 1-4, was attended with the gift of tongues and power of working miracles.

Hon'ey. The Hebrew dēbash applies to the product of the bee, to which we exclusively give the name of honey. All travellers agree in describing Palestine as a land "flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. iii. 8). In some parts of Northern Arabia the hills are so well stocked with bees that no sooner are hives placed than they are occupied. The term dēbash applies to a decoction of the juice of the grape, called dibs. It was this, and not ordinary bee-honey, which Jacob sent to Joseph (Gen. xliii. 11), and which the Tyrians purchased from Palestine (Ezek. xxvii. 17). The honey which Jonathan ate in the wood (1 Sam. xiv. 25), and the "wild honey" which supported St. John (Matt. iii. 4), were probably the honey of the wild bees.

Hoph'ni and Phin'eas. The two sons of Eli,

JERUSALEM, FROM THE WELL OF JOAD OR JOB.

son of Beerli. His predictions have to do mainly with the kingdom of the ten tribes. Hosea occupies the first place among the minor prophets. His ministry extended over a long period of time, being exercised in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in that of Jeroboam II., king of Israel.

Hoshe'a. The nineteenth, last and best king of Israel. He succeeded Pekah, whom he slew in a successful conspiracy, thereby fulfilling a prophecy of Isaiah (Isa. vii. 16). It took place B.C. 737.

Hour. The Jews divided their day into twelve equal parts, after the manner of the Greeks and Romans (Matt. xx. 3, 5, 6; John xi. 9). When the sun rose at the time we call six o'clock, their third hour agreed with our ninth, their sixth with our noon, and their ninth with our three o'clock. Their night was divided in the same manner.

House. The houses of the rural poor in Egypt, as well as in many parts of Syria, Arabia and Persia, are for the most part mere huts of mud or sunburnt bricks. The houses of the class next above them generally present a front of wall, within which is a court or courts with apartments opening into them. An awning is sometimes drawn over the court, and the floor strewn with carpets on festive occasions. The stairs to the upper apartments are, in Syria, usually in a corner of the court. Around part, if not the whole, of the court is a verandah, often nine or ten feet deep, over which, when there is more than one floor, runs a second gallery of like depth, with a balustrade.

Hul'dah. A prophetess in the time of King Josiah (2 Kings xxii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22).

Hur. 1. A man who is mentioned with Moses and Aaron on the occasion of the battle with Amalek at Rephidim (Ex. xvii. 10). He is mentioned again in xxiv. 14, as being, with Aaron, left in charge of the people by Moses during his ascent of Sinai. The Jewish tradition is that he was the husband of Miriam, and that he was identical with 2. The grandfather of Bezaleel, the chief artificer of the tabernacle (Ex. xxxi. 2; xxxv. 30; xxxviii. 22). 3. The fourth of the five kings of Midian who were slain with Balaam after the "matter of Peor" (Num. xxxi. 8).

Husk. The sheath or cover of grain, etc. (Num. vi. 4; 2 Kings iv. 42). It is thought that the husks mentioned in the parable of the prodigal son are the pods of the earob tree, or Ceratonia siliqua of Linnaeus. These pods are about a foot long, somewhat sickle-shaped, and contain a sweet pulp and several brown seeds like beans. Swine fatten on this food, and it is often eaten by the poor people in Syria and Palestine (Luke xv. 16).

Hymene'us. One who is said to have erred from the faith, and, in conjunction with Philetus, to have taught that the resurrection was past (2 Tim. ii. 17, 18). He was, we are told, "delivered to Satan," i. e., excommunicated (1 Tim. i. 20).

Hyp'ocrite. A dissembler in religion, who has the form without the power of godliness. There are many severe censures upon hypocrites in our Lord's addresses (Matt. vi. 2, 5, 16 and elsewhere).

Hys'sop (Heb. ezob). The ezob was used to sprinkle the doorposts of the Israelites in Egypt with the blood of the Paschal Lamb (Ex. xii. 22); it was employed in the purification of lepers and leprous houses (Lev. xiv. 4, 51), and in the sacrifice of the red heifer (Num. xix. 6). It is described in 1 Kings iv. 33 as growing on or near walls.

I.

Id'do. A prophet of Judah, who wrote the history of Rehoboam and Abijah. It seems by 2 Chron. xiii. 22 that he had entitled his work Midrash, or Inquiries. Josephus and others are of opinion that he was sent to Jeroboam, at Bethel, and that it was he who was killed by a lion (1 Kings xiii.).

Idol'atry. No sin is so strongly and repeatedly condemned as that of idolatry. It is either internal or external. Internal is an inordinate love of the creatures, riches, honours and the pleasures of this life (Eph. v. 5; Col. iii. 5; Phil. iii. 19). External is the paying of homage to outward objects, either natural or artificial; and this is the more common sense of the term. St. Paul condemns those who "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like unto corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things" (Rom. i. 23).

Idume'a. A district on the south margin of Palestine, embracing a part of Arabia, and receiving its name from Edom (i. e., Esau), who first settled it. Long before the birth of Christ they had been reduced to subjection, and multitudes embraced the Hebrew faith. The region, however, seems to have retained their name in the days of Christ, and for some ages afterward (Mark iii. 18). It was the native country of Herod.

Illy'ricum. A province lying along the eastern coast of the Adriatic Gulf. It was distinguished into two parts: Liburnia to the north and Dalmatia to the south, to which, as St. Paul informs Timothy, Titus went (2 Tim. iv. 10). St. Paul says that he preached the Gospel from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum (Rom. xv. 19).

Imman'uel (God with us). The symbolical name given by the prophet Isaiah to the child who was announced to Ahaz and the people of Judah, as the sign which God would give of their deliverance from their enemies (Isa. vii. 14). It is applied by the Apostle Matthew to the Messiah, born of the Virgin (Matt. i. 23).

Incense. A fragrant gum brought from Arabia and the East Indies. The incense used in the Jewish offerings, at least that which was burnt on the altar of incense and before the ark, was a precious mixture of sweet spices beaten very small (Ex. xxx. 7, 34). None but priests were to burn it, nor was any, under pain of death, to make any like to it. This incense was burnt twice a day on the golden altar. Where so many victims were daily slaughtered and burnt to ashes, some such perfume was necessary. It seemed also beautifully emblematic of prayer (Ps. cxli. 2; Rev. viii. 3, 4).

Incant'ers (Ex. vii. 11; Deut. xviii. 10). Persons who pretended to possess the power of charming animals, etc. The practice is decidedly condemned by God's law (Deut. xviii. 9-12).

Ind'ia (Esth. i. 1; viii. 9). The southern section of the continent of Asia. It is only mentioned, and that generally, as the eastern boundary of the dominions of Ahasuerus.

Inn. In our Bible, means generally a caravan-serai. Generally, they are simply places of rest, near a fountain, if possible; others have an attendant, who merely waits on travellers; and others have a family, which sells provisions. They are found in every part of the East.

Iron. The word thus translated occurs first in Gen. iv. 22, and afterward frequently. The knowledge of working it was very ancient. The Jewish legislator celebrates the great hardness of it (Lev. xxvi. 19; Deut. xxviii. 23, 48), takes notice that the bedstead of Og, king of Bashan, was of iron (Deut. iii. 11); he speaks of mines of iron (Deut. viii. 9); and he compares the severity of the servitude of the Israelites in Egypt to the heat of a furnace for melting iron (Deut. iv. 20). We find, also, that swords (Num. xxxv. 16), axes (Deut. xix. 5), and tools for cutting stones (Deut. xxvii. 5), were made of iron.

I'saac. The son whom Sarah, in accordance with the Divine promise, bore to Abraham in the hundredth year of his age, at Gerar. In his infancy he became the object of Ishmael's jealousy; and in his youth the victim, in intention, of Abraham's great sacrificial act of faith. When forty years old he married Rebekah his cousin, by whom, when he was sixty, he had two sons, Esau and Jacob. In his seventy-fifth year he and his brother Ishmael buried their father Abraham in the cave of Machpelah. From this abode by the well Lahai-roi, in the South Country, Isaac was driven by a famine to Gerar. Here Jehovah appeared to him, and bade him dwell there and not go over into Egypt, and renewed to him the promises made to Abraham. He finally died at Hebron at the age of one hundred and eighty years and was buried by his two sons in the cave of Machpelah.

Isai'ah. A prophet of Israel who wrote the inspired book of that name. He has been called the evangelical prophet, from the great number and minuteness of his predictions concerning the advent, character, preaching, labours, sufferings and death of our Lord. He seems to have been favoured with an entire view of the gospel dispensation. He is thought to have died about seventy years before Jeremiah prophesied. The Book of Isaiah, though not placed first, because of its size and importance, is the fifth in order of time. The style is greatly admired by linguists, as uniting elegance to sublimity, force to ornament and energy to copiousness.

Is'cah. Daughter of Haran the brother of Abram, and sister of Mileah and of Lot (Gen. xi. 29). In the Jewish traditions she is identified with Sarai.

Iscar'iot. The name of that disciple who betrayed our Saviour. He was so called, probably, as belonging to Karioth, or Cerioth; that is, a man of Kerioth (Matt. x. 4).

Ish'bi-Be'nob. Son of Rapha, one of the race of Philistine giants, who attacked David in battle, but was slain by Abishai (2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17).

Ish'bosheth, or Ish'baal. Son of Saul, and also his successor. Abner, Saul's kinsman and general, so managed that Ishbosheth was acknowledged king of Mahanaim by the greater part of Israel, while David reigned at Hebron over Judah. He was forty-four years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned two years peaceably; after which he had skirmishes, with loss, against David (2 Sam. ii. 8, etc.). With this prince terminated the royal family of Saul, B.C. 1048.

Ish'mael. The son of Abraham by Hagar the Egyptian, his concubine; born when Abraham was fourscore and six years old (Gen. xvi. 15, 16). Ishmael was the first-born of his father, and on the institution of the covenant of circumcision was circumcised, he being then thirteen years old (xvii.

25). He does not again appear in the narrative until the weaning of Isaac, where, at the great feast made in celebration of the weaning, "Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had borne unto Abraham, mocking," and urged Abraham to cast out him and his mother. The patriarch sent them both away, and they departed and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba. In the wilderness of Paran, "his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt" (Gen. xxi. 9-21). This wife of Ishmael was the mother of his twelve sons and daughter. Of the later life of Ishmael we know little. He was with Isaac at the burial of Abraham. He died at the age of one hundred and thirty-seven years (xxv. 17, 18). The sons of Ishmael peopled the north and west of the Arabian peninsula, and eventually formed the chief element of the Arab nation.

Ish'maelites (Gen. xxxvii. 25). The descendants of Ishmael. The company of Ishmaelites to whom Joseph was sold are elsewhere called Midianites (Gen. xxxvii. 29). Probably they were Ishmaelites who dwelt in Midian. It is evident, however, that the two names were sometimes applied to the same people (Judg. viii. 22, 24), though the descendants of Midian were not Ishmaelites (for Midian was a son of Abraham by Keturah).

Is'rael (a prince of God, or wrestling with God). This is the name which the angel gave Jacob, after having wrestled with him all night at Mahanaim of Peniel (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2, 28, 29, 30; Hos. xii. 4).

Is'sachar. The fifth son of Jacob and Leah (Gen. xxx. 14-18). He had four sons, Tola, Phovah, Job and Shimron. Nothing particular of his life is known.

Ith'amar. Aaron's fourth son (Ex. vi. 23). There is no probability that he ever exercised the high priesthood. He and his sons continued in the rank of simple priests till this dignity came into his family in the person of Eli.

It'tai. 1. An officer of David, denominated "the Gittite," most probably because he was a native of Gath, and had joined David when with Achish in that city. When David's dark days were come, and he was obliged to flee from Jerusalem in Absalom's rebellion, and scarcely more than his household troops accompanied him, Ittai was there. The monarch expressed his gratified surprise. But Ittai would not fail David. And then David replied, "Go and pass over." And Ittai marched on with his troop "and the little ones" (2 Sam. xv. 19-22). We only hear of Ittai again as in command of part of the army in the battle (xviii. 2, 5, 12). 2. A Benjamite warrior (xxiii. 29), called also Ithai (1 Chron. xi. 31).

Ituræ'a. So called from Itur, or Jetur, one of the sons of Ishmael, who settled in it. The Ituræans being subdued by Aristobulus, the high priest and governor of the Jews, B.C. 106, were forced by him to embrace the Jewish religion; Philip, one of the sons of Herod the Great, was tetrarch, or governor, of this country when John the Baptist commenced his ministry.

I'vory. This substance is mentioned as an article of Tyrian commerce (Ezek. xxvii. 15). It was largely used in ornamental work (Rev. xviii. 12). Solomon had a throne of ivory overlaid with gold (1 Kings x. 18). Ahab is said to have made an ivory house (xxii. 39). Beds or couches were also inlaid with this material (Amos vi. 4).

J.

Jab'bok. A small river which falls into the Jordan below the sea of Tiberias. Near this brook the angel wrestled with Jacob (Gen. xxxii. 22).

Ja'chin. The name of a pillar in Solomon's temple (1 Kings vii. 21).

Ja'cinth. A precious stone (Rev. xxi. 20). The jacinth or hyacinth is a red variety of zircon, which is found in square prisms, of a white, gray, red, reddish-brown, yellow or pale-green colour.

Ja'cob. Second son of Isaac and Rebekah, and founder of the Jewish nation. He was born with Esau, when Isaac was fifty-nine, and Abraham one hundred and fifty-nine years old. His history is related in the latter half of the book of Genesis. In the latter part of his life he was presented to Pharaoh, and dwelt for seventeen years in Ramesses and Goshen; he died in his one hundred and forty-seventh year. His body was embalmed, carried with great care and pomp into the land of Canaan and deposited, with his fathers and his wife Leah, in the cave of Machpelah.

Ja'el. The wife of Heber the Kenite. In the rout which followed the defeat of the Canaanites by Barak, Sisera, abandoning his chariot, fled unattended, and in an opposite direction from his army, to the tent of the Kenite chieftainess. She flung a mantle over him as he lay wearily on the floor. When the weary general resigned himself to the deep sleep of misery and fatigue, Jael took in her left hand one of the great wooden pins which fastened down the cords of the tent, and in her right hand a mallet, and with one terrible blow dashed it through Sisera's temples deep into the earth (Judg. v. 27). She then waited the pursuing Barak, and led him into her tent that she might in his presence claim the glory of the deed!

Jah. One of the names of God, which we meet with in the composition of many Hebrew words; as, Adonijah, Allelujah, Malachia; that is, "My Lord," "Praise the Lord," "The Lord is my King."

Ja'ir. Of the family of Manasseh. He possessed the whole country of Argob as far as the borders of Geshur and Maachathi (Judg. x. 3). He succeeded Tola in the judicature or government of the Israelites. His government continued about twenty-two years—from A.M. 2795 to 2817. Jair had thirty sons, who rode on asses, and were lords or governors of thirty towns, called Havoth-jair. He was buried at Camon, beyond Jordan.

Jai'rus. A ruler of a synagogue whose daughter our Lord restored to life (Matt. ix. 18; Mark v. 22; Luke viii. 41).

James. 1. James the Great, or Elder, and John the Evangelist, sons of Zebedee and Salome, were originally fishermen of Galilee (Matt. iv. 21).

They are called Boanerges, or "the sons of thunder" (Mark iii. 17; Luke ix. 54). About A.D. 44 James was murdered by Herod (Acts xii. 2). 2. James the Less, who was the son of Cleophas by Mary, the sister of the blessed Virgin. He was called the less probably because smaller or younger than the former. Our Saviour appeared to him by himself after his resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 7). He was put to death by order of Annas, the high priest. The Epistle of this apostle is called general, because not addressed to any particular church. It is one of the most pathetic and instructive in the New Testament, and contains an admirable summary of those practical duties which are incumbent on all believers.

Jan'nes and Jam'bres. Two persons mentioned by St. Paul as having withstood Moses (2 Tim. iii. 8). They are generally supposed to have been some of the Egyptian magicians whose enchantments for a while appeared to rival the miracles performed in the sight of Pharaoh (Ex. vii., viii.).

Ja'pheth. The son of Noah, named third in order of Noah's sons; was born in the five hundredth year of that patriarch (Gen. v. 32); but Moses (Gen. x. 21) says expressly he was the oldest of Noah's sons.

Jar. The Hebrew month which answers to our April. It consisted but of twenty-nine days.

Ja'sher, Book of, or, as the margin of the A. V. gives it, "the book of the upright," a record alluded to in two passages only of the O. T. (Josh. x. 13 and 2 Sam. i. 18), and consequently the subject of much dispute.

Ja'son. A Greek form of the name Jesus or Joshua. 1. Jason the high priest, the second son of Simon II., who succeeded in obtaining the high priesthood to the exclusion of his elder brother (2 Macc. iv. 7-26). 2. Jason the Thessalonian, who entertained Paul and Silas, and was in consequence attacked by the Jewish mob (Acts xvii. 5, 6, 7, 9).

Jas'per. One of the gems in the high priest's breast-plate (Ex. xxviii. 20; xxxix. 13); also mentioned as adorning the king of Tyre (Ezek. xxviii. 13), and repeatedly introduced by St. John (Rev. iv. 3; xxi. 11, 18, 19).

EAST CORNER OF SOUTH WALL OF THE ANCIENT TEMPLE, AND MOUNT OF OLIVES.

Je'bus. One of the names of Jerusalem.

Jeb'usites, the. Descended from the third son of Canaan (Gen. x. 16; 1 Chron. i. 14). They were a mountain tribe (Josh. xi. 3).

Jedidi'ah, Je'did-jah (darling of Jehovah). The name bestowed, through Nathan the prophet, on David's son Solomon (2 Sam. xii. 25).

Jedu'thun (praising). A Levite of the family of Merari, appointed as one of the great leaders of sacred music in David's reign. There is strong reason to believe that Jeduthun is identical with Ethan (1 Chron. vi. 44; xv. 17, 19). Three Psalms have Jeduthun in their titles (xxxix., lxii., lxxvii.); probably they were to be sung by his musical division.

Jehoi'achin, otherwise called Coni'ah (Jer. xxii. 24) and Jeconiah (1 Chron. iii. 17). The son of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, and grandson of Josiah. He ascended the throne, and reigned alone three months and ten days; but he reigned about ten years in conjunction with his father. He was a bad man, and did evil in the sight of the Lord (Jer. xxii. 24). The time of his death is uncertain.

Jehoi'ada. 1. The father of Benaiah, a well-revolted after Solomon's death, A. M. 3029. He reigned in horrible wickedness twenty-two years (1 Kings xi., xii., xv.) 2. Jeroboam II., thirteenth king of Israel, succeeded his father, Joash, A. M. 3179, and reigned over Israel forty-one years. He was a wicked prince, but raised his kingdom to great outward prosperity (2 Kings xiv., xv.)

Jerub'baal. The surname Gideon acquired in destroying the altar of Baal, when his father defended him from the Abi-ezrites (Judg. vi. 32).

Jeru'salem. The earliest mention of this city by this name in Scripture occurs in Josh. x. 1. But it is probably intended by the designation Salem, where Melchizedek reigned (Gen. xiv. 18). For we find Jerusalem expressly called Salem in Ps.

lxxvi. 2. The city had also the appellation Jebus or Jebusi, as occupied by the Jebusites, one of the nations found in Canaan when the Israelites crossed the Jordan (comp. Ezek. xvi. 3). Little told us of its early history. The king of Jerusalem was slain by Joshua (Josh. x. 5, 16, 26); and the place was afterward sacked by the tribe of Judah (Judg. i. 8); but the original inhabitants retained possession of the citadel or stronghold of Zion, which neither Judah nor Benjamin could wrest from them (Josh. xv. 63; Judg. i. 21). Jerusalem stands in a central position, but off the great road between Egypt and Syria. It is about thirty-six miles south of Samaria, and twenty north of Hebron, eighteen west of the Jordan, and thirty-two east of the Mediterranean. It is on the edge of one of the highest table lands of the country. The present population of Jerusalem is variously estimated. Pierotti, a late authority, supposes that there are five thou-

Obed, who again was the fruit of the union of Boaz and the Moabitess Ruth. Nor was Ruth's the only foreign blood that ran in his veins, for his great-grandmother was no less a person than Rahab the Canaanite, of Jericho (Matt. i. 5). Jesse's genealogy is twice given in full in the O. T., viz., Ruth iv. 18-22 and 1 Chron. ii. 5-12. Who the wife of Jesse was we are not told.

Je'sus, the Son of Sirach. Described in the text of Ecclesiasticus (i. 27) as the author of that book, which in the LXX., and generally, except in the Western Church, is called by his name, the Wisdom of Jesus, the Son of Sirach, or simply the Wisdom of Sirach.

Jeth'ro. A priest or prince of Midian. Moses spent the forty years of his exile from Egypt with him, and married his daughter Zipporah.

Jew. This name was applied to a member of the kingdom of Judah after the separation. The term first makes its appearance just before the captivity (2 Kings xvi. 6). After the return the word received a larger application, partly from the predominance of the members of the old kingdom of Judah, partly from the identification of Judah with the religious ideas and hopes of the people. St. John very rarely uses any other term to describe the opponents of our Lord.

Jez'reel. A border city of Issachar (Josh. xix. 18), situated in the opening of the central arm which branches out of the great plain of Esdraelon, and runs east and south-east toward the Jordan (Josh. xvi. 16; 2 Kings ix. 31). Dr. Thomson says: "There is little to claim attention in the village itself. A few stones built here and there in the rude huts seem to claim the honours of antiquity; and these large sarcophagi are certainly relics of old Jezreel. The city could never have been large or splendid. The greater part was probably mere mud hovels; and yet there must have been some well-built palaces. . . . This apology for a castle may now stand upon the spot of that watch-tower from which the rebel Jehu was first seen driving furiously up the valley. . . . The neighbourhood is celebrated for its wheat."

Jo'ab. The son of Zeruiah, David's sister, and brother to Abishai and Asahel. He was one of the most valiant soldiers and greatest generals in David's time, but was also cruel, revengeful and imperious. He was commander-in-chief when known officer of David and Solomon (2 Sam. viii. 18, and elsewhere). 2. A very noted high priest (2 Kings xi.; xii. 1-16; 2 Chron. xvii. 11, 12; xxiii.; xxiv. 1-17). 3. One of David's counselors after Ahithophel (1 Chron. xxvii. 34). 4. A person who helped to repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. iii. 6). 5. The second priest in the reign of Zedekiah, succeeded by Zephaniah (Jer. xxix. 25-29; comp. 2 Kings xxv. 18).

Jehosh'aphat. One of the best of the kings of Judah, ascended the throne A. M. 3090, and reigned twenty-five years. His regard for the spiritual interests of his people was shown in his sending missionaries into all parts of his kingdom (2 Chron. xvii. 9). The Valley of Jehoshaphat lay between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives (Joel iii. 2, 12).

Jehosh'eba. Daughter of Joram, king of Israel, and wife of Jehoiada, the high priest (2 Kings xi. 2). She is the only recorded instance of the marriage of a princess of the royal house with a high priest.

Je'hu. 1. The founder of the fifth dynasty of the kingdom of Israel, son of Jehoshaphat (2 Kings ix. 2). The leading circumstances of his life are recorded in the books of Kings. 2. JEHU, son of Hanani. His father was probably the seer who attacked Asa (2 Chron. xvi. 7).

Jeph'tah. The tenth judge of Israel, who, in consequence of a wicked vow, sacrificed his daughter (Judg. xi.). Some learned men, by altering one of the original words, infer that he only consigned her to celibacy. But this seems to be a very forced interpretation.

Jeremi'ah. He lived about seventy years after Isaiah, began to prophesy in the thirteenth year of the reign of Josiah, and discharged his office for at least forty-two years. He was unpopular with the Jews, though a man of the loftiest piety and patriotism. By Jewish tradition he was stoned to death by the people. The book of Jeremiah contains predictions delivered at different periods of his life. Some of them relate to the Messiah, as chapter xxiii. 5, 6. The last chapter was probably added by Ezra.

Jer'icho. A city of Palestine first mentioned in the Pentateuch. It was a rich and strongly-fortified place. The walls must have been thick, for Rahab's house was on the wall (Josh. ii. 15); and the spoil was large which was taken into the Lord's treasury (vi. 24).

Jerobo'am. 1. A distinguished man under Solomon, and chosen head of the ten tribes which sand and sixty-eight Christians, seven thousand five hundred and fifty-six Mohammedans, seven thousand seven hundred and six Jews; in all twenty thousand three hundred and thirty. But, though there are so many of the children of Jacob, they are strangers in the city; they do not possess any of the soil. One privilege indeed they are said to have. When the sultan dies, they can demand the keys of the city. They then perform some ceremonies, and after a few hours restore the keys to the pacha.

Jes'se. The father of David was the son of David was king of Judah only. His history is related in the second book of Samuel and the first book of Kings.

Joan'na. The wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, was one of those women who, having been cured by our Saviour, followed him as disciples and ministered to his necessities (Luke viii. 3).

Jo'ash. Son of Ahaziah, king of Judah. When the impious Athaliah undertook to extinguish the race of the kings of Judah, Jehosh'eba, the sister of Ahaziah and wife to the high priest Jehoiada, rescued young Joash and lodged him in the temple.

VILLAGE OF ZEK'IN—ANCIENT JEZREEL.

Here he abode six years. In the seventh year Joash was placed on the throne, and saluted king in the temple, before the queen was informed of it. She was killed within the temple (2 Kings xi. 1, etc.) Joash received the diadem, together with the book of the law, from Jehoiada, the high priest, who, in the young king's name, made a covenant between the Lord, the king and the people for their future fidelity to God. Joash was only seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned

840. The book of Jonah is chiefly narrative. He relates that he was commanded by God to go to Nineveh, and preach against the inhabitants of that capital of the Assyrian empire; that, through fear of executing this commission, he set sail for Tarshish; that in his voyage thither, a tempest arising, he was cast by the mariners into the sea, and swallowed by a large fish; that while he was in the belly of this fish he prayed to God, and was, after three days and three nights, delivered out of

Where our Lord was baptized is not stated expressly, but it was probably at the upper ford.

Jo'seph. 1. The elder of the two sons of Jacob by Rachel is first mentioned when a youth seventeen years old. His remarkable history is fully narrated in the book of Genesis. Joseph lived "a hundred and ten years," having been more than ninety in Egypt. 2. Son of Heli, and reputed father of Jesus Christ. All that is told us of Joseph in the N. T. may be summed up in a few words. He was a just man, and of the house and lineage of David. He espoused Mary, the daughter and heir of his uncle Jacob, and before he took her home as his wife received the angelic communication recorded in Matt. i. 20. That he died before our Lord's crucifixion is indeed tolerably certain by what is related in John xix. 27, and perhaps Mark vi. 3 may imply that he was then dead. But where, when, or how he died we know not. 3. JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA, a rich and pious Israelite, is denominated by Mark (xv. 43) an honourable counsellor. 4. JOSEPH, called BARSABAS, and surnamed Justus; one of the two persons chosen by the assembled Church (Acts i. 23) as worthy the place from which Judas had fallen.

Josh'ua (his name appears in the various forms of Hoshea, Oshea, Jehoshua, Jeshua and Jesus). The son of Nun, of the tribe of Ephraim (1 Chron. vii. 27), and was nearly forty years old when he shared in the hurried triumph of the Exodus. In the fight against Amalek at Rephidim he was chosen by Moses to lead the Israelites (Ex. xvii. 9). When Moses ascended Mount Sinai, Joshua accompanied him part-way, and was the first to accost him in his descent (Ex. xxxii. 17). Moses, before his death, was directed (Num. xxvii. 18) to invest Joshua with authority, in connection with Eleazar, over the people. After this was done, God himself gave Joshua a charge by the mouth of the dying lawgiver (Deut. xxxi. 14-23). Joshua made himself master of half of Palestine. In the north, at the waters of Merom, he defeated the Canaanites under Jabin, king of Hazor. In six years six tribes with thirty-one petty chiefs were conquered. He died at the age of one hundred and ten years, and was buried in his own city, Timnath-serah. The book of Joshua comprises the history of about twenty years, and forms a continuation and completion to the Pentateuch. It describes the conquest of Canaan, its partition among the tribes, and the death and burial of Joshua. By some authors Phineas is considered as the writer of this book; by others Eleazar; by forty years at Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba. He governed with justice and piety so long as he was guided by the high priest Jehoiada. Yet he did not abolish the high places.

Job. Lived about the year 1500 B. C., and his trial seems to have occurred about twenty-nine years before the Israelites came up out of Egypt, and perhaps much earlier. Hale makes it one hundred and eighty-four years before the birth of Abraham. The book of Job is agreed to be the most ancient now in existence. It was probably written by Job himself, copied, improved and circulated by Moses. The common division into chapters and verses has very much tended to confuse and obscure this book.

Joch'ebed. The wife and at the same time the aunt of Amram, and the mother of Moses and Aaron (Ex. ii. 1; vi. 20; Num. xxvi. 59).

Jo'el. 1. Eldest son of Samuel the prophet (1 Sam. viii. 2; 1 Chron. vi. 33; xv. 17). 2. The second of the twelve minor prophets, the son of Pethuel.

John the Apostle. The son of Zebedee, a fisherman on the Lake of Galilee, and of Salome, and brother of James, also an apostle. He was probably younger than his brother, whose name commonly precedes his (Matt. iv. 21; x. 3; xvii. 1, etc.) His call and that of his brother to be first disciples and then apostles of our Lord are related under JAMES. The time of his death lies within conjecture rather than history, and the dates that have been assigned for it range from A. D. 89 to A. D. 120.

John the Baptist. Was of the priestly race. His father Zacharias was a priest of the course of Abia or Abijah (1 Chron. xxiv. 10), offering incense at the very time when a son was promised to him; and Elizabeth was of the daughters of Aaron (Luke i. 5). The birth of John preceded by six months that of our Lord. John was ordained to be a Nazirite from his birth (Luke i. 15). He was finally beheaded by Herod Antipas.

John, the Epistles of. These seem to be treatises rather than Epistles written for general use. They teach the Deity of Christ, his atonement, salvation by grace, the necessity of good works, etc.

Jo'na. The father of the Apostle Peter (John i. 42), who is hence addressed as Simon Bar-jona (i. e., son of Jona) in Matt. xvi. 17.

Jon'adab. Son of Shimeah and nephew of David. He is described as "very subtle" (2 Sam. xiii. 3). He gave Amnon the fatal advice for ensnaring his sister Tamar (5, 6).

Jon'ah (son of Amittai). The fifth of the minor prophets was born at Gath-hepher, in Galilee. He is generally considered as the most ancient of the prophets, and is supposed to have lived B. C.

it alive; that he then received a second command to go and preach against Nineveh, which he obeyed; that upon his threatening the destruction of the city within forty days, the king and people proclaimed a fast and repented of their sins. The style of Jonah is simple and perspicuous; and his prayer in the second chapter is strongly descriptive of the feelings of a pious mind under a severe trial of faith. Our Saviour mentions Jonah in the Gospel (Matt. xii. 41; Luke xi. 32).

Jon'athan. The son of Saul, a prince of an excellent disposition, and in all varieties of fortune a sincere and steady friend to David. Jonathan gave signal proofs of courage and conduct upon all occasions that offered during the wars between his father and the Philistines. The death of Jonathan was lamented by David in one of the noblest and most pathetic odes ever uttered by genius consecrated by pious friendship. See 1 Sam. xiii. 16, etc.; xiv. 1, 2, etc.

Jop'pa. An ancient seaport of Palestine, called also Japho, now Jaffa. It was in the territory of Dan (Josh. xix. 46). Ezck. iii. 7; Jonah i. 3; Acts ix. 36-43. "Scarcely any other town," says Dr. Thomson, "has been so often overthrown, sacked, pillaged, burned and rebuilt." At present it has probably fifteen thousand inhabitants. The harbour is insecure, and the place is sometimes visited with the plague. But the gardens and orchards are well watered and productive. There are still tanneries on the seashore, and the house of Simon is shown, as also the grave of Tabitha.

Jor'dan. The one river of Palestine has a course of little more than two hundred miles, from the roots of Anti-Lebanon to the head of the Dead Sea. There were fords over against Jericho, to which point the men of Jericho pursued the spies (Josh. ii. 7; comp. Judg. iii. 28). The fords where Gideon lay in wait for the Midianites (Judg. vii. 24), and where the men of Gilead slew the Ephraimites (xii. 6), were higher up. These witnessed the first recorded passage of the Jordan in the O. T. (Gen. xxxii. 10). There were two customary places at which the Jordan was fordable; and it must have been at one of these, if not at both, that baptism was afterward administered by St. John and by the disciples of our Lord.

GORGE OF THE KIDRON NEAR THE MONASTERY OF SANTA SABA.

others Jeremiah; by others Samuel. Probably a great part of it was written by Joshua himself.

Ju'bal. A son of Lamech by Adah, and the inventor of the "harp and organ" (Gen. iv. 21), probably general terms for stringed and wind instruments.

Ju'bilee. Among the Jews denotes every fiftieth year, being that following the revolution of seven weeks of years, at which time all the slaves were made free, and all the lands reverted to their ancient owners. The jubilees were not regarded after the Babylonish captivity. The political design of the law of the jubilee was to prevent the too great oppression of the poor, as well as their being liable to perpetual slavery. The jubilee tended to preserve the distinction of tribes by rendering it necessary for families to preserve their genealogies. Thus was the family of the Messiah certainly known.

Ju'dah. The son of Jacob and Leah, who was born in Mesopotamia (Gen. xxix. 35). It was he who advised his brethren to sell Joseph to the Ishmaelite merchants, rather than stain their hands with his blood (Gen. xxxvii. 26). In the last prophetic blessing pronounced on him by his father Jacob (Gen. xlix. 8, 9) there is a promise of the regal power, and that it should not depart from his family before the coming of the Messiah. The whole southern part of Palestine fell to Judah's lot. At the departure out of Egypt the tribe of Judah contained seventy-four thousand six hundred men capable of bearing arms (Num. i. 26, 27). The crown passed from the tribe of Benjamin, of which Saul and his sons were, to that of Judah, which was David's tribe, and the tribe of the kings, his successors, until the Babylonish captivity.

Ju'das (Iscariot, probably from Ish-cariotta, "the man who has the bag"). After his dreadful apostasy he hung himself in despair, but the cord or the limb of the tree breaking, he fell, burst open, and died miserably.

Ju'das, or Jude (the same as Thadde'us and Lebbe'us, brother of James the Less, Matt. x. 3). He was one of the twelve apostles, but he is mentioned very seldom in the Gospels. It is said that he preached chiefly in Arabia and Persia. The Epistle which bears his name is intended to guard believers against false teachers. These, it seems, were teaching doctrines which cancelled all obligations to holiness and authorized the grossest licentiousness.

Ju'dea, or Jew'ry. A name now applied to the whole of Canaan, which was never so called till after the captivity. Sometimes the whole land of Canaan seems in the New Testament to have been called Judea (Gal. i. 22), but more properly it was divided into Galilee, Samaria and Judea.

Jud'ges. The Judges were temporary and special deliverers, sent by God to deliver the Israelites from their oppressors, not supreme magistrates succeeding to the authority of Moses and Joshua. Their power only extended over portions of the country, and some of them were contemporaneous. Their name in Hebrew is Shophetim, which is the same as that for ordinary judges, nor is it applied to them in a different sense. The book of Judges, of which the book of Ruth formed originally a part, contains the history from Joshua to Samson. As the history of the Judges occupies by far the greater part of the narrative, and is at the same time the history of the people, the title of the whole book is derived from that portion.

Ju'dith. The heroine of the apocryphal book which bears her name, who appears as an ideal type of piety (Judg. viii. 6), beauty (xi. 21), courage and chastity (xvi. 22). The book of Judith, one of the books of the Apocrypha, like that of Tobit, belongs to the earliest specimens of historical fiction.

K.

Ka'desh, Ka'desh-Barne'a (Kadesh means holy; it is the same word as the Arabic name for Jerusalem, El-Khuds). This place, the scene of Miriam's death, was the farthest point which the Israelites reached in their direct road to Canaan. It is probable that "Kadesh," though applied to signify a "city," had also a wider application to a region. In Gen. xiv. 7, Kadesh is identified with En-mishpat, the "fountain of judgment." Kadesh must be placed in a site near where the mountain of the Amorites descends to the low region of the Arabah and Dead Sea, but its exact locality cannot be ascertained.

Kad'monites. Ancient inhabitants of the land of Canaan, whose habitation was beyond Jordan, to the east of Phœnicia (Gen. xv. 19). The Kadmonites were descended from Canaan, the son of Ham. Cadmus, the famous inventor of the Greek alphabet, is thought to have emigrated from this country.

Kar'kor. A place east of the Jordan, where the remnant of the Midianitish army encamped, believing themselves safe, when Gideon fell upon them, routed them, and succeeded in capturing the chiefs (Judg. viii. 10).

Ke'dar. Kedar was the second son of Ishmael, whose family probably became more numerous or more warlike than those of his brethren, and so took precedence of name. This latter supposition appears probable from the manner in which they are mentioned by Isaiah (xxi. 16, 17), who speaks of "the glory of Kedar," and "the archers and their flocks are also spoken of" (Isa. lx. 7).

Ke'desh. 1. In the extreme south of Judah (Josh. xv. 23). 2. A city of Issachar, allotted to the Gershonite Levites (1 Chron. vi. 72). 3. Kedesh, also Kedesh in Galilee, and once (Judg. iv. 6) Kedesh-naphtali. It was the residence of Barak (Judg. iv. 6), and there he and Deborah assembled the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali before the conflict, being probably, as its name implies, a "holy place" of great antiquity.

Kem'uel. Son of Nabor by Milcah, and father of Aram (Gen. xxii. 21).

Ke'nites. A people who dwelt west of the Dead Sea, and extended themselves far into Arabia Petrea. Jethro, father-in-law of Moses, was a Kenite, and out of regard to him all who submitted to the Hebrews were suffered to live in their own country. The rest fled (1 Sam. xv. 6). The lands of the Kenites were in Judah's lot (Num. xxiv. 21). They were carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ker'chiefs. An article of dress used by the false prophetesses; they are thought to have been head-tires, or veils bound to the head, so as to cover most if not all of the face (Ezek. xiii. 18).

Ketur'ah. A "wife" of Abraham, by whom he had six sons. These he sent away eastward into the East country (Gen. xxv. 1-6; 1 Chron. i. 32, 33). Keturah may have been a secondary wife or concubine, whom Abraham had taken prior to Sarah's death, as after that event there was hardly time, during the patriarch's life, for so many sons to be born, to grow up to manhood and to be settled in their respective abodes.

Key. The keys of the ancients were very different from ours, because their doors and trunks were closed generally with bands, and the key served only to loosen or fasten these bands in a certain manner.

Kid'ron, Muddy (1 Kings ii. 37), or Ce'dron (John xviii. 1). A brook running through the valley which separates Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives, and forming the eastern boundary of the ancient and modern city. About nine months in the year the channel of the brook is dry. It is on an average nine feet in width. When swollen by the rains the current is deep and rapid. The Evangelist John calls it by a Greek name which signifies a winter torrent. It empties into the Dead Sea, running to it in a gorge of extraordinary depth and wildness.

King. This term is used with considerable latitude. The magnificence of the Hebrew monarchs was great. That of Solomon is particularly described in 1 Kings x.; and the royal robes, and crown, and sceptre, etc., are elsewhere mentioned (xxii. 10; 2 Kings xi. 12; Ps. xlv. 6). They were approached with the deepest reverence, the most powerful subjects, and even prophets, bowing before them to the ground (2 Sam. xiv. 22; 1 Kings i. 23). The sovereigns had several sources of revenue which must have sufficed for the maintenance of their state. These were presents or voluntary offerings, without which no man must approach them (1 Sam. x. 27; xvi. 20; 1 Kings x. 25); the produce of the royal demesnes over which certain officers were appointed, and the royal flocks (1 Sam. xxi. 7; 1 Chron. xxvii. 25-31; 2 Chron. xxxii. 28, 29); the tenth part of the produce of the fields and vineyards (1 Sam. viii. 15, 17), from which source it might be that victuals were provided for the royal household (1 Kings iv. 7-19).

Kings, Books of. The first book of Kings commences with an account of the death of David, and contains a period of a hundred and twenty-six years, to the death of Jehoshaphat; and the second book of Kings continues the history of the kings of Israel and Judah through a period of three hundred years, to the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. These two books formed only one in the Hebrew canon, and they were probably compiled by Ezra from the records which were regularly kept, both in Jerusalem and Samaria, of all public transactions. These records appear to have been made by the contemporary prophets, and frequently derived their names from the kings whose history they contained. They are mentioned in many parts of Scripture; thus (1 Kings xi. 41) we read of the book of the Acts of Solomon, which is supposed to have been written by Nathan, Ahijah and Iddo (2 Chron. ix. 29). We elsewhere read that Shemaiah the prophet and Iddo the seer wrote the Acts of Rehoboam (2 Chron. xii. 15); that Jehu wrote the Acts of Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xx. 34), and Isaiah those of Uzziah and Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxvi. 22; xxxii. 32). We may therefore conclude that from these public records and other authentic documents were composed the two books of Kings, and the uniformity of their style favours the opinion of their being put into their present shape by the same person.

Kir. A city or district to which the king of Assyria carried away the people of Damascus (2 to this. St. Paul speaks frequently of the kiss of peace (Heb. xiii. 24). Kissing the feet is in Eastern countries expressive of exuberant gratitude or reverence.

Kite (Lev. xi. 14). A rapacious bird of the hawk species, unclean by the ceremonial law. Same as vulture.

Knop (Ex. xxv. 31). A tufted top or projection used in architecture for ornament.

Ko'hath. The second son of Levi. His de-given Michal, David's wife (1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 15).

La'mech (properly Lemech). 1. The fifth lineal descendant from Cain (Gen. iv. 18-24). His two wives, Adah and Zillah, and his daughter Naamah, are with Eve the only antediluvian women whose names are mentioned by Moses. His three sons, JABAL, JUBAL and TUBAL-CAIN, are celebrated in Scripture as authors of useful inventions. 2. The father of Noah (Gen. v. 29).

Lamenta'tions. Written by Jeremiah after the troubles he had foretold in the book called by his name had overtaken Israel. It contains five distinct lamentations. He mourns the delusion of the people by false prophets, the destruction of the holy city, the overthrow of the government and the scattering of the people.

Lamp. The houses in the East were, from the remotest antiquity, lighted with lamps. These lamps were sustained by a large candlestick set upon the ground. In many parts of the East, and in particular in the Indies, instead of torches and flambeaux, they carry a pot of oil in one hand and a lamp full of oily rags in the other.

Lan'cet. This word is found in 1 Kings xviii. 28 only. The Hebrew term is romach, which elsewhere appears to mean a javelin or light spear.

Laodice'a. A town in the Roman province of Asia, situated in the valley of the Meander. Laodicea became under the Roman government a place of some importance. From Rev. iii. 17 we should gather it was a place of great wealth. In subsequent times it became a Christian city of eminence and a meeting-place of councils. The Mohammedan invaders destroyed it, and it is now a scene of utter desolation.

Lap'idoth. The husband of Deborah the prophetess (Judg. iv. 4).

Lap'wing (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18). Undoubtedly the hoopoe, a very beautiful but most unclean and filthy species of birds. The Egyptian name is kukuphah, and the Syrian kikuphah, which approach the Hebrew dukuphath.

Latch'et. The thong or fastening by which the sandal was attached to the foot (Gen. xiv. 23).

La'ver. 1. In the Tabernacle a vessel of brass containing water for the priests to wash their hands and feet before offering sacrifice (Ex. xxx. 19, 21). It was made from the mirrors of the women who assembled at the door of the tabernacle court (Ex. xxxviii. 8). 2. In Solomon's temple, besides the great molten sea, there were ten lavers of brass raised on bases (1 Kings vii. 27, 39). They were used for washing the animals to be offered in burnt-offerings (2 Chron. iv. 6).

Lazarus (another form of the Hebrew name Eleazar). 1. Lazarus of Bethany, the brother of Martha and Mary (John xi. 1). All that we know of him is derived from the Gospel of St. John. 2. The name of a poor man in the well-known parable of Luke xvi. 19-31.

LAODICEA, THE SITE OF ONE OF THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

Kings xvi. 9; Amos i. 5). A diversion of opinion exists in regard to the position of Kir. Very probably it was in Media, the present Kerend.

Kir-hara'seth (brick fortress). A city and important fortress of Moab, known also as Kir-har-eseth, Kir-harash, Kir-heres and Kir of Moab (2 Kings iii. 25). It is now called Kerak. It was a place of importance in the time of the Crusaders.

Kir'jath-ar'ba. An early name of the city which after the conquest is known as HEBRON (Josh. xiv. 15; Judg. i. 10).

Kir'jath-se'pher. A city taken by Othniel, for which he obtained Achsah, Caleb's daughter, in marriage (Josh. xv. 15-17; Judg. i. 11-13). Also called Debir and Kirjath-sannah.

Kir'jath-je'arim. One of the cities of the Gibeonites (Josh. ix. 17). It was variously called Baalah, Baale of Judah, Kirjath-baal and Kirjath-arim. It was to this place that the ark was brought after the catastrophe at Beth-shemesh (1 Sam. vi. 21; vii. 1, 2), and from thence carried by David to Jerusalem (1 Chron. xiii. 5, 6; 2 Chron. i. 4). The modern Kiriet el-'Enab is satisfactorily identified with Kirjath-jearim. It is but a poor village, with a ruined Latin church. On the hill to the north-west probably stood the house of Abinadab (1 Sam. vii. 1).

Kish. 1. The father of Saul, a Benjamite. 2. Son of Jehiel, and uncle to the preceding (1 Chron. ix. 36). 3. A Benjamite, great-grandfather of Mordecai (Esth. ii. 5). 4. A Merarite, of the house of Mahli of the tribe of Levi.

Ki'shon. A river rising at the foot of Mount Tabor, passing by the base of Mount Carmel, through the plain of Esdraelon, and falling into the sea at a place called Caypha, in the bay of Acre or Accho, after running a length of about seven miles. On its banks was fought the famous battle in which ten thousand Hebrews, under Deborah and Barak, routed the vast host of Canaanites under Sisera, and freed Israel from a grievous oppression of twenty years.

Kiss. A mode of salutation and token of respect which was in ordinary use among the Jews; hence Judas in this way saluted his Master. There was also the kiss of homage at the inauguration of the kings of Israel. The Jews called it the kiss of majesty. Psalm ii. 12 seems to be an allusion scendants were called Kohathites, whose business it was to carry on their shoulders the ark and other sacred utensils of the tabernacle (Ex. vi. 16-25; Num. x. 21).

Ko'rah (Num. xvi. 1). The great-grandson of Levi. Being jealous of the authority of Moses and Aaron, he entered into a conspiracy with Dathan, Abiram and On to put them down; and associating with themselves two hundred and fifty princes or leading men of the Levites, they went to Moses and made known their grievance. Moses proposed to test the reasonableness of their complaint by reference to God himself; and after separating all the rest of the people from them, he said that if Korah and his party should die a natural death, then he would agree that he was not a true messenger from God, but if they should be destroyed in an extraordinary manner, which he particularly described, then it should be admitted that they had provoked God. The dreadful event showed that Korah and his companions were in the wrong, for they and all that appertained to them were swallowed up alive in a moment by the earth, which opened to receive them, and at the same time a fire was sent and consumed the two hundred and fifty princes (Num. xvi. 2, 35).

L.

La'ban. Son of Bethuel, brother of Rebekah, and father of Leah and Rachel. We first meet with Laban as taking the leading part in the betrothal of his sister Rebekah to her cousin Isaac (Gen. xxiv. 10, 29-60; xxvii. 43; xxix. 4).

La'chish. A city of the Amorites, the king of which joined with four others, at the invitation of Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem, to chastise the Gibeonites for their league with Israel (Josh. x. 3, 5). They were routed by Joshua at Beth-horon.

Laha'i-ro'i, the Well (Gen. xxiv. 62; xxv. 11). The name of the famous well of Hagar's relief, in the oasis of verdure round which Isaac afterward resided.

La'ish. Father of Phaltiel, to whom Saul had

CROCODILE OF THE NILE, THE SUPPOSED LEVIATHAN.

Lead. The allusions to lead in Scripture indicate that the Hebrews were well acquainted with its uses. The rocks in the neighbourhood of Sinai yielded it in large quantities, and it was found in Egypt. That it was common in Palestine is shown by the expression in Ecclus. xlvii. 18 (comp. 1 Kings x. 27).

Le'ah. The daughter of Laban (Gen. xxix. 16). The dulness or weakness of her eyes was so notable that it is mentioned in contrast to the beautiful Rachel. Her father, having passed her off in her sister's stead on the unconscious bridegroom, excused himself to Jacob by alleging that the custom of the country forbade the younger sister to be given first in marriage. Jacob's preference of Rachel grew into hatred of Leah after he had married both sisters. Leah, however, bore to him in quick succession Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, then Issachar, Zebulun and Dinah, before Rachel had a child. She died some time after Jacob reached the south country in which his father

LILY OF CHALCEDON, OR SCARLET MARTAGON.

Isaac lived. She was buried in the family grave in Machpelah (xlix. 31).

Leas'ing. Falsehoods, lies (Ps. iv. 2, 6).

Leav'en. The Hebrews were forbidden to eat leavened bread or food with leaven in it during the passover (Ex. xii. 15-19; Lev. ii. 11). They were careful in purifying their houses from all leaven before this feast began. St. Paul (1 Cor. v. 7, 8) expresses his desire that the faithful should celebrate the Christian passover with unleavened bread, which, figuratively, signifies sincerity and truth.

Lebbe'us. This name occurs in Matt. x. 3; in Mark iii. 18 it is substituted in a few unimportant MSS. for Thaddeus. [See JUDE.]

Leeks. The word chatsir, which in Num. xi. 5 is translated leeks, occurs twenty times in the Hebrew text. The Hebrew term, which denotes grass, is derived from a root signifying "to be green," and may therefore stand for any green food—lettuce, endive, etc.; it would thus be applied as we use the term "greens."

Lees. The custom was to allow the wine to stand on the lees in order that its colour and body might be better preserved. Hence the expression "wine on the lees," as meaning a generous, full-bodied liquor (Isa. xxv. 6).

Le'gion. The term appears to have been adopted in order to express any large number, with the accessory ideas of order and subordination (Matt. xxvi. 53; Mark v. 9).

Le'hi. A place in Judah, probably on the confines of the Philistines' country, between it and the cliff Etam—the scene of Samson's well-known exploit with the jawbone (Judg. xv. 9, 14, 19).

Lem'uel. The name of a king to whom his mother addressed the maxims contained in Prov. xxxi. 1-9. The Rabbinical commentators identified Lemuel with Solomon. Others regard him as an elder brother of Agur, whose name stands at the head of Prov. xxx.

Len'tiles (Gen. xxv. 34; 2 Sam. xvii. 28; xxxiii. 11 and Ezek. iv. 9). There are three or four kinds of lentiles, all of which are still much esteemed in the South of Europe, Asia and North Africa; the red lentile is still a favourite article of food. It is known in Egypt and Arabia, Syria, etc., by the name 'Adas. Lentile bread is still eaten by the poor of Egypt.

Leop'ard (Cant. iv. 8; Isa. xi. 6; Jer. v. 6; xiii. 23; Hos. xiii. 7; Hab. i. 8; Dan. vii. 6; Rev. xiii. 2). There can be no doubt that the leopard is the animal mentioned. These animals were numerous in Palestine.

Lep'rosy. One of the most calamitous of all diseases, but not often found in cold countries. Its first attack is on the skin, but at last it affects the whole system. Patients often live many years, but are seldom if ever cured. It is often found among the Arabs in the Levant, and generally over the East. The symptoms and progress of the infection are fully described in the law of Moses (Lev. xiii.).

Le'vi. 1. The name of the third son of Jacob by his wife Leah. The name, from lwdh, "to adhere," gave utterance to the hope of the mother that the affections of her husband, hitherto on the favoured Rachel, would at last be drawn to her (Gen. xxix. 34). Levi, with his brother Simeon, avenged with a cruel slaughter the outrage of their sister Dinah. [See DINAH.] Levi, with his three sons, Gershon, Kohath, Merari, went down to Egypt with his father Jacob (Gen. xlvii. 11). 2. Son of Alphaeus (Mark ii. 14; Luke v. 27, 29). [See MATTHEW.]

Levi'athan (Job iii. 8; xli. 1; Ps. lxxiv. 14; civ. 26; Isa. xxvii. 1). The crocodile, a natural inhabitant of the Nile and other rivers, is most clearly the animal here meant. It has proportionally the largest mouth of all monsters, and is furnished with a coat of mail so scaly and callous as to resist the force of a musket ball in every part except under the belly.

Le'vite. One of the tribes of Levi; an inferior minister in the Jewish temple; by which title he is distinguished from the priest, who, though likewise of the race of Levi, yet was descended from Aaron, whose posterity were employed in the higher offices.

Levit'icus. The book, which is so called because it relates principally to the Levites and Priests, consists of: 1st. The laws touching sacrifices (chap. i.-vii.). 2d. An historical section (viii., ix., x.). 3d. The laws concerning purity and impurity (xi.-xvi.). 4th. Laws chiefly intended to mark the separation between Israel and the heathen nations (xvii.-xx.). 5th. Laws concerning the priests (xxi., xxii.). 6th. Promises and threats (xxvi. 2-46). 7th. An appendix containing the laws concerning vows (xxvii.).

Lib'ertines. This word, which occurs once only in the N. T. (Acts vi. 9), is the Latin Libertini—that is, "freedmen." They were probably Jews who, having been taken prisoners, had been reduced to slavery, and had afterward been emancipated and returned to the country of their fathers.

Lib'ya. A part of Africa lying along the Mediterranean Sea, bordering on Egypt, famous for its armed chariots and horses (2 Chron. xvi. 8).

BARBARY LION.

Lice. Swarms of lice was the third of the Egyptian plagues (Ex. viii. 16). Some translate it "flies," and think them the same as gnats. However, the original, according to the Syriac and several good interpreters, signifies "lice." Josephus, the Jewish rabbins and most of the modern translators render the Hebrew word at large lice.

Lig'ure (Heb. leshem). A precious stone mentioned in Ex. xxviii. 19; xxxix. 12 as the first in the third row of the high priest's breastplate.

Lil'y. There are many varieties. The fields of the Levant are overrun with the superb amaryllis lutea, to which probably our Saviour alludes in Matt. vi. 30. Some learned critics contend that the Saviour here means the crown imperial. By the "lily of the valley" we are not to understand the humble flower so called with us, but the noble flower of the larger kind. The lily mentioned in Cant. ii. 2; v. 13 seems to be the crown imperial or Persian lily. The drop of sweet liquor alluded to is the dewy nectar.

Lime (Deut. xxvii. 2, 4; Isa. xxxiii. 12; Amos ii. 1). A soft, friable substance, obtained by calcining or burning stones, shells or the like. From Isa. xxxiii. 12 it appears that it was made in a kiln lighted with thorn bushes; and from Amos ii.

PERSIAN LION.

1, that bones were sometimes calcined for lime. The use of it was for plaster or cement, the first mention of which is in Deut. xxvii.

Lin'en. Cloth made of flax, and familiar to the ancients. In Ex. xxv. 4 the word so rendered means probably cotton. Specimens of cotton cloth are found on the oldest mummies.

Li'nus. A Christian at Rome, known to St. Paul and to Timothy (2 Tim. iv. 21), who was the first bishop of Rome after the apostles.

Li'on. The lion of Palestine was probably the Asiatic variety, described by Aristotle and Pliny as distinguished by its short curly mane and short and round shape. Among the Hebrews and throughout the O. T. the lion was the achievement of the princely tribe of Judah, while in the closing book of the canon it received a deeper significance as the emblem of Him who "prevailed to open the book and loose the seven seals thereof" (Rev. v. 6). On the other hand, its fierceness and cruelty rendered it an appropriate metaphor for a fierce and malignant enemy (Ps. vii. 2; xxii. 21; lvii. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 17), and hence for the arch-fiend himself (1 Pet. v. 8).

Liz'ard. Several species of lizards are well known. There are some in Arabia a cubit in length, but in the Indies there are some much longer. We find several sorts of lizards mentioned in Scripture.

Lo'cust. An insect in the East, often five or six inches long, and of the thickness of a man's thumb. Its head is shaped like that of a horse (Joel ii. 4). The mouth is large, and furnished with four incisive teeth, which traverse each other like scissors. The prophetic writings of the Old Testament abound with allusions to this insect as one of God's most dreadful scourges. All travellers in the East speak of the occasional ravages of this insect. The swarms are often a mile in length, darkening the day as they pass over, and forming a thickness of several inches when they settle on the earth. Nothing can impede their march; they fill up the deepest trenches, extinguish fires and climb walls. All verdure disappears, and the country looks as if burnt over with fire (Ex. x. 4-19). Pliny states that in Ethiopia and Parthia they were generally eaten as wholesome and agreeable food. The law of Moses pronounced them lawful to be eaten (Lev. xi. 22).

Lo'is. The grandmother of Timothy, and doubtless the mother of his mother Eunice (2 Tim. i. 5). It seems likely that Lois had resided long at Lystra, and almost certain that from her, as well as from Eunice, Timothy obtained his intimate knowledge of the Jewish Scriptures (2 Tim. iii. 15).

Look'ing Glass. Ancient looking-glasses were mirrors, not made of glass as ours, but of brass, tin, silver and a mixture of brass and silver, which last were the best and most valuable.

Lord. A name of God often given in Scripture to Jesus Christ. When the word is found in our translation printed in small capitals, it always stands for the Hebrew word JEHOVAH. The word, in restricted senses, is applied to those who possess authority as a husband (Gen. xviii. 12), a master (John xv. 15), a prince (Gen. xxiv. 18).

Lord's Day, the (Rev. i. 10). The weekly termining an affair; and on that account ought to be used only with reverence and prayer (Prov. xvi. 33; xviii. 18; Acts i. 24-26; 1 Sam. xiv. 41).

Lu'cifer. Found in Isa. xiv. 12, coupled with the epithet "son of the morning," clearly signifies a "bright star," and probably what we call the morning star. A symbolical representation of the king of Babylon. Some of the Fathers thought this passage meant Satan, and hence he is now often called Lucifer.

MOSQUE OF HEBRON (WITH CAVE OF MACHPELAH), AND PART OF THE TOWN.

festival of our Lord's resurrection, and identified with "the first day of the week," or "Sunday," of every age of the Church. Scripture says very little concerning this day. But that little seems to indicate that the divinely-inspired apostles, by practice and precepts, marked the first day of the week for meeting together to break bread, for instruction, for offerings, for charitable purposes and for occupation in holy thought and prayer.

Lord's Supper. This great central act of the worship of the Christian Church occurs in but one passage of the N. T. (1 Cor. xi. 20). It was instituted on that night when Jesus and his disciples met together to eat the Passover (Matt. xxvi. 19; Mark xiv. 16; Luke xxii. 13). In the account given by the writer of the Acts of the life of the first disciples at Jerusalem a prominent place is given to this act. He describes the baptized members of the Church as continuing steadfast in or to the teaching of the apostles, in fellowship with them and with each other, and in breaking of bread and in prayers (Acts ii. 42).

Lot. The son of Haran, and therefore the nephew of Abraham (Gen. xi. 27, 31). His sisters were Milcah, the wife of Nahor, and Iscah, by some identified with Sarah. After the death of his father, Lot lived and travelled with Abraham, until finally he chose for himself the plain of the Jordan, and advanced as far as Sodom. The next occurrences in the life of Lot are his capture by the four kings of the East, and his rescue by Abram (Gen. xiv.). The last scene preserved to us in the history of Lot is too well known to need repetition. His deliverance from the guilty and condemned city points the allusion of St. Peter (2 Pet. ii. 6-9). The end of Lot's wife is commonly treated as one of the difficulties of the Bible. But it surely need not be so. The value and the significance of the story to us are contained in the allusion of Christ (Luke xvii. 32).

Lot, By. The custom of deciding doubtful questions by lot is of great extent and high antiquity. It is a solemn appeal to God for an immediate interposal of his directive power for de-

Lu'cius. 1. A Roman consul. 2. LUCIUS OF CYRENE is first mentioned in the N. T. in company with Barnabas, Simeon, called Niger, Minna and Saul, who are described as prophets and teachers of the Church at Antioch (Acts xiii. 1).

Luke. A native of Antioch, and a physician. He is mentioned for the first time (Acts xvi. 10) as a companion of Paul at Troas. Thence he went with him to Judea, sailed with him to Rome, and stayed with him during his two years of confinement. Luke's Gospel was written to correct numerous erroneous narratives of the life of Christ. The style is pure and elevated, and many facts are given which are not contained in the other Evangelists. He wrote not only the Gospel which is called by his name, but the Acts of the Apostles. His language is exceedingly pure and classical.

Lu'natics. This word is used twice in the N. T. (Matt. iv. 24; xvii. 15). It is evident that the word itself refers to some disease affecting body and mind. By the description of Mark ix. 17-26 it is concluded that this disease was epilepsy.

Luz. It seems impossible to discover whether Luz and Bethel represent the same town, or whether they were distinct places. The most probable conclusion is that they were distinct, Luz being the city, and Bethel the pillar and altar of Jacob—that after the destruction of Luz the town of Bethel arose.

Lyc'onia. A district of Asia Minor. It is for the most part a dreary plain, bare of trees, destitute of fresh water, and with several salt lakes. On St. Paul's first missionary journey he traversed Lycania from west to east, and then returned on his steps (2 Tim. iii. 11).

Lyc'ia. The name of a region of Asia Minor opposite the island of Rhodes. St. Paul visited the Lycian towns of Patara (Acts xxi. 1) and Myra (Acts xxvii. 5).

Lyd'da. The Greek form of the name (Acts ix. 32, 35, 38) which appears in the Hebrew records as Lod. It is nine miles from Joppa. The water-course outside the town is said to still bear the name of Abi-Butrus (Peter), in memory of the apostle.

Lyd'ia. The first European convert of St. Paul, and afterward his hostess during his first stay at Philippi (Acts xvi. 14, 15, also 40). She was a Jewish proselyte at the time of the apostle's coming, and it was at the Jewish sabbath worship by the side of a stream (ver. 13) that the preaching of the Gospel reached her heart. Her native place was Thyatira, in the province of Asia (ver. 14; Rev. ii. 18). Thyatira was famous for its dyeing-works, and Lydia was connected with this trade, either as a seller of dye or of dyed goods. We infer that she was a person of considerable wealth.

Lys'ias, Clau'dius. "Chief captain of the band" who rescued St. Paul from the infuriated mob at Jerusalem, and sent him under guard to Felix (Acts xxi. 31, seq.; xxiii. 26; xxiv. 7).

Lysim'achus. 1. "A son of Ptolemæus of Jerusalem," the Greek translator of the book of Esther (Esth. ix. 20). 2. A brother of the high priest Menelaus, who fell a victim to the fury of the people (2 Macc. iv. 29-42).

Lys'tra. The place where divine honours were offered to St. Paul, and where he was stoned (Acts xiv.) Also the birth-place of Timothy. Lystra was situated in the eastern part of the great plain of Lycaonia.

M.

Maac'ah. 1. The mother of Absalom, also called MAACHAH (2 Sam. iii. 3). 2. MAACHAH, and (in Chron.) MAACHAH, a small kingdom in close proximity to Palestine.

Mac'cabees, the. This title, originally the surname of Judas, one of the sons of Mattathias, was afterward extended to the heroic family of which he was one of the noblest representatives. The original term, Maccabi, was probably formed from Makkabâh, "a hammer." Although the name Maccabees has gained the widest currency, that of Asmoneans, or Hasmoneans, is the proper name of the family, derived from Cashmon, great-grandfather of Mattathias. The books of Maccabees are found in some MSS. of the LXX. Two of these were included in the early current Latin versions of the Bible. The two other books obtained no such wide circulation.

Macedo'nia. The first part of Europe which received the Gospel directly from St. Paul, and an important scene of his subsequent missionary labours and those of his companions.

Mag'dala. A city or territory on the margin of Lake Gennesaret, either the same as Dal-manutha, or very near it. Compare Matt. xv. 39 with Mark viii. 10. Mary Magdalene was so called from having lived here.

Ma'gi. The Magian religion existed anciently in Persia. They had temples, in which were kept perpetual fires. The priests of the Magi being the only learned mathematicians and philosophers of the age in which they lived, the term Magian became synonymous with learned man. The wise men, or Magi, who visited our Saviour at his birth, were probably Persian doctors, or perhaps princes, as the philosophers were frequently of the royal race (Matt. ii. 1).

Ma'gog. [See Gog.]

Mahana'im. A town on the east of the Jordan,

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN HOE.

signifying two hosts or two camps, a name given to it by Jacob, because he there met "the angels of God" (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2). It was on the south side of the torrent Jabbok.

Ma'her-sha'lal-hash-baz (i. e., hasten-booty, speed-spoil). This name was given by Divine direction to the son of Isaiah to indicate that Damascus and Samaria were soon to be plundered by the king of Assyria (Isa. viii. 1-4).

Mah'lon. The first husband of Ruth. He and his brother Chilion were sons of Elimelech and Naomi, and are described as "Ephrathites of Bethlehem-judah" (Ruth i. 2, 5; iv. 9, 10; comp. 1 Sam. xvii. 12).

Mak'kedah. Memorable as the scene of the execution by Joshua of the five confederate kings (Josh. x. 10-30). Its site is uncertain.

Mal'achi. The last, called "the seal," of the prophets, and his prophecies constituted the closing book of the canon. Of his personal history nothing is known. It is probable that Malachi was contemporary with Nehemiah, and that he prophesied after the times of Haggai and Zechariah. He doubtless delivered his prophecies after the second return of Nehemiah from Persia (Neh. xiii. 6), and subsequently to the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes Longimanus (B. C. 420).

Mal'chus. The servant of the high priest, whose right ear Peter cut off (Matt. xxvi. 51; Mark xiv. 47; Luke xxii. 49-51; John xviii. 10). He was the personal servant of the high priest. Luke is the only writer who mentions the act of healing.

Mal'lows (Job xxx. 4). By the Hebrew word mallûach we are to understand in all probability the Atriplex halimus, a saltish plant eaten in Syria and elsewhere as we do greens.

Mam'mon (Matt. vi. 24; Luke xvi. 9). A word signifying "riches." It is used in St. Matthew as a personification of riches.

Mam're. An Amorite who with his brothers Eshcol and Aner was in alliance with Abram (Gen. xiv. 13, 24), and under the shade of whose oak grove the patriarch dwelt in the interval between his residence at Bethel and at Beersheba (xiii. 18; xviii. 1). In the subsequent chapters Mamre is a mere local appellation (xxiii. 17, 19; xxv. 9; xlix. 30; i. 13).

Manas'seh. The thirteenth king of Judah, son of Hezekiah and Hephzibah (2 Kings xxi. 1), ascended the throne at the age of twelve. His accession was the signal for an entire change. Idolatry was again established, and he consecrated idolatrous altars in the sanctuary itself (2 Chron. xxxiii. 4). The aged Isaiah, according to the old Jewish tradition, was put to death. Retribution came soon in the natural sequence of events. The king was made a prisoner, and carried off to Babylon in the twenty-second year of his reign, according to a Jewish tradition. There his eyes were opened, and he repented, and his prayer was heard, and the Lord delivered him (2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13). He was buried not with the burial of a king, but in the garden of Uzza (2 Kings xxi. 26). He was succeeded by his son Amon, B. C. 642. Little is added by later tradition to the O. T. narrative of Manas'seh's reign. The prayer that bears his name in the Apocrypha cannot be considered as identical with that referred to in 2 Chron. xxxiii. The original is extant in Greek; and it is the work of a later writer, who has endeavoured to express, not without true feeling, the thoughts of the repentant king.

Man'drakes. Mentioned in Gen. xxx. 14, 15, 16, and in Cant. vii. 13. From the former passage we learn that they were found in the fields of Mesopotamia, where Jacob and his wives were at one time living, and that the fruit was gathered "in the days of wheat-harvest," i. e., in May. From Cant. vii. 13 we learn that the plant in question was strong-scented, and that it grew in Palestine.

Man'ger. This word occurs only in connection with the birth of Christ in Luke ii. 7, 12, 16. The original term, found but once besides in the N. T. (Luke xiii. 15), is rendered by "stall." The word in classical Greek means a manger, crib or feeding-trough; but according to Schleusner its real signification in the N. T. is the open courtyard attached to the inn or khan where the poorer travellers might unpack their animals and take up their lodging.

Man'na. A substance which God gave to the children of Israel for food in the deserts of Arabia. It fell from Friday, June 5, A. M. 2513, to the second day of the passover, Wednesday, May 5, A. M. 2553. It was a small grain, white, like hoarfrost, round, and the size of coriander seed (Ex. xvi. 14; Num. xi. 1-5). It fell every morning with the dew—was sufficient to feed the entire multitude of above a million of souls, every one of whom gathered, for his share every day, the quantity of an omer, i. e., about three quarts. It maintained all this multitude, and yet none of them found any inconvenience from the constant eating of it. Every Friday there fell a double quantity (Ex. xvi. 5), and though it putrefied and bred maggots when kept on any other day, yet on the Sabbath it suffered no such alteration. And the same manna that was melted by the heat of the sun when left in the field, was of so hard a consistence when brought into the house that it was beat in mortars, and would even endure the fire. It was baked in pans, made into paste, and so into cakes. Instead of "It is manna," read "What is it?" in Ex. xvi. 14. Scripture gives to manna the name of "bread of heaven," and "food of angels;" perhaps as intimating its superior quality (Ps. lxxviii. 25).

Ma'rah (that is, bitterness). A place three days' journey distant (Ex. xv. 23, 24; Num. xxxiii. 8) from the place at which the Israelites crossed the Red Sea, and where was a spring of bitter water, sweetened subsequently by the casting in of a tree which "the Lord showed" to Moses.

Maran'atha. An expression used by St. Paul at the conclusion of his first Epistle to the Corinthians (xvi. 22). It is a Grecised form of the Aramaic words maran athâ, "our Lord cometh."

Mar'ble (1 Chron. xxix. 2; Esth. i. 6; Cant. v. 15). A valuable kind of stone. It is of different colours—black, white, etc.; and is sometimes elegantly clouded and variegated. Probably the cliff Ziz (2 Chron. xx. 16) was so called from being a marble crag.

Mar'cus. The Evangelist Mark (Col. iv. 10; Philcm. 24; 1 Pet. v. 13).

Mark. The writer of one of the Gospels, was the son of a pious woman at Jerusalem, at whose house the apostles often held religious worship (Acts xii. 12). He travelled with Paul, Barnabas, Peter and Timothy, as their "minister" (Acts xiii. 5), which may mean that he paid their charges. He is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in Egypt. The book of Mark was written probably about thirty years after the death of Christ. Though some have supposed that Mark did little more than abridge Matthew's Gospel, it has been shown that he could not even have seen that book, but drew his facts from Peter, who, equally with Matthew, was an eye-witness of our Lord's life.

ANCIENTS WASHING BEFORE AND AFTER MEALS.

Mar'riage. The institution of marriage dates from man's original creation. The customs of the Hebrews and of Oriental nations in regard to marriage differ in many respects from those with which we are familiar. The choice of the bride devolved not on the bridegroom himself, but on his relations or on a friend deputed by the bridegroom for this purpose. The consent of the maiden was sometimes asked (Gen. xxiv. 58), but this appears to have been subordinate to the previous consent of the father and the adult brothers (Gen. xxiv. 51; xxxiv. 11). Occasionally, the whole business of selecting the wife was left in the hands of a friend. The selection of the bride was followed by the espousal, which was a formal proceeding undertaken by a friend or legal representative on the part of the bridegroom, and by the parents on the part of the bride; it was confirmed by oaths and accompanied with presents to the bride. There is abundant evidence that women, whether married or unmarried, went about with their faces unveiled (Gen. xii.

ANCIENT CUSTOM OF RECLINING AT TABLE.

14; xxiv. 16, 65; xxix. 11; 1 Sam. i. 13). Women not unfrequently held important offices. They took their part in matters of public interest (Ex. xv. 20; 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7). The allegorical and typical allusions to marriage have exclusive reference to one subject, viz.: to exhibit the spiritual relationship between God and his people.

Mar'tha. The sister of Lazarus and Mary. The facts recorded in Luke x. and John xi. indicate her as sharing in Messianic hopes and accepting Jesus as the Christ. She, no less than Lazarus and Mary, has the distinction of being one whom Jesus loved (John xi. 3). Her position was obviously that of the elder sister, the head and manager of the household.

Mary (there were four or five Marys in the N. T.) 1. The mother of our Lord. She was the daughter of Eli, or Joachim, of the family of David. 2. The wife of Cleophas, and mother of James, Jude, Joses, Simeon and Salome. It has been thought that Cleophas and the husband of the Virgin Mary were brothers. She was a witness of the crucifixion of Christ (Mark xv. 40, 41), and at his burial prepared spices for embalming his body (Luke xxiii. 56). 3. Mary Magdalene seems to have been an inhabitant of Magdala. It is thought that she was a plaiter of hair to the women of her city. It is commonly considered that before her conversion she was of infamous character, but this is not affirmed in the Scriptures. It is also commonly supposed that this was she who anointed Christ's feet in the Pharisee's house, but some suppose that the woman who did so was Mary, the sister of Martha. But the anointing in the house of the Pharisee and that at Bethany seem not to have been the same.

Mat'thew. Also named Levi, was a Galilean by birth and a tax-gatherer by profession. He wrote the Gospel called by his name, probably about A. D. 38 or 41, in the Hebrew language. Some critics maintain that a few years afterward he wrote his Gospel in Greek; and some consider it to have been originally written in that language. About A. D. 184 there was found in the East Indies a Greek copy. In the year 488 another Greek copy was found at Cyprus, written on wood and esteemed very ancient. The book of Matthew was the first written of all the Gospels, and contains allusions to that violent persecution by the Jews in which Paul enlisted himself afterward so warmly. It is a full narrative of the birth, life, doings and death of Christ. The style is very plain and perspicuous. It is the only one of the Gospels which gives our Lord's description of the process of the general judgment.

Mattathias. 1. The father of the Maccabees. 2. The son of Simon Maccabeus, who was treacherously murdered, together with his father and brother, in the fortress of Docus by Ptolemus (1 Macc. xvi. 14).

Matthias. The apostle elected to fill the place of the traitor Judas (Acts i. 26). He had been a constant attendant upon the Lord Jesus during the whole course of His ministry. It is said that he preached the gospel and suffered martyrdom in Ethiopia.

Mat'tock. The tool used in Arabia for loosening the ground, described by Niebuhr, answers generally to our mattock or grubbing-axe—i. e., a single-headed pick-axe. The ancient Egyptian hoe was of wood, and answered for hoe, spade and pick.

Meals. The early Hebrews do not seem to have given special names to their several meals, for the terms rendered "dine" and "dinner" (Gen. xliii. 16; Prov. xv. 17) are in reality general expressions, which might more correctly be rendered "eat" and "portion of food." In the N. T. we have the Greek terms rendered respectively "dinner" and "supper" (Luke xiv. 12; John xxi. 12), but which are more properly "breakfast" and "dinner." The posture at meals varied at various periods: there is sufficient evidence that the old Hebrews were in the habit of sitting (Gen. xxvii. 19; Judg. xix. 6; 1 Sam. xx. 5, 24; 1 Kings xiii. 20). As luxury increased, the practice of sitting was exchanged for that of reclining; the first intimation of this occurs in the prophecies of Amos (iii. 12; vi. 4). In the time of our Saviour reclining was the universal custom.

Me'arah (Josh. xiii. 4). The word means in Hebrew a cave, and it is assumed that the reference is to some cavern in the neighbourhood of Zidon.

Meats. The Hebrews, among domestic animals, only ate the cow, the sheep and the goat; the hen and pigeon, among domestic birds; besides several kinds of wild animals. To eat the blood was forbidden. We may form a judgment of their taste by what the Scripture mentions of Solomon's table in 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. The ancient Hebrews were not very nice about the seasoning and dressing of their food. We find among them roast meat, boiled meat and ragouts. They roasted the paschal lamb. The word meat in Scripture does not mean flesh, but generally anything to be eaten.

Medes. For a long period a highly-civilized and wealthy people. They were the dominant race in all Asia. Their monarch was absolute, their language polished, and their religion was the worship of the heavenly bodies. Their priests were called Magi. This people is not mentioned in the Bible till the days of Hosea, B. C. 740.

Me'dia. A vast region between Persia and the Caspian Sea, deriving its name from Madai, son of Japhet (Gen. x. 2). Cyrus, king of Persia, became by his wife heir to the crown of Media, thus uniting the kingdoms of the Medes and Persians.

Megid'do (Josh. xii. 21). Megiddo appears as the city of one of the kings whom Joshua defeated on the west of the Jordan. The song of Deborah brings the place vividly before us as the scene of great conflict between Sisera and Barak. The chief historical interest of Megiddo is concentrated in Josiah's death (2 Kings xxiii. 29). The story is told in the Chronicles in more detail (2 Chron. xxxv. 22-24). There is a copious stream flowing down the gorge, and turning some mills before joining the Kishon. Here are probably the "waters of Megiddo" of Judg. v. 19.

Melchiz'edek. A priest, though not a Jew. Of his nation, parentage, age, etc., nothing is known. Hence he is said to be "without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life" (Gen. xiv. 17-20; Heb. vii. 1-11).

Mel'ita (the modern Malta). This island has an illustrious place in Scripture as the scene of the Mel'on (Num. xi. 5). That more particularly referred to in the text must be the water-melon. It is cultivated, says Hasselquist, on the banks of the Nile, in the rich clayey earth which subsides during the inundation, and serves the Egyptians for meat, drink and physic. The juice is peculiarly cooling and agreeable in that sultry climate. This explains the regret expressed by the Israelites for the loss of this fruit.

Mem'phis. An Egyptian city of great size and splendour, which stood near old Cairo, but of which there are now only some ruins. In Hos. ix. 6 it is called Moph, and in Isa. xix. 13, Noph. It was the metropolitan city under the Ptolemies, and in it the arts were carried to great perfection.

Me'ne' (numbered). The first word of the mysterious inscription written upon the wall of Belshazzar's palace, in which Daniel read the doom of the king and his dynasty (Dan. v. 25, 26).

Mene'l'aus. A usurping high priest who obtained the office from Antiochus Epiphanes (about B. C. 172) by a large bribe (2 Macc. iv. 23-25). He met with a violent death.

MUSK-MELON (CUCUMIS MELO).

Me'rab. The eldest daughter of King Saul (1 Sam. xiv. 49), whom he (xvii. 25) betrothed to David (xviii. 17). Before the marriage, Merab's younger sister Michal had displayed her attachment for David, and Merab was married to Adriel the Meholathite, to whom she bore five sons (2 Sam. xxi. 8).

Mer'ari. Third son of Levi, and head of the Merarites (Gen. xli. 8, 11).

Mercu'rius. Properly Hermes, the Greek deity, whom the Romans identified with their Mercury, the god of commerce and bargains.

Mer'cy-seat (Ex. xxv. 17; xxxvii. 6; Heb. ix. 5). This appears to have been merely the lid of the ark of the covenant, not another surface affixed thereto. It was that whereon the blood of the yearly atonement was sprinkled by the high priest.

Me'rom, the Waters of. Here a confederacy of the northern chiefs under the leadership of Jabin, king of Hazor (Josh. xi. 5), were encountered by Joshua, and completely routed (ver. 7).

Me'shach. The Chaldean name given to Mishael, one of the three friends of Daniel miraculously saved shipwreck of St. Paul (Acts xxvii.). The wreck probably happened at the place traditionally known as Paul's Bay. The island of Melita, when Paul was there, was a dependency of the Roman province of Sicily. Its chief officer appears from inscriptions to have had the title of Primus Melitensium, and this is the very phrase which Luke uses (xxviii. 7).

ST. PAUL'S BAY, MALTA.

from the fiery furnace (Dan. i. 6, 7; iii.).

Mesopota'mia (Syria of the Two Rivers). If we look to the signification of the name, we must regard Mesopotamia as the entire country between the two rivers—the Tigris and the Euphrates. We first hear of Mesopotamia in Scripture as the country where Nahor and his family settled after quitting Ur of the Chaldees (Gen. xxiv. 10). Here lived Bethuel and Laban; and hither Abraham sent his servant to fetch Isaac a wife "of his own kindred" (ib. ver. 38). Hither, too, came Jacob on the same errand. On the destruction of the Assyrian empire, Mesopotamia seems to have been divided between the Medes and the Babylonians.

Mes'siah (literally, the anointed).

Methu'selah. The son of Enoch, sixth in descent from Seth, and father of Lamech (Gen. v. 25-27).

Mi'cah. A prophet of the tribe of Judah, who lived in the latter days of Isaiah and Hosea. The book of Micah is one of the most important prophecies in the Old Testament. Previous predictions had limited the "seed of the woman" to the line of WATER-MELON (CUCURBITA CITRULLUS).

Shem, the descendants of Abraham, the tribe of Judah and the house of David. Micah sheds further light by designating the very place of his birth (ch. v. 2), with other important circumstances of his kingdom and glory.

Mi'chael. "One," or "the first of the chief princes" or archangels (Dan. x. 13; comp. Jude 9), described in Dan. x. 21 as the "prince" of Israel.

Mi'chal. The younger of Saul's two daughters (1 Sam. xiv. 49). The king had proposed to bestow on David his eldest daughter Merab, but before the marriage Michal fell violently in love with the young hero. The marriage with her elder sister was at once put aside. Saul caught at the opportunity of exposing his rival to the risk of death. The price fixed on Michal's hand was the slaughter of a hundred Philistines. David by a brilliant feat doubled the tale of victims, and Michal became his wife. Shortly afterward she saved David from the assassins whom her father had sent to take his life (1 Sam. xix. 11-17). When the rupture between Saul and David had become open, she was married to Phalti or Phaltiel of Gallim (1 Sam. xxv. 44). After the death of her father and brothers at Gilboa, David compelled her new husband to surrender Michal to him (2 Sam. iii. 13-16).

Mid'ian. A son of Abraham and Keturah (Gen. xxv. 2; 1 Chron. i. 32), progenitor of the Midianites. Midian is first mentioned, as a people, when Moses fled, having killed the Egyptian, to the "land of Midian" (Ex. ii. 15), and married a daughter of a priest of Midian (21). The "land of Midian," or the portion of it specially referred to, was probably the peninsula of Sinai.

Mig'dol. A frontier fortress of the Egyptians, on the route of the children of Israel in their exodus.

Mill. A measure of length, containing a thousand paces. Eight stadia or furlongs make a mile. The Romans measured by miles, the Greeks by furlongs. The furlong was a hundred and twenty-five paces; the pace was five feet. The ancient Hebrews had neither miles, furlongs nor feet, but only the cubit, the reed and the line.

Mill'e-tus (Acts x. 15, 17, less correctly called Mill'e-tum in 2 Tim. iv. 20). In the context of Acts xx. 6 we have the geographical relations of Miletus brought out as distinctly as if it were St. Luke's purpose to state them. As to the history of Miletus itself, it was more famous before St. Paul's day than afterward. In early times it was the most flourishing city of the Ionian Greeks. It was absorbed in the Persian empire.

Mill. The mills of the ancient Hebrews differed little from those now in use in the East. These consist of two upper and lower circular stones, about eighteen inches or two feet in diameter, the lower of which is fixed. The upper has a hole in it through which the grain passes, and about which the upper stone is turned by means of an upright handle fixed near the edge. It is worked by women, singly or two together, who are usually seated on the ground (Isa. xlviii. 1, 2).

Mill'et (Ezek. iv. 9). A kind of maize, so called from its quantity of grains. In Latin it is called millium, as if one stalk bore a thousand seeds. When made into bread with camel's milk, oil, butter or grease, it is almost the only food which is eaten by the common people in Arabia Felix. It is also used in Palestine and Syria, and it generally yields much more than any other kind of grain.

Mir'acle. This word is the usual translation of the Greek word Semeion, which signifies "a sign." A miracle is a plain and manifest exercise by a man, or by God at the call of a man, of those powers which belong only to the Creator. The divinity of our Saviour was proved by the miracles he wrought. Their object was to confirm a doctrine becoming the glorious attributes of God, and the accomplishment of prophecies concerning the Messiah, whose coming, it was foretold, should be with miraculous power (John iii. 2, 9, 16).

Mi'tre. A sacerdotal ornament worn on the head by the ancient Jewish high priest. The top is cleft in the middle, and rises in two points (Ex. xxviii. 4).

Mir'iam. The sister of Moses, was the eldest of that sacred family; and she first appears, probably as a young girl, watching her infant brother's cradle in the Nile (Ex. ii. 4), and suggesting her mother as a nurse (ib. 7). "The sister of Aaron" is her biblical distinction (Ex. xv. 20). In Num. xii. 1 she is placed before Aaron, and in Mic. vi. 4 reckoned as amongst the Three Deliverers. "Miriam the prophetess" is her acknowledged title (Ex. xv. 20). She took the lead, with Aaron, in the complaint against Moses for his marriage with a Cushite (Num. xii. 1, 2). A stern rebuke was administered. The hateful Egyptian leprosy broke out over the whole person of the proud prophetess. This stroke, and its removal, which took place at Hazeroth, form the last public event of Miriam's life. She died at Kadesh, and was buried there (Num. xx. 1). Her tomb was shown near Petra in the days of Jerome. According to Josephus, she was married to the famous Hur, and, through him, was grandmother of the architect Bezaleel.

Mir'ror. Two Hebrew words in Ex. xxxviii. 8 and Job xxxvii. 18 are rendered "looking-glass," but from the context evidently denote a mirror of polished metal.

Mite. A coin current in Palestine in the time of our Lord (Mark xii. 41-44; Luke xxi. 1-4). It seems in Palestine to have been the smallest piece of money, being half of the farthing, which was a coin of very low value (Luke xii. 59). It was equal to about one-sixth of our cent.

Miz'pah (literally, a pillar). A city eighteen miles northward of Jerusalem (Judg. xx. 1; 1 Sam. vii. 5, 6).

Miz'raim. The usual name of Egypt in the Old Testament.

Moab. 1. The son of Lot, born A. M. 2108. 2. The land called by his name, eastward and southward of the Dead Sea, has been lately explored, and is covered with evidences of former greatness. A multitude of ruins and sites are found, where there have been vast cities; the plains, though now deserted, are of the richest soil; and there are remains of highways completely paved with mile-stones, on which the distances can still be read. It was in its highest state of prosperity that the prophets foretold that it should be utterly desolate. Not one of its ancient cities is now tenanted by man (Jer. xlviii. 2-39; Amos ii. 2; Zeph. ii. 9).

Mo'tech. The fire-god Molech was the tutelary deity of the children of Ammon. The first direct historical allusion to Molech-worship is in the description of Solomon's idolatry in his old age (1 Kings xi. 7). Two verses before the same deity is called Milcom. The children were not burnt, but made to pass between two burning pyres as a purificatory rite. According to Jewish tradition, the image of Molech was of brass, hollow within, and was situated without Jerusalem.

Mon'ey. In ancient times it was dealt out by weight, and still is in Turkey, Syria, Egypt, China, Burmah, etc.; coins themselves being generally weighed by the merchant (Gen. xxiii. 9-16; Job vi. 2; Zech. xi. 12). The Persians began to use coined money about the time of Darius Hystaspes. The Greeks had no coin before the days of Alexander, nor the Egyptians before the Ptolemies, nor the Hebrews till the government of Judas Maccabeus. The coin called "a piece of money" was perhaps a shekel, or the Greek stater, in value fifty cents (Matt. xvii. 27). A pound was about sixty shekels. A penny was one-fourth of a shekel, or twelve cents of our money. A farthing was the fortieth part of a penny, or one-third of our cent (Matt. v. 26). A mite was half a farthing (Mark xii. 42).

Mon'ey-changers (Matt. xii. 12; Mark xi. 15; John ii. 15). The money-changers whom Christ, for their impiety, avarice and fraudulent dealing, expelled from the temple, were the dealers who supplied half shekels, for such a premium as they might be able to exact, to the Jews from all parts of the world, who were required to pay their tribute or ransom-money at Jerusalem in the Hebrew coin.

Month. A space of time which, if measured by the moon (whence its name), is called lunar, and if by the sun, is called solar. When we speak of Jewish months as corresponding to ours, some allowance must be made, for theirs were lunar, and ours are solar, which are not exactly alike.

Mor'decai. The deliverer, under Divine Providence, of the Jews from the destruction plotted against them by Haman, the chief minister of Xerxes. Three things are predicated of Mordecai: (1) That he lived in Shushan; (2) that his name was Mordecai, son of Jair, son of Shimei, son of Kish the Benjamite, who was taken captive with Jehoiahin; (3) that he brought up Esther. It is said of Mordecai that he knew the seventy languages, i. e., the languages of all the nations mentioned in Gen. x., which the Jews count as seventy nations, and that his age exceeded four hundred years.

Mori'ah. 1. THE LAND OF MORIAH. On "one of the mountains" in this district took place the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. xxii. 2). What the name of the mountain was we are not told, but it was a conspicuous one, visible from "afar off" (ver. 4). It is most natural to take the "land of Moriah" as the same district with that in which the "Oak of Moreh" was situated, and not as that which contains Jerusalem. 2. MOUNT MORIAH. The name ascribed in 2 Chron. iii. 1 only to the eminence on which Solomon built the temple, "where He appeared to David his father in a place which David prepared in the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite."

Mor'tar (Gen. xi. 3; Ex. i. 14; Lev. xiv. 42, 45; Isa. xlii. 25; Ezek. xliii. 10, 11, 14, 15; xxii. 28; Nah. iii. 14). The various compacting substances used in Oriental buildings appear to be—1. bitumen; 2. common mud or moistened clay; 3. a very firm cement of sand, ashes and lime, sometimes mixed and coated with oil, so as to be almost impenetrable to wet. In Assyrian and also Egyptian brick buildings stubble or straw, as hair or wool among ourselves, was added to increase the tenacity.

Moses (drawn). The legislator of the Jewish people, and in a certain sense the founder of the Jewish religion. The fact that he was of the tribe of Levi no doubt contributed to the selection of that tribe as the sacred caste. The story of his birth is thoroughly Egyptian in its scene. His extraordinary history embraces so large a space that we must content ourselves with referring the reader to it as contained in the first five books of the O. T.

Moth (Job iv. 19; xiii. 28; xxvii. 18; Psalm vi. 7; xxxi. 9, 10; xxxix. 11; Isaiah l. 9; Hosea v. 12). The clothes moth is the tinia argentea, of a white shining silver or pearl colour. It is clothed with shells, fourteen in number, and these are scaly. Albin asserts this to be the insect that eats woollen stuffs, and says that it is produced from a gray-speckled moth that flies by night, creeps among woollens, and there lays her eggs, which, after a little time, are hatched as worms, and in this state they feed on their habitation till they change into a chrysalis, and thence emerge into moths.

Mourn'ing. The Jews made great lamentation over the dead. Tearing the hair, uttering cries, striking the breast, wearing sackcloth, sprinkling dust on the head and fasting were common in case of death. Mourners were hired, who in melancholy songs and dolorous ejaculations excited the sympathy of spectators (Jer. ix. 17, 18; Amos v. 16; Matt. ix. 23).

Mul'berry trees (2 Sam. v. 23, 24, and 1 Chron. xiv. 14). Though there is no evidence to show that the mulberry tree occurs in the Hebrew Bible, yet the fruit of this tree is mentioned in 1 Macc. vi. 34.

Mule. We do not read of mules till the time of David. After this time horses and mules are in Scripture often mentioned together. In Solomon's time it is possible that mules from Egypt occasionally accompanied the horses which we know the king of Israel obtained from that country. Mules are incorrectly mentioned in Gen. xxxvi. 24.

And the Hebrew word yémim, there translated "mules," probably means "warm springs," as the Vulg. has it.

Mur'rain. A disease which smote the cattle of the Egyptians, and is rapid and destructive in its progress. As in Europe epidemic distempers in cattle have been known to advance over a country at the rate of a certain number of miles in a day, they have been supposed to be caused by flying insects.

Mus'tard (Matt. xiii. 32; xvii. 20; Mark iv. 31; Luke xiii. 19; xvii. 6). The mustard seed, though it be not simply and in itself the smallest of seeds, yet may be very well believed to be smallest of such as are apt to grow unto a ligneous substance and become a kind of tree. Scheuchzer describes a species of mustard which grows several feet high, with a tapering stalk, and spreads into many branches, and Linnaeus mentions a species whose branches were real wood, which he names Sinapi erucoides.

Myrrh. A gum common in Arabia, Egypt and Abyssinia. The ancients used it as a perfume and for embalming. It is bitter, whence it is called gall; and being supposed to have a property like opium, it was anciently administered to alleviate anguish. Hence some one benevolently offered it to Christ, but he declined it (Mark xv. 23).

Myr'tle. A beautiful plant in the East. In some places its berries are used as spice. In Greece and Italy its leaves are often used for tanning. The blossoms are white and fragrant. In this climate its size is diminutive; but in the Levant it attains the height of eight or ten feet. The Church is compared to the myrtle (Isa. lv. 13).

N.

Na'amah (loveliness). 1. Daughter of Lamech by his wife Zillah, and sister to Tubal-cain (Gen. iv. 22, only). 2. Mother of King Rehoboam (1 Kings xiv. 21, 31; 2 Chron. xii. 13). She was one of the foreign women whom Solomon took into his establishment (1 Kings xi. 1).

Na'aman. 1. "Naaman the Syrian" (Luke iv. 27). A Jewish tradition identifies him with the archer whose arrow struck Ahab and "gave deliverance to Syria." Naaman was commander-in-chief of the army, and was nearest to the person of the king. He was afflicted with a leprosy of the white kind, which had hitherto defied cure. The circumstances of his visit to Elisha and his remarkable cure are too familiar to Bible readers to require repetition here. 2. One of the family of Benjamin who came down to Egypt with Jacob (Gen. xlv. 21). He was the son of Bela, and head of the Naamites (Num. xxvi. 40; 1 Chron. viii. 3, 4).

Na'bal (fool). A sheepmaster on the confines of Judea. His wealth consisted chiefly of sheep and goats (1 Sam. xxv. 7, 15, 16). Once a year there was a grand banquet on Carmel, "like the feast of a king" (xxv. 2, 4, 36). On one of these occasions Nabal refused to recognize the demand of the ten petitioners (xxv. 10, 11) from David's encampment. David made the fatal vow of extermination (xxv. 22). Abigail, Nabal's wife, appeared, threw herself on her face before him and poured forth her petition. She returned with the news of David's recantation of his vow. Nabal was at the height of his orgies, and his wife dared not communicate either his danger or his escape (xxv. 36). At break of day she told him both. The stupid reveller was suddenly roused. "His heart died within him, and he became as a stone." Ten days he lingered, "and the Lord smote Nabal, and he died" (xxv. 37, 38).

Na'both. Victim of Ahab and Jezebel, was the owner of a small vineyard at Jezreel, close to the royal palace of Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 1, 2). The king offered an equivalent in money or another vineyard in exchange for this. Naboth refused. "Jehovah forbid it to me that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee." Ahab was cowed by this reply, but the proud spirit of Jezebel was roused. She had Naboth and his children (2 Kings ix. 26) dragged out of the city and despatched on the false charge of blasphemy.

Na'dab (liberal). 1. The eldest son of Aaron and Elisheba (Ex. vi. 23; Num. iii. 2). He, his father and brother, and seventy old men of Israel were led out from the midst of the assembled people (Ex. xxiv. 1), and were commanded to stay and worship God "afar off," below the lofty summit of Sinai, where Moses alone was to come near to the Lord. Subsequently (Lev. x. 1), Nadab and his brother were struck dead before the sanctuary by fire from the Lord. Their offence was kindling the incense in their censers with "strange" fire, i. e., not taken from that which burned perpetually (Lev. vi. 13) on the altar. 2. King Jeroboam's son, who succeeded to the throne of Israel, B. C. 954, and reigned two years (1 Kings xv. 25-31).

Nag'ge. One of the ancestors of Christ (Luke iii. 25). It represents the Heb. Nogah (1 Chron. iii. 7) of the Macedonian dynasty.

Naha'liel (torrents of God). One of the halting-places of Israel in the latter part of their progress to Canaan (Num. xxi. 19).

Na'hash (serpent). 1. King of the Ammonites, who dictated to the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead that cruel alternative of the loss of their right eyes or slavery which roused the swift wrath of Saul and caused the destruction of the Ammonite force (1 Sam. xi. 1, 2-11). 2. A person mentioned (2 Sam. xvii. 25) in stating the parentage of Amasa, the commander-in-chief of Absalom's army.

Na'hor. The name of two persons in the family of Abraham: 1. His grandfather, the son of Serug and father of Terah (Gen. xi. 22-25). 2. Grandson of the preceding, son of Terah and brother of Abraham and Haran (Gen. xi. 26, 27). He married Milcah, the daughter of his brother Haran. He was the father of twelve sons; eight of them were the children of his wife, and four of a concubine (Gen. xxii. 21-24).

Nah'shon, or Naash'on. Son of Amminadab. His sister, Elisheba, was wife to Aaron, and his son, Salmon, was husband to Rahab after the taking of Jericho. He died in the wilderness (Num. xxvi. 64, 65).

Na'hum (consolation). Nahum "the Elkoshite," the seventh of the minor prophets. His personal history is quite unknown. It is most probable that Nahum flourished in the latter half of the reign of Hezekiah, and wrote his prophecy either in Jerusalem or its neighbourhood.

Nail. A term by which two different Hebrew words are rendered in our translation; one (yathed) a common nail or tent-pin (Isa. xxii. 23), the other (mismar) an ornamental or large-headed nail (1 Chron. xxii. 3). Chardin says that in the East nails are not driven into walls with a hammer, stone and mortar being too hard and the clay of common houses too friable, but they are fixed in the wall when built, which explains Isa. xxii. 23.

Na'in. A city of Palestine, in which Jesus restored the widow's son to life as they were carrying him out to be buried.

Na'omi. With her husband Elimelech she retired to the land of Moab, because of a famine in Canaan, where their two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, married Orpah and Ruth. After about ten years, Elimelech and his sons died without children. The return of Naomi to her country, and her subsequent history, are narrated in the book of Ruth.

Naph'tali. The fifth son of Jacob, the second child borne to him by Bilhah, Rachel's slave. His birth and the bestowal of his name are recorded in Gen. xxx. 8. At the migration to Egypt four sons are attributed to Naphtali (Gen. xlvi. 24; Ex. i. 4; 1 Chron. vii. 13). When the census was taken at Mount Sinai the tribe numbered no less than fifty-three thousand four hundred fighting men (Num. i. 43; ii. 30).

Narcis'sus. A dweller at Rome (Rom. xvi. 11); some members of the household were known as Christians to St. Paul.

Na'than. A prophet of the Lord, who appeared in Israel in the time of King David. His country is unknown. We first find him mentioned in 2 Sam. vii. 3, etc. Again in the affair of David and Bathsheba he faithfully reproved the king for his wicked conduct (2 Sam. xii. 1-14). And when Adonijah began to form a party in opposition to his brother Solomon, Nathan repaired to Bathsheba and to the king, and procured Solomon to be immediately anointed king of Israel.

Nathan'ael. A disciple of our Lord. Upon

Jesus saying to him, "Before Philip called thee, I saw thee under the fig tree," Nathanael, convinced, by some circumstance not explained, of his omniscience, exclaimed, "Master, thou art the Son of God and the King of Israel." Many have thought that Nathanael was the same as Bartholomew. We read at the end of St. John's Gospel that our Saviour, after his resurrection, manifested himself to Peter, Thomas, Nathanael and the sons of Zebedee, as they were fishing in the Lake of Gennesaret. We know no other circumstances of the life of this holy man.

Naz'arenes, or Naz'aræans. A name originally given to Christians in general, on account of Jesus Christ's being of the city of Nazareth; but it was, in the second century, restricted to certain Judaizing Christians, who blended Christianity and Judaism together.

Naz'areth. The ordinary residence of our Saviour, is not mentioned in the Old Testament, but occurs first in Matt. ii. 23. It is situated among the south ridges of Lebanon. Of the identification of the ancient site there can be no doubt. The name of the present village is en-Nāzirah—the same, therefore, as of old. The modern Nazareth has a population of three or four thousand; a few are Mohammedans, the rest Latin and Greek Christians. The origin of the disrepute in which Nazareth stood (John i. 47) is not certainly known.

Neap'olis. The place in Northern Greece where Paul and his associates first landed in Europe (Acts xvi. 11). Philippi being an inland town, Neapolis was evidently the port, and is represented by the present Kavalla.

Ne'bo. 1 (Deut. xxxii. 49). One of the summits of the mountains of Abarim, the peak of which overlooked the promised land (Deut. xxxiv. 1-4). This pinnacle has not been fully identified by modern travellers. 2 (Jer. xlviii. 1). A town in the neighbourhood of Mount Nebo (Num. xxxii. 38; Isa. xv. 2; Jer. xlviii. 22). 3. The name of an idol (Isa. xlvi. 1) worshipped by the Assyrians.

Nebuchadnezzar, or Nebuchadrezzar. The most powerful of Babylonian kings. His father, Nabopolassar, having raised an immense army to quell a revolt of the Syrians, Phœnicians, etc., he

About A. M. 3399 his father died, and he became king of Babylon. In the second year of his reign he had a surprising dream, but entirely forgot it. All the diviners being applied to in vain, Daniel declared to him both the dream and the interpretation. He was so astonished, and yet so convinced of the truth, that he fell on his face before Daniel, and acknowledged his God to be the God of gods and Lord of kings. He made Daniel chief of the wise men and governor of the province of Babylon, and made Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego subordinate governors in the same place (Dan. ii.) Toward the close of his life he fell into that species of hypochondriacal monomania which leads the patient to believe that he is some animal or utensil, and to act accordingly. During this period (about seven years) he thought himself an ox, and dwelt in the fields. He recovered, but we have no account of his subsequent life.

Neg'inoth. Stringed instruments. This title to some of the Psalms implies a sort of direction to the chief performer on instruments.

Nehemi'ah. The author of the book which bears his name. He was of the tribe of Judah, and was so distinguished as to be selected for the office of cup-bearer to the king of Persia. He was made governor of Judea, and his book gives an account of his appointment and administration through a space of about thirty-six years, to A. M. 3595, at which time the Scripture history closes. The book of Nehemiah is certainly not all by the same hand. The principal portion is the work of Nehemiah. The main history contained in the book of Nehemiah covers from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes Longimanus—i. e., from B. C. 445 to 423. The book also throws much light upon the domestic institutions of the Jews.

Ne'hiloth (Ps. v.). It is most likely that Ne'hiloth is the general term for perforated wind-instruments of all kinds.

Nehush'tan. The name by which the brazen serpent made by Moses in the wilderness (Num. xxi. 9) was worshipped in the time of Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 4).

Ne'reus. A Christian at Rome, saluted by St.

NAZARETH, THE HOME OF JESUS FROM INFANCY TO MANHOOD.

was appointed to its command, and with it not only subdued those provinces, but overran Canaan, Moab, Ammon, Assyria, Egypt, etc., and made them tributary. He carried to Babylon, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, whom he called Beltshazzar, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. These he caused to be trained up in all the learning of the Chaldeans, that they might serve in the court (2 Kings xxiv.; Dan. i.) He twice afterward invaded and chastised Judea, and carried away into captivity many Jews, among whom was Ezekiel the prophet (2 Chron. xxxvi.; Ezek. xxv. 35).

Paul (Rom. xvi. 15). According to tradition, he was beheaded at Terracina.

Ner'gal. One of the chief Assyrian and Babylonian deities. It seems to have corresponded closely to the classical Mars (2 Kings xvii. 30).

Ner'gal-share'zer (Jer. xxxix. 3, 13). Two persons of this name accompanied Nebuchadnezzar on his last expedition against Jerusalem. One is not marked by any title, but the other has the distinction of Rab-mag, and it is to him alone that any interest attaches. In Scripture he appears among the persons who, by command of Nebuchadnezzar, released Jeremiah from prison. Profane history gives us reason to believe that he was of great importance, and afterward mounted the Babylonian throne.

Neth'inims. Servants who had been given up to the service of the tabernacle and temple, to perform the meanest and most laborious services therein, in supplying wood and water. At first the

ASSYRIAN STATUE OF NEBO.

Gibeonites were appointed to this service (Joshua ix. 27). Afterward, the Canaanites who surrendered themselves and whose lives were spared. The Nethinims were carried into captivity with the tribe of Judah, and there were great numbers of them near the coast of the Caspian Sea, from whence Ezra brought some of them back (Ezra viii. 17). After the return from the captivity they dwelt in the cities appointed them (Ezra ii. 17).

Net'tle. The Hebrew word so translated in Job xxx. 7; Prov. xxiv. 31 was perhaps some species of wild mustard. The Hebrew word translated nettle in Isa. xxxiv. 13; Hos. ix. 6; Prov. xxiv. 31 may be understood to denote some species of nettle (Urtica).

Nica'nor. 1. Son of Patroclus (2 Macc. viii. 9), and a general (1 Macc. iii. 38; iv. vii. 26, 49). 2. One of the first seven deacons (Acts vii. 5).

Nicode'mus. A disciple of Jesus Christ, a Jew by nation and a Pharisee (John iii. 1, etc.) When the priests and Pharisees had sent officers to seize Jesus, Nicodemus declared himself openly in his favour (John vii. 45, etc.), and still more so when he went with Joseph of Arimathea to pay the last duties to his body, which they took down from the cross, embalmed and laid in a sepulchre.

Nicola'itans. A sect mentioned in Rev. ii. 6, 15, but not in any way identified with Nicolas. It would seem from Rev. ii. 14 that the Nicolaitans held that it was lawful "to eat things sacrificed to idols and to commit fornication," in opposition to the decree of the Church rendered in Acts xv. 20, 29.

Nic'olas (Acts vi. 5). A native of Antioch and a proselyte to the Jewish faith. He was chosen by the whole multitude of the disciples to be one of the first seven deacons, and he was ordained by the apostles.

Nicop'olis. Mentioned in Tit. iii. 12 as the place where St. Paul was intending to pass the coming winter. Nothing is found in the Epistle to determine which Nicopolis is intended. One Nicopolis was in Thrace; the other, the Pauline Nicopolis, was the celebrated city of Epirus.

Ni'ger. The additional or distinctive name given to the Simeon who was one of the teachers and prophets in the Church at Antioch (Acts xiii. 1).

Night-hawk (Lev. xi. 18; Deut. xiv. 15). A voracious bird, flying at night; it seems to be the Strix orientalis which is thus described. It is of the size of the owl, and lodges in the large buildings or ruins of Egypt and Syria, and even in dwelling-houses. It is extremely voracious in Syria, so that if care is not taken at night it enters the houses and kills the children.

Nile. The great river of Egypt. It is spoken of under the name of Sihor and "the river of Egypt" (Gen. xv. 18). The Nile is constantly before us in the history of Israel in Egypt. Into it the male children were cast; in it, or rather in some canal or pool, was the ark of Moses put, and found by Pharaoh's daughter when she went down to bathe. When the plagues were sent, the sacred river—a main support of the people—and its waters everywhere were turned into blood.

Nim'rim, The Waters of. A stream or brook in Moab, mentioned in the denunciations of that nation by Isaiah (xv. 6) and Jeremiah (xlviii. 34).

Nim'rod. Supposed to have been the son of Cush (Gen. x. 8). Nimrod, upon the dispersion of the main body of the Cushites, remained behind and founded an empire in Babylonia by usurping the property of the Arphaxadites in the land of Shinar, where "the beginning of his kingdom was Babel," or Babylon, and other towns, and he next invaded Assyria, east of the Tigris, where he built Nineveh and other towns.

Nin'veh. A city of Assyria, and the capital of that empire till Esar-haddon conquered Babylon. It was founded by Ashur, the son of Shem (Gen. x. 11), and became one of the largest cities in the world. It was utterly destroyed by the Medes; was afterward rebuilt, but finally destroyed by the Saracens. It is now called Mosul. The circumference of Nineveh was sixty miles. Jonah was three days in going round to proclaim its overthrow, twenty miles being as much as he could leisurely Ni'tre. Occurs in Prov. xxv. 20, "and as vinegar upon nitre," and in Jer. ii. 22. The substance denoted is not nitrate of potassa—"saltpetre"—but the nitrum of the Latins, and the natron or native carbonate of soda of modern chemistry.

No'ah. The tenth in descent from Adam in the line of Seth, was the son of Lamech and grandson of Methuselah. Of Noah himself we hear nothing till he is five hundred years old, when it is said he begat three sons, Shem, Ham and Japhet. Of his life we are told but little. St. Peter calls him "a preacher of righteousness" (2 Pet. ii. 5). Besides this we are merely told that he had three sons, each of whom had married a wife; that he built the ark in accordance with divine direction; and that he was six hundred years old when the Flood came (Gen. vi., vii.). Both about the ark and the Flood so much is to be said that the reader will find it profitable to refer to the sacred text.

No-a'mon (Nah. iii. 8), or No (Jer. xvi. 25; Ezek. xxx. 14, 15, 16). A city of Egypt, better known under the name of Thebes. It seems that No is a Shemitic name, and that Amon is added in Nalium to distinguish Thebes from some other place bearing the same name, or on account of the connection of Amon with that city.

Nob (1 Sam. xxiii. 11; Neh. xi. 32). A city on some eminence near Jerusalem. It was one of the places where the tabernacle or ark of Jehovah was kept for a time during the days of its wanderings (2 Sam. vi. 1, etc.). But the event for which Nob was most noted in Scripture was a frightful massacre in the reign of Saul (1 Sam. xxii. 17-19).

No'e. The patriarch Noah (Tob. iv. 12; Matt. xxiv. 37, 38; Luke iii. 36; xvii. 26, 27).

Noph. [See MEMPHIS.]

Num'bers. The fourth book of the Pentateuch, which receives its denomination from the numbering of the families of Israel by Moses and Aaron. A great part is historical, and the book comprehends the history of about thirty-eight years.

Nurse. It is clear, both from Scripture and from Greek and Roman writers, that in ancient times the position of a nurse was one of much honour and importance (Gen. xxiv. 59; xxxv. 8; 2 Sam. iv. 4; 2 Kings xi. 2; 3 Macc. i. 20).

ABRAHAM'S OAK, NEAR HEERON.

walk in a day. The destruction of Nineveh fulfilled the prophecies in Jonah iii.; Nah. 2 and 3; Zeph. ii. 13.

Nis'roch. An idol of Nineveh, in whose temple Sennacherib was worshipped when assassinated by his sons, Adrammelech and Sharezer (2 Kings xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 38). The word signifies "the great eagle."

Nuts (Gen. xliii. 11). Generally supposed to have been what are now known as pistachio or pistacia nuts, which were produced in great perfection—plentifully in Syria, but not in Egypt. This nut is of an oblong shape, and in its green state of exquisite taste. Another and distinct Hebrew term, rendered "nuts" in Cant. vi. 11, is supposed to refer to the fruit known as walnuts.

O.

Oak. Probably two species of oak are denoted by the Hebrew terms thus translated—the Quercus pseudo-coccifera, and one of the deciduous kinds. The oaks of Bashan (Isa. ii. 13; Ezek. xxvii. 6; Zech. xi. 2) belong probably to the species known as Quercus ægilops, the Vilonia oak, which is said to be common in Bashan and Gilead. Another species of oak is the Quercus infectoria. Sacrifices were offered under oaks (Isa. i. 29; Hos. iv. 14); of oak timber the Tyrians made oars (Ezek. xxvii. 6) and idolaters images (Isa. xlv. 14); under the shade of oaks the dead were sometimes interred (Gen. xxxv. 8; 1 Sam. xxxi. 13).

Obadi'ah (servant of the Lord). The fourth of the twelve minor prophets. We know nothing of him except what is contained in the short book bearing his name. The book of Obadiah is a sustained denunciation of the Edomites, melting into a vision of the future glories of Zion, when the arm of the Lord should have wrought her deliverance and have repaid double upon her enemies.

O'bed. 1. The son of Boaz by Ruth, and father of Jesse (Ruth iv. 17, 21, 22; 1 Chron. ii. 12; Matt. i. 5; Luke iii. 32). 2. One of Judah's posterity (1 Chron. ii. 37, 38). 3. One of David's warriors (xi. 47). 4. A Levite porter (xxvi. 7). 5. A person whose son Jehoiada associated with himself (2 Chron. xxiii. 1).

O'bed-e'dom. 1. A person in whose house, after the death of Uzzah, the ark was deposited, and on whom in consequence God's blessing rested. 2. An officer or treasurer of the temple in the time of King Amaziah (2 Chron. xxv. 24).

Og. An Amoritish king of Bashan, whose rule extended over sixty cities (Josh. xiii. 12). He was one of the last representatives of the giant race of Rephaim, and was, with his people, exterminated by the Israelites at Edrei (Deut. iii. 1-13; Num. xxxii. 33). The belief in Og's enormous stature is corroborated by an appeal to his iron bedstead preserved in "Rabbath of the children of Ammon" (Deut. iii. 11).

Oil. The Hebrews commonly anointed themselves with oil; also their kings, prophets and high priests with an unction of peculiar richness and sacredness. The oil of gladness (Ps. xlv. 7; Isa. lxi. 3) was the perfumed oil with which the Hebrews anointed themselves on days of rejoicing and festivity. Oil was also used for food and medicine (Deut. xxxii. 13; James v. 14).

Oint'ment. Ointments and oils were used in warm countries after bathing; and as oil was the first recipient of fragrance, probably from herbs, etc., steeped in it, many kinds of unguents not made of oil (olive oil) retained that appellation. Ointments were also used to anoint dead bodies. As the plants imparted somewhat of their color as well of their fragrance, hence the expression green oil, etc., in the Hebrew.

Olives, the Mount of; Olivet, Mount. A mountain ridge to the east of Jerusalem, from which it is separated by the Valley of Jehoshaphat. It is described as having four summits. These are design-nated—(1) the "Galilee," because there it is supposed the angels stood when saying, 'Ye men of Galilee;' (2) the "Ascension," the supposed site of that event; (3) the "Prophets," from the catacombs on its side, termed the "prophets' tombs;" and (4) the "Mount of Offence," denominated from Solomon's idol-worship. The Mount of Olives, called also Olivet, was so styled from the olive trees which clothed its sides. Some of these still remain, and on part of the hill are corn-fields, and in a few half-cultivated gardens are fig and pomegranate trees. It is from the New Testament that this mount derives its most touching interest. Hither the Lord was wont to resort. From Olivet he looked down upon the rebellious city and wept bitter tears over its perverseness and its fate. Over Olivet he passed to and fro visiting Bethany. On the side of Olivet was Gethsemane. From Olivet, when all was done, the great atonement made, the victory over death achieved by the glorious resurrection, the last charge given to the disciples, who were thenceforth to build up the impregnable fortress of the Christian Church, Christ ascended to reign till every enemy should be subdued beneath his feet (Matt. xxiv. 3; xxv. 30).

Olive tree. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans (xi. 24), distinguishes two kinds of olive trees—(1) the wild, and (2) those under culture. The cultivated olive tree is of a moderate height, its trunk knotty, its bark smooth and ash-coloured; its wood is solid and yellowish, and the leaves are oblong. In the month of June it puts out white flowers in bunches. The fruit is oblong and plump. It is first green, then pale, and when it is quite ripe, black. In the flesh of it is enclosed a hard stone, full of an oblong seed. The wild olive is smaller in all its parts. Canaan much abounded with olives. Almost all proprietors, whether kings or subjects, had their oliveyards.

O'mega. [See ALPHA.]

Om'ri. "Captain of the host" to Elah, and afterward himself king of Israel. When Elah was murdered by Zimri at Tirzah, the army proclaimed Omri king. Thereupon he attacked Tirzah, where Zimri was holding his court as king of Israel. The city was taken, and Zimri perished in the flames of the palace. The probable date of the beginning of Omri's sole reign was B. C. 931, and of his death, B. C. 919.

On. A town of Lower Egypt, mentioned also in the Bible under the name of Beth-shemesh (Jer. xliii. 13). On is better known under its Greek name, Heliopolis. It was situated about twenty miles north-east of Memphis. The chief object of worship at Heliopolis was the sun, whose temple is now only represented by a single beautiful obelisk, which is of red granite, sixty-eight feet two inches high above the pedestal. Heliopolis was anciently famous for its learning. The first mention of this place in the Bible is in Gen. xii. 45; comp. ver. 50 and xlv. 20.

O'nan. Second son of Judah by the Canaanitess (Gen. xxxviii. 4; 1 Chron. ii. 3). "What he did was evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and He slew him also," as he had slain his elder brother (Gen. xxxviii. 9).

Ones'imus. The slave of Philemon, who had fled from his master, but was converted by St. Paul, who sent him back from Rome with a letter to Philemon (Col. iv. 9; Philm. 10).

Onesiph'orus. A Christian who had been serviceable to St. Paul at Ephesus. He also sought him out when a prisoner at Rome, and ministered to him (2 Tim. i. 16-18; iv. 19).

Oni'as. The name of five high priests in the period between the Old and New Testaments.

On'ion. One of the plants which the Israelites in the wilderness regretted the loss of (Num. xi. 5). The onion has been cultivated in Egypt from time immemorial, and there attains its greatest excellence. It is milder and less pungent than that of this country.

O'nyx. A precious stone, taking its name from its colour resembling the finger nails. What it was is very uncertain; probably a variety of the agate or the chalcedony.

O'phir. 1. The son of Joktan. 2. A seaport or region somewhere in India, the gold of which was renowned even in the time of Job (ch. xxii. 24; xxviii. 16). From the time of David to the time of Jehoshaphat, the Hebrews traded with it. In Solomon's time the Hebrew fleet took up three years in its voyage to Ophir, and brought home gold, apes, peacocks, spices, ivory, ebony and almag trees (1 Kings ix. 28; x. 11; xxii. 48; 2 Chron. ix. 10).

Oph'rah. 1. A town in the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 23; 1 Sam. xiii. 17). 2. More fully Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites, the native place of Gideon (Judg. vi. 11), the scene of his exploits against Baal (ver. 24), his residence after his accession to power (ix. 5), and the place of his burial in the family sepulchre (viii. 32).

O'reb. One of the chieftains of the Midianite host which was defeated and driven back by Gideon.

Or'gan (Gen. iv. 21; Job. xxi. 12; xxx. 31; Ps. ci. 4). The Hebrew word 'ûgâb or 'uggâb, thus rendered, probably denotes a pipe or perforated wind-instrument, as the root indicates. In Gen. iv. 21 it appears to be a generic term for all wind-instruments.

Ori'on. That the constellation known to the Hebrews by the name cesil is the same as that which the Greeks called Orion, and the Arabs "the giant," there seems little reason to doubt (Job x. 9; xxxviii. 31; Amos v. 8).

Or'pah. A Moabite woman, wife of Chilion, son of Naomi, and thereby sister-in-law to Ruth (Ruth i. 4, 14).

Os'sifrage. An unclean bird (Lev. xi. 13; Deut. xiv. 12), believed to be the limnergeyer of the Germans, and in English nomenclature the bearded vulture. It is large and powerful, measuring four feet from the point of the bill to the end of the tail; the head and neck are covered with whitish narrow feathers. This formidable bird attacks the wild goat, young deer, sheep, calves, etc. It is found in the highest mountains of Europe, Asia and Africa, and is not uncommon in the East.

Os'trich. The ostrich is a native of Africa and of the Arabian and Syrian deserts. Several female ostriches lay their eggs in a single nest, a mere shallow hole in the sand, and then carefully cover them. In very hot climates the sun's heat on them is sufficient in the daytime without incubation by the parent birds, but in less sultry regions both male and female are said to sit upon the eggs.

Oth'niel. The first mention of Othniel is on the occasion of the taking of Debir. Debir was included in the mountainous territory near Hebron, and in order to stimulate the valour of the assailants, Caleb promised his daughter Aehsah to whosoever should assault and take the city. Othniel won the prize. The next mention of him is in Judg.

iii. 9, where he appears as the first judge of Israel after the death of Joshua, and their deliverer from the oppression of Chushan-rishathaim. This, with his genealogy (1 Chron. iv. 13, 14), which assigns him a son, Hathath, is all that we know of Othniel.

Ov'en. A place for baking food. Some ovens were dug in the ground, others were similar to American ovens. Some were like a pitcher, the fire being put inside, and the dough, spread thin less than one hundred and forty miles in length, and barely forty in average breadth, on the very frontier of the East.

Palm, Palm tree. Palm trees abounded formerly in Judea. Phœnicia is so called as the palm country, phoinix or phenix being the Greek for palm. Jericho again was celebrated for its palm groves, so that it was termed "the city of palm trees" (Deut. xxxiv. 3; Judg. iii. 13; 2 Chron. xxviii. 15), and Bethany was "the house of Pa'radise. A word of Persian origin, and used in the Septuagint as the translation of Eden. [See EDEN.]

Pa'ran. Formed a part of Arabia Petrea (Deut. xxxiii. 2).

Parch'ment. [See WRITING.]

Par'menas. One of the seven deacons, "men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom" (Acts vi. 5). There is a tradition that he suffered martyrdom at Philippi in the reign of Trajan.

Par'thians. Occurs only in Acts ii. 9, where it designates Jews settled in Parthia. Parthia Proper was the region stretching along the southern flank of the mountains which separate the great Persian desert from the desert of Kharezm. Parthia was a power almost rivalling Rome. The Parthian dominion lasted for nearly five centuries, commencing in the third century before, and terminating in the third century after, our era.

Par'tridge (1 Sam. xxvi. 20; Jer. xvii. 11). The "hunting this bird upon the mountains" (1 Sam. xxvi. 20) entirely agrees with the habits of two well-known species of partridge, viz., Caccabis saxatilis (the Greek partridge) and Ammoperdix heyii.

Parva'im. The name of an unknown place or country whence the gold was procured for the decoration of Solomon's temple (2 Chron. iii. 6). We may notice the conjecture that it is a general term for the East.

Pass'over. A feast of the Jews in commemoration of the time when God, smiting the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the habitations of the Hebrews (Ex. xii.).

Pat'ara. A seaport of Lycia. Here was a famous temple of Apollo. Paul touched here in his way from Macedonia to Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 1).

Path'ros. A city or canton of Egypt, probably the Phaturis of Pliny. It had its name from Pathrusim, the fifth son of Mizraim, who built or peopled it (Gen. x. 14).

Pat'mos (Rev. i. 9). A rugged and bare island in that part of the Egean which is called the Icarian Sea. Patmos is divided into two parts by a narrow isthmus, where, on the east side, are the harbour and the town. On the hill to the south is a celebrated monastery which bears the name of "John the Divine." Halfway up the ascent is the cave or grotto where tradition says St. John received the Revelation.

Patri'arch. A venerable man with a large pos-over the outside, was baked in a few minutes. Fuel being scarce, as it is in all Eastern countries, dried cow-dung, stubble, stalks of flowers and grass were used (Lev. xi. 35; Matt. vi. 30).

Owl (Lev. xi. 16). Four different Hebrew words are rendered owl in our version. Though the owl is frequently mentioned in our Scriptures, it seldom denotes the bird known to us by this name. Some versions render the original words translated "great owl" (Lev. xi. 17) the ibis, and the "little owl" in the same passage some kind of water-bird. The "screech owl" (Isa. xxxiv. 14), rendered night-monster in the margin, must have resembled the barn owl, known to us as the common screech or white owl.

Ox. The male of horned cattle of the beef kind at full age, when fit for the plough. Younger ones are called bullocks. Michaelis, in his elaborate work on the laws of Moses, has proved that castration was never practiced. The rural economy of the Israelites led them to value the ox as by far the most important of domestic animals. For many ages the hopes of Oriental husbandmen depended entirely on its labours. The preparation of the ground in the time of spring depended chiefly on the ox. The divine law forbade to muzzle him, and, by consequence, to prevent him from eating what he would of the grain he was employed to separate from the husks. The ox was also compelled to the labor of dragging the cart or wagon. The number of oxen commonly yoked to one cart appears to have been two (Num. vii. 3, 7, 8; 1 Sam. vi. 7; 2 Sam. vi. 3, 6). The wild ox (tau, Deut. xiv. 5) is supposed to be the oryx of the Greeks, which is a species of large stag.

P.

Pa'dan-a'ram (the tableland of Aram). Another name for Mesopotamia.

Paint. The use of cosmetic dyes has prevailed more or less in all ages in Eastern countries.

Palesti'na and Pal'estine. The names applied to the country of Israel in the Bible and elsewhere. The history of the country is such that it is unnecessary to recapitulate it here. The land is not in size or physical characteristics proportioned to its moral and historical position as the theatre of the most momentous events in the world's history. It is but a strip of country about the size of Wales, dates." Few palms, however, are now left, except in gardens about Jerusalem and elsewhere, and in the Philistine plain. The palm furnishes several allusions for the sacred writers (Sol. Song vii. 6, 7; Gen. xxxviii. 6; 2 Sam. xiii. 1; xiv. 27). The Jews used palm branches as emblems of victory in their seasons of rejoicing (Lev. xxiii. 40; Neh. viii. 15; John xii. 13). In allusion to this Jewish custom, and to the giving of palms to victors in the games, the great company whom the apocalyptic writer saw had palms in their hands (Rev. vii. 9). In the medal of Vespasian the daughter of Judah is represented as mourning under a palm tree. It is an expressive and appropriate emblem.

Palm'er-worm (Heb. gázdm). Occurs in Joel i. 4; ii. 25; Am. iv. 9. It is maintained by many that gázdm denotes some species of locust, but it is more probably a caterpillar.

Pamphyl'ia. One of the coast regions in the south of Asia Minor. It was in Pamphylia that St. Paul first entered Asia Minor, after preaching the gospel in Cyprus. He and Barnabas sailed up the river Cestrus to Perga (Acts xiii. 13).

Pan'nag. An article of commerce exported from Palestine to Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 17), the nature of which is a pure matter of conjecture.

Pa'per. [See WRITING.]

Pa'phos. A town at the west end of Cyprus. Paul and Barnabas travelled on their first missionary expedition "through the isle," from Salamis at the east end to Paphos (Acts xiii. 6). The great characteristic of Paphos was the worship of Venus.

Par'able. A short, weighty similitude used to convey instruction to ignorant, prejudiced or inattentive hearers.

PLAIN AND OBELISK OF HELIOPOLIS OR ON.

terity. The word is chiefly applied to those who lived before Moses (Acts vii. 8), and hence we speak of the "patriarchal age."

Paul. He was of the tribe of Benjamin, born in Tarsus, which, as it was a free city of Rome, gave him the honour and advantage of Roman citizenship, though both of his parents were Jews. His name at first was Saul. He was sent to Jerusalem for his education, and became a very learned and prominent Pharisee. He was not converted till after our Saviour's death, which makes him speak of himself as "born out of due time." His wonderful labours and success are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. He was at last beheaded by Nero, at or near Rome, about A. D. 66. His numerous writings show him to have been eminently acquainted with both Hebrew and Greek learning.

Peacock. A beautiful bird, not known in Palestine till imported by Solomon (1 Kings x. 22). Its native country seems to be Persia and India.

Pearl. A hard, white, shining body, usually roundish, found in a shell-fish resembling an oyster.

OSTRICH, OR LAMMERGEYER.

The Oriental pearls have a fine polished gloss, and are tinged with an elegant blush of red. They are esteemed in the East beyond all other jewels. The finest pearls are fished up in the Persian Gulf and on the coast of Bahrein on the borders of Arabia. Pearls were well known to Job and the Hebrews. The Greek term, margarite, seems to be used in a more general sense for jewels or splendid gems.

Pekahiah. Son and successor of Menahem, was the seventeenth king of the separate kingdom of Israel (B. C. 759-757). After a brief reign of scarcely two years, a conspiracy was organized against him by Pekah, who murdered him and seized his throne.

Peleg. Whose name signifies division, was born one hundred years after the Flood. He was so named because in his days the earth was divided into nations in consequence of the confusion of tongues at the tower of Babel (Gen. x. 25).

Pe'ethites. [See CHERETHITES.]

Pe'ican (Lev. xi. 18; Deut. xiv. 17; Ps. cii. 7; Isa. xxxiv. 11; Zeph. ii. 14). An aquatic bird of the size of a large goose. Its colour is grayish white, with the neck a little yellowish and the middle of the back feathers blackish. The bill is long and hooked, and has under it a lax membrane. The voice of this bird is harsh and dissonant, and, some say, resembles that of a man grievously complaining. David compares his groaning to it (Ps. cii. 7).

Pen'iel. The name which Jacob gave to the place in which he had wrestled with God (Gen. xxxii. 30).

Pen'ny (denarius). A Roman coin equal in value to seven pence three farthings sterling, or twelve and a half cents.

Pen'tateuch, the. Is the Greek name given to the five books commonly called the "Five Books of Moses."

Pen'tecost. A feast of the Jews on the fiftieth day after the passover. It was a solemn thanksgiving for the harvest, and a grateful commemoration of their being delivered from Egyptian servitude and enjoying their property by reaping the fruits of their labours (Lev. xxiii. 10, 11, etc.).

Pe'or. A mountain in Moab, to the top of which the prophet Balaam was conducted by Balak for his final conjurations (Num. xxiii. 23).

Perfume. In the East, perfumes were used to testify great respect (Dan. ii. 46). The Hebrews had two sacred perfumes, one of incense, and the other an oil (Ex. xxx. 23-33). They were addicted to the perfuming of dead bodies, clothes, beds, etc. (Prov. vii. 17; Ps. xlv. 8; Song Sol. iii. 6).

Per'ga. A city of Pamphylia. Here Paul and Barnabas preached (Acts xiii. 14; xiv. 25), and to the end of the eighth century we find a Christian church here.

Per'gamos, or Per'gamum. An illustrious city of Mysia, on the river Caicus. It was famous for its vast library, a grove in which were the splendid temples of Zeus or Jupiter, of Athene or Minerva, and of Apollo, but more especially for the worship of Æsculapius, the remains of whose magnificent shrine may still be seen. The modern name is Bergamah. To the Church here one of the apocalyptic epistles was addressed (Rev. i. 11; ii. 12-17). In that epistle it is called "Satan's seat," respecting which there have been various conjectures.

Per'izzites. One of the devoted nations of Canaan. They were never fully extirpated. Solomon exacted tribute of them (2 Chron. viii. 7). So late as the days of Ezra we find them intermarried with the Jews (Ezra ix. 1).

Persep'olis (2 Mace. ix. 2). A celebrated city of Persia, the capital of Persia Proper and the frequent residence of Persian monarchs till the time of Alexander the Great, by whom it was wantonly fired. It seems in a degree to have recovered: its splendid remains are yet seen at a spot called Chehl-Minâr, "the forty pillars."

Per'sia, Per'sians. Persia Proper was a tract of no very large dimensions on the Persian Gulf. The only passage in Scripture where Persia designates the tract called "Persia Proper" is Ezek. xxxviii. 5. Elsewhere the empire is intended. The Persians were of the same race as the Medes, both being branches of the great Aryan stock. Their language was closely akin to the Sanskrit, or ancient language of India. Modern Persian is its degenerate representative, being, as it is, a motley idiom largely impregnated with Arabic.

Pe'stilence. A Scripture name for any prevailing contagious disease.

Pe'ter. His original name was Simon. He was the son of a man named Jonas, was born in Bethsaida and brought up a fisherman. He moved with his wife and family to Capernaum, and there it was that Christ sometimes made his home with them. After a life of exalted usefulness, he was crucified for his Master's sake, about A. D. 70. The two Epistles of Peter were written by him; the first, four or five years before the other. The first

THE OSTRICH OF THE DESERT.

Epistle is evidently addressed to converts from Judaism dwelling among heathen in the countries named in the first verse. The second Epistle was a long time regarded as spurious, and is not quoted by any Christian writer till the fourth century. Since then it has generally been received as genuine, but with less certainty of evidence than any other book in the Bible.

Pha'raoh. There are several kings of this name mentioned in Scripture: 1. He who took away Abraham's wife (Gen. xii.). 2. He who exalted Joseph (Gen. xli. 39). 3. He who first oppressed Israel (Ex. i. 8). 4. He who released Israel (Ex. v. 14). 5. He who gave his wife's sister in marriage to Hadad (1 Kings xi.). 6. Serechus, contemporary with Ahaz (2 Kings xvii. 4). 7. Tirhakah, who lived in the days of Hezekiah (2 Kings xix. 9; Isa. xxxvii. 9). 8. Pharaoh-necho, who set up Jehoia-kim to be king of Judea in place of Josiah, who was slain in the battle of Megiddo. 9. Pharaoh-hophra, called in profane history Apries, who made a league with Zedekiah, in consequence of which many of the Jews sought refuge in Egypt, and carried the prophet Jeremiah with them (Jer. xliii. 8-12 and xlii. 1). This Pharaoh died B. C. 570.

Pha'raoh's daughter. Three Egyptian princesses, daughters of Pharaohs, are mentioned in the Bible: 1. The preserver of Moses (Ex. ii. 5-10). 2. Bithiah, wife of Mered an Israelite (1 Chron. iv. 18). 3. A wife of Solomon (1 Kings iii. 1; vii. 8; iv. 24).

Pha'rez (Per'ez, 1 Chron. xxvii. 3; Pha'res, Matt. i. 3; Luke iii. 33; 1 Esd. v. 5). Twin son, with Zarah or Zerah, of Judah and Tamar his daughter-in-law. The circumstances of his birth are detailed in Gen. xxxviii. The house he founded was numerous and illustrious. Its fertility is alluded to in Ruth iv. 12. From two of his sons sprang the Hezronites and Hamulites. From Hezron's second son, Ram or Aram, sprang David and the kings of Judah, and eventually Jesus Christ.

Phar'isees. One of the most ancient and noted sects among the Jews, remarkable for their rigid way of living, fasting constantly every second and fifth day of the week, and submitting to many austerities. They studied the Law, were very exact in the outward observance of it, and pretended to more holiness than others. They corrupted the word of God by their expositions, and many of them were wicked men, though a majority may have lived as they professed.

Phar'par. The second of the "two rivers of Damascus" alluded to by Naaman (2 Kings v. 12). [See ABANA.]

Philadel'phia. A city of Lydia, at the foot of Mount Tmolus, twenty-eight miles south-east from Sardis. It was built by Attalus II. Philadelphus (158-138 B. C.), from whom it derives its name. Earthquakes were very prevalent here, and Philadelphia was more than once nearly destroyed by them. To the Church here an apocalyptic epistle was addressed (Rev. i. 11; iii. 7-13), conveying unqualified commendation, and over Philadelphia has been extended the hand of divine protection. Philadelphia is still a considerable town, named Allah-shar or Allah-shehr, with ruins of its ancient wall and of about twenty-five churches.

Phile'mon. The Christian to whom Paul addressed his Epistle in behalf of Onesimus. He lived in Colosse when the apostle wrote to him (Col. iv. 9). It is related that Philemon became bishop of Colosse, and died as a martyr under Nero. The Epistle was written by Paul about A. D. 63, or early in A. D. 64.

Phile'tus. [See HYMNÆUS.]

Phil'ip. Son of Herod the Great and Cleopatra. From him the city of Cæsarea Philippi received its name (Matt. xvi. 13, etc.)

Phil'ip. Another son of Herod, by his wife Mariamne. He was sometimes called Herod, and was the husband of Herodias. He was disinherited by his father, and lived a private life (Matt. xiv. 3, etc.)

Phil'ip the Apos'tle. He was a native of Bethsaida in Galilee. Some ancient historians say that he was the individual who requested of Jesus that he might "first go and bury his father" (Matt. viii. 21, 22).

Phil'ip the Evan'gelist. One of the seven deacons of the Church at Jerusalem (Acts. vi. 5). He founded churches in Samaria, Azotus, etc., and settled in Cæsarea. He had several daughters, who preached, and perhaps uttered predictions (Acts xxi. 9).

Philip'pi. A city of Macedonia, about nine miles from the sea, and twelve miles from its port, the modern Kavalla. St. Paul, when on his first visit to Macedonia in company with Silas, visited Philippi (Acts xvi. 11, 12). It was a Roman colony founded by Augustus, and the remains which strew the ground near the modern Turkish village Bereketli are no doubt derived from that city. The Epistle to the Philippians seems to have been written from Rome during the latter part of Paul's first imprisonment. The Church had been founded by Paul (Acts xvi.), and of all his churches seems to have loved him most. It is the only epistle of Paul which expresses no censure.

Philis'tia (Heb. Peleseth). The word thus translated in Ps. lx. 8; lxxxvii. 4; cviii. 9 is in the original identical with that elsewhere rendered Palestine.

Philis'tines. The Philistines and the Caphortim descended from Casluhim, the son of Mizraim, who peopled Egypt; and their country is perhaps called Caphtor (Jer. xlvii. 4). Their territory was allotted to the Hebrews, but they neglecting to take possession of it, the Philistines were made a severe and lasting scourge to them (Josh. xiii. 2, 3; xv. 45, 46, 47; Judg. iii. 1, 2, 3).

Phin'ehas. 1. Son of Eleazar and grandson of Aaron (Ex. vi. 25). He is memorable for having while a youth, by his zeal and energy, appeased the divine wrath and put a stop to the plague which was destroying the nation (Num. xxv. 7). For this he was rewarded by the special approbation Phœni'cia. A province of Syria. It contained the famous cities Sarepta, Ptolemais, Tyre and Sidon. The Tyrians and Sidonians had for a long time almost all the trade of the then known world. There was scarcely a shore or isle of the Mediterranean Sea where they did not plant colonies. The most noted of these was that of Carthage, which once long contended with Rome.

Phryg'ia. An extensive district in Asia Minor. The gospel was very early preached in Phrygia, and a church formed, which for many ages made a considerable appearance (Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23).

ATHENE MERIDIONALIS, THE COMMONEST OWL IN PALESTINE.

A portion of the inhabitants are Christians to this day.

Phu'rah. Gideon's servant, probably his armour-bearer (comp. 1 Sam. xiv. 1), who accompanied him in his midnight visit to the camp of the Midianites (Judg. vii. 10, 11).

Phut, Put. Third name in the list of the sons of Ham (Gen. x. 6; 1 Chron. i. 8). Elsewhere applied to an African country or people.

Phylac'tery. [See FRONTLETS.]

Piece of Sil'ver. In the New Testament two words are rendered by this phrase: 1. Drachma (Luke xv. 8, 9), which was a Greek silver coin, equivalent to the Roman denarius. 2. Silver only occurs in the account of the betrayal of our Lord (Matt. xxvi. 15; xxvii. 3, 5, 6, 9). It is more probable that the thirty pieces of silver were tetradrachms than that they were denarii.

Pi'late, Pon'tius. The sixth Roman procurator of Judea, and under him our Lord worked, suffered and died. He was appointed A. D. 25-26, in the twelfth year of Tiberius. His administration was arbitrary. His slaughter of certain Galileans (Luke xiii. 1) led to some remarks from our Lord on the connection between sin and calamity. The history of his condemnation of our Lord is related fully in the New Testament. Josephus states that Pilate's anxiety to avoid giving offence to Cæsar did not save him from political disaster. Eusebius records that, "wearied with misfortunes," he killed himself. As to the scene of his death, there are various traditions.

Pil'ows. In the East they cover the floors of their houses with carpets, and along the sides of the wall or floor a range of narrow beds or mattresses is often placed upon these carpets; and for their further ease several velvet or damask bolsters are placed upon these carpets or mattresses—indulgences that seem to be alluded to in Ezek. xiii. 18; Amos vi. 4.

Pine tree. The pine appears in our translation three times (Neh. viii. 15; Isa. xli. 19; lx. 13). The Hebrew phrase means literally branches of oily or gummy plants. Luther thought it the elm, and Dr. Stock renders it the ash. After all, it may be thought advisable to retain the pine.

Pin'nacle (Matt. iv. 5; Luke iv. 9). The Greek word ought to be rendered not a pinnacle, but the pinnacle. The only part of the temple which answered to the modern sense of pinnacle was the golden spikes erected on the roof to prevent birds from settling there. Perhaps the word means the battlement ordered by law to be added to every roof.

Pipe. The Hebrew word which we translate "pipe" (1 Sam. x. 5; 1 Kings i. 40; Isa. v. 12; xxx. 29; Jer. xlviii. 36) signifies "bored through." It would seem to have been a pipe furnished with holes. The ancient Egyptian instrument was straight, about eighteen inches in length, sometimes longer or shorter, with mouthpiece made of reed. Some had three holes, others four. Occasionally this pipe was double. It was very suitable for festive occasions, but sometimes for lamentation. Thus our Lord found pipers in the ruler's house whose daughter was dead, and these he ordered away (Matt. ix. 23).

Pitch. There can be little doubt that the "pitch" (copher) of Gen. vi. 14 was bitumen or asphalt. Another word, zepheth, is used (Ex. ii. 3; Isa. xxxiv. 9) implying to flow or become liquid. There is another term, hêmâr, usually rendered "slime," as in Gen. xi. 3.

Pitch'er. Besides the leather or skin bottles in common use among the Hebrews for keeping liquids, earthen pitchers must have been employed for drawing water (Gen. xxiv. 14, 15, 16, 45, 46; Lam. iv. 2; Mark xiv. 13; Luke xxii. 10).

Pis'gah (Num. xxi. 20; xxiii. 14; Deut. iii. 27; xxxiv. 1). A mountain range or district on the east of Jordan, contiguous to the field of Moab, and immediately opposite Jericho. Its highest point or summit—its "head"—was the Mount Nebo.

Pisid'ia. A district in Asia Minor, north of Pamphylia, and reached to, and was partly included in, Phrygia. St. Paul passed through Pisidia twice, with Barnabas, on the first missionary journey (Acts xiii. 13, 14, 51).

Pi'son. The name of the first branch of the river of Eden. It is supposed to be the western branch of the divided stream of the Tigris and Euphrates, which runs along the side of Havilah in Arabia (Gen. ii. 11).

DATE PALM OF PALESTINE.

Pi'thom and Rame'ses. Were the two cities for the building or fortifying of which the Hebrews made brick (Ex. i. 11). Rameses was in Goshen, and was the point from which the Hebrews started in their Exodus.

Plagues, the Ten. The occasion on which the plagues were sent is described in Ex. iii.-xii. 1.

EAGLE OWL OF PALESTINE (OTUS ASCALAPHUS).

of Jehovah, and by a promise that the priesthood should remain in his family for ever (10-13). After Eleazar's death he became high priest, the third of the series. The verse which closes the book of Joshua is ascribed to Phinehas, as the description of the death of Moses at the end of Deuteronomy is to Joshua. The tomb of Phinehas is shown at Awertah. 2. Second son of Eli (1 Sam. i. 3; ii. 34; iv. 4, 11, 17, 19; xiv. 3). Phinehas was killed with his brother by the Philistines when the ark was captured. [See ELI.]

Phœ'be. One of the most important of the Christian persons, the detailed mention of whom fills nearly all the last chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

The Plague of Blood. This plague was humiliating, as the Nile was held sacred, as well as some of its fish, not to speak of the crocodiles, which probably were destroyed. 2. The Plague of Frogs. This must have been especially trying to the Egyptians, as frogs were included among the sacred animals. 3. The Plague of Lice. The scrupulous cleanliness of the Egyptians would add intolerably to the bodily distress of this plague, by which also they again incurred religious defilement. 4. The Plague of Flies. The word translated "swarms of flies" most probably denotes the great Egyptian beetle. Besides its annoying and destructive habits, it was an object of worship. 5. The Plague of the Murrain of Beasts. Still coming closer to the Egyptians, God sent a disease upon the cattle, which were also their deities as well as property. 6. The Plague of Boils. From the cattle the hand of God was extended to their own persons. The plague seems to have been the black leprosy, a fearful kind of elephantiasis. 7. The Plague of Hail. The ruin caused by the hail was evidently far greater than that effected by any of the earlier plagues. 8. The Plague of Locusts. The severity of this plague can be well understood by those who have been in Egypt in a part of the country where a flight of locusts has alighted. 9. The Plague of Darkness. It has been illustrated by a sand-storm which occurs in the desert, often causing the darkness of twilight, and affecting man and beast. 10. The Death of the First-born. The clearly miraculous nature of this plague, in its severity, its falling upon man and beast, and the singling out of the first-born, puts it wholly beyond comparison with any natural pestilence, even the severest recorded in history, whether of the peculiar Egyptian plague or other like epidemics.

Plei'ades. A beautiful cluster of stars, sometimes called "the seven stars." They are in the constellation Taurus, and appear in our hemisphere the last of March.

Plough. [See AGRICULTURE.]

Pomegran'ate. The pomegranate was early cultivated in Egypt (Num. xx. 5). The pomegranate tree (Punica granatum) derives its name from the Latin pomum granatum, "grained apple."

Pon'tus. A large district in the north of Asia Minor. It is three times mentioned in the New Testament (Acts ii. 9, 10; xviii. 2; 1 Pet. i. 1).

Pool. Pools are in many parts of Palestine and Syria the only resource for water during the dry season, and the failure of them involves drought and calamity (Isa. xlii. 15). In Scripture the most celebrated are the pools of Solomon, near Beth-lehem, called el-Burak, from which an aqueduct was carried, which still supplies Jerusalem with water (Eccles. ii. 6; Eccles. xxiv. 30, 31).

Pop'lar. The Hebrew name of the tree so rendered implies whiteness. It is very probably the white poplar, Populus alba. It is mentioned twice in Scripture (Gen. xxx. 37; Hos. iv. 13). Some have imagined that the tree intended is the Styrax officinale.

Posses'sion. [See DEMONIACS.]

Pot'iphar. An Egyptian name, also written Potiphe'rah. Potiphar, with whom the history of Joseph is connected, is described as "an officer of Pharaoh, chief of the executioners" (Gen. xxxix. 1; comp. xxxvii. 36). [See JOSEPH.]

Potiphe'rah. Was priest or prince of On, and his daughter Asenath was given Joseph to wife by Pharaoh (Gen. xli. 45, 50; xlvii. 20).

Pot'ter's Field, the. [See ACELDAMA.]

Pot'tery. It is abundantly evident both that the Hebrews used earthenware vessels in the wilderness, and that the potters' trade was afterward carried on in Palestine. The clay, when dug, was trodden by men's feet so as to form a paste (Isa. xli. 25; Wis. xv. 7); then placed by the potter on the wheel beside which he sat, and shaped by him with his hands. How early the wheel came in use in Palestine we know not, but it seems likely that it was adopted from Egypt (Isa. xlv. 9; Jer. xviii. 3). The vessel was then smoothed and coated with a glaze, and finally burnt in a furnace.

Pound. 1. A weight. 2. A money of account, mentioned in the parable of the Ten Pounds (Luke xix. 12-27). The reference appears to be to a Greek pound, of which sixty went to the talent.

Proch'orus. One of the seven deacons, being the third on the list, and named next after Stephen and Philip (Acts vi. 5).

Procon'sul. The Greek for which this is the true equivalent is rendered uniformly "deputy" in Acts xiii. 7, 8, 12; xix. 38. The "proconsul" exercised purely civil functions.

Proc'urator. The office of procurator is mentioned in Luke iii. 1. The imperial provinces, of which Judea was one, were administered by Legati. The property and revenues of the imperial treasury were administered by Procuratores. Sometimes a province was governed by a procurator with the functions of a legatus.

Proph'et. One who foretells what is to come; a person inspired, and appointed by God to reveal his will, to warn of approaching judgments, to explain obscure passages of Scripture, or to make known the truths of the Bible and urge men to obedience (1 Cor. xiv. 26).

Pros'elyte. Literally a stranger, means in Scripture one that turned from heathenism to the Jewish religion (Acts ii. 10).

Prov'erbs. The book containing the inspired

10; in the margin generally "seythes"). It appears that the Hebrews were accustomed regularly to prune their vines (Lev. xxv. 3). There is a beautiful allusion by our Lord to the practice of pruning (John xv. 2).

Psalms. The Psalms were mostly composed by David. The ninetieth was composed by Moses, perhaps the eightieth by Heman. Those under the name of Asaph were probably directed to him as leader of the temple choir. Some psalms are doctrinal, as Ps. i.; some historical, as Ps. lxxvii., cv., cvi.; some prophetic, as Ps. cx.; some penitential, as Ps. li.; some consist of prayer and complaints, as Ps. vi., xxxviii., etc.; others consist of praise and thanksgiving, as Ps. xxx., xli., cxlv., cl., etc. In some, most or all of these subjects are connected, as Ps.

lxxxix. The Jews divided the entire collection into five books, at the end of four of which are the words "Amen, amen," and of the fifth, "Hallelujah." The first division ends at the fortieth psalm, the second at the seventy-second, the third at the eighty-eighth, the fourth at the one hundred and fifth, and the fifth at the one hundred and fiftieth. The words at the conclusion are thought to have been put there by Ezra.

Psal'tery. A musical instrument, first mentioned in the Psalms of David. It seems to have been shaped much like the present harp. The body was of wood, hollow, and Josephus says it had twelve strings. The strings were at first of flax, but subsequently were manufactured from the entrails of sheep.

Ptolema'is. [See ACCRO.]

Pub'lican (Matt. xviii. 17). An inferior colprecepts of Solomon (1 Kings iv. 32). The whole in the original seems to be poetry. Though written by Solomon, they seem to have been collected and arranged by others. Let the reader turn to ch. xxv. 1 and xxx. 1. The Proverbs are frequently quoted by the apostles; indeed, more so than any other part of the Old Testament, showing that the book constitutes a great treasure of revealed morality.

Prun'ing-hook. An implement used by vine-dressers. The word is found in Scripture only in the plural (Isa. ii. 4; xviii. 5; Mic. iv. 3; Joel iii.

lector of the Roman tribute. The principal farmers of this revenue were men of great influence; but the under-farmers, or publicans, were remarkable for extortion, and were accounted thieves and pickpockets. It is said the Jews would not allow them to enter the temple or synagogues, or to give testimony in a court of justice. The revenues of a district were set up to competition, and he who offered most was appointed collector. There were many publicans in Judea in the time of our Saviour. Zaccheus, probably, was one of the principal receivers, since he is called "chief among the publicans" (Luke xix. 2); but Matthew was only an inferior publican (Luke v. 27). The Jews reproached Jesus with being a "friend of publicans and sinners," and eating with them (Luke vii. 34).

Pul (2 Kings xv. 19). The first king of Assyria who invaded Canaan, and by a present of one thousand talents of silver, exacted from the mighty men of wealth of Israel by Menahem, was prevailed on to withdraw his troops and recognize the title of that wicked usurper. A town of this name is mentioned in Isa. lxvi. 19.

Pulse. (2 Sam. xvii. 28). Coarse grain, as pease, beans and the like (Dan. i. 12, 16).

Pu'rim. The plural of Pur, and meaning lots. It is the name of a solemn feast among the Jews, in commemoration of Haman's overthrow. It derives its name from the circumstance that Haman cast lots to ascertain the best day for destroying the Jews (Esth. iii. 7 and ix. 26).

Pur'ple. A color much worn by kings and emperors (Mark xv. 17). It is the famous Tyrian dye, so costly and so celebrated in antiquity. It is called in 1 Macc. iv. 23, "purple of the sea." It was made from the blood of a shell-fish, plenty of which were found in the sea on the north-west of Canaan.

Pute'oli. A city of Campania, in Italy, so called from its hot waters or the multitude of its wells. Its ancient name was Delus Minor. Paul halted here seven days as he went prisoner to Rome (Acts xxviii. 13). The present name of the place is Pozzuoli.

Py'garg (Deut. xiv. 5). Is the name of a bird of the eagle kind, but here probably denotes a beautiful species of the gazelle or the mountain goat, found in Africa and Asia.

Q.

Quail (Ex. xvi. 13; Num. xi. 31, 32; Ps. cv. 10). A bird of the gallinaceous kind. Hasselquist, mentioning the quail of the larger kind, says: "It is of the size of the turtle-dove. I have met with it in the wilderness of Palestine, near the shores of the Dead Sea and the Jordan, between Jordan and Jericho, and in the deserts of Arabia Petraea. If the food of the Israelites was a bird, this is certainly it, being so common in the places through which they passed." It is said that God gave quails to his people in the wilderness upon two occasions: first, within a few days after they had passed the Red Sea (Ex. xvi. 3-13). The second time was at the encampment at the place called in Hebrew, Kibroth-hataavah, the graves of lust (Num. xi. 32; Ps. cv. 40). Both of these happened in the spring, when the quails passed from Asia into Europe. They are then to be found in great quantities upon the coasts of the Red Sea and Mediterranean. God caused a wind to arise that drove them within and about the camp of the Israelites; and it is in this that the miracle consists, that they were brought so seasonably to this place and in so great number as to furnish food for above a million of persons for more than a month.

Quar'ries (Judg. iii. 19). The word so rendered in this place may mean "graven images," as the Vulgate, Septuagint and the marginal rendering of our English Bibles represent it. It may have been some noted place of idolatrous worship in the vicinity of Gilgal.

Quar'tus. A Christian of Corinth (Rom. xvi. 23), said to have been one of the seventy disciples, and afterward bishop of Berytus.

Quater'nion (Acts xii. 4). When Peter is said to have been delivered to four quaternions of soldiers, it is to be understood that he was guarded by four men at a time, viz.: two in the prison with him (ver. vi.), and two before the doors, and that they were relieved every three hours, or at each successive watch of the night, by four others, making in all sixteen men.

Queen. Often means in Scripture a king's mother. The word has still the same meaning among Orientals.

Queen of Heav'en (Jer. vii. 18). The title under which the moon was worshipped by the heathens. Cakes having the image of the moon or Emga, is an obscure term. It has been identified with the word "Magus," but this is very uncertain.

Rab'saris. 1. An officer of the king of Assyria (2 Kings xviii. 17). 2. One of the princes of Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. xxxix. 3, 13). Rabsaris is probably the name of an office.

Rab'shakeh (2 Kings xviii., xix.; Isa. xxxvi., xxxvii.). One of the officers of the king of Assyria, sent against Jerusalem in the reign of Hezekiah.

Ra'ca. A term of reproach used by the Jews of our Saviour's age (Matt. v. 22), derived from the Chaldee reka, "worthless."

Ra'chel. The younger of the daughters of Laban, the wife of Jacob and the mother of Jos-stamped on them are supposed to have been presented in sacrifice as a part of their idolatrous worship.

Quick. The living flesh, the sensible part of the body. Those persons who shall be alive at the resurrection are called the quick, in distinction from those who will arise from the dead (Acts x. 42).

Quick'sands (Acts xxvii. 17). Reference is had in this passage (as is supposed) to two very dangerous sandbars or syrtes on the coast of Africa, over against Sicily, which were continually shifting their position and forming powerful currents, by which ships were drawn from their course.

R.

Ra'amah. A son of Cush. The tribe of Ra'amah became renowned as traders (Ezek. xxvii. 22). They were settled on the Persian Gulf.

Rab'bah, Rab'bath. 1. The metropolis of Ammon (Deut. iii. 11; Josh. xiii. 25). It was besieged and taken by David for the ill-treatment of his ambassadors by the Ammonites. Afterward Ammon regained its independence. In later times it received the name Philadelphia from Ptolemy Philadelphus, and by this name it is known in Greek and Roman writers and in Josephus. This was in Christian times the see of a bishop. 2. A town in the hill-country of Judah (Josh. xv. 60).

Rab'bi. A title of respect signifying Master, Teacher, given by the Jews to their doctors and teachers, and often addressed to our Lord. The title rabbi is thought to have taken its rise about the time of the disputes between the rival schools of Hillel and Shammai.

Rab'boni (from rabbi). It was a greater title than rabbi, and was never formally conferred except on a few extraordinary doctors of the school of Hillel (John xx. 16).

Rab-mag (Jer. xxxix. 3, 13). A title borne by Nergal-sharezer, probably identical with the king called by the Greeks Nergissar. [See NERGAL-SHAREZER.] The signification is somewhat doubtful. Rabu is "great," or "chief," but Mag, eph and Benjamin. The incidents of her life may be found in Gen. xxix.-xxxiii., xxxv. Rachel died and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem, and Jacob set a pillar upon her grave (Gen. xxxv. 19, 20). The site of Rachel's tomb has never been questioned. It is about two miles south of Jerusalem, and one mile north of Bethlehem.

Ra'hab, or Ra'chab. A celebrated woman of COMMON PELICAN OF THE EAST.

Jericho, who received the spies sent by Joshua, hid them in her house, was saved with all her family when the Israelites sacked the city; and became the wife of Salmon and the ancestress of the Messiah (Josh. ii. 1; Matt. i. 5).

Rain'bow. The token of the covenant which God made with Noah that the waters should no more become a flood to destroy all flesh. The right interpretation of Gen. ix. 13 seems to be that God took the rainbow, which had hitherto been but a beautiful object shining in the heavens when the sun's rays fell on falling rain, and consecrated it as the sign of His love and the witness of His promise (Ecclus. xliii. 11).

Rai'sins (1 Sam. xxv. 18; xxx. 12; 2 Sam. xvi. 1; 1 Chron. xii. 40). These appear to have been dried grapes, in bunches; just what we understand by the term.

Ram, Bat'ering (Ezek. iv. 2; xxi. 22). The battering-rams were of several kinds. Some were joined to movable towers which held warriors and armed men. The whole then formed one great temporary building, the top on a level with the walls, and even turrets, of the besieged city. Some were without wheels.

Ra'mah. A word signifying "a hill," and which in its simple or compound shape forms the name of several places in the Holy Land: 1. One of the cities of the allotment of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 25). 2. The home, birth-place, official residence of God's protecting love and goodness (Job xxxviii. 41; Luke xii. 24; Ps. cxlvii. 9). The raven's carnivorous habits, and especially his readiness to attack the eye, are alluded to in Prov. xxx. 17.

Re'ba. One of the five kings of the Midianites slain by the children of Israel in their avenging expedition, when Balaam fell (Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xiii. 21).

Rebek'ah. Daughter of Bethuel (Gen. xxii. 23) and sister of Laban, married to Isaac, her father's cousin. She is first presented to us in Gen. xxiv. For nineteen years she was childless; then, after the prayers of Isaac and her journey to inquire of the Lord, Esau and Jacob were born (xxv. 24-34). It has been conjectured that she died during Jacob's sojourn in Padan-aram.

Re'chab (rider). 1. One of two "captains of bands" whom Ishbosheth took into service, and who conspired to murder him (2 Sam. iv. 2). 2. The father or ancestor of Jehonadab (2 Kings x. 15, 23; 1 Chron. ii. 55; Jer. xxxv. 6-19). From this Rechab the tribe of the Rechabites derived their name.

Re'chabites. A tribe of Midianites who lived in tents, and roamed the country for pasture, as the Arabs and Tartars now do. Their origin and manner of life are described in 2 Kings x. 15-23; Jer. xxxv. 5-7.

Red Sea. The sea known to us as the Red Sea was by the Israelites called "the sea." The most important change in the Red Sea has been the drying up of its northern extremity for the distance of fifty miles from its ancient head, "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea." Thus the prophecy of Isaiah has been fulfilled (xi. 15; xix. 5). In reference to the passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites, the place is not very far from the Persepolitan monument. From Pihahiroth the Israelites crossed the sea. The points bearing on geography in this event are that the sea was divided by an east wind, whence we may infer that it was crossed from west to east, and that the whole Egyptian army perished, which shows that it must have been some miles broad. On the whole, we may reasonably suppose about twelve miles as the smallest breadth of the sea.

Reed (Job xl. 21). A plant of the grass family. The bamboo and common cane are species of the reed, and so are the calamus and flag. Fish-poles, canes and rods (Matt. xxvii. 29) are formed of it. These plants flourish in marshes or in the vicinity of water-courses: hence the allusion in Job xl. 21-23. It is often used by the sacred writers to illustrate weakness and fragility. Reeds were also used as pens are now, and also as measuring-rods.

Refiner. The refiner's art was essential to the working of the precious metals. The separation of the dross from the pure ore was effected by heat and solvents, such as alkali (Isa. i. 25) or lead (Jer. vi. 29). The instruments were a crucible or furnace, and a bellows or blow-pipe. The workman sat at his work (Mal. iii. 3).

Re'fuge, Cities of. [See CITIES OF REFUGE.]

Rehobo'am. Son of Solomon by an Ammonitess, ascended the throne B. C. 970, being then forty-one years old, and reigned seventeen years. By following the absurd counsel of his young companions, he caused the revolt of the ten tribes, an event productive of infinite mischief, and which spread its influence over the whole subsequent history of the Hebrews, leading at last to their political ruin.

Reho'both (room or place). 1. A city of Edom. 2. A well digged by Isaac eastward of Gerar, so called because there the Lord made room for him to dwell (Gen. xxvi. 22).

Reins (Job xvi. 13). This word, which properly signifies the loins or region of the kidneys, is used figuratively by the sacred writers to denote the seat of the affections and dispositions.

Rem'phan (Acts vii. 43). Probably a name given to some planet regarded as an object of worship. The image of the object of their idolatry, being enclosed in a small tabernacle or portable case, was carried about from place to place like other baggage. Such were the shrines (Acts xix. 43; comp. Isa. xli. 7). What the prophet calls Chim (Amos. v. 26), the martyr calls Remphan.

Reph'aim. A valley near Jerusalem, fruitful in wheat (Isa. xvii. 5). It seems to have derived its name from the giants that anciently inhabited it.

Reph'idim. A place east of the Red Sea, where the Hebrews tempted God and quarreled with Moses for want of water. It was therefore called Meribah, contention, and Massah, temptation (Ex. xvii. 7, 8).

Reu'ben (behold a son). Jacob's first-born child (Gen. xxix. 32), the son of Leah. To him the preservation of Joseph's life appears to have been due. Of the repulsive crime which turned the blessing of his dying father into a curse we know only the fact (Gen. xxxv. 22). At the time of the migration into Egypt, Reuben's sons were four (Gen. xli. 9; 1 Chron. v. 3). The census at Mount Sinai (Num. i. 20, 21; ii. 11) shows that at the Exodus the numbers of the tribe were forty-six thousand five hundred men above twenty years of age and fit for active warlike service.

Reu'el. 1. One of the sons of Esau, by Basemath, sister of Ishmael (Gen. xxxvi. 4, 10, 13, 17; 1 Chron. i. 35, 37). 2. One of the names of Moses' father-in-law (Ex. ii. 18), the same which is given in another passage as Ragnel.

Revela'tion of St. John. The last book of the New Testament. It is often called the Apocalypse, which is its title in Greek, signifying "Revelation." The evidence adduced in support of St. John the Apostle and Evangelist being the author consists of (1) the assertions of the author, and (2) historical tradition. (1) The author's description of himself in the first and twenty-second chapters is certainly equivalent to an assertion that he is the apostle.

SITE OF PERSEPOLIS (CAPITAL OF PERSIA PROPER) AND THE FORTY PILLARS.

and burial-place of Samuel. It is a contracted form of Ramathaim-zophim. All that is directly said as to its situation is that it was in Mount Ephraim (1 Sam. i. 1). 3. One of the nineteen fortified places of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 36). 4. One of the landmarks on the boundary of Asher (Josh. xix. 29). 5. By this name is designated Ramoth-gilead. 6. A place reinhabited by the Benjamites after their return from captivity (Neh. xi. 33).

Ra'math-le'hi. The name bestowed by Samson on the scene of his slaughter of the thousand Philistines with the jawbone (Judg. xv. 17).

Ram'eses, or Raam'ses. A city and district of Lower Egypt, first mentioned in the settling by Joseph of his father and brethren in Egypt, where a possession was given them "in the land of Ramesses" (Gen. xlvii. 11). This land of Ramesses either corresponds to the land of Goshen or was a district of it. In the narrative of the Exodus it is the starting-point of the journey (Ex. xii. 37; Num. xxxiii. 3, 5).

Ra'moth (Josh. xx. 8), or Ra'moth-gil'ead (1 Kings xxii. 29), or Ra'math-miz'peh (Josh. xiii. 26), or watch-tower. A famous city in the mountains of Gilead, about fifteen miles from Rabbah. It was appointed for one of the cities of refuge (Deut. iv. 43). During the later kings of Israel this place was the occasion of several wars between them and the kings of Damascus (2 Kings viii. 23, 29). South Ramoth (1 Sam. xxx. 27) is probably so called to distinguish it from Ramoth beyond Jordan.

Ran'som. Under the Levitical law an offering was required of every Israelite over twenty years of age at the time the census was taken. This offering is called a ransom or atonement-money (Ex. xxx. 12-16). It amounted to half a shekel, or about one shilling and a halfpenny. It was to be made upon penalty of the plague.

Raph'ael. "One of the seven holy angels which . . . go in and out before the glory of the Holy One" (Tob. xii. 15).

Ra'ven. From a root signifying "to be black." A raven was sent out by Noah from the ark (Gen. viii. 7). This bird was not allowed as food by the Mosaic law (Lev. xi. 15). Ravens were the means, under the divine command, of supporting the prophet Elijah at the brook Cherith (1 Kings xvii. 4, 6). They are expressly mentioned as instances

ALLAN-SHEHR—ANCIENT PHILADELPHIA, THE SITE OF ONE OF THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

He is also described as a servant of Christ, an eye-witness of the word of God and of the testimony of Christ—terms which identify him with the writer of the verses John xix. 35; i. 14, and 1 John i. 2. He is in Patmos for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. The book was admitted in the list of the Third Council of Carthage, A. D. 397. The date of the Revelation is given by the great majority of critics as A. D. 95-97.

Rez'in. King of Damascus. He attacked Joatham during the latter part of his reign (2 Kings xv. 37), but his chief war was with Ahaz, whose territories he invaded, in company with Pekah (about B. C. 741). He was attacked, defeated and slain by Tiglath-pileser II., king of Assyria (2 Kings xvi. 9).

Rez'on. Son of Eliadah, a Syrian, who set up a petty kingdom at Damascus (1 Kings xi. 23). From his position at Damascus he harassed the kingdom of Solomon during his whole reign.

Rhe'gium. An Italian town at the southern entrance of the Straits of Messina, which occurs in the account of St. Paul's voyage after the shipwreck at Malta (Acts xxviii. 13). By a curious coincidence the figures on its coins are the very "twin brothers" which gave the name to St. Paul's ship.

Rhodes. St. Paul touched at this island on his return voyage to Syria from his third missionary journey (Acts xxi. 1). Rhodes is at the south-west extremity of the peninsula of Asia Minor. Its real eminence began about 400 B. C.

Rib'lah (Num. xxxiv. 11). Probably Ribleh on the Orontes, thirty miles south of Hamath. Pharaoh-necho stopped here on his return from Carchemish (2 Kings xxiii. 33), and deposed Jehoahaz, putting Jehoakim in his place; and here Nebuchadnezzar abode, while Nebuzaradan, his chief commander, laid siege to Jerusalem. Hither the prisoners were brought, when Zedekiah's children and many others were put to death, and that king himself deprived of his eyes and cast into prison.

Rid'dle. The Hebrew word is from an Arabic root meaning "to bend off," "to twist" (Judg. xiv. 12-19). The riddles which the queen of Sheba came to ask of Solomon (1 Kings x. 1; 2 Chron. ix. 1) were rather "hard questions." Solomon is said, however, to have been very fond of riddles. We know that all ancient nations, and especially Orientals, have been fond of riddles.

Rim'mon (pomegranate). The name of several towns, probably so called from producing pomegranates: 1. A city of Zebulun. 2. A town in the southern portion of Judah (Josh. xv. 33). 3. Rimmon-parez, the name of a march-station in the wilderness. 4. A rock or inaccessible natural fastness, in which the six hundred Benjamites who escaped the slaughter of Gibeah took refuge (Judg. xx. 45, 47; xxi. 13). Rimmon was also the name of a deity worshipped by the Syrians of Damascus, where there was a temple or house of Rimmon (2 Kings v. 18).

Ring. The ring was regarded as an indispensable article of a Hebrew's attire, inasmuch as it contained his signet. It was the symbol of authority, and as such was presented by Pharaoh to Joseph (Gen. xli. 42), and by Ahasuerus to Haman (Esth. iii. 10). Such rings were worn not only by men, but by women (Isa. iii. 21; Ex. xxxv. 22). The signet-ring was worn on the right hand (Jer. xxii. 24).

Ring-streaked. Having circular streaks or lines on the body, as we often see on cattle (Gen. xxx. 35).

Riz'pah. Concubine to King Saul, and mother of his two sons, Armoni and Mephibosheth. After the death of Saul, Rizpah accompanied the members of the royal family to their new residence at Mahanaim (2 Sam. iii. 7). We hear nothing more of Rizpah till the tragic story which has made her one of the most familiar objects in the whole Bible (2 Sam. xxi. 8-11).

Roe, Roe'buck. The Hebrew words thus translated denote some species of antelope, probably the Gazella Arabica of Syria and Arabia. The gazelle was allowed as food (Deut. xii. 15, 22, etc.), was fleet of foot (2 Sam. ii. 18; 1 Chron. xii. 8), was hunted (Isa. xlii. 14; Prov. vi. 5) and was celebrated for its loveliness (Cant. ii. 9, 17; viii. 14).

Ro'gelim. The residence of a wealthy Gileadite, who showed hospitality to David when he fled from Absalom (2 Sam. xvii. 27; xix. 31), in the highlands east of the Jordan.

Roll. A book in ancient times consisted of a single long strip of paper or parchment, which was usually kept rolled up on a stick. The roll was usually written on one side only, and hence the particular notice of one that was "written within and without" (Ezek. ii. 10).

Rome, the City of, and Roman Empire. Little can here be said of "that great city which reigned over the kings of the earth" (Rev. xvii. 18). It is not mentioned in the Old Testament. Its name first appears in the Apocrypha (1 Macc. i. 10, and elsewhere). Of course we find it in the New Testament, first in Acts ii. 10. The population has been variously estimated from half a million to four, eight, or even fourteen millions. The Roman empire was raised to its highest pitch by Augustus; a few additions to its provinces being subsequently made, as Britain under Claudius, and Dacia under Trajan. We are not informed when, or by whom, the gospel was first preached at Rome. But, as among those converted at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, there were "strangers from Rome" (Acts ii. 10), there can be no doubt but that on their return home they set up a Christian Church. It must have grown rapidly, though the preacher is not mentioned, for in A. D. 68 their number drew the attention of government, and the horrid persecutions of Nero killed vast multitudes.

Ro'mans, Epistle to the. Paul had never been at Rome when he wrote this Epistle. It was called forth by his having heard of the difficulties existing between the Jewish and the Gentile members. He controverts many of the errors of both Jews and Pagans. Paul was nearly sixty years old when he wrote this letter, during a residence of some months at Corinth.

Rose. The original word thus translated occurs twice (Sol. Song ii. 1; Isa. xxxv. 1). It is not clear what flower is meant. Gesenius is inclined to believe it the meadow saffron, and this is favoured by the etymology, as it is compounded of two words signifying "acid" and "bulb." Roses certainly have flourished in Palestine, and the names of several species are known, as the white garden rose, Rosa alba, the damask rose, R. damascena, and the evergreen rose, R. sempervirens.

Rosh (Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3; xxxix. 1). The sentence rendered "Magog the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal," ought to run "Magog the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal." The meaning is that Magog is the head of the three great Scythian tribes, of which "Rosh" is thus the first. By Rosh is apparently meant the tribe on the north of the Taurus, so called from the neighbourhood to the Rha or Volga, and thus in this name and tribe we have the first trace of the Russ or Russian nation.

Ru'by. A beautiful gem, whose colour is red, with an admixture of purple, and is, in its most perfect state, a gem of extreme value. In hardness it is equal to the sapphire, and second only to the diamond. It is mentioned in Job xxviii. 18 and Prov. viii. 11, etc.

Rue (Luke xi. 42). A small shrubby plant, common in gardens. It has a strong, unpleasant smell, and a bitterish, penetrating taste.

Ru'fus. Mentioned in Mark xv. 22, along with Alexander, as a son of Simon the Cyrenian (Luke xxiii. 26). Again, in Rom. xvi. 13, the Apostle Paul salutes a Rufus whom he designates as "elect in the Lord."

Rush. [See REED.]

Ruth. A Moabitish woman, the wife, first, of Mahlon, secondly of Boaz, the ancestress of David and of Christ, and one of the four women who are named by St. Matthew in the genealogy of Christ. The son of Boaz and Ruth, Obed, was the father of Jesse, who was the father of David.

Ruth, Book of. Contains the history of Ruth. The main object of the writer is evidently to give an account of David's ancestors; and the book was avowedly composed long after the time of the heroine (Ruth i. 1; iv. 7, 17). It is probable that the books of Judges, Ruth, Samuel and Kings originally formed but one work.

Rye (Heb. cussemeth). It is probable that by cussemeth "spelt" is intended. Spelt is grown in some parts of the south of Germany and differs but slightly from our common wheat.

S.

Sabach'thani. "Thou hast forsaken me" (Mark xv. 35).

Sab'aoth. A Hebrew word, signifying hosts or armies (Rom. ix. 29; James v. 4).

Sab'bath (rest). God rested on the seventh day and set it apart for himself. Though the seventh day to God, to man, who was formed on the evening of the last day, it was the first, and was kept as such for ages, and called the seventh part of time (Gen. ii. 2, 3). In the first institution of the Sabbath it was intended to call to mind the wisdom, power and goodness of God, but after the return of the children of Israel from their state of bondage in Egypt, that was urged as an additional object of recollection on the Sabbath-day, and also as an additional motive to its observance. The day was changed to correspond with that memorable event, and to preserve the Hebrews more effectually from idolatry by making their day of worship different from that of the heathen (Deut. v. 14, 15). Under the Christian dispensation, which unites Jews and Gentiles, the Sabbath is altered back again from the seventh to the first day of the week, on which the Redeemer himself rose from the dead. It is thus no longer an institution for the Jews, as the Mosaic Sabbath was, but for the world as it was before Moses.

Sab'bath-day's Jour'ney. Moses forbade any man to "go out of his place" on that day (Ex. xvi. 29). In after times the precept was undoubtedly viewed as a permanent law. But as some departure from a man's own place was unavoidable, the distance was fixed at two thousand paces, or about six furlongs, from the wall of the city.

Sabbat'ical Year. The seventh year, in which the land was to have rest (Ex. xxiii.; Lev. xxv.) It served to remind Israel of the authority and goodness of God, to inculcate humanity, and to give time for devotion and deeds of mercy.

Sack'but (Dan. iii. 5, 7, 10, 15). The rendering of the Chaldee sabbēca. The sackbut was a wind-instrument.

Sack'cloth. A coarse texture, of a dark colour, made of goat's hair (Isa. i. 3; Rev. vi. 12). It was used for making sacks and for making the rough garments used by mourners, but at other times worn over the coat in lieu of the outer garment.

Sac'rifice. The justice of God required the death of the offender, but, being tempered with mercy, it accepted a sacrifice in his stead. The giving of the law gave rules both as to the things to be sacrificed and the quantity to be offered, and restricted the priesthood to the family of Aaron. The Hebrews had but four sorts of sacrifices, viz.:

the river Jordan (Gen. xiv.) Jerusalem, called by contraction Salem (Ps. lxxvi. 2), was originally called Jebus.

Sal'ma, or Sal'mon (Ruth iv. 20, 21; 1 Chron. ii. 11, 51, 54; Matt. i. 4, 5; Luke iii. 32). Son of Nahshon, the prince of the children of Judah, and father of Boaz, the husband of Ruth. On the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan, Salmon took Rahab of Jericho to be his wife, and from this union sprang the Christ. [See RAHAB.]

Sal'mon. A hill near Shechem, on which Abimelech and his followers cut down the boughs with which they set the tower of Shechem on fire (Judg. ix. 48). Its exact position is not known.

Salmo'ne. The eastern point of the island of Crete (Acts xxvii. 7).

Salo'me. 1. The wife of Zebedee, as appears

Sama'ria. A celebrated city of Palestine, founded by Omri, king of Israel (1 Kings xvi. 18, 23, 24). It was the metropolis of the northern kingdom, the rival of Jerusalem, and generally the residence of the Israelitish monarchs; (29; xx. 43; 2 Kings i. 2). The worship of Baal was set up in Samaria by Ahab. Samaria was taken by the Assyrians, after a siege of three years, in the reign of Hoshea (xvii. 5, 6; xviii. 9, 10). The inhabitants were carried into captivity, and colonists put in their place (xvii. 24; Ezra iv. 9, 10). This city continued a place of importance for some time after the Babylonish exile, when it was taken by Alexander the Great. Subsequently, Samaria was utterly destroyed by John Hyrcanus. It must, however, have been ere long rebuilt. It is now but a mass of ruins, adjacent to the modern village of Sebastieh.

Samar'itans. When Shalmaneser removed many of the ten tribes to Babylon, he sent in their place Babylonians; these intermarried with the remaining Hebrews, and their descendants were the Samaritans. Between these and the pure Jews there were constant jealousy and hatred (John iv.) The name was used by the Jews as a term of the greatest reproach (John viii. 48). The Samaritans, like the Jews, lived in the expectation of Messiah, and many of them embraced him when he appeared (John iv.; Acts viii. 1 and ix. 31).

Samar'itan Pen'tateuch. A recension of the commonly received Hebrew text of the Mosaic law in use with the Samaritans, and written in the ancient Hebrew, or so-called Samaritan, character.

Samothra'cia. A small island of the Aegean Sea, about twenty miles in circumference. It derived its name from having been peopled by Samians and Thracians. Its present name is Samodrakhi.

Sam'son. A judge of Israel, of the tribe of Dan. Dr. Clarke has shown, from M. de Levaure, that he is the original of the fabled Hercules of heathen mythology. He judged Israel twenty years, and died 1117 years B. C., aged 40 (Judg. xiii. 16; Heb. xi. 32, 33). His unshorn hair was the badge and pledge of his Nazariteship, on losing which his vow was broken and God's aid forfeited.

Sam'uel. An eminent prophet born at Ramah in the tribe of Ephraim, and from his birth dedicated by his mother to God's service (1 Sam. iii. 1). He wrote the first book of Samuel, and, as is supposed, those of Judges and Ruth. The first book of Samuel describes the prophet's life and the history of Israel under Saul, embracing a period of about eighty years. The second book of Samuel was written, it is supposed, by the POOLS OF SOLOMON (EL-BURAK), ABOUT THREE MILES SOUTH-WEST OF BETHLEHEM.

1. Burnt-offering [see p. 10]. 2. Sin-offering, or sacrifice of expiation offered by one who had offended, to whom no part was returned, but the priest had a share (Lev. iv. and v.) 3. Peace-offering, a return for favours, to satisfy devotion or to honour God. It was offered at pleasure, and the age or sex of the animal was not designated. Most of the flesh was returned to the offerer, who ate it with his friends (Lev. iii.) 4. Trespass-offering, which seems to have been different from the sin-offering, both being required of the leper (Lev. xiv.) Its character is not fully understood. The perpetual sacrifice was the offering of a lamb every morning at sunrise, and another every evening about twilight. They were burnt as holocausts, but by a small fire, that they might last the longer. With each of these was offered half a pint of wine, half a pint of sweet oil and three pints of fine flour. All the sacrifices, with their several ceremonies, were either acknowledgments of sin or images of the punishment due to it.

Sad'ducees. A sect among the Jews who denied the existence of angels and spirits, the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body. They are accused, though not with good proof, of rejecting all the books of Scripture except the five books of Moses. They were observers of the law and enforced it upon others, but they kept only to the simple text. The Sadducees were generally persons of wealth and influence.

Saf'ron (Cant. iv. 14). Saffron has from the earliest times been in high esteem as a perfume. The word is derived from the Arabic Zafran, "yellow."

Sal'amis. A city at the eastern end of the island of Cyprus, visited by Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey. Here we read expressly of "synagogues" in the plural (Acts xiii. 5).

Sal'im. Where John baptized, is, perhaps, the same as Salem, where Melchisedek was king, near from comparing Matt. xxvii. 56 with Mark xv. 40. It is the opinion that she was the sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus (John xix. 25). Salome preferred a request on behalf of her two sons for seats of honour in the kingdom of heaven (Matt. xx. 20), she attended at the crucifixion of Jesus (Mark xv. 40), and visited his sepulchre (Mark xvi. 1). 2. The daughter of Herodias by her first husband, Herod Philip (Matt. xiv. 6).

Salt. Salt was to the Hebrews not only an appetizing condiment in the food both of man (Job vi. 6) and beast (Isa. xxx. 24, see margin), and a valuable antidote to the effects of climate on animal food, but also entered largely into their religious services (Lev. ii. 13). The associations connected with salt in Eastern countries are important. As one of the most essential articles of diet, it symbolized hospitality; as an antiseptic, durability, fidelity and purity (Lev. ii. 13; Num. xviii. 19; 2 Chron. xiii. 5).

Salt, City of. The fifth of the six cities of Judah which lay in the "wilderness" (Josh. xv. 62).

Salt, Valley of. A valley in which occurred two memorable victories of the Israelitish arms: 1. That of David over the Edomites (2 Sam. viii. 13; 1 Chron. xviii. 12). 2. That of Amaziah (2 Kings xiv. 7; 2 Chron. xxv. 11). It is perhaps the broad open plain which lies at the lower end of the Dead Sea.

Saluta'tion. The salutations at meeting in early times were such as, "God be gracious unto thee" (Gen. xliii. 29); "Blessed be thou of the Lord" (Ruth iii. 10; 1 Sam. xv. 13); "The Lord be with you," "The Lord bless thee" (Ruth ii. 4); "The blessing of the Lord be upon you; we bless you in the name of the Lord" (Ps. cxxix. 8). The salutation at parting consisted originally of a simple blessing (Gen. xxiv. 60; xxviii. 1; xlvii. 10; Josh. xxii. 6).

COMMON EUROPEAN QUAIL

prophets Gad and Nathan (1 Chron. xxix. 29), and contains the history of David during a period of nearly forty years.

Sanbal'lat. A Moabite of Horonaim (Neh. ii. 10, 19; xiii. 28). He held apparently some civil or military command in Samaria in the service of Artaxerxes (Neh. iv. 2).

San'dal. Ordinarily it consisted of a sole attached to the foot by thongs. In Assyria the heel and the side of the foot were encased, and sometimes the sandal consisted of little else than this. Sandals were worn by all classes of society in Palestine, even by the very poor. They were dispensed with in-doors, and were only put on by persons going away from their homes; such as on a military expedition (Isa. v. 27; Eph. vi. 15), or a journey (Ex. xii. 11; Josh. ix. 5, 13; Acts xii. 8): on such occasions persons carried an extra pair. During meal-times the feet were uncovered (Luke vii. 38; John xiii. 5, 6). To carry or to unloose a Sar'gon. One of the greatest of the Assyrian kings, is mentioned by name only once in Scripture (Isa. xx. 1). He was Sennacherib's father and immediate predecessor, and reigned from B.C. 721 to 702. He was a great and successful warrior.

Sar'sechim. One of the generals of Nebuchadnezzar's army at the taking of Jerusalem (Jer. xxxix. 3). He appears to have held the office of chief eunuch.

person's sandal was a menial office (Matt. iii. 11; Mark i. 7; John i. 27; Acts xiii. 25). The use of the shoe in the transfer of property is noticed in Ruth iv. 7, 8.

San'hedrim. The supreme council of the Jewish people in the time of Christ and earlier.

Sapphi'ra. [See ANANIAS.]

Sap'phire (Ex. xxiv. 10; xxviii. 18; Job xxviii. 6, 16; Ezek. xxviii. 13; Rev. xxi. 19). A pellucid gem which in its finest state is extremely beautiful and valuable, and second only to the diamond in lustre, hardness and value. Its colour is blue. The Oriental sapphire is the most beautiful and valuable. It is transparent, of a sky colour, sometimes variegated with veins of a white sparry substance, and distinct separate spots of a gold colour.

Sa'rah. The wife of Abraham and mother of Isaac. Her name is first introduced in Gen. xi. 29. In Gen. xx. 12, Abraham speaks of her as "his sister, the daughter of the same father, but not the daughter of the same mother." The common Jewish tradition is that Sarai is the same as Iscah, the daughter of Haran and the sister of Lot. The change of her name from "Sarai" to "Sarah" was made on the establishment of the covenant of circumcision. She died at Hebron at the age of one hundred and twenty-seven years, twenty-eight years before her husband, and was buried by him in the cave of Machpelah.

Sar'amel. The place in which the assembly was held at which the high priesthood was conferred upon Simon Maccabæus (1 Macc. xiv. 28). Some part of the city of Jerusalem.

Sar'dine, Sar'dius (Heb. ôdem). The sard, which is the stone probably denoted by ôdem, is a superior variety of agate, and has long been a favourite stone for the engraver's art.

Sar'dis. The capital of Lydia, where Croesus reigned. It was destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius, but was rebuilt by that emperor's assistance. To the Church there one of the apocalyptic epistles was addressed (Rev. i. 11; iii. 1-6). It is now a miserable village, called Sart or Sart-Kalassi, amid the ruins of the ancient city.

Sar'donyx. A gem supposed to partake of the qualities and appearance of the sardine and onyx, of which names the word seems to be compounded (Rev. xxi. 10).

Sa'tan. The name is Hebrew, and means enemy. The proper name of Satan is the Devil, and in the original tongue the name is exclusively appropriated to him.

Sa'tyr. A name given to some animal which prowls round the ruins of Babylon, probably the ape or baboon (Isa. xlii. 21; xxxiv. 14). Some of the ancients worship it as a god, delineating it as half man and half goat.

Saul (more accurately SHAUL). 1. Saul of Rehoboth by the river was one of the early kings of Edom. 2. The first king of Israel was the son of Kish and of the tribe of Benjamin. He was remarkable for his strength and activity (2 Sam. i. 23), and was taller by head and shoulders than the rest of the people. Upon the mountains Saul met with Samuel for the first time. A divine intimation had indicated to Samuel the approach and the future destiny of the youthful Benjamite. At the following daybreak Samuel poured over Saul's head the consecrated oil (ix. 25 to x. 1). The outer call, together with his subsequent life and death, is fully related in the first book of Samuel. 3. The Jewish name of St. Paul. Nothing certain is known about the change of the apostle's name from Saul to Paul (Acts xiii. 9).

Sa'viour. A term applied pre-eminently to Christ, who came "to save his people from their sins." He is therefore called Jesus, which signifies a saviour.

Scape-goat. A goat which on the great day of atonement was banished into the wilderness, after the high priest had confessed upon it the sins of all the people (Lev. xvi.).

Scar'let. A colour anciently produced from a little worm found in the watery excrescences of a shrub or small tree called the kermes oak. The excrescences or bladders are about the size of juniper berries, and are caused by the insect.

Scor'pion (Deut. viii. 15; Luke x. 19; xi. 12). The scorpion is generally two inches in length, and resembles the lobster in form. Some are of a yellow colour, others brown, and some black. The yellow possesses the strongest poison, but the venom of each affects the part wounded with frigidity, which takes place soon after the sting has been inflicted.

Scourge, or Whip. This punishment was very common among the Jews (Deut. xxv. 1-3). There were two ways of giving the lash—one with thongs or whips made of ropes' ends or straps of leather; the other with rods or twigs. St. Paul informs us that at five different times he received thirty-nine stripes from the Jews (2 Cor. xi. 24). According to the law, punishment by stripes was restricted to forty at one beating (Deut. xxv. 3).

Scribe (in Hebrew sôphér, in Greek grammateus). A word very common in Scripture, and having several significations: 1. A clerk, writer or secretary in the court of the kings of Judah. 2. A commissary or muster-master of an army, who reviews the troops, keeps the list or roll, and calls them over. 3. An able and skilful man, a doctor of the law, a man of learning, or one who understands affairs. The scribes of the people, frequently mentioned in the Gospels, were public writers, professed doctors of the law, which they read and explained to the people. The word is equivalent to our modern term literati.

Scrip. The Hebrew word thus translated appears in 1 Sam. xvii. 40 as a synonym for the bag in which the shepherds of Palestine carried their food or other necessaries. The scrip of the Galilean peasants was of leather.

Scriptures. The Old and New Testaments are called the Scriptures or the Writings, the Bible or the Book, because they far excel all other writings. It is possible that the apostles used this term in designating the O. T. only. The various books contained in the Scriptures are referred to under their proper names.

Scyth'ian (Col. iii. 11; 2 Macc. iv. 47; 3 Macc. vii. 5). The Scythians dwelt on the north of the Black Sea, and were regarded by the ancients as standing extremely low in point of intelligence and civilization.

Sea. The Hebrews applied this term to lakes of moderate size, and the modern inhabitants of Palestine still retain the same phraseology.

Sea, Molt'en. Solomon caused a laver to be cast, which from its size was called a sea. It was made partly or wholly of brass or copper (1 Kings vii. 23-26; 1 Chron. xviii. 8). It is said to have been capable of containing two thousand, or, according to 2 Chron. iv. 5, three thousand baths. Below the brim there was a double row of "knops." The laver stood on twelve oxen, three toward each quarter of the heavens, and all looking outward. It was mutilated by Ahaz, and finally broken up by the Assyrians (2 Kings xvi. 14, 17; xxv. 13).

BATTERING-RAM USED IN ANCIENT SIEGE OPERATIONS.

Sea, the Salt. The Salt or Dead Sea bears a variety of names in Scripture, such as "the sea," the "salt sea," the "sea of the plain" (i. e., of the Arabah), the "east sea" and the "former sea" (i. e., the sea in front). This remarkable expanse of water is of an elongated oval shape. The extreme length is about forty-six miles, the greatest breadth above ten miles. The superficial area has been estimated at about three hundred square miles. It is bounded east and west by lines of bare mountains, broken by clefts and ravines and indented by remarkable terraces. There is little vegetation except where a spring gushes forth, and then around it are reeds and thorn bushes and palm trees, with other plants, but the general aspect is burnt and barren, presenting often scenes of rugged and utter desolation. There is a salt and stony plain at the north-east corner. The Dead Sea lies in so deep a cleft among its mountains that its surface is, according to the best authority, one thousand two hundred and eighty-nine feet below that of the Mediterranean.

Se'ah. A Hebrew measure, containing about two gallons and a half, liquid measure, or about a peck, dry measure.

Seal. The use of some method of sealing is of remote antiquity. In many cases the seal consisted of a lump of clay, impressed with the seal and attached to the document, whether of papyrus or other material, by strings. The use of clay in sealing is noticed in the book of Job (xxxviii. 14), and the signet-ring in Gen. xxxviii. 18. Engraved signets were in use among the Hebrews in early times (Ex. xxviii. 11, 36; xxxix. 6).

Secun'dus. A Thessalonian who went with the Apostle Paul from Corinth as far as Asia, on his return to Jerusalem from his third missionary tour (Acts xx. 4).

Seer. A prophet, so called from his foresight of the future (1 Sam. ix. 9).

Seir (hairy, shaggy). 1. We have the "land of Seir" (Gen. xxii. 3; xxxvi. 30), and "Mount Seir" (Gen. xiv. 6). It is the original name of the mountain ridge extending from the Dead Sea to the Elanitic Gulf. The name may have been derived from the rough aspect of the whole country. The Mount Seir of the Bible extended farther south than the modern province. 2. One of the landmarks on the northern boundary of the territory of Judah (Josh. xv. 10, only).

Se'la and Se'lah (2 Kings xiv. 7; Isa. xvi. 1). Rendered "the rock" in Judg. i. 36; 2 Chron. xxv. 12; Obad. 3. Probably the city later known as Petra, the ruins of which are several days' journey south from Jericho. About 70 B. C., Petra appears as the residence of the Arab prince named Aretas. It was by Trajan reduced to subjection to the Roman empire. There are extensive ruins at Petra of Roman date, which have been frequently described by modern travellers.

Se'lah. This word, in the poetical books of the O. T., occurs seventy-one times in the Psalms and three times in Habakkuk. It is probably a term which had a meaning in the musical nomenclature of the Hebrews, though what that meaning may have been is now a matter of pure conjecture.

Seleu'cia. Near the mouth of the Orontes, was practically the seaport of Antioch. The distance between the two towns was about sixteen miles. St. Paul, with Barnabas, sailed from Seleucia at the beginning of his first missionary circuit (Acts xiii. 4).

Sem. Shem the patriarch (Luke iii. 36).

Sennach'erib. The son and successor of Sargon. He mounted the throne B. C. 702. In his third year (B. C. 700), he marched against Hezekiah, king of Judah. It was at this time that "Sennacherib came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them" (2 Kings xviii. 13). He made his second expedition into Palestine. Hezekiah had again revolted and claimed the protection of Egypt. Instead of besieging Jerusalem, the Assyrian king attacked Lachish and Libna, but failing to take them, sent messengers to Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 17), and on their return without his submission wrote him a threatening letter (2 Kings xix. 14). In one night the Assyrians lost, either by a pestilence or by some more awful manifestation of divine power, one hundred and eighty-five thousand men. The camp immediately broke up—the king fled. Sennacherib reigned twenty-two years. His sons, Adrammelech and Sharezer, smote him with the sword (2 Kings xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 31).

Sepharva'im. Mentioned by Sennacherib in his letter to Hezekiah as a city whose king had been unable to resist the Assyrians (2 Kings xix. 13; Isa. xxxvii. 13; comp. 2 Kings xviii. 34). Same as the famous town of Sippara, on the Euphrates above Babylon.

Sep'tuagint. The Greek version of the O. T. It owed its origin to the same cause as the Targums. The Jews of Alexandria had probably still less knowledge of Hebrew than their brethren in Palestine: their familiar language was Alexandrian Greek. They had settled in Alexandria in large numbers, and would naturally follow the same practice as the Jews in Palestine, and hence would arise in time an entire Greek version. But the names and numbers of the translators, and the time when the different portions were translated, are uncertain. The version was made at Alexandria—was begun in the time of the earlier Ptolemies, and the Pentateuch was translated first. The Septuagint version was highly esteemed by the Hellenistic Jews before the coming of Christ. For a long period the Septuagint was the O. T. of the larger part of the Christian Church.

Sep'ulchre. The royal family only were buried in Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxiv. 16). Natural caves were often used for interment, and in these thieves and lunatics sometimes resided. Hence the grave is called a pit (Ps. lxxxviii. 3-12). Our Saviour's sepulchre was "hewn out of a rock," and the door sealed. The stone which formed the door was "a great stone," selected by Joseph of Arimathea for this purpose (Matt. xxvii. 60).

Serai'ah. 1. The king's scribe or secretary in the reign of David. 2. The high priest in the reign of Zedekiah. 3. The son of Tanhumeth the RUINS OF THE PALACE OF THE CAESARS.

Netophathite. 4. The son of Neriah, and brother of Barnah.

Ser'aphim. An order of celestial beings which Isaiah beheld in vision standing above Jehovah as he sat upon his throne (Isa. vi. 2). The meaning of the word "seraph" is doubtful.

Ser'gius Pau'lus. The proconsul of Cyprus when Paul visited that island with Barnabas on his first missionary tour (Acts xiii. 7, seq.). He is described as an intelligent man: truth-seeking, eager for information, he examined the Gospel and yielded to the evidence of its truth.

Ser'pent. The Hebrew word nāchāsh is the generic name of any serpent. See, for principal biblical allusions to this animal, Gen. iii. 1; Matt. x. 16; Ps. lviii. 4; Prov. xxiii. 32; Eccles. x. 8; Num. xxi. 9; Job xx. 14. The art of taming and charming serpents is of great antiquity. St. James (iii. 7) particularizes serpents among all other animals that "have been tamed by man." Serpents used for this purpose, both in Africa and in India, are the hooded snakes (Naia tripudians and Naia haje) and the horned Cerastes. That the charmers generally extract the poisonous fangs before the snakes are subjected to their skill is probable, but this operation is not always attended to. The serpent-charmer's usual instrument is a flute.

Se'rug. Son of Reu, and great-grandfather of Abraham. His age is given in the Hebrew Bible at two hundred and thirty years (Gen. xi. 20-23).

Servant. Among the Hebrews, servants may be divided into—1. Slaves for life, who were strangers bought or taken in war (Lev. xxv. 44, etc.) 2. Hebrew or bond-servants, who could be bound only six years, and then to be dismissed with presents. Slavery was common before the Deluge, and some of the patriarchs, as Job and Abraham, appear to have owned hundreds; but they seem to have been treated with great tenderness, and often to have had wages, and much confidence placed in them. Among the Romans they were often branded for security, but this was forbidden to the Jews.

Seth (Gen. iv. 25; v. 3; 1 Chron. i. 1). The third son of Adam and father of Enos.

Shadda'i. An ancient name of God, rendered "Almighty." By the name of El-Shaddai, God was known to the patriarchs (Gen. xvii. 1; xxviii. 3; xliii. 14; xlviii. 3; xlix. 25) before the name Jehovah, in its full significance, was revealed (Ex. vi. 3).

Sha'drach. The Hebrew, or rather Chaldee, name of Hananiah, the chief of the "three children." The history of Shadrach, or Hananiah, as told in Dan. i.-iii., is well known.

Shal'isha, the Land of. One of the districts traversed by Saul when in search of the asses of Kish (Sam. ix. 4).

Shal'lecheth, the Gate. One of the gates of the "house of Jehovah" (1 Chron. xxvi. 16). It was the gate "to the causeway of the ascent."

Shal'lum. 1. The fifteenth king of Israel, son of Jabesh, conspired against Zechariah, son of Jeroboam II., killed him, and brought the dynasty of Jehu to a close, B. C. 770. Shallum, after reigning in Samaria for a month only, was dethroned and killed by Menahem (2 Kings xv. 10-14). 2. The husband of Huldah the prophetess. 3. Third son of Josiah, king of Judah, known as Jehoahaz.

Shalmane'ser. The Assyrian king who reigned immediately before Sargon and after Tiglath-pileser. Soon after his accession he led the forces of Assyria into Palestine, where Hoshea, the last king of Israel, had revolted (2 Kings xvii. 3). Afterward he invaded Palestine and laid siege to Samaria.

Sham'gar. Son of Anath, judge of Israel. Shamgar with an ox-goad (Judg. iii. 31; comp. 1 Sam. xiii. 21) made a desperate assault upon the Philistines and slew six hundred of them.

Sha'mir. 1. A town in the mountain district of Judah (Josh. xv. 48). 2. A place in Mount Ephraim, the residence and burial-place of Tola the judge (Judg. x. 1, 2).

Sham'mah. 1. The son of Reuel, the son of PRISON (MAMERTINE) OF ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL AT ROME.

Esau. 2. The third son of Jesse and brother of David. 3. One of David's mighty men. 4. The Harodite, one of David's mighties. 5. In the list of David's mighty men.

Sha'ron. A beautiful district near Carmel, along the sea-coast (Cant. ii. 1). The name became proverbial to express a place of great fertility and beauty. Modern travellers give the name Sharon to the plain between Eedippe and Ptolemais.

Shave. Shaving the head or beard, among the Jews, was a sign of mourning (Isa. xv. 2; Jer. xli. 5). They preserved their beards from their youth with great care, so that to lose them was a great humiliation (2 Sam. x.). The Lord's threatening to shave Israel with "a hired razor," means that foreign troops should utterly scrape or despoil the land (Isa. vii. 20).

Shawm. The "shawm" was a musical instrument resembling the clarinet.

Shear'ing-house, the. A place between Jezreel and Samaria, at which Jehu, on his way to the latter, encountered forty-two members of the royal family of Judah, whom he slaughtered (2 Kings x. 12, 14).

She'ba. 1. A son of Raamah, son of Cush. 2. A son of Joktan. 3. A son of Jokshan, son of Keturah (Gen. xxv. 3; 1 Chron. i. 32).

She'bah. The famous well which gave its name to the city of Beer-sheba (Gen. xxvi. 33). [See BEERSHEBA.]

Sheb'na. A person of high position in Hezekiah's court (Isa. xxii. 15), but subsequently a subordinate officer (Isa. xxxvi. 3; 2 Kings xix. 2).

Shech'em. A celebrated city of Palestine, called also Sichem (Gen. xii. 6), Sychar (John iv. 5), and Sychem (Acts vii. 16). It was in existence when Abram entered Canaan. It was plundered and the inhabitants put to the sword by Simeon and Levi, because the chief's son had defiled their sister Dinah (Gen. xxxiii. 18-20; xxxiv.). Was appointed a city of refuge (Josh. xvii. 7). There the bones of Joseph were buried; and as a central point it was the place where Joshua gathered Israel to receive his last instructions (Josh. xxiv. 1-23, 32). Shechem was situated in a beautiful valley about seven miles south of Samaria. The modern town is called Nablous, or Nablás, from Neapolis: it contains about eight thousand inhabitants. The streets are narrow and vaulted over. Almost two miles to the east lies a small village, Balata, where Joseph's tomb is believed to be (Josh. xxiv. 32), and at a little distance south-east, Jacob's well.

Shechi'nah. This term is not found in the Bible. It was used by the later Jews to express the visible majesty of the Divine Presence. The use of the term is first found in the Targums. As regards the visible manifestation of Divine Presence among the Israelites, to which the term Shechinah has attached itself, the idea which the accounts in Scripture convey is that of a most brilliant and glorious light, enveloped in a cloud, and usually concealed by the cloud, but on particular occasions the glory appeared.

Sheep. Sheep were used in the sacrificial offerings, both the adult animal (Ex. xx. 24; 1 Kings viii. 63; 2 Chron. xxix. 33) and the lamb. Sheep and lambs formed an important article of food. The wool was used as clothing. Sheep-shearing is alluded to in Gen. xxxi. 19; xxxviii. 13;

Deut. xv. 19; 1 Sam. xxv. 4; Isa. liii. 7, etc. Sheep-dogs were employed in biblical times, as is evident from Job xxx. 1.

Sheep'gate, the. One of the gates of Jerusalem as rebuilt by Nehemiah (Neh. iii. 1, 32; xii. 39).

Shek'el (to weigh). A Hebrew weight and money (Ex. xxx. 23, 24; 2 Sam. xiv. 26). The word is used to denote the weight of anything, as iron, hair, spices, etc. The shekel of gold was half the weight of the shekel of silver, and was worth eighteen shillings and threepence, English. "The shekel of the sanctuary," Calmet thinks, was the same as the common shekel, the words "of the sanctuary" being added to express a just and exact weight, according to the standard kept in the temple or tabernacle.

Shem. The eldest son of Noah, born (Gen. v. 32) when his father had attained the age of five hundred years. He was ninety-eight years old, married and childless, at the time of the Flood. Afterward children were born to him. With the help of his brother Japheth he covered the nakedness of their father, which Canaan and Ham did not care to hide. In the prophecy of Noah (ix. 25-27) the first blessing falls on Shem. He died at the age of six hundred years. The portion of the earth occupied by the descendants of Shem (x. 21-31) intersects the portions of Japheth and Ham, and stretches in an uninterrupted line from the Mediterranean Sea to the Indian Ocean.

Shemai'ah. A prophet in the reign of Rehoboam.

Shemi'daites, the. The descendants of Shemida, the son of Gilead (Num. xxvi. 32).

Shem'inith. In the title of Ps. vi. and Ps. xii. (comp. 1 Chron. xv. 21). It seems most probable that Sheminith denotes a certain air known as the eighth, or a certain key in which the psalm was to be sung.

She'shach. A term in Jeremiah (xxv. 26; li.

ANCIENT ASSYRIAN SANDALS.

41), used as a synonym either for Babylon or for Babylonia.

Shew-bread. That which was constantly exhibited in the temple. Twelve loaves, according to the twelve tribes, were every day put upon the golden table, to be exposed for the whole week. This bread was forbidden to be eaten by any except the priests; therefore in the extraordinary case of David nothing but urgent necessity could exempt him from sin (1 Sam. xxi. 3-7; Matt. xii. 4). It served to remind the Hebrews of their dependence on God for daily support, and was an emblem of Jesus, who is the Bread of life (John vi. 48).

Shib'boleth (Judg. xii. 6). The Hebrew word which the Gileadites under Jephthah made use of at the passage of the Jordan, after a victory over the Ephraimites, to test the pronunciation of the sound sh by those who wished to cross over the river. The Ephraimites in their dialect substituted for sh the simple sound s; and the Gileadites, regarding every one who failed to pronounce sh as an Ephraimite, and therefore an enemy, put him to death accordingly. The word has two meanings in Hebrew: first, an ear of corn; secondly, a stream or flood (Ps. lxxix. 2, 15); and it was, perhaps, in the latter sense that this particular word suggested itself to the Gileadites, the Jordan being a rapid river.

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN SANDALS.

Shilo'ah, the Waters of. A certain soft-flowing stream mentioned by the prophet Isaiah (viii. 6), better known under the later name of Siloam—the only perennial spring of Jerusalem.

Shi'loh (Gen. xlix. 16). The meaning of the word is peaceable or pacific, and the allusion is either to Solomon, whose name has a similar signification, or to the expected Messiah, who in Isa. ix. 6 is expressly called the Prince of peace. Other interpretations, however, are given, one of which makes it refer to the city of this name. [See the following article.]

Shi'loh. A city of Ephraim. In Judg. xxi. 19 its location is given. Shiloh was one of the earliest and most sacred of the Hebrew sanctuaries. The ark of the covenant was kept at Shiloh from the last days of Joshua to the times of Samuel (Josh. xviii. 10; Judg. xviii. 31; 1 Sam. iv. 3).

Shim'ei. 1. Son of Gershon the son of Levi, called Shimi in Ex. vi. 17. 2. Shimei, the son of Gera, a Benjamite of the house of Saul. The incidents of his life are contained in 2 Sam. xvi. 5-13; 2 Sam. xix. 18; 1 Kings ii. 36, 37, 40, 41-46. 3. One of the adherents of Solomon at the time of Adonijah's usurpation (1 Kings i. 8).

Shi'nar. The ancient name of the tract through which the Tigris and Euphrates pass, known in later times as Chaldea or Babylonia. It was a plain country, where brick had to be used for stone and slime for mortar (Gen. xi. 3).

Ship. The rig of an ancient ship was more simple and clumsy than that employed in modern times. Its great feature was one large mast, with one large square sail fastened to a yard of great length. Hence the strain upon the hull and the danger of starting the planks were greater. In the O. T. the mast is mentioned (Isa. xxxiii. 23), and from another prophet (Ezek. xxvii. 5) we learn that cedar-wood from Lebanon was sometimes used for this part of ships. In Ezek. xxvii. 29 oars are distinctly mentioned, and it seems that oak-wood from Bashan was used in making them. Another feature of the ancient as of the modern ship is the flag at the top of the mast (Isa. l.c., and xxx. 18).

Shi'shak. King of Egypt, the Sheshenk I. of the monuments. Shishak received the fugitive Jeroboam (1 Kings xi. 40), and probably at his instigation attacked Rehoboam. "He took the fenced cities, came to Jerusalem," and exacted all the treasures of his city from Rehoboam, and apparently made him tributary (1 Kings xiv. 25, 26; 2 Chron. xii. 2-9).

Shit'tah tree, Shit'tim (Heb. shittah). Some species of acacia, of which three or four kinds occur in the Bible lands. The wood of the Acacia seyal is more definitely signified. It yields the well-known substance called gum arabic, which is obtained by incisions in the bark.

Sho'bab. Son of David by Bathsheba (2 Sam. v. 14; 1 Chron. iii. 5; xiv. 4).

Sho'bach. The general of Hadarezer, king of the Syrians of Zoba, who was defeated by David (2 Sam. x. 15-18). In 1 Chron. xix. 16, 18 he is called Shopbaah.

Shoshan'nim (Ps. xlv. lxix.) Most probably indicates the melody "after" or "in the manner of" (upon) which the psalms were to be sung. Shoshannim-eduth occurs in the same way in the title of Ps. lxxx.

Shu'hite. Frequent in the book of Job, but only as the epithet of one person, Bildad. Indications point to a region on the western side of Chaldea, bordering on Arabia.

Shu'lamite, the. A female personage in the poem of Solomon's Song (vi. 13). If Shulamite and Shunammite are equivalent, we conjecture that the Shunammite who was the object of Solomon's passion was Abishag.

Shu'nammitte, the. Applied to two persons: Abishag, the nurse of King David (1 Kings i. 3, 15; ii. 17, 21, 22), and the nameless hostess of Elisha (2 Kings iv. 12, 25, 36).

Shur. A place just without the eastern border of Egypt. Shur is first mentioned in the narrative of Hagar's flight from Sarah (Gen. xvi. 7). Shur may have been a fortified town east of the ancient head of the Red Sea, and was probably the last Arabian town before entering Egypt.

Shu'shan, or Su'sa. A city on the banks of the river Ulai, in Persia, the winter residence of the Persian kings from the time of Cyrus. Here Daniel had his vision of the ram and he-goat (Dan. viii.). The commissioners engaged (in 1852) in running the boundary between Turkey and Persia discovered the remains of the ancient palace of Shushan, mentioned in Esther and Daniel. The "pavement of red and blue, and black and white marble," still exists. Not far from the palace is a tomb on which is sculptured the figure of a man bound hand and foot, with a lion in the act of springing upon him. This is probably the tomb of Daniel.

Shuthe'lah. Head of an Ephraimite family and lineal ancestor of Joshua, the son of Nun (1 Chron. vii. 20-27).

Sid'dim, the Vale of (Gen. xiv. 3, 8, 10). In this valley the kings of the five allied cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim and Bela seem to have awaited the approach of the invaders. It is therefore probable that it was in the neighbourhood of the "plain or circle of Jordan" in which those cities stood. The original of the passage seems to imply that the Salt Sea covers the actual space formerly occupied by the Vale of Siddim.

Si'don. The Greek form of the Phœnician name Zidon. [See ZIDON.]

Si'hon. King of the Amorites when Israel arrived on the borders of the promised land (Num. xxi. 21).

Si'hor (Josh. xiii. 3). The little river in the south of Judea called the river of Egypt. In Isa. xxiii. 3 and Jer. ii. 18 it must mean the Nile.

Si'las. An eminent member of the early Christian Church, described under that name in the Acts, but as Silvanus in St. Paul's Epistles. He first appears as one of the leaders of the Church at Jerusalem (Acts xv. 22), holding the office of an inspired teacher (xv. 32). His name betokens him a Hellenistic Jew, and he appears to have been a Roman citizen (Acts xvi. 37).

Silk. The only undoubted notice of silk in the Bible occurs in Rev. xviii. 12, where it is mentioned among the treasures of the typical Babylon. It is, however, in the highest degree probable that the texture was known to the Hebrews from the time that their commercial relations were extended by Solomon. The well-known classical name of the substance does not occur in the Hebrew language.

Sil'la. The scene of the murder of King Joash (2 Kings xii. 20). What or where Sila was is matter of conjecture. Some have suggested the pool of Siloam.

Sil'loam. A fountain rising at the foot of Mount Zion. Its waters were received into two large pools, and whatever overflowed from the lower one passed into the brook Kedron. There are, even at this day, beautiful gardens and small fields watered by it on its way to Kedron. The upper pool was sometimes called the "King's Pool," probably because his gardens were watered from it. From these pools the Jews drew water on the last day of the feast of tabernacles, which they brought into the city with great signs of joy, singing portions of Isa. xii. It was poured on and around the altar with joyful acclamations. Near this place stood the tower of which Christ speaks (Luke xiii. 4).

Silva'nus. [See SILAS.]

Sil'ver (Gen. xx. 16; 1 Pet. i. 18; Acts iii. 4; xx. 33). It does not appear to have been in use before the Deluge. But in Abraham's time it was become common, and traffic was carried on with it (Gen. xxiii. 2, 15). Yet it was not then coined, but was only in bars or ingots, and in commerce was always weighed.

Sil'verlings (Isa. vii. 23). A translation of the Hebrew word elsewhere rendered "silver" or "money."

Si'meon. 1. The second son of Jacob, born in the year 2247. 2. An aged saint who embraced the infant Jesus (Luke ii. 25-34). It is thought by some learned historians he was the great rabbi with whom Gamaliel, Paul's teacher, studied. 3. A Christian minister of Antioch (Acts xiii. 1).

RUINS OF SARDIS, THE SITE OF ONE OF THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

Si'mon. 1. Son of Mattathias. 2. Son of Onias, the high priest. 3. "A governor of the temple" in the time of Seleucus Philopater. 4. Simon, the brother of Jesus. The only undoubted notice of this Simon occurs in Matt. xiii. 55; Mark vi. 3. 5. Simon the Canaanite, one of the twelve apostles (Matt. x. 4; Mark iii. 18), otherwise described as Simon Zelotes (Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13). 6. Simon of Cyrene, a Hellenistic Jew, who was present at Jerusalem at the time of the crucifixion of Jesus. Meeting the procession that conducted Jesus to Golgotha, he was pressed into the service to bear the cross (Matt. xxvii. 32; Mark xv. 21; Luke xxiii. 26) when Jesus himself was unable to bear it any longer (comp. John xix. 17). 7. Simon the Leper, a resident at Bethany, distinguished as "the leper." It is not improbable that he had been miraculously cured by Jesus. In his house Mary anointed Jesus preparatory to his death and burial (Matt. xxvi. 6, etc.) 8. Simon Magus, a Samaritan living in the apostolic age, distinguished as a sorcerer or "magician," from his practice of

Sin-offering. [See SACRIFICE.]
Si'on, Mount. 1. One of the various names of Mount Hermon (Deut. iv. 48). 2. The Greek form of the Hebrew name Zion, the famous mount of the temple.
Si'rach. The father of Jesus (Joshua), the writer of the Hebrew original of the book of Ecclesiasticus.
Si'rah, the Well of. From which Abner was recalled by Joab to his death at Hebron (2 Sam.

used in the process of embalming, and was hence called gummi.

Sling. One of the earliest weapons invented by man. By long practice wonderful skill is attained in the use of it, as was the case with the Benjamites, who, "with either hand, could sling stones at a hair, and not miss" (Judg. xx. 16).

Smyr'na (Rev. ii. 8-11). Was founded by Alexander the Great, and was situated twenty stadia from the city of the same name, which after a long series of wars with the Lydians had been finally taken and sacked by Halyattes. The city has suffered greatly at various times from earthquakes, fires, sieges and captures, the plague, etc. It is now called Ismir, is the seat of a pashalic, has an extensive trade, and contains a population estimated at one hundred and fifty thousand.

Snail. Occurs but twice in our translation. In Lev. xi. 30 critics are confident that some sort of lizard is intended.

Snow (2 Sam. xxiii. 20; 1 Macc. xiii. 22). The snow lies deep in the ravines of the highest ridge of Lebanon until the summer is far advanced, and indeed never wholly disappears; the summit of Hermon also perpetually glistens with frozen snow. At Jerusalem snow often falls to the depth of a foot or more in January and February, but it seldom lies. At Nazareth it falls more frequently and deeply, and it has been observed to fall even in the maritime plain of Joppa and about Carmel.

Soap. It is fair to infer that borith refers to vegetable alkali, or some kind of potash, which forms one of the usual ingredients in our soap.

So'dom. One of the five cities of the Canaanites—the others were Gomorrah, Admah, Zebojim and Zoar. In the days of Abraham these had each a king. The Dead Sea is supposed by many to cover the site of these cities (Jude 7).

Sod'omites. This word is employed for those who practiced as a religious rite the abominable and unnatural vice from which the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah have derived their lasting infamy. It occurs in Deut. xxiii. 17 and elsewhere.

Sol'omon (pacific). His history is full of interest, and amply given in Scripture. He was the author of several books besides those in the Bible, viz.: three thousand proverbs, one thousand and five songs, besides works on botany, natural history and commerce. His history is fraught with both religious and political instruction. No mon-magical arts (Acts viii. 9). 9. Simon Peter. [See PETER.] 10. Simon, a Pharisee, in whose house a penitent woman anointed the head and feet of Jesus (Luke vii. 40). 11. Simon the Tanner, a Christian convert living at Joppa, at whose house Peter lodged (Acts ix. 43). 12. Simon, the father of Judas Iscariot (John vi. 71; xiii. 2, 26).

Sin. The name of several places mentioned in the Old Testament: 1. The desert south of Judea (Deut. xxxii. 51). 2. The city of Pelusium, in Egypt, now extinct. 3. A country, called also Sinim, which is probably China (Isa. xlix. 12).

Si'na, Mount. The Greek form of the well-known name Sinai (Acts vii. 30, 38).

Si'nai. The mountain on which Jehovah appeared to Moses and gave the Law. The Hebrews came to this place in the third month of their pilgrimage. The Law was given, it is thought, just fifty days after their exodus from Egypt, and hence the Pentecost was observed on the fiftieth day after the Passover. This mount stands in Arabia Petraea, and is called by the Arabs Jibbil Mousa, or the Mountain of Moses, and sometimes El Tor, or The Mount. It has two summits, Horeb at the north and Sinai at the south; which last is much the higher, and is called the Mount of God. The ascent is very steep, and is by steps, which the Empress Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, caused to be cut in the rock. These are now so worn and decayed as to make the ascent difficult. At the top of Sinai there is an uneven and rugged place sufficient to hold sixty persons. Here stands a chapel, and near to it is a fountain of fresh water. At the bottom, in a narrow valley, is the convent of St. Catharine, enclosed by high walls without a door—thus preserving it from Arab robbers. Whoever enters is drawn up in a basket. Mount Sinai, says Niebuhr, has numerous beautiful springs, but they are not so copious as to unite and form streams that last the whole year. Various modern travelers have ascended to the summit of this mount, but the Arabs practice upon them great impositions.

Sin'im. A people noticed in Isa. xlix. 12 as living at the extremity of the known world. They may be identified with the classical Sinae, the inhabitants of the southern part of China.

iii. 26). It was apparently on the northern road from Hebron.

Sis'era. Captain of the army of Jabin, king of Canaan, who reigned in Hazor. [See JABEL.]

Sit'nah. The second of the two wells dug by Isaac in the valley of Gerar, the possession of which the herdmen of the valley disputed with him (Gen. xxvi. 21).

Slave. [See SERVANT.]

Slime. Was used by the builders of Babel instead of mortar. It is called in the Septuagint version asphaltos, and is bitumen or a kind of pitch. Great quantities of it are still found in the neighbourhood of ancient Babylon. The slime-pits of Sidim were mud-holes or springs, out of which issued this liquid bitumen or naphtha. It was arch ever enjoyed such popularity and prosperity, and yet he was very far from being happy. The SONG OF SOLOMON is a sublime mystical allegory, representing the reciprocal love of Christ and the Church. In 1 Kings iv. 32 we are informed that Solomon's Songs were a thousand and five, of which this is supposed to be the chief for length and grandeur, or as being inspired, and is hence called a Song of Songs.

Sol'omon, Wisdom of. [See WISDOM, BOOK OF.]

Sooth'sayer. [See DIVINATION.]

So'pater. Son of Pyrrhus of Beroea, was one of the companions of St. Paul on his return from Greece into Asia (Acts xx. 4).

Sor'erer. [See DIVINATION.]

So'rek, the Valley of. A wady in which lay the residence of Delilah (Judg. xvi. 4). It was possibly near Gaza.

Sow'er, Sow'ing. In the operation of sowing the sower held the vessel or basket containing the seed in his left hand, while with his right he scattered the seed broadcast (Ps. cxxxvi. 6). In wet soils the seed was trodden in by the feet of animals (Isa. xxxii. 20). The sowing season commenced in October and continued to the end of February, wheat being put in before and barley after the beginning of January. The Mosaic law prohibited the sowing of mixed seed (Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxii. 9).

Spain. Anciently comprehended what is now Portugal—that is, the whole peninsula. In the time of the apostles it belonged to Rome. Paul intended to visit this country, but whether he did so or not is uncertain (Rom. xv. 24–28).

Spar'row. Although our common sparrow, says an English writer, does not occur in the Holy Land, its place is abundantly supplied by two very closely allied southern species. Our English tree-sparrow is also very common, and may be seen in numbers on Mount Olivet, and also about the sacred enclosure of the mosque of Omar. This is perhaps the exact species referred to in Ps. lxxiv. 3. Most of our commoner small birds are found in Palestine.

ANCIENT BABYLONIAN SEALS.

Spear'men (Acts xxiii. 23). Probably troops so lightly armed as to be able to keep pace on the march with mounted soldiers.

Spice. Among the sweet aromatic odours referred to in the Bible, the principal was that of the balsam or balm of gilead. The balm of gilead tree grows in some parts of Arabia and Africa, and is seldom more than fifteen feet high, with straggling branches and scanty foliage. The balsam is chiefly obtained from incisions in the bark, but the substance is procured also from the green and ripe berries.

Spid'er. A crafty insect mentioned but three times in the Bible, and each time in allusion to wicked men (Job viii. 14; Isa. lix. 4–7; Prov. xxx. 28).

Spike'nard (nard). By this was meant a highly aromatic plant growing in the Indies, from whence was made the very valuable extract, or unguent, or favourite perfume used at the ancient baths and feasts. It is mentioned by St. Mark (xiv. 3) and John (xii. 3). This was not a Syrian production, but the true "atar" of Indian spikenard, an unguent containing the very essence of the plant, and brought at a great expense from a remote country.

Spin'ning (Prov. xxxi. 19). Implies the use of the instruments in vogue at the present day.

Sponge (Matt. xxvii. 48; Mark xv. 36; John xix. 29). The commercial value of the sponge was known from very early times.

Stae'te. A fragrant gum of amber colour, supposed to distil from the myrrh tree. The difference between the stacte and gum myrrh seems to be that the former oozed spontaneously from the tree, and was pure, while the latter was obtained by incision, and was less excellent. It is mentioned Ex. xxx. 34.

Star. The star which conducted the wise men to the infant Jesus was probably a meteor which moved in the air (Matt. ii.) Jesus Christ is called the "Morning Star" by a similitude borrowed from a star which usually rises shortly before the sun, as he introduced the light of the Gospel day.

Steel. In all cases where the word "steel" occurs in the Accepted Version the true rendering of the Hebrew is "copper."

Steph'anas. A Christian convert of Corinth, whose household Paul baptized as the "first-fruits of Achaia," and who was with the apostle at Ephesus (1 Cor. i. 16; xvi. 15).

IMPRESSIONS OF SIGNETS OF THE KINGS OF ASSYRIA AND EGYPT.

Ste'phen. The first Christian martyr was the chief of the seven (commonly called deacons) appointed to rectify the complaints in the early Church of Jerusalem made by the Hellenistic against the Hebrew Christians. He shot far ahead of his six companions. He was arrested at the instigation of the Hellenistic Jews and brought before the Sanhedrim. His speech in his defence and his execution by stoning outside the gates of Jerusalem are related at length in the Acts (vii.) One of the prominent leaders in the bloody work was a young man from Tarsus—the future Apostle of the Gentiles.

Stocks. A wooden frame in which the feet, hands and neck of a person were so fastened that his body was held bent (Jer. xx. 2, 3; xxix. 26). In Job xiii. 27, xxxiii. 11 it signifies stocks like ours, in which the feet alone were confined. And such were the "stocks" of Acts xvi. 24. But the sufferer might be tortured in these by having his legs drawn far apart.

Sto'ies (Acts xvii. 18). The Stoic school was founded by Zeno of Citium (about B. C. 280), and derived its name from the painted "portico" (stoa) in which he taught. The morality of Stoicism is essentially based on pride, that of Christianity on humility; the one upholds individual independence, the other absolute faith in another; the one looks for consolation in the issue of fate, the other in Providence; the one is limited by periods of cosmical ruin, the other is consummated in a personal resurrection (Acts xvii. 18).

Stom'aeher. The Hebrew word so translated describes some article of female attire (Isa. iii. 24), the character of which is a mere matter of conjecture.

Stones, Preeious. Precious stones are used in Scripture in a figurative sense, to signify value, beauty, durability, etc.

Ston'ing. The punishment generally appointed in the law of Moses for capital offences. One of the witnesses first threw the culprit on the ground. Then another east upon his breast a great stone, kept for the purpose at the place of execution. Then, if he were not dead, the multitude present stoned him also. Paul was stoned at Lystra, and left for dead by the mob, but as his brethren stood round him lamenting, he rose up and returned into the city (Acts xiv. 19).

Stork. The white stork is one of the most conspicuous of land birds, standing nearly four feet high, the jet black of its wings and its bright red beak and legs contrasting finely with the pure white of its plumage (Zech. v. 9). It devours readily all kinds of offal and garbage, and is placed in the list of unclean birds by the Mosaic law (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18). The black stork is less abundant. Both species are numerous in Palestine. The derivation of chasidâh (from chesed, "kindness") points to the paternal and filial attachment, of which the stork seems to have been a type among the Hebrews no less than the Greeks and Romans.

Stran'gle. To kill by suffocation, or without shedding the blood. It is forbidden Christians to eat animals killed in this way (Acts xv. 20–25).

Straw. The Egyptians anciently reaped their corn close to the ear, and then cut off the straw close upon the ground. This was the straw that was chopped up and mixed with clay to make bricks more compact and tenacious. When it was refused by Pharaoh to the Israelites, they had to gather stubble, probably the short straw still left (Ex. v. 6–18). This useless stubble was often burnt (Isa. v. 24). Straw, perhaps sometimes mingled with beans, etc., was generally used in Palestine as fodder or provender (Gen. xxiv. 25; 1 Kings iv. 28; Isa. xi. 7).

Street. The streets of ancient towns were probably narrow. The street called "Straight" in Damascus (Acts ix. 11), was an exception to the rule of narrowness; it was one hundred feet wide. That streets occasionally had names appears from Jer. xxxvii. 21; Acts ix. 11. Each street and bazaar in a modern town is locked up at night; the same custom appears to have prevailed in ancient times (Cant. iii. 3).

Sue'oth. 1. A town in the account of the homeward journey of Jacob from Padan-aram (Gen. xxxiii. 17). Jacob there put up "booths" (Succoth) for his cattle, as well as a house for himself. 2. The first camping-place of the Israelites when they left Egypt (Ex. xii. 37; xiii. 20; Num. xxxiii. 5, 6).

Sue'oth-be'noth (2 Kings xvii. 30). It has been supposed that this term signifies the "tents of daughters," which some explain as "the booths in which the daughters of the Babylonians prostituted themselves in honour of their idol;" others as "small tabernacles in which were contained images of female deities."

Superscrip'tion (Matt. xxii. 20). It was the custom of the Romans to write on a tablet or board the crime for which any man suffered death. This tablet they carried before the offender to the place of execution and fastened it over his head, that all might read his transgression and beware of violating the laws of their country. Hence the superscription written over the head of Jesus Christ, as recorded by all the Evangelists (Matt. xxvii. 37).

Susan'na. 1. The heroine of the story of the judgment of Daniel. 2. One of the women who ministered to the Lord (Luke viii. 3).

Swal'low (sis). There is considerable diversity of opinion among critics on the Hebrew designation of this well-known bird. Our translators take dérûr and âgûr to signify swallow in different passages, but they seem wrong. The former of the words (Ps. lxxxiv. 3) is better understood to be applied to a species of dove, and the latter word (Prov. xxvi. 2) imports the crane. The real designation of the swallow appears to be sis, either from its sprightliness, its swift motion, or its note.

Swan. An unclean aquatic bird (Lev. xi. 18; Deut. xiv. 16). The Hebrew term so translated is derived from a verb signifying "to respire;" it probably means the pelican. Mr. Tristram, however, is inclined to identify the bird in question with the purple water-hen.

Sweat, Bloody. One of the physical phenomena attending our Lord's agony in the Garden of Gethsemane, as described by St. Luke (xxii. 44). Of this malady, known in medical science by the term diapedesis, there have been examples recorded both in ancient and modern times. The cause assigned is generally violent mental emotion. It arises from a violent commotion of the nervous system, turning the streams of blood out of their natural course, and forcing the red particles into the cutaneous excretories.

Swine. The flesh of this animal was strictly forbidden to the Hebrews (Lev. xi. 7; Deut. xiv. 8). Perhaps the prohibition was medically advisable. But, though to a conscientious Jew swine's flesh was abominable, yet it seems to have been offered in idol-worship, and the worshipper no doubt feasted on the sacrifice (Isa. lv. 4; lxvi. 3, 17). Wild hogs (Sus scrofa) are now common on the Syrian hills; perhaps they were equally common in ancient times (Ps. lxxx. 13). And certainly in our Lord's days the breeding of swine was usual (Matt. vii. 6; viii. 30-33; Luke xv. 15, 16; 2 Pet. ii. 22).

Syc'amine tree (Luke xvii. 6). The sycamine is distinct from the sycamore of the same Evangelists (xix. 4). The sycamine is the mulberry tree (Morus). Both black and white mulberry trees are common in Syria and Palestine.

Syc'amore. A tree having fruit like to the fig. The Egyptians seem fond of its fruit. It is always green, and is said to produce seven crops a year. The tree abounded in Palestine (1 Kings x. 27).

Sy'chem. The same as Shechem.

Sye'ne. Once an important city of Egypt (Ezek. xxix. 10). It is the true terminus of the Nile navigation for boats of the first class, and is still a large town, with ruins extending every way and indicating its former greatness. It is now called Assuan, pronounced by the natives As-wan.

Syn'agogue. The place where the Jews met to pray, to read and to hear the reading of the Holy Scriptures, and other instruction. Synagogues began to be used about the time of Ezra, and were very useful in keeping up a knowledge of God among the people. There was a council or assembly of reverend and wise persons, versed in the law, who had the care of all things belonging to the service of the synagogue and the management of certain judicial affairs. Over these was set a president, called the "ruler of the synagogue" (Luke viii. 41). As there was but one temple, and to this a resort was required but thrice a year, and then by males only, such a mode of keeping the Sabbath became indispensable. Soon after the captivity the Jews had great numbers of synagogues, which increased till there were about four hundred and eighty of them in Jerusalem. Every trading fraternity had its synagogue, and companies of strangers, as Alexandrians, Cyrenians and others, had theirs for public prayer and for reading the Scriptures. Our Saviour and his apostles found the synagogues very convenient places for proclaiming the good news from heaven (Luke iv. 20).

Syr'acuse. A celebrated city on the eastern coast of Sicily. St. Paul arrived thither in an Alexandrian ship from Melita on his voyage to Rome (Acts xxviii. 12).

Syr'ia, or Ar'am. The Syrians descended from Aram, and possessed Mesopotamia, Chaldea and part of Armenia. Syria Proper had Cilicia on the north, and Canaan and part of Arabia Deserta on the south. Its good soil and noble rivers rendered it a delightful country. It was divided into various provinces, which derived their names from their chief cities, situation or circumstance. CELO-SYRIA included the valley between the ridges of Libanus and Anti-Libanus. The term signifies Syria the Hollow. SYRIA OF DAMASCUS was a province stretching eastward along Mount Libanus, of which Damascus was the capital. SYRIA OF REHOB was that part of which Rehob was the metropolis, and bordered on Palestine. SYRIA OF MAACHAH lay beyond Jordan, toward Lebanon, and was given to Manasseh. TOB, or ISHTOB, was a province in the neighbourhood of Libanus. SYRIA, without any other appellation, stands for the whole kingdom of Syria, of which Antioch became the capital after the reign of the Seleucida, before which the name is seldom used alone.

Sy'ro-phœni'cian (Mark vii. 26). The word denoted perhaps a mixed race, half Phœnician and half Syrian. Matthew (xv. 22) speaks of "a woman of Canaan" in place of St. Mark's "Syro-phœnician," on the same ground that the Septuagint translate Canaan by Phœnicia.

T.

Ta'anach. An ancient Canaanitish city (Josh. xii. 21). Taanach is named in company with Megiddo, and they were evidently the chief towns on the western portion of the great plain of Esdraelon (1 Kings iv. 12). It is still called Ta'annuk.

Ta'anath-shi'loh (Josh. xvi. 6). One of the landmarks of the boundary of Ephraim. Perhaps Taanath was the ancient Canaanite name of the place, and Shiloh the Hebrew name.

VALLEY AND TOWN OF NABULUS (THE ANCIENT SHECHEM), AND MOUNT GERIZIM.

Ta'bering. An obsolete English word used in Nah. ii. 7. The Hebrew word connects itself with tôph, "a timbrel."

Tab'ernacle. 1. The tent or temporary building in which the Israelites performed religious exercises in the wilderness. It was called "the tabernacle of the congregation" (Ex. xxxiii. 7). Here, till the building of the temple, was kept the ark of the covenant (Ex. xxvi. 1; Heb. ix. 2, 3). It was forty-five feet long and fifteen wide. A curtain divided it into two apartments, the eastern one, called the Most Holy Place, being fifteen feet square. Within the Holy Place stood the altar of incense, the candlestick and the table of shew-bread. Within the Holy of Holies was the ark of the covenant, with its mercy-seat and overshadowing cherubim, between which rested the shechinal or visible glory. The tabernacle was a splendid and costly structure, but having been removed often, it became entirely worn out by the time Solomon's temple was ready. It stood in a court one hundred and fifty feet long and seventy-five wide, enclosed by curtains eight feet high, sustained by fifty-six pillars. Within this area stood the tabernacle at the west end, and the altar of burnt-offering, brazen laver, etc.

Tab'itha. The Syrian name of a Christian woman, called in Greek Dorcas, who lived at Joppa. She was raised from the dead by Peter (Acts 9).

Table. The Jewish table mostly in use was probably a circular piece of leather spread on the floor, on which the food is laid, while those who partake sit round with their legs crossed. Among those in higher life each guest had his separate table and mess.

Ta'bor. 1. A conical mountain in Galilee (Josh. xix. 12, 22) about eighteen hundred French feet high, on the top of which is a beautiful plain about a mile in circumference. From the top is one of the most delightful prospects in the world. On the north-west is the Mediterranean; west and south, the plain of Esdraelon; south and east, Galilee, and north-east, the Sea of Tiberias. On this mount Barak assembled his army, and at the foot of it defeated the host of Jabin (Judg. iv. 6, 8). 2. A city given by the Zebulonites to the Levites of Merari's family (1 Chron. vi. 77), and the name of a place near Bethel (1 Sam. x. 3).

Ta'bor, the Plain of. This is an incorrect translation, and should be THE OAK OF TABOR (1 Sam. x. 3).

Tab'ret. [See TIMBREL.]

Tache. This word occurs in the description of the structure of the tabernacle and its fittings in Ex. xxvi. and elsewhere.

Tad'mor. A city in the north of Canaan. Its vicinity was fertile, though at a little distance all was a sandy desert. It was probably built by Solomon, to facilitate his commerce with the East. It submitted to Rome A. D. 130. About one hundred and fifty years afterward the Saracens took it. Here lived the famous Zenobia and Longinus. It was destroyed A. D. 273. Its ruins are extensive and magnificent, especially the remains of the great temple of the sun. About thirty poor families constitute its population. The modern name of the town was Palmyra, but it now again is called Tadmor throughout the East.

Tah'panhes, Tehaph'nehes, Tahap'anes. A city of Egypt, mentioned in the time of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. The name is Egyptian, and resembles that of the Egyptian queen Tahpenes. When Johanan and the other captains went into Egypt "they came to Tahpanhes" (Jer. xliii. 7). The Jews in Jeremiah's time remained here (Jer. xlv. 1). Here stood a house of Pharaoh-hophra, before which Jeremiah hid great stones (xliii. 8-10).

Tah'penes. An Egyptian queen, wife of the Pharaoh who received Hadad the Edomite, and who gave him her sister in marriage (1 Kings xi. 18-20).

Tal'ent. A Jewish coin of weight. It is not clear what was the exact value of the talent. That of silver was probably somewhere near fifteen hundred dollars, and that of gold about twenty-five thousand.

Talma'i. 1. One of the three sons of "the Anak," who were slain by the men of Judah (Num. xiii. 22). 2. Son of Ammihud, king of Geshur (2 Sam. iii. 3). He was probably a petty chieftain dependent on David.

Tal'mud (doctrine). A collection of writings, containing a full account of the civil and religious laws of the Jews. It was a fundamental principle of the Pharisees, common to them with all orthodox modern Jews, that by the side of the written law there was an oral law to complete and to explain the written. This oral law, with the commentaries upon it, forms the Talmud. It consists of the Mishna and Gemara. 1. The Mishna, or "second law," which contains a compendium of the whole ritual law, was reduced to its present form by Rabbi Jehudah the Holy, a Jew of wealth and influence who flourished in the second century of the Christian era. The Mishna is very concisely written, and requires notes. 2. This circumstance led to the Commentaries called Gemara (i. e. Supplement, Completion) which form the second part of the Talmud, and which are very commonly meant when the word "Talmud" is used by itself. There are two Gemaras: one of Jerusalem, and the other of Babylon, completed about 500 A. D. The latter is the most important and by far the longest. It is estimated to be fifteen times as long as the Mishna.

Ta'mar (palm tree). 1. The wife successively of the two sons of Judah, Er and Onan (Gen. xxxviii. 6-30). The family were on the point of extinction. Er and Onan had successively perished suddenly. Judah's wife, Bathshuah, died, and there only remained a child, Shelah, whom Judah was unwilling to trust with Tamar, lest he should meet with the same fate as his brothers. Accordingly, she resorted to the very desperate expedient of entrapping the father, which she successfully accomplished. The fruits of this intercourse were twins, Pharez and Zarah, and through Pharez the sacred line was continued. 2. Daughter of David and Maachah, and thus sister of Absalom (2 Sam. xiii. 1-32; 1 Chron. iii. 9). She and her brother were alike remarkable for their beauty. This inspired a frantic passion in her half-brother, Amnon, the eldest son of David by Ahinoam. He feigned sickness and entreated the presence of Tamar, on the pretext that she alone could give him food that he would eat. She came, took dough and kneaded it into the form of cakes, then took the pan in which they had been baked and poured them all out in a heap before the prince. He caused his attendants to retire, called her to the inner room and there accomplished his design. The brutal hatred of Amnon succeeding to his brutal passion, and the indignation of Tamar at his barbarous insult, even surpassing her indignation at his shameful outrage, are pathetically and graphically told. 3. Daughter of Absalom (2 Sam. xiv. 7), became by her marriage with Uriah of Gibeah the mother of Maachah, the future queen of Judah, or wife of Abijah (1 Kings xv. 2). 4. A spot on the south-eastern frontier of Judah, named in Ezek. xlvii. 19, from a palm tree.

Tam'muz, or Tham'muz. An Egyptian deity, thought by some to be Apis, or Serapis, or Osiris, (three names for the same god), and by others to be Adonis, whose untimely death was honoured by an annual mourning (Ezek. viii. 14). The tenth month of the Jewish civil year also bore this name (Jer. xxxix. 2).

Tappu'ah. 1. A city of Judah, in the Shefelah, or lowland (Josh. xv. 34). 2. A place on the boundary of the "children of Joseph" (Josh. xvi. 8; xvii. 8). Its full name was probably En-tappuah (xvii. 7).

Tares. There can be little doubt that the zizania of the parable (Matt. xiii. 25) denotes the weed called "darnel." Before it comes into ear it is very similar in appearance to wheat. Dr. Stanley, however, speaks of women and children picking up tall green stalks, called by the Arabs zuwân. "These stalks," he says, "are at first sight hardly distinguishable."

Tar'gum. The general term for the Chaldee or Aramaic Version of the O. T. The Jews, on the return from captivity, no longer spoke the Hebrew language; and as the common people had lost all knowledge of the tongue in which the sacred books were written, it naturally followed that recourse must be had to a translation into the idiom with which they were familiar—the Chaldee or Aramaic. Moreover, since a bare translation could not in all cases suffice, it was necessary to add an explanation of the more difficult and obscure passages. Both translation and explanation were designated by the term Targum. The Targums were originally oral, and the earliest Targum, which is that of Onkelos on the Pentateuch, began to be committed to writing about the second century of the Christian era. It follows a sober and clear, though not a slavish exegesis, and keeps as closely and minutely to the text as is at all consistent with its purpose, viz.: to be chiefly, and above all, a version for the people. Its explanations of difficult and obscure passages bear ample witness to the competence of those who gave it its final shape. It avoids the legendary character with which all the later Targums entwine the biblical word, as far as ever circumstances would allow.

Tar'shish, or Tar'sus. Several places were called by this name, viz.: 1. Tarsus in Cilicia, the capital of that country. It once excelled Athens and Alexandria in learning; those cities, and even Rome itself, being indebted to it for their best professors. Julius Cæsar, and afterward Octavius, granted its citizens the same privileges as those of Rome, and hence Paul was here "free born." It was the privilege of such cities to be governed by their own laws and magistrates, without having a Roman governor or garrison. The city at present is of no importance, but Christianity, planted here by Paul, has never been wholly eradicated. Its present name is Trassa, or Tersus, and its population thirty thousand. 2. The name seems to be applied to Tartessus, in Spain, not far from the famous city of Granada (Ps. lxxii. 10). 3. A place on the east of Africa, not far from Ophir (1 Kings x. 22). 4. Carthage (Isa. xxiii. 6).

Tar'tak. One of the gods of the Avite, or Avite, colonists of Samaria (2 Kings xvii. 31). According to tradition, Tartak is said to have been worshipped under the form of an ass.

Tar'tan. Which occurs only in 2 Kings xviii. 17 and Isa. xx. 1, has been generally regarded as a proper name: it is probably an official designation.

TABLE OF SHEW-BREAD (FROM BAS-RELIEF ON ARCH OF TITUS).

Tax'ing. Two distinct registrations, or taxings, are mentioned by St. Luke. The first, the result of an edict of the Emperor Augustus that "all the world (i. e., the Roman empire) should be taxed" (Luke ii. 1), and is connected by the Evangelist with the name of Cyrenius, or Quirinus. The second (Acts v. 37) is associated with the revolt of Judas of Galilee.

Teko'a, and Teko'ah. A town (2 Chron. xi. 6) on the range of hills which rise near Hebron and stretch eastward toward the Dead Sea. The "wise woman" whom Joab employed to effect a reconciliation between David and Absalom was obtained from this place (2 Sam. xiv. 2). Here also Ira, one of David's "mighty men," was born (2 Sam. xxiii. 26). It was one of the places which Rehoboam fortified at the beginning of his reign (2 Chron. xi. 6). But Tekoah is chiefly memorable as the birth-place of the prophet Amos (Amos vii. 14). Tekoa is known still as Tek'a.

Tel'aim. The place at which Saul collected and numbered his forces before his attack on Amalek (1 Sam. xv. 4) may be identical with Telem.

Te'lem. A porter or doorkeeper of the temple in the time of Ezra (Ezra x. 24). Probably the same as Talmon in Neh. xii. 25.

Te'man. 1. A son of Eliphaz, son of Esau by Adah (Gen. xxxvi. 11, 15, 42). 2. A country, and probably a city, named after the Edomite phylarch, or from which the phylarch took his name.

Tem'ple. The word sometimes applied to the tabernacle (1 Sam. i. 9; Ps. xviii. 6, and sometimes the temple itself is called tabernacle (2 Chron. i. 5). But the word is chiefly applied to the house built at Jerusalem for the worship of God. The preparations for this temple were immense. David and his princes contributed one hundred and eight thousand talents of gold; one million and seventeen thousand talents of silver, which together amounted to forty-six thousand tons weight of gold and silver, or the value of more than four thousand millions of dollars. About one hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred men were employed seven years in building it. It was erected on Mount Moriah and was dedicated with solemn prayer by Solomon during seven days of sacred feasting, and by a peace-offering of twenty thousand oxen and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep, to consume which the holy fire came down anew from heaven. In about thirty-four years, Shishak carried off its treasures (1 Kings xiv. 25, 26). Jehoiada and Joash repaired it about A. M. 3150. Soon after, Joash gave its treasures to Hazael, king of Syria (2 Kings xii. 4, 5). Ahaz stripped it to hire the assistance of Assyria (2 Chron. xxviii.) Hezekiah repaired it and made vessels for it, but in the fourteenth year of his reign was obliged to take from it much of its wealth to give to Sennacherib (2 Kings xviii.) About A. M. 3398, Nebuchadnezzar carried the sacred vessels to Babylon, and at last, about A. M. 3416, entirely demolished it (Jer. lii. 12-23). About A. M. 3469, Cyrus ordered it rebuilt, which was done under the direction of Zerubbabel. It wanted, however, as the Jews say, five things which were the chief glory of the former, viz.: the Ark, and its furniture, the Shechinah, or the cloud of the divine presence, the Holy fire, the Urim and Thummim, and the spirit of prophecy (Ezek. i. 3, 6). The second temple having stood more than five hundred years, and being greatly out of repair, Herod the Great, about A. M. 3987, began to build it anew. In nine years he finished the principal parts of it; but forty-six years after, when our Saviour had begun his public ministry, it was not quite finished. It was thus far made one of the most astonishing structures in the world for magnitude and magnificence. Though almost a new edifice, it retained the name of Second Temple. It was more glorious than the original temple (Hag. ii. 9), because honoured with the presence and ministry of Christ. It was burnt and entirely destroyed by the Roman army under Titus. A Mohammedan mosque now stands on the very spot. Into this no Jew or Christian dare venture on pain of death or of redeeming his life by becoming a disciple of Islamism.

Ten Commandments. The popular name is not that of Scripture. There we have literally the "Ten Words," the "Covenant," or very often the "Testimony." The term "Commandments" had come into use in the time of Christ (Luke xviii. 20). Their division into Two Tables is not only expressly mentioned, but the stress laid upon the two leaves no doubt that the distinction was important, and that it answered to that summary of the law which was made both by Moses and by Christ into two precepts.

Tent. A portable abode, invented by Jubal before the Flood. Mankind for centuries lived in tents, as those do to this day whose pastoral or migratory habits cause frequent removals. The word tent is synonymous with tabernacle.

Te'rah. The father of Abram, Nahor and Haran, and through them the ancestor of the Israelites, Ishmaelites, Midianites, Moabites and Ammonites (Gen. xi. 24-32). We learn that he was an idolater (Josh. xxiv. 2), that he dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees (Gen. xi. 28), and that with his son Abram, his daughter-in-law Sarai and his grandson Lot he emigrated to Haran (Gen. xi. 31). And finally, "the days of Terah were two hundred and five years, and Terah died in Haran" (Gen. xi. 32).

Ter'aphim. Only in plural, images connected with magical rites. The derivation of the name is obscure. In one case a single statue seems to be intended by the plural (1 Sam. xix. 13, 16).

Ter'tius. Probably a Roman, was the amanuensis of Paul in writing the Epistle to the Romans (Rom. xvi. 22).

Tertul'lus. "A certain orator" (Acts xxiv. 1) who was retained by the high priest and Sanhedrim to accuse the Apostle Paul at Cæsarea before the Roman procurator, Antonius Felix. He evidently belonged to the class of professional orators. We may infer that Tertullus was of Roman, or at all events of Italian, origin.

Tes'tament. The will of a testator (Gal. iii. 15; Heb. ix. 16, 17). The Greek word so translated in the New Testament is that by which the LXX. have uniformly translated the Hebrew word for covenant. The Old Scriptures are called the Old Testament, or Covenant, or Dispensation (2 Cor. iii. 14). The dispensation of the covenant of grace, as contained in the writings of the evangelists and apostles, is called the New Testament. It is last in order, and shall never be abolished. Though it agrees with the Old Testament, it is far more clear, spiritual, efficacious and easy (Heb. ix. 15; Acts xv. 10).

Te'trarch. A Roman magistrate who governed the fourth part of a kingdom. The term was afterward applied to any petty sovereign, and became synonymous with Ethnarch.

Thad'deus. A name in Mark's catalogue of the twelve apostles (Mark iii. 18) in the great majority of MSS. It seems scarcely possible to doubt that the three names of Judas, Lebbeus and Thaddeus were borne by one and the same person.

Thank-offering, or Peace-offering. The properly eucharistic offering among the Jews, in theory resembling the meat-offering. Its ceremonial is described in Lev. iii. The only constantly recurring peace-offering appears to have been that of the two firstling lambs at Pentecost (Lev. xxiii. 19). The general principle of the peace-offering seems to have been, that it should be entirely spontaneous (Lev. xix. 5).

The'atre. Denotes the place where dramatic performances are exhibited, and also the scene or spectacle witnessed there. It occurs in Acts xix. 29. It was in the theatre at Cæsarea that Herod Agrippa I. was struck with death, because he heard so gladly the impious exclamations of the people (Acts xii. 21-23). In the sense of spectacle it occurs in 1 Cor. iv. 9.

The'bez. A place memorable for the death of Abimelech (Judg. ix. 50), situated "in the district of Neapolis," thirteen Roman miles therefrom. There it still is, its name, Tubäs, hardly changed.

Theoph'ilus. The person to whom St. Luke inscribes his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles (Luke i. 3; Acts i. 1). From the honourable epithet applied to him in Luke i. 3, it is probable he was a person in high official position.

Thessalo'nians. The title of two Epistles written to the Church at Thessalonica, which was planted by Paul (Acts xvii.) The first Epistle is generally admitted to have been the earliest of Paul's letters. He enjoined it to be read to all the adjacent churches (chap. v. 27). His object seems to have been to confirm them in the faith and to excite their piety. The second Epistle, written soon after the first, commends their faith and charity, rectifies their mistake in supposing that the day of judgment was at hand, admonishes them of certain irregularities, etc.

Thessaloni'ca. The original name of this city was Therma. Cassander, the son of Antipater, rebuilt and enlarged Therma, and named it after his wife Thessalonica, the sister of Alexander the Great. The name ever since, under various slight modifications, has been continuous, and the city itself has never ceased to be eminent. Saloniki is still the most important town of European Turkey, next after Constantinople. About A. D. 52, Paul, Silas and Timothy planted a church here.

Theu'das. The name of an insurgent mentioned in Gamaliel's speech before the Jewish council (Acts v. 35-39) at the time of the arraignment of the apostles. He appeared, according to Luke's account, at the head of about four hundred men. Josephus speaks of a Theudas who played a somewhat similar part in the time of Claudius, about A. D. 44.

Thom'as (John xx. 24). One of the twelve apostles, also called Didymus—"the twin." We know little of his history: he seems to have been of singular temperament, occasionally overcome by a dark and morbid melancholy. He was also wayward and slow of belief (John xi. 16; xiv. 5; xx. 20-29). It is supposed he was actively engaged in propagating the gospel in the East Indies, and suffered martyrdom. There are numbers of Christians in the East who believe that they are the churches which this apostle originally planted, and they call themselves on that account Christians of St. Thomas.

Thorns and This'tles. There appear to be eighteen or twenty Hebrew words which point to different kinds of prickly or thorny shrubs. These words are variously rendered "thorns," "briers," "thistles," etc. In relation to the "crown of thorns" (Matt. xxvii. 29), it was probably composed of the pliant, thorny twigs of the nebk (Zizyphus Spina Christi), being common everywhere. Still, there are many thorny plants in Palestine, and all conjectures are uncertain.

Three Tav'erns. A station on the Appian Road, along which St. Paul travelled from Puteoli to Rome (Acts xxviii. 15). It was near the modern Cisterna. There is no doubt that "Three Taverns" was a frequent meeting-place of travellers.

Thresh'ing. [See AGRICULTURE.]

Throne. The Hebrew word so translated applies to any elevated seat occupied by a person in authority, whether a high priest (1 Sam. i. 9), a judge (Ps. cxxii. 5) or a military chief (Jer. i. 15). Solomon's throne was approached by six steps (1 Kings x. 19; 2 Chron. ix. 18), and was furnished with arms or "stays." The steps were also lined with pairs of lions. As to the form of chair, we are only informed in 1 Kings x. 19 that "the top was round behind." The king sat on his throne on state occasions. At such times he appeared in his royal robes. The throne was the symbol of supreme power and dignity (Gen. xli. 40).

Thum'mim. [See URIM and THUMMIM.]

Thun'der. Is hardly ever heard in Palestine from the middle of April to the middle of September. Hence it was selected by Samuel as a striking expression of the divine displeasure toward the ment, cruel and vindictive in his disposition. Tiberius died A. D. 37, at the age of seventy-eight, after a reign of twenty-three years. Our Saviour was put to death in the reign of Tiberius.

Tib'ni. After Zimri had burnt himself in his palace, half of the people followed Tibni, the son of Ginath, and half followed Omri (1 Kings xvii. 21, 22). Omri was the choice of the army. The seh" (1 Chron. v. 26). He appears to have succeeded Pul, and to have been succeeded by Shalmaneser, and to have ruled Assyria during the latter half of the eighth century before our era.

Ti'gris. Used as the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew Hiddekel. The Tigris rises from two principal sources in the Armenian mountains, and flows into the Euphrates. Its length, exclusive of meanders, is reckoned at one thousand one hundred and forty-six miles. It receives along its middle and lower course no fewer than five important tributaries. It appears under the name of Hiddekel among the rivers of Eden (Gen. ii. 14), and is there correctly described as "running eastward to Assyria."

Tim'brel, Tab'ret (Heb. tóph, Ex. xv. 20). A musical instrument, supposed to have resembled the modern tambourine. It was used in ancient times chiefly by women as an accompaniment to the song and dance, and appears to have been worn by them as an ornament. The diff of the Arabs is described by Russell as "a hoop (sometimes with pieces of brass fixed in it to make a jingling) over which a piece of parchment is distended. It is beaten with the fingers, and is the true tympanum of the ancients." In Barbary it is called tar.

Tim'na, Tim'nah. 1. A concubine of Eliphaz, son of Esau, and mother of Amalek. 2. A duke or phylarch of Edom in the last list in Gen. xxxvi. 40-43.

Tim'nah. 1. One of the landmarks of the allotment of Judah (Josh. xv. 10). 2. A town in the mountain district of Judah (Josh. xv. 57), distinct from that just examined. 3. Inaccurately written Timnath, the scene of the adventure of Judah with his daughter-in-law Tamar (Gen. xxxviii. 12, 13, 14).

Ti'mon. One of the seven commonly called "deacons" (Acts vi. 1-6). He was probably a Hellenist.

Tim'othy, or Tim'otheus. Was a native of Lystra. His father was a Greek, but his grandmother and mother, being pious Jewish women, trained him up in the knowledge of the Scriptures (Acts xvi. 1). His bodily constitution was weak, but his gifts and graces were eminent. He was much with Paul, and seems to have been ordained before he was twenty years old. He preached in many cities, but chiefly in Ephesus. The two Epistles to Timothy were written by Paul from

VILLAGE OF SILVAN (SILOAM), THE VALLEY OF THE KIDRON AND THE "KING'S GARDENS."

Israelites (1 Sam. xii. 17). In the imaginative philosophy of the Hebrews thunder was regarded as the voice of Jehovah (Job xxxvii. 2, 4, 5; xl. 9).

Thyati'ra (Acts xvi. 14). A city of the province of Lydia, in Asia Minor, now known as Akhisar. It is situated in an extensive plain, near a branch of Caicus, south-east of Smyrna, between Sardis and Pergamos, and was the site of one of the seven churches of Asia to which John wrote (Rev. i. 11). It was also the residence of Lydia, whom Paul met and baptized at Philippi. Its present population may be a thousand families, between three and four hundred of which are nominal Christians of the Greek and Armenian faith. Except the Moslem's palace, there is scarcely a decent house in the place.

Thy'ine Wood (Rev. xviii. 12). There can be little doubt that the wood spoken of is that of the Callitris quadrivalvis of present botanists. This tree was much prized by the ancient Greeks and Romans on account of the beauty of its wood for various ornamental purposes.

Tibe'rias. A city in the time of Christ, on the Sea of Galilee, first mentioned in the New Testament (John vi. 1, 23; xxi. 1), and then by Josephus, who states that it was built by Herod Antipas, and was named by him in honour of the Emperor Tiberius. Tiberias was the capital of Galilee from the time of its origin until the reign of Herod Agrippa II., who changed the seat of power back again to Sepphoris, where it had been before the founding of the new city. Many of the inhabitants were Greeks and Romans, and foreign customs prevailed there to such an extent as to give offence to the stricter Jews. The ancient name has survived in that of the modern Tibarteh, which occupies the original site.

Tibe'rias, the Sea of (John xxi. 1). Galilee. [See SEA OF.]

Tiber'ius. The second Roman emperor, successor of Augustus, who began to reign A. D. 14, and reigned until A. D. 37. He was the son of Tiberius Claudius Nero and Livia, and hence a stepson of Augustus. He was born at Rome on the 16th of November, B. C. 45. He became emperor in his fifty-fifth year. He was despotic in his government, cruel and vindictive in his disposition. Tiberius died A. D. 37, at the age of seventy-eight, after a reign of twenty-three years. Our Saviour was put to death in the reign of Tiberius.

Ti'dal (Gen. xiv. 1, 9). He is called "king of nations," from which we conclude that he was a chief over various nomadic tribes.

Tig'lath-pile'ser. The second Assyrian king mentioned in Scripture as having come into contact with the Israelites. He attacked Samaria in the reign of Pekah (2 Kings xv. 29). Subsequent to this first expedition he marched against Damascus, which he took (2 Kings xvi. 9), razing it to the ground, and killing Rezin, the Damascus monarch. After this, probably, he proceeded to chastise Pekah, and overran the whole district to the east of Jordan, carrying into captivity "the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manas-

Rome, not long before his death. In these he is instructed in the choice of officers for the Church, in the proper deportment of a Christian minister, in the method of church government and discipline, the importance of steadfastness in Christian doctrine, the perils and seductions that should come, etc.

Tin. Among the metals found in the spoils of the Midianites tin is enumerated (Num. xxxi. 22).

It was known to the Hebrew metal-workers as an alloy of other metals (Isa. i. 25; Ez. xxii. 18, 20).

Tiph'sah. An important city on the Euphrates, which constituted the extreme northern boundary of Solomon's kingdom. It is called in history Thapsacus (1 Kings iv. 24).

Tir'as. The youngest son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), usually identified with the Thracians, as presenting the closest verbal approximation to the name.

Tire. An ornamental head-dress worn on festive occasions (Ezek. xxiv. 17, 23).

THE CASTLE AND PORT OF SMYRNA.

Tir'hakah. King of Ethiopia (Cush), the opponent of Sennacherib (2 Kings xix. 9; Isa. xxxvii. 9).

Tirsha'tha (always written with the article). The title of the governor of Judea under the Persians, added as a title after the name of Nehemiah (Neh. viii. 9; x. 1); it is rendered "governor."

Tir'zah (literally pleasant). A very beautiful city belonging to the tribe of Ephraim (1 Kings xv. 17).

Tish'bite, the. The well-known designation of Elijah. The commentators and lexicographers, with few exceptions, adopt the name "Tishbite" as referring to the place Thisbe in Naphtali, which is found in the LXX. text of Tobit i. 2.

Tithes (*tenth*s). The early practice of giving a tenth of income to religious purposes seems to have been by divine institution. Abram gave to Melchisedec, the Lord's priest, the tenth of his spoils taken in battle (Gen. xiv. 20). Jacob dedicated to God the tenth of his gain (Gen. xxviii. 22). Many of the Greeks, Romans and other heathen devoted the tenth part of their incomes to the service of their gods. By the Jewish law the tenth of the product of corn, cattle, etc., was assigned to the Levites. Of what remained to the proprietor another tithe was levied, and in value or kind sent to the service of the tabernacle and temple, and the ministers thereof at the solemn feasts. On every third year a third tithe was levied for the use of the Levites and the fatherless, widows and strangers. The Levites paid to the priests the tithe of what they received from the people (Deut. xiv. 28). The Pharisees, however, tithed their mint, anise, cummin and rue, but neglected weightier things, as mercy, judgment and faith (Deut. xiv. 22-29; Num. xviii. 20).

Tit'tle. A minute point attached to some of the characters in the Hebrew alphabet. A small circumstance.

Ti'tus. A Gentile, and one of Paul's early converts. Of the time, place or manner of his death we have no certain account. Tradition says he lived to the age of ninety-four years, and was buried in Crete, where he had been left by Paul (Tit. i. 5). The Epistle to Titus is eminently valuable for its elucidations of the nature of various duties. The Epistle seems to have been written from Ephesus, shortly after Paul had visited Crete (ch. i. 6).

Tob, the Land of. In which Jephthah took refuge when expelled from home by his half-brother (Judg. xi. 3). No identification of this ancient district with any modern one has yet been attempted.

Tobi'ah. "Tobiah the slave, the Ammonite" played a conspicuous part in the opposition made to the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Though a slave (Neh. ii. 10, 19), unless this is a title of opprobrium, and an Ammonite, he found means to ally himself with a priestly family, and his son Johanan married the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berechiah (Neh. vi. 18).

To'bit, Book of. A book of the Apocrypha, probably written originally in Greek. The scene of the book is placed in Assyria, whither Tobit, a Jew, had been carried as a captive by Shalmaneser. It is a didactic narrative, and its point lies in the moral lessons which it conveys, and not in the incidents.

Togar'mah. A son of Gomer, and brother of Ashkenaz and Riphath (Gen. x. 3). Togarmah, as a geographical term, is connected with Armenia (Ezek. xxvii. 14; xxxviii. 6).

To'la. 1. The first-born of Issachar and ancestor of the Tolaites (Gen. xli. 13). 2. Judge of Israel after Abimelech (Judg. x. 1, 2). Tola judged Israel for twenty-three years at Shamir in Mount Ephraim, where he died and was buried.

Tombs. [See BURIAL.]

Tongues, Gift of. Promised by our Lord to his disciples (Mark xvi. 17), and fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when cloven tongues like fire sat upon the disciples, and "every man heard them speak in his own language" (Acts ii. 1-12).

To'paz (Heb. pitdah). The topaz of the ancient Greeks and Romans is generally allowed to be our chrysolite; it is so soft as to lose its polish unless worn with care.

To'pheth, and once To'phet. Was in the south-east extremity of the "Valley of the Son of Hinnom" (Jer. vii. 31; xix. 2). [See HINNOM.] It seems also to have been part of the king's gardens, and watered by Siloam. The name Tophet has been variously translated. The most natural seems that suggested by the occurrence of the word in two consecutive verses, in the one of which it is a tabret, and in the other Tophet (Isa. xxx. 32, 33). The Hebrew words are nearly identical, and Tophet was probably the king's "music-grove" or garden, denoting originally nothing evil or hateful. Certainly there is no proof that it took its name from the drums beaten to drown the cries of the burning victims that passed through the fire to Molech. The pious kings defiled it and threw down its altars and high places, pouring into it all the filth of the city, till it became the "abhorrence" of Jerusalem.

Tor'toise (Heb. tsab). The tsab occurs only in Lev. xi. 29, as the name of some unclean animal. The Hebrew word may be identified with the kindred Arabic dhab, "a large kind of lizard," which appears to be the terrestrial monitor or skink of Egypt (Psammosaurus scincus). This is three or four feet long, and is common to the deserts of Palestine and North Africa.

Tow'er. Watch-towers or fortified posts in frontier or exposed situations are mentioned in Scripture, as the tower of Edar, etc. (Gen. xxv. 21, etc.), the tower of Lebanon (2 Sam. viii. 6). Besides these, we read of towers built in vineyards (Isa. v. 2; Matt. xxi. 33; Mark xii. 1). Such towers are still in use in Palestine, and are used as lodges for the keepers of the vineyards.

Town-clerk. The title ascribed to the magistrate at Ephesus who appeased the mob in the theatre (Acts xix. 35). The original service of this class of men was to record the law and decrees of the state, and to read them in public.

Trance (Acts x. 10). This word occurs twice in the Old Testament (Num. xxiv. 4, 16), and in both instances is supplied by the translators. In the case of Peter there was an interposition of supernatural power.

Trees. Scripture mentions the palm, shittah, bay, cedar, chestnut, almond, willow, cypress, pine, ebony, almag or albug, oak, teil, apple, ash, elm, juniper, box, fir, oil, olive, citron, balsam, pomegranate, fig, sycamore, sycamine, poplar, thyme and mulberry. Trees in Palestine generally put forth their foliage in the month of January, when the old leaves of many trees are not fallen off. The first blossoms are those of the almond tree.

Trial. 1. The trial of our Lord before Pilate was, in a legal sense, a trial for the offence læse majestatis; one which would be punishable with death (Luke xxiii. 2, 38; John xix. 12, 15). 2. The trials of the apostles, of St. Stephen and of St. Paul, before the high-priest, were conducted according to Jewish rules (Acts iv.; v. 27; vi. 12; xxii. 30; xxiii. 1). 3. The trial, if it may be so called, of St. Paul and Silas at Philippi was held before the duumviri, on the charge of innovation in religion—a crime punishable with banishment or death (Acts xvi. 19, 22). 4. The interrupted trial of St. Paul before the Proconsul Gallio was an attempt made by the Jews to establish a charge of the same kind (Acts xviii. 12-17). 5. The trials of St. Paul at Cæsarea (Acts xxiv., xxv., xxvi.) were conducted according to Roman rules of judicature. In Acts xix. 38 we read of a judicial assembly which held its session at Ephesus.

Tribe (Num. i. 4). The posterity of each of the twelve sons of Jacob is called a tribe. Jacob, on his death-bed, adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, the sons of Joseph, as his own children (Gen. xlviii. 5), and thus made two tribes of one. In the distribution of the promised land, however, only twelve shares were made; for the tribe of Levi were to minister in the temple, and to be supported by the contributions of the rest. The twelve tribes continued to be one people until after the death of Solomon, when ten of them revolted and became a separate monarchy under Jeroboam, and were called the kingdom of Israel, leaving the tribes of Benjamin and Judah under the government of Rehoboam, with the name of the kingdom of Judah.

Trib'ute. The tribute (money) mentioned in Matt. xvii. 24, 25 was the half shekel (= half stater = two drachmæ), applied to defray the general expenses of the temple. This must not be confounded with the tribute paid to the Roman emperor (Matt. xxii. 17).

BLUE THRUSH OF JUDEA—THE "SPARROW" of Ps. cii. 7.

Trip'olis. The Greek name of a Phœnician city of great commercial importance. What its Phœnician name was is unknown (2 Macc. xiv. 1). The ancient Tripolis was finally destroyed by the Sultan El Mansour in the year 1829. El Myna, which is perhaps on the site of the ancient Tripolis, is a small fishing village.

Tro'as. The city from which St. Paul first sailed, in consequence of a divine intimation to carry the Gospel from Asia to Europe (Acts xvi. 8, 11). It was first built by Antigonus. Afterward it was embellished by Lysimachus, and named Alexandria Troas. Its situation was on the coast of Mysia, opposite the south-east extremity of the island of Tenedos. Under the Romans it was one of the most important towns of the province of Asia. The modern name is Eski-Stamboul, with considerable ruins. We can still trace the harbour in a basin about four hundred feet long and two hundred broad.

Trogyl'ium. A cape which formed a bay about five miles from Samos, where the vessel in which Paul sailed to Macedonia made an anchorage for a night (Acts xx. 15).

Trum'pet. [See CORNET.]

Trum'pets, Feast of (Num. xxix. 1; Lev. xxiii. 24). The feast of the new moon, which fell on the first of Tizri. It was one of the seven days of holy convocation. Instead of the mere blowing of the trumpets of the temple at the time of the offering of the sacrifices, it was "a day of blowing of trumpets." Also (Num. xxix. 1-6), there seems to be no sufficient reason to call in question the common opinion of Jews and Christians that it was the festival of the New Year's Day of the civil year, the first of Tizri, the month which commenced the sabbatical year and the year of jubilee.

Tryphe'na and Trypho'sa. Two Christian women at Rome, enumerated in the conclusion of St. Paul's letter (Rom. xvi. 12). It is likely they were fellow-deaconesses.

Try'phon. A usurper of the Syrian throne. His proper name was Diodotus, and the surname Tryphon was given to him or adopted by him after his accession to power. The events of his life are given in First Maccabees.

Tu'bal. Is reckoned with Javan and Meshech among the sons of Japheth (Gen. x. 2; 1 Chron. i. 5). Josephus identifies the descendants of Tubal with the Iberians—that is, the inhabitants of a tract between the Caspian and Euxine Seas, which nearly corresponded to the modern Georgia.

Tu'bal-ca'in. The son of Lamech the Cainite by his wife Zillah (Gen. iv. 22). He is called "a furbisher of every cutting instrument of copper and iron."

Turpen'tine tree (Ecclus. xxiv. 16). It is the Pistacia terebinthus, terebinth tree, common in Palestine and the East.

BALSAM OF GILEAD (AMYRIS GILEADENSIS).

Turtle, Turtle-dove (Heb. tôr). The turtle-dove occurs first in Gen. xv. 9. During the early period of Jewish history there is no evidence of any other bird except the pigeon having been domesticated, and up to the time of Solomon it was probably the only poultry known to the Israelites. It is not improbable that the palm dove (Turtur Egyptianus, Temm.) may in some measure have supplied the sacrifices in the wilderness, for it is found in amazing numbers wherever the palm tree occurs, whether wild or cultivated. The regular migration of the turtle-dove and its return in spring are alluded to in Jer. viii. 7 and Cant. ii. 11, 12.

Ty'chicus (Acts xx. 4). A companion of Paul, and evidently a devoted and faithful disciple (Eph. vi. 21, 22; Col. iv. 7, 8).

Tyran'us. A man in whose school or place of audience Paul taught the Gospel for two years, during his sojourn at Ephesus (see Acts xix. 9). The presumption is that Tyrannus was a Greek, and a teacher of philosophy or rhetoric.

SPIKENARD (NARDOSTACHYS JATAMANSI).

Tyre. An ancient city, possessing for ages astonishing enterprise and wealth (Isa. xxiii. 8). It was founded by the Sidonians about two hundred and forty years before the erection of Solomon's temple. The period of its greatest prosperity seems to have been about B. C. 600, when it was described by Ezekiel (ch. xxvii.). After a siege of thirteen years by Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 537, it was overcome. The insular city flourished for two hundred years, when Alexander stormed and took it. After many changes it at last fell under the Romans. It was the emporium of commerce and the arts. The chief deities of the place were Hercules and Astarte. About A. D. 200 it was sacked by Niger, emperor of Rome. Was taken by the Crusaders, and desolated A. D. 1289. It was seized by the Ottoman Turks A. D. 1516, who are to this day masters of all that country. The predictions of Isaiah and Ezekiel, that this city, for its wickedness, should be utterly destroyed, have been most severely fulfilled (Isa. xxxiii.; Ezek. xxvi. 28). For a long time it was utterly desolate, but at length revived a little. In 1837 it was almost destroyed by an earthquake. There is now a considerable village built among the ruins, the population of which is estimated at several thousands. It is now called Shur or Zur, which was also its most ancient name, and from which the whole country was called Syria.

U.

Ula'i. Mentioned by Daniel (viii. 2, 16). It has been generally identified with the Eulaeus, a large stream in the immediate neighbourhood of Susa. The Eulaeus has been by many identified with the Choaspes, the modern Kerkhah, an affluent of the Tigris.

Unclean Meats. These were things strangled, or dead of themselves, or through beasts or birds of prey; whatever beast did not both part the hoof and chew the cud, and certain other smaller animals rated as "creeping things;" certain classes of birds mentioned in Lev. xi. and Deut. xiv.—twenty or twenty-one in all; whatever in the waters had not both fins and scales; whatever winged insect had not besides four legs the two hind-legs for leaping; besides things offered in sacrifice to idols, and all blood or whatever contained it (save perhaps the blood of fish, as would appear from that only of beast and bird being forbidden, Lev. vii. 26), and therefore flesh cut from the live animal; as also all fat—at any rate that disposed in masses among the intestines, and probably wherever discernible and separable among the flesh (Lev. iii. 14-17; vii. 23). The eating of blood was prohibited even to "the stranger that sojourneth among you" (Lev. xvii. 10, 12, 13, 14).

Undergird. The ship in which St. Paul sailed to Italy is said to have been undergirded (Acts xxvii. 17); that is, some turns of a cable were passed round the hull.

U'nicorn. A fierce and powerful animal, often mentioned in Scripture. It is generally thought to mean the rhinoceros, which has a strong horn between its forehead and nose, with which it rips up trees into splinters for food. Some have thought that the buffalo was the true unicorn. The pictures which represent the unicorn in the form of a horse, with a horn in its forehead, have generally been thought fictitious, but such an animal exists in Africa. Many sculptures on the ruins of Persepolis exhibit it. Pliny describes it as very fierce, resembling a horse, and with a horn of three feet projecting from the centre of its forehead. Bartema, a Roman traveller, in 1530, saw two of these animals at Mecca, kept as great curiosities, which had been received from Ethiopia. Father Lobo saw unicorns in Abyssinia in 1720. The Hottentots informed Dr. Sparman, in 1776, that horses with one horn in their forehead were sometimes seen.

Uphar'sin (dividing). Why none of the Chaldean astrologers and learned men could read these words (Dan. v. 7) is not known. Perhaps being all written as one word, they could not rightly divide the letters, or possibly only the initial letters of the words might have been written. Peres, which is used for this word in Daniel's interpretation (ch. v. 28), is the singular of Pharsin, the letter U, put before the latter word, answering to our word and.

Ur. The land of Haran's nativity (Gen. xi. 28), and the place from which Terah and Abraham started "to go into the land of Canaan" (Gen. xi. 31). It is called in Genesis "Ur of the Chaldeans," while in the Acts St. Stephen places it, by implication, in Mesopotamia (vii. 2, 4). These are all the indications which Scripture furnishes as to its locality. It has been identified with the city of Or-fah in the highlands of Mesopotamia. In later ages it was called Edessa, and was celebrated as the capital of Abgarus, or Acbarus, who was said to have received the letter and portrait of our Saviour. In opposition to the most ancient traditions, many modern writers have fixed the site of Ur at Mughair, not very far above the head of the Persian Gulf. Among the ruins which are now seen at the spot are the remains of one of the great temples, of a model similar to that of Babel, dedicated to the moon, to whom the city was sacred.

COMMON SPONGE (SPONGIA OFFICINALIS).

Ur'bane (better written Ur'ban). A Christian disciple, in the long list of those whom St. Paul salutes in writing to Rome (Rom. xvi. 9).

Uri'ah. 1. One of the thirty commanders of David (1 Chron. xi. 41; 2 Sam. xxiii. 39). He was a foreigner—a Hittite. His name, however, and his manner of speech (2 Sam. xi. 11) indicate that he had adopted the Jewish religion. He married Bath-sheba, a woman of extraordinary beauty, the daughter of Eliam. In the first war with Ammon he followed Joab to the siege, and with him remained encamped in the open field (ib. 11). He returned to Jerusalem, at an order from the king, on the pretext of asking news of the war—really in the hope that his return to his wife might cover the shame of his own crime. The king met with an unexpected obstacle in the austere, soldier-like spirit which guided all Uriah's conduct, and which gives us a high notion of the character and discipline of David's officers. On the morning of the third day David sent him back to the camp with a letter containing the command to Joab to cause his destruction in the battle. The device of Joab was to observe the part of the wall of Rabbath-ammon where the greatest force of the besieged was congregated, and thither, as a kind of forlorn hope, to send Uriah. A sally took place. Uriah and the officers with him advanced as far as the gate of the city, and were there shot down by the archers on the wall. Just as Joab had forewarned the messenger, the king broke into a furious passion on hearing of the loss. The messenger, as instructed by Joab, calmly continued, and ended the story with the words: "Thy servant also, Uriah the Hittite, is dead." In a moment David's anger is appeased. It is one of the touching parts of the story that Uriah falls unconscious of his wife's dishonour. 2. High priest in the reign of Ahaz (Isa. viii. 2; 2 Kings xvi. 10-16). He probably succeeded Azariah, who was high priest in the reign of Uzziah, and was succeeded by that Azariah who was high priest in the reign of Hezekiah. Hence it is probable that he was son of the former and father of the latter. 3. A priest of the family of Hakkoz, the head of the seventh course of priests (Ezra viii. 33; Neh. iii. 4, 21).

U'riel (the fire of God). An angel named only in 2 Esdr. iv. 1, 36; v. 20; x. 28. Given as the name of—1. A Kohathite Levite, son of Tahath. 2. Chief of the Kohathites in the reign of David. 3. Uriel of Gibeah was the father of Maachah, or Michaiiah, the favourite wife of Rehoboam, and mother of Abijah (2 Chron. xiii. 2). In 2 Chron. xi. 20 she is called "Maachah the daughter of Absalom." Rashi gives a long note to the effect that her father's name was Uriel Abishalom.

Uri'jah. 1. Urijah the priest in the reign of Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 10), probably the same as Uriah. 2. The son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim. He prophesied in the days of Jehoiakim, and the king sought to put him to death, but he escaped into Egypt. His retreat was soon discovered; Elnathan and his men brought him up out of Egypt, and Jehoiakim slew him with the sword, and cast his body forth among the graves of the common people (Jer. xxvi. 20-23).

Urim and Thum'mim. Urim means "light," and Thum'mim, "perfection." We are told that "the Urim and the Thum'mim" were to be on Aaron's heart when he goes in before the Lord (Ex. xxviii. 15-30). When Joshua is solemnly appointed to succeed the great hero lawgiver, he is bidden to stand before Eleazar, the priest, "who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim," and this counsel is to determine the movement of the host of Israel (Num. xxvii. 21). In the blessings of Moses they appear as the crowning glory of the tribe of Levi: "Thy Thum'mim and thy Urim are with thy Holy One" (Deut. xxxiii. 8, 9). In what way the Urim and Thum'mim were consulted is quite uncertain. Josephus and the rabbins supposed that the stones gave out the oracular answer by preternatural illumination. But it seems to be far simplest and most in agreement with the different accounts of inquiries made by Urim and Thum'mim (1 Sam. xiv. 3, 18, 19; xxiii. 2, 4, 9, 11, 12; xxviii. 6; Judg. xx. 28; 2 Sam. v. 23, etc.) to suppose that the answer was given simply by the word of the Lord to the high priest (comp. John xi. 51), when he had inquired of the Lord clothed with the ephod and breastplate.

U'sury. Among the Jews meant the customary price paid for the use of money. As the Jews had very little concern in trade, and therefore only borrowed in cases of necessity, and as their system was calculated to establish every man's inheritance to his own family, they were prohibited to take usury from their brethren of Israel, at least if they were poor (Ex. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 35-37). They were allowed to lend money upon usury to strangers (Deut. xxiii. 20).

Uz. The country in which Job lived (Job i. 1). As far as we can gather we infer that the land of Uz corresponds to the Arabia Deserta of classical geography, at all events to so much of it as lies north of the thirtieth parallel of latitude.

Uz'za, the Garden of. The spot in which Manasseh, king of Judah, and his son Amon, were both buried (2 Kings xxi. 18, 26). It was the garden attached to Manasseh's palace (ver. 18). It has been suggested that the garden was so called from being on the spot at which Uzza-died during the removal of the ark from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem.

Uz'zah, or Uz'za. One of the sons of Abinadab, in whose house at Kirjath-jearim the ark rested for twenty years. Uzzah probably was the second, and Ahio the third. They both accompanied its removal when David first undertook to carry it to Jerusalem. Ahio apparently went before the new cart (1 Chron. xiii. 7) on which it was placed, and Uzzah walked by the side. "At the threshing-floor of Nachon" (2 Sam. vi. 6), or Chidon (1 Chron. xiii. 9), perhaps slipping over the smooth rock, the oxen stumbled. Uzzah caught the ark to prevent its falling. The profanation was punished by his instant death, to the great grief of David, who named the place Perez-uzzah (the breaking forth on Uzzah). But Uzzah's fate was not merely the penalty of his own rashness. The improper mode of transporting the ark, which ought to have been borne on the shoulders of the Levites, was the primary cause of his unholy deed; and David distinctly recognized it as a punishment on the people in general, "because we sought him not after the due order."

Uz'ziah. 1. King of Judah (B. C. 808-9-756-7). In some passages his name appears in the lengthened form Azariah, which some attribute to an error of the copyists. After the murder of Amaziah, his son Uzziah was chosen by the people to occupy the vacant throne at the age of sixteen, and for the greater part of his long reign of fifty-two years he lived in the fear of God and showed himself a wise, active and pious ruler. Uzziah waged numerous victorious wars. He strengthened the walls of Jerusalem. He was also a great patron of agriculture. He never deserted the worship of the true God, and was much influenced by Zechariah, a prophet who is only mentioned in connection with him (2 Chron. xxvi. 5). The end of Uzziah was less prosperous than his beginning. Elated with his splendid career, he determined to burn incense on the altar of God, but was opposed by the high priest Azariah and eighty others. (See Ex. xxx. 7, 8; Num. xvi. 40; xviii. 7.) The king, enraged at their resistance, pressed forward with his censor, and was suddenly smitten with leprosy. Uzziah was buried "with his fathers." 2. A priest of the sons of Harim, who had taken a foreign wife in the days of Ezra (Ezra x. 21). 3. Father of Athaiah, or Uthai (Neh. xi. 4). 4. Father of Jehonathan, one of David's overseers (1 Chron. xxvii. 25).

Uz'ziel. Fourth son of Kohath and uncle to Aaron (Ex. vi. 18, 22; Lev. x. 4). His descendants, the Uzzielites, were one of the four great families of the Kohathites (Num. iii. 27; 1 Chron. xxvi. 23).

V.

Vash'ti. The "queen" of Ahasuerus, who, for refusing to show herself to the king's guests at the royal banquet when sent for by the king, was repudiated and deposed (Esth. i.) Attempts have been made to identify her with historical personages, but it is probable that she was only one of the inferior wives dignified with the title of queen.

Val'ley. Valleys are seldom found in Palestine. Ravines and hollows through which streams flow in winter, while in summer their beds are almost or entirely dry, called wadies by the Arabs, occur much more frequently.

Veil. The use of the veil was by no means so general in ancient as in modern times. In ancient times the veil was adopted only in exceptional cases, either as an article of ornamental dress (Cant. iv. 1, 3; vi. 7), or by betrothed maidens in the presence of their future husbands, especially at the time of the wedding (Gen. xxiv. 65; xxix. 25), or lastly by women of loose character for purposes of concealment (Gen. xxxviii. 14). Among the Jews of the New Testament age it appears to have been customary for the women to cover their heads (not necessarily their faces) when engaged in public worship.

Veil of the Tabernacle. The veil which divided the holy of holies from the holy place in the Jewish tabernacle. It was rent in twain at our Saviour's death, and is typical of the separation between Jews and Gentiles. That separation is now removed by the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles (Heb. x. 20; Eph. ii. 14; Matt. xxvii. 51).

Ver'ily (truly). When spoken twice at the beginning of a remark it denotes a strong and solemn affirmation.

Version, Authorized. 1. WYCLIFFE (b. 1324; d. 1384). The New Testament was translated by Wycliffe himself. The Old Testament was undertaken by Nicholas de Hereford, but was interrupted, and ends abruptly (following so far the order of the Vulgate) in the middle of Baruch. Many of the MSS. of this version now extant present a different recension of the text, and it is probable that the work of Wycliffe and Hereford was revised by Richard Purvey, circ. A. D. 1388. The version was based entirely on the Vulgate. 2. TYNDAL. The work of Wycliffe stands by itself. Whatever power it exercised in preparing the way for the Reformation of the sixteenth century, it had no perceptible influence on later translations. With Tyndal we enter on a continuous succession. He is the patriarch, in no remote ancestry, of the Authorized Version. More than Cranmer or Ridley, he is the true hero of the English Reformation. He prepared himself for the work by long years of labour in Greek and Hebrew. In 1525 the whole of the New Testament was printed in 4to. at Cologne, and in small 8vo. at Worms. In England it was received with denunciations. 3. COVERDALE. A complete translation of the Bible different from Tyndal's, bearing the name of Miles Coverdale, printed probably at Zurich, appeared in 1535. The undertaking itself, and the choice of Coverdale as the translator, were probably due to Cromwell. He was content to make the translation at second hand "out of the Douche (Luther's German Version) and the Latine." 4. MATTHEW. In the year 1537 a large folio Bible appeared as edited and dedicated to the king by Thomas Matthew. No one of that name appears at all prominently in the religious history of Henry VIII., and this suggests the inference that the name was adopted to conceal the real translator. The tradition which connects this Matthew with John Rogers, the proto-martyr of the Marian persecution, is all but undisputed. A copy was ordered by royal proclamation to be set up in every church, the cost being divided between the clergy and parishioners. This was, therefore, the first Authorized Version. What has been said of Tyndal's Version applies, of course, to this. 5. TAVERNER (1539). The boldness of the pseudo-Matthew had frightened the ecclesiastical world from its propriety. Coverdale's Version was, however, too inaccurate to keep its ground. It was necessary to find another editor, and the printers applied to Richard Taverner. He had a reputation for scholarship, and this is confirmed by the character of his translation. In most respects this may be described as an expurgated edition of Matthew's. 6. CRANMER. In the same year as Taverner's, and coming from the same press, appeared an English Bible, in a more stately folio, with a preface containing the initials T. C., which imply the archbishop's sanction. It was reprinted again and again, and was the Authorized Version of the English Church till 1568—the interval of Mary's reign excepted. 7. GENEVA. The exiles who fled to Geneva in the reign of Mary entered on the work of translation with more vigour than ever. The New Testament, translated by Whittingham, was printed in 1557, and the whole Bible in 1560. It was the first English Bible which entirely omitted the Apocrypha. The notes were characteristically Swiss. 8. THE BISHOPS' BIBLE. Eight bishops, together with some deans and professors, brought out a magnificent folio (1568 and 1572). It was avowedly based on Cranmer's, but of all the English versions it had probably the least success. 9. RHEIMS AND DOUAY. The English Catholic refugees who were settled at Rheims undertook a new English version. The New Testament was published at Rheims in 1582, and professed to be based on "the authentic text of the Vulgate." The work of translation was completed somewhat later by the publication of the Old Testament at Douay in 1609. 10. AUTHORIZED VERSION. The position of the English Church in relation to the versions in use at the commencement of the reign of James was hardly satisfactory. The Bishops' Bible was sanctioned by authority. That of Geneva had the strongest hold on the affections of the people. Scholars, Hebrew scholars in particular, found grave fault with both. Among the demands of the Puritan representatives at the Hampton Court Conference in 1604 was one for a new, or at least a revised, translation. The work of organizing and superintending the arrangements for a new translation was one specially congenial to James, and in 1606 the task was accordingly commenced. It was entrusted to fifty-four scholars. The following were the instructions given to the translators: (1) The Bishops' Bible was to be followed, and as little altered as the original will permit. (2) The names of prophets and others were to be retained as nearly as may be as they are vulgarly used. (3) The old ecclesiastical words to be kept. (4) When any word hath divers significations, that to be kept which hath been most commonly used by the most eminent Fathers, being agreeable to the propriety of the place and the analogy of faith. (5) The division of the chapters to be altered either not at all or as little as possible. (6) No marginal notes to be affixed, but only for the explanation of Hebrew and Greek words. (7) Such quotations of places to be marginally set down as may serve for fit reference of one Scripture to another. (8 and 9) State plan of translation. Each company of translators is to take its own books; each person to bring his own corrections. The company to dis-

Coverdale's, Matthew's, Whitchurch's (Cranmer's) and Geneva. (15) Authorizes Universities to appoint three or four overseers of the work. For three years the work went on, the separate companies comparing notes as directed. When the work drew toward its completion it was necessary to place it under the care of a select few. Two from each of the three groups were accordingly selected, and the six met in London to superintend the publication. The final correction, and the task of writing the arguments of the several books, was given to Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Miles Smith, the latter of whom also wrote the Dedication and Preface. The version thus published did not all at once supersede those already in possession. It is not easy to ascertain the impression which the Authorized Version made at the time of its appearance. Selden says it is "the best of all translations, as giving the true sense of the original."

Vest'ment (2 Kings x. 22). The sacred robes of pagan priests. The vestry was the place where they lay, and were put off and on. A vesture is chiefly an upper robe (Deut. xxii. 12).

Vial (1 Sam. x. 1). A flask. The same word is rendered "box" in 2 Kings ix. 1, 3. Golden vials are spoken of.

Village. This word is often used to imply un-walled suburbs outside the walled towns. Villages, as found in Arabia, are often mere collections of stone huts. Others are more solidly built, as are most of the modern villages of Palestine, though in some the dwellings are mere mud-huts. There is little in the Old Testament to enable us more precisely to define a village of Palestine, beyond the fact that it was destitute of walls or external defences. Persian villages are spoken of in similar terms (Ezek. xxxviii. 11; Esth. ix. 19).

Vine. One of the most prominent productions of Canaan, and flourishing best in the lot of Judah, which contained the mountains of Engedi, and the valleys of Eshcol and Sorek (Gen. xlix. 11). At the present day a single cluster from those vines will often weigh twelve pounds; and, as the whole country is now comparatively neglected and barren, it is probable they once were much larger. Hence the spies, to avoid bruising the fine specimens they brought to Moses, hung them on a pole cuss them, and, having finished their work, to send it on to another company, and so on. (10) Provides for differences of opinion between two companies by referring them to a general meeting. (11) Gives power, in case of difficulty, to consult any scholars. (12) Invites suggestions from any quarter. (13) Names the directors of the work: Andrews, Dean of Westminster; Barlow, Dean of Chester, and the Regius Professors of Hebrew and Greek at both Universities. (14) Names translations to be followed when they agree more with the original than the Bishops' Bible: sc. Tyndal's, borne by two men. The grapes of Egypt being small and poor, we can easily imagine the surprise of Joshua and the other messengers when they found such grapes. Profane authors speak of the excellent wines of Gaza, Sarepta, Libanus, Saron, Ascalon and Tyre. Bochart says a triple produce is gathered from the same vine every year. Notwithstanding the very depressed condition of Canaan, it even now exports vast quantities of grapes, raisins and inspissated grape-juice (or honey of raisins, as it is called), into Egypt. The vine of Sodom grows near the Dead Sea. Its grapes are bitter, and considered poisonous. Moses compares rebellious Israel to this plant (Deut. xxxii. 32).

Vin'egar. The Hebrew word translated "vinegar" was applied to a beverage consisting generally of wine or strong drink turned sour, but sometimes artificially made by an admixture of barley and wine, and thus liable to fermentation. It was acid even to a proverb (Prov. x. 26), and by itself formed a nauseous draught (Ps. lxxix. 21), but was used by labourers (Ruth ii. 14). Similar was the acetum and beaks partly straight and partly crooked. They are common in Arabia, Egypt and many parts of Africa and Asia. They have a most indelicate voracity, preying more upon carrion than live animals. They were declared unclean in the Levitical constitution.

Vul'gate, the. The Latin version of the Bible. The name is equivalent to Vulgata editio (the current text of Holy Scripture). The history of the earliest Latin version of the Bible is lost in obscurity.

All that can be affirmed with certainty is that it was made in Africa in the second century. During the first two centuries the churches of Rome and Gaul were essentially Greek, but the Church of North Africa seems to have been Latin-speaking from the first. This version was known by the name of the Old Latin (Vetus Latina), and the language was rude and provincial. It continued to be used in Africa in its original form, but in the fourth century an ecclesiastical recension appears to have been made in Northern Italy, which was distinguished by the name of Itala. At the close of the fourth century the Latin texts of the Bible current in the Western Church had fallen into the greatest corruption.

In A. D. 383, Jerome at the request of Damasus, the pope, undertook a revision of the current Latin version of the N. T., by the help of the Greek original. He next proceeded to revise the O. T. from the Septuagint. He commenced his task by a revision of the Psalter. This revision, which was not very complete or careful, obtained the name of the Roman Psalter, probably because it was made for the use of the Roman Church at the request of Damasus. Shortly afterward Jerome commenced a new and more thorough revision. Gregory of Tours introduced it from Rome into the public services in France, work—namely, the translation of the O. T. from the Hebrew. The books of Samuel and Kings were issued first. The other books followed in succession, and the whole work was completed in A. D. 404. The new translation gradually came into use. In the sixth century the use of Jerome's version was universal among scholars, except in Africa, where the other still lingered. Of the apocryphal books Jerome hastily revised or translated two only, Judith and Tobit. The remainder were retained from the old version, and the apocryphal additions to Daniel and Esther, which he had carefully marked as apocryphal in his own version, were treated as integral parts of the books. In the N. T. the text of the Gospels was in the main Jerome's revised edition; that of the remaining books, his very incomplete revision of the Old Latin. Meanwhile the text of the different parts of the Latin Bible was rapidly deteriorating. The simultaneous use of the old and new versions necessarily led to great corruptions of both texts. In the eighth century, Charlemagne entrusted to Alcuin (about A. D. 802) the task of revising the Latin text for public use. At length an edition was published in 1590, under the superintendence of the pope, Sixtus V., with the famous constitution prefixed, in which Sixtus affirmed the plenary authority of the edition for all future time. It was, however, soon found that this edition also was defective, and accordingly another edition was prepared under papal authority. It appeared in 1592, in the pontificate of Clement VIII., with a preface written by Bellarmine. The vast power which the Vulgate has had in determining the theological terms of Western Christendom can hardly be overrated. It is the version with which the greatest of the Reformers were most familiar, and from which they had drawn their earliest knowledge of divine truth.

Wa'ges. In Egypt, money payments were in use, but the terms cannot now be ascertained (Ex. ii. 9). The only mention of the rate of wages in Scripture is in Matt. xx. 2, where the labourer's of the Romans—a thin, sour wine consumed by soldiers. This was the beverage of which the Saviour partook in his dying moments (Matt. xxvii. 48; Mark xv. 36; John xix. 29, 30).

Vine of Sod'om (Deut. xxxii. 32). It is generally supposed that this passage alludes to the celebrated apples of Sodom, of which Josephus speaks, "which indeed resemble edible fruit in colour, but on being plucked by the hand are dissolved into smoke and ashes." It has been variously identified. Dr. Robinson pronounced in favour of the ôsher fruit, the Asclepias (Catotropis) procera of botanists. Dr. Hooker refers with a greater show of probability to Cucumis colocynthis, which is bitter and powdery inside.

Vine'yard. The vineyard was prepared with great care, the stones being gathered out, a secure fence made round it, and a scaffold or high summer-house built in the centre, where, as the fruit ripened, a watchman was stationed, and where there was always shelter for the workmen at their meals, and a suitable place to keep the tools (Isa. v. 1-7; Matt. xxi. 33). This was of course deserted at other seasons of the year. (See Isa. i. 8).

Vi'per (Job xx. 16; Matt. iii. 7, etc.). A serpent famed for the venomousness of its bite, which is one of the most dangerous poisons in the animal kingdom. So terrible was the nature of these creatures that they were very commonly thought to be sent as executors of Divine vengeance upon mankind for enormous crimes which had escaped the course of justice. An instance of such an opinion as this we have in the history of St. Paul (Acts xxviii.).

Vir'gin. The word is often used for a nation or people (Isa. xlvii. 1; Sam. ii. 13). The point insisted upon by many that the mother of our Lord was always a virgin is absurd.

Vow. A sacred promise made to God to leave off some sin or to perform some duty (Gen. xxviii. 20). The use of vows and promises is very observable in Scripture from the earliest times (Gen. xxvii. 22). The Mosaic law gave distinct rules for their execution. The vows of children were not valid except ratified by parents (Num. xxx.); nor those of a wife except known and unforbidden by the husband. A common mode of uttering vows was, "God do so to me, and more also, if," etc.

Vul'ture (Lev. xi. 14; Isa. xxxiv. 15). A large bird of prey, somewhat resembling the eagle. There are several birds of the vulturine kind, which differ much in respect to colour and dimensions: all are distinguished by their naked heads and it obtained the name of the Gallican Psalter. From the second (Gallican) revision of the Psalms Jerome appears to have proceeded to a revision of the other books of the O. T., restoring all, by the help of the Greek, to a general conformity with the Hebrew. The revised texts of the Psalter and Job have alone been preserved, but there is no reason to doubt that Jerome carried out his design of revising all the "Canonical Scriptures." Subsequently Jerome undertook a still more important wages are set at one denarius per day, probably = 7½d. The law was very strict in requiring daily payment of wages (Lev. xix. 13; Deut. xxiv. 14, 15). The employer who refused to give his labourers sufficient victuals is censured (Job xxiv. 11), and the iniquity of withholding wages is denounced (Jer. xxii. 13; Mal. iii. 5; James v. 4).

Walls. Only a few points need be noticed: 1. The practice was common in Palestine of carrying foundations down to the solid rock. 2. A feature of some parts of Solomon's buildings was the encrusting or veneering a wall of brick or stone with slabs of a more costly material, as marble or alabaster. 3. Another use of walls in Palestine is to support roads on the sides of hills. 4. The "path of the vineyards" (Num. xxii. 24) is a pathway through vineyards, with walls on each side.

Wandering. A term applied to the journeys of Israel through the desert. Dr. Robinson in his late tour visited some of the places where the Hebrews encamped, and found every feature of the country to correspond with the Bible account.

thus adds, if the suspicion was unfounded, she obtained conception; if true, she died infamously.

Wave-offering. This rite, together with that of "heaving" or "raising" the offering, was an inseparable accompaniment of peace-offerings. The scriptural notices of these rites are to be found in Ex. xxix. 24, 28; Lev. vii. 30, 34; viii. 27; ix. 21; x. 14, 15; xxiii. 10, 15, 20; Num. vi. 20; xviii. 11, 18, 26-29, etc.

Wax (Ps. xxii. 14; lxviii. 2; xcvi. 5; Mic. i. 4). The idea of the root appears to be soft, melting, yielding, or the like, which properties are in-

Week. There can be no doubt about the great antiquity of measuring time by a period of seven days (Gen. viii. 10; xxix. 27). The week and the Sabbath are as old as man himself. Two great feasts are prolonged for seven days (Ex. xii. 15-20, etc.) The division by seven was expanded so as to make the seventh month and the seventh year sabbatical. In the New Testament we of course find such clear recognition of and familiarity with the week as needs scarcely be dwelt on. The Christian Church, from the very first, was familiar with the week (1 Cor. xvi. 2).

Weights and Measures. 1. WEIGHTS. The shekel weighed ten hundredweight; sixty of these made a maneh, weighing two pounds six ounces. Fifty manehs made a talent, or three thousand shekels, weighing one hundred and twenty-five pounds. Such are the computations of a good authority, although on this subject there is great uncertainty. 2. MEASURES. Many learned men have bestowed great labour in ascertaining the exact length or capacity of Hebrew measures, but they differ widely from each other. Standard measures, made by Moses, were at first deposited in the tabernacle, and afterward in the temple, under the cognizance of the priests. When Solomon's temple was destroyed these standards of course perished, and the whole subject is now uncertain, and though tables of measures are often given in books, they cannot be implicitly relied on. Under various terms is given such explanation as seems most probable.

Well. The supply of water (Judg. i. 15) has among Eastern nations always involved questions of property of the highest importance. Thus the well Beer-sheba was opened and its possession attested with special formality by Abraham (Gen. xxi. 30, 31). To acquire wells was one of the marks of favour foretold to the Hebrews on their entrance into Canaan (Deut. vi. 11). To possess one is noticed as a mark of independence (Prov. v. 15), and to abstain from the use of wells belonging to others a disclaimer of interference with their property (Num. xx. 17, 19; xxi. 22). The usual methods for raising water are the following: 1. The rope and bucket or water-skin (Gen. xxiv. 14-20;

SOUTH-EASTERN VIEW OF THE TABERNACLE, AS RESTORED.

War. The treatment of the conquered in ancient times was extremely severe. The bodies of the soldiers killed in action were plundered, the survivors were either killed in some savage manner, mutilated or carried into captivity. Sometimes the bulk of the population of the conquered country was removed to a distant locality. The Mosaic law mitigated to a certain extent the severity of the ancient usages toward the conquered. The conquerors celebrated their success by the erection of monumental stones, by hanging up trophies in their public buildings, and by triumphal songs and dances, in which the whole population took part (Ex. xv. 1-21; Judg. v., etc.).

Washing the Hands and Feet. It was absolutely necessary that the hand, which was thrust into the common dish, should be scrupulously clean; and as sandals were ineffectual against the dust and heat of an Eastern climate, washing the feet on entering a house was an act of respect. The former of these usages was transformed by the Pharisees into a matter of ritual observance (Mark vii. 3). Washing of the feet did not rise to the dignity of a ritual observance, except in connection with the services of the sanctuary (Ex. xxx. 19, 21). It held a high place, however, among the rites of hospitality. Immediately after a guest presented himself at the tent-door, it was usual to offer the necessary materials for washing the feet (Gen. xviii. 4; xix. 2; xxiv. 32; xliii. 24; Judg. xix. 21). It was a yet more complimentary act, betokening equally humility and affection, if the host actually performed the office for his guest (1 Sam. xxv. 41; Luke vii. 38, etc.).

Watches of Night. The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which sentinels or pickets remained on duty. There were three watches, the first, the middle and the morning watch. These would last from sunset to 10 P. M.; from 10 P. M. to 2 A. M.; and from 2 A. M. to sunrise. Subsequently the number of watches was increased to four, which were described either according to their numerical order (Matt. xiv. 25), or by the terms "even, midnight, cock-crowing and morning" (Mark xiii. 35). These terminated respectively at 9 P. M., midnight, and 3 A. M.

Water of Jealousy (Num. v. 11-31). The ritual consisted in the husband's bringing the woman before the priests, and the essential part of it is unquestionably the oath, to which the "water" was subsidiary, symbolical and ministerial. Josephatim in all the passages of Scripture in which this word occurs.

Weasel (chôled, Lev. xi. 29). In the list of unclean animals, but the Hebrew word ought more probably to be translated "mole." Moles are common in Palestine.

Weaving. We find the art of weaving practiced with great skill by the Egyptians at a very early period. The "vestures of fine linen" such as Joseph wore (Gen. xli. 42) were the product of Egyptian looms. The Egyptian loom was usually upright, and the weaver stood at his work. The cloth was fixed sometimes at the top, sometimes at the bottom. The textures produced by the Jewish weavers were very various. The coarser kinds and the "hairy garments" of the poor were made of goat's or camel's hair (Ex. xxvi. 7; Matt. iii. 4). Wool was extensively used for ordinary clothing (Lev. xiii. 47; Prov. xxvii. 26; xxxi. 13; Ezek. xxvii. 18), while for finer work flax was used, varying in quality. The mixture of wool and flax in cloth intended for a garment was interdicted (Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxii. 11).

John iv. 11). 2. The sakiyeh, or Persian wheel. This consists of a vertical wheel furnished with a set of buckets or earthen jars, attached to a cord passing over the wheel, which descend empty and return full as the wheel revolves. 3. A modification of the last method, by which a man, sitting opposite to a wheel furnished with buckets, turns it by drawing with his hands one set of spokes prolonged beyond its circumference, and pushing another set from him with his feet. 4. A method very common, both in ancient and modern Egypt, is the shadoof, consisting of a lever moving on a pivot, which is loaded at one end with a lump of clay or some other weight, and has at the other a bowl or bucket. Wells are usually furnished with troughs of wood or stone, into which the water is emptied for the use of persons or animals coming to the wells. Unless machinery is used, which is commonly worked by men, women usually are the water-carriers.

Whale (Gen. i. 21; Job vii. 12; Ezek. xxxii. 2; Matt. xii. 40). A late author has proved that the crocodile, and not the whale, is spoken of in Gen. i. 21. The word in Job vii. 12 must also be taken for the crocodile. Our translators render it by dragon in Isa. xxvii. 1. The sea there is the river Nile, and the dragon the crocodile (Ezek. xxxii. 2). On this passage Bochart remarks, "The Hebrew word does not denote a whale, as people imagine, for a whale has neither feet nor scales, neither is it to be found in the rivers of Egypt, neither does it ascend therefrom upon the land; neither is it taken in the meshes of a net. Whence it is plain that it is not a whale that is here spoken of, but the crocodile." We are told that in order to preserve the prophet Jonah when he was thrown overboard by the mariners, "the Lord prepared a great fish to swallow him up." What kind of fish it was is not specified; but the Greek translators take the liberty to give us the word whale; and though St. Matthew xii. 40 makes use of the same word, we may probably conclude that he did so in a general sense; and that we are not to understand it as an appropriated term to point out the particular species of fish. It is notorious that sharks are common in the Mediterranean.

Wheat. Being called corn in England, where the Bible was translated, it is often so called in Scripture (Matt. xii. 1). The ordinary kinds of wheat are well known. An illustration of the species common in Egypt may be found in these pages, and is such as appeared to Pharaoh in his dream, who saw "seven ears of corn come upon one stalk, rank and good" (Gen. xli. 5). The Holy Land produced wheat and barley so abundantly that sixty or a hundred fold sometimes rewarded the husbandman (Gen. xxvi. 42; Matt. xiii. 8). It appears from Ruth ii. 14; 2 Sam. xvii. 28, 29, etc., that parched wheat constituted a part of the common food of the Jews.

Wid'ow. Under the Mosaic dispensation no legal provision was made for the maintenance of widows. They were left dependent partly on the affection of relations, and partly on a participation in the triennial third tithe (Deut. xiv. 29; xxvi. 12), in leasing (Deut. xxiv. 19-21), and in religious feasts (Deut. xvi. 11, 14). With regard to the remarriage of widows, the only restriction imposed by the Mosaic law had reference to the contingency of one being left childless, in which case the brother of the deceased husband had a right to marry the widow (Deut. xxv. 5, 6; Matt. xxii. 23-30). In the apostolic Church the widows were sustained at the public expense (Acts vi. 1-6).

Wilderness. 1. A tract of land not cultivated, but not wholly barren or desert (Joel i. 20). Such commonly derived their name from the chief city adjacent, as Diblah, Engedi, Judea, etc. Ishmael settled in the wilderness of Paran, and David took refuge from the persecutions of Saul in the same; in which the numerous flocks of Nabal the Carmelite were pastured. Such places, therefore, were not deserts. 2. Places utterly waste, such as the wilderness where our Lord was tempted of the devil. About one hour's journey from the foot of the mountains which environ this wilderness rises the lofty Quarantania, which tradition affirms to be the mountain into which the devil carried our Saviour. It is "an exceeding high mountain," and in its ascent both difficult and dangerous. The land of Canaan was environed with wildernesses. We read of those of Egypt, Elham, Shur, Sin, Sinai, Tadmor, etc. The forty years' wandering of the Hebrews was in a wilderness indeed, and by no means the common thoroughfare of travellers between Egypt and Canaan. The reason why Israel was turned into it we read in Num. xiv. 3. The word is metaphorically used to signify things barren or unattractive. Hence God asks the Hebrews if he had been a wilderness to them (Jer. ii. 31). The Gentile world was called such (Isa. xxxv. 1-6; xliii. 19).

Wills. Under close inheritance, like that of the Jews, the scope for bequest in respect of land was limited by the right of redemption and general re-entry in the jubilee year. The case of houses in walled towns was different, and no doubt they must have frequently been bequeathed by will (Lev. xxv. 30). Two instances are recorded in the O. T. of testamentary disposition: 1. effected in the case of Alithophel (2 Sam. xvii. 23); 2. recommended in the case of Hezekiah (2 Kings xx. 1; Isa. xxxviii. 1).

Willows. Are mentioned in Lev. xxiii. 40; Job xl. 22; Isa. xlv. 4; Ps. cxxxvii. 2. With respect to the tree upon which the captive Israelites hung their harps, there can be no doubt that the weeping willow (salix babylonica) is intended.

Wim'ple. An old English word for hood or veil (Isa. iii. 22). The same Hebrew word is translated "veil" in Ruth iii. 15, but it signifies rather a kind of shawl or mantle.

Winds. That the Hebrews recognized the existence of four prevailing winds as issuing, broadly

It blows with violence. The south wind, which traverses the Arabian peninsula before reaching Palestine, must necessarily be extremely hot (Job xxxvii. 17; Luke xii. 55). The west and south winds reach Palestine loaded with moisture gathered from the Mediterranean, and are hence expressively termed by the Arabs "the fathers of the rain." In addition to the four regular winds, we have notice in the Bible of the local squalls (Mark iv. 37; Luke viii. 23) to which the Sea of Gennesareth was liable.

Wine. No less than thirteen different Hebrew and Greek words are translated in our Bible by the word wine. Noah was probably the first who preserved the juice of the grape till by fermentation it became proper wine. Before him men only ate grapes like other fruit, or drank the juice as just pressed from the fruit. This mode of drinking was common in the days of Joseph (Gen. xi. 2). Noah, ignorant of its strength, fell into intoxication (Gen. ix. 20, 21). The Jews, after settling in Canaan, used wine of various sorts, of which the red seems to have been most esteemed (Prov. xxiii. 31; Isa. xxvii. 2; Rev. xiv. 20). The "mixed wine" (Prov. xxiii. 30), rendered in Isa. lxxv. 11 "drink-offering," may mean wine rendered more potent by the addition of myrrh and other drugs, or of deffrutum—that is, wine inspissated by boiling it down. Thus the drunkard is properly described as one that seeketh mixed wine (Prov. xxiii. 30) and "mingles strong drink." Such wine was given to malefactors before their execution as an act of mercy, and was offered to Christ on the cross, but refused, as he desired no stupefaction. It was drunk in the idolatrous worship of certain gods, as Bacchus and Venns. This explains Amos ii. 8. The process of distilling ardent spirits from wine and other liquors was invented by the Saracens several centuries after the death of Christ.

Wine-press. The press consisted of two receptacles, which were either built of stones and covered with plaster, or hewn out of a large rock. The upper receptacle is nearly eight feet square and four feet high. Into this the grapes are thrown and trodden out by five men. The juice flows out into the lower receptacle through a grated aperture. The garments of the persons thus employed were stained with the red juice, and yet the employment speaking, from the four cardinal points, north, south, east and west, may be inferred from their custom of using the expression "four winds" as equivalent to the "four quarters" of the hemisphere (Ezek. xxxvii. 9; Dan. viii. 8; Zech. ii. 6; Matt. xxiv. 31). The north wind was the coldest of the four (Ecclus. xliii. 20). The east wind crosses the sandy wastes of Arabia Deserta before reaching Palestine, and was hence termed "the wind of the wilderness" (Job i. 19; Jer. xiii. 24).

was a joyful one. It was performed with singing, accompanied with musical instruments (Isa. xvi. 9, 10; Jer. xxv. 30; xlviii. 32, 33).

Win'now. To clean grain by exposing it to the wind. This was done by tossing it up into the air in a moderate wind.

Win'ter. In Canaan great men had their warm houses for the winter season, as well as cooler ones for the summer (Jer. xxxvi. 22; Amos iii. 15). The winters there are wet and cold, especially between the twelfth of December and twentieth of January (Matt. xxiv. 20). When the disciples were told (Matt. xxiv. 20) to pray that their flight from the predicted ruin of Jerusalem should not be in the winter, it was not only on account of the cold, but the swollen state of the streams to be forded, especially in the hilly districts.

Withes. Twisted boughs, bark, willow, etc., such as those by which fagots are bound together (Judg. xvi. 7, 8).

Wis'dom of Jesus (Son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus). One of the books of the Apocrypha, is the title given in the Latin Version to the book which is called in the Septuagint The Wisdom of Jesus until she came into the presence of her affianced (Gen. xxiv. 64, 65). Jacob saluted Rachel with a kiss in the presence of the shepherds (Gen. xxix. 11). The odes of Deborah (Judg. v.) and of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1, etc.) exhibit a degree of intellectual cultivation which is in itself a proof of the position of the sex in that period. Women also occasionally held public offices, particularly that of prophetess or inspired teacher (Ex. xv. 20; 2 Kings xxii. 14; Neh. vi. 14; Luke ii. 36; Judg. iv. 4). The management of household affairs devolved mainly on the women.

Wood-offering. The offering of wood to keep up the fire on the altar is not mentioned till after

The engraving of the gems of the high priest's breastplate with the names of the children of Israel (Ex. xxviii. 11), and the inscription upon the mitre (Ex. xxxix. 30) have to do more with the art of the engraver than of the writer, but both imply the existence of alphabetic characters. The curses against the adulteress were written by the priest "in the book," and blotted out with water (Num. v. 23). Hitherto, however, nothing has been said of the application of writing to the purposes of ordinary life, or of the knowledge of the art among the common people. Up to this point such knowledge is only attributed to Moses and the priests. From Deut. xxiv. 1, 3, however, it would appear that it was extended to others. It is not absolutely necessary to infer from this that the art of writing was an accomplishment possessed by every Hebrew citizen, though there is no mention of a third party; and it is more than probable that these "bills of divorcement," though apparently so informal, were the work of professional scribes. It was enjoined as one of the duties of the king (Deut. xvii. 18) that he should transcribe the book of the law for his own private study. If we examine the instances in which writing is mentioned in connection with individuals, we shall find that in all cases the writers were men of superior position. In Isa. xxix. 11, 12 there is clearly a distinction drawn between the man who was able to read and the man who was not, and it seems a natural inference that the accomplishments of reading and writing were not widely spread among the people, when we find that they are universally attributed to those of high rank or education—kings, priests, prophets and professional scribes. In the name Kirjath-sepher (Book-town, Josh. xv. 15) there is an indication of a knowledge of writing among the Phœnicians. The Hebrews, then, a branch of the great Semitic family, being in possession of the art of writing, according to their own historical records, at a very early period, the further questions arise, what character they made use of? and whence they obtained it? Recent investigations have shown that the square Hebrew character is of comparatively modern date, and has been formed from a more ancient type by a gradual process of development. What, then, was this ancient type? Most probably the Phœnician. To the Phœnicians, the daring seamen and adventurous colonizers of the ancient world, tradition assigned the honour of the invention of letters. The old Semitic alphabets may be divided into two principal classes: 1. The Phœnician, as it exists in the inscriptions in Cyprus, Malta, Carpentras and the coins of Phœnicia and her colonies. From it are derived the Samaritan character and the Greek. 2. The Hebrew-Chaldee character; to which belong the Hebrew square character; the Palmyrene, which has some traces of a cursive hand; the Estrangelo, or ancient Syriac; and the ancient Arabic or Cufic. It was probably about the first or second century after Christ that the square character assumed its present form, though in a question involved in so much uncertainty it is impossible to pronounce with great positiveness. The Alphabet.—The oldest evidence on the subject of the Hebrew alphabet is derived the Son of Sirach. The word designates the character of the writing as publicly used in the services of the Church. The writer describes himself as Jesus (i. e., Jeshua) the son of Sirach of Jerusalem (i. 27), but we know nothing of the author.

Wis'dom, the, of Solomon. A book of the Apocrypha, may be divided into two parts—the first (cc. i.-ix.) containing the doctrine of Wisdom in its moral and intellectual aspects; the second, the doctrine of Wisdom as shown in history (cc. x.-xix.) From internal evidence it seems most reasonable to believe that the book was composed in Greek at Alexandria some time before the time of Philo (about 120-80 B. C.)

Witness. 1. Two witnesses at least are required to establish any charge. 2. In the case of a suspected wife, evidence besides the husband's was desired. 3. The witness who withheld the truth was censured. 4. False witness was punished with the punishment due to the offence which it sought to establish. 5. Slandorous reports and officious witness are discouraged. 6. The witnesses were the first executioners. 7. In case of an animal left in charge and torn by wild beasts, the keeper was to bring the carcass in proof of the fact and disproof of his own criminality. 8. According to Josephus, women and slaves were not admitted to bear testimony. In the New Testament the original notion of a witness is exhibited in the special form of one who attests his belief in the Gospel by personal suffering. Hence it is that the use of the ecclesiastical term "Martyr" the Greek word for "witness," has arisen.

Wolf. There can be but little doubt that the wolf of Palestine is the common Canis lupus, and that this is the animal so frequently mentioned in the Bible. Wolves were doubtless far more common in biblical times than they are now, though they are occasionally seen by modern travellers.

Wom'en. The position of women in the Hebrew commonwealth contrasts favourably with that which in the present day is assigned to them generally in Eastern countries. Instead of being immured in a harem or appearing in public with the face covered, the wives and maidens of ancient times mingled freely and openly with the other sex in the duties and amenities of ordinary life. Rebekah travelled on a camel with her face unveiled the return from captivity (Neh. x. 34; xiii. 31). It appears that there was a solemn feast appointed, and the Talmudists say that every family when they brought their wood sacrificed a voluntary burnt-offering, called the "korban of wood." But the accounts we have of this do not agree.

Wool. The first-fruit of it was to be offered to the priests (Deut. xviii. 4). The white wool of Damascus was brought to Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 18), and the purity of this whiteness serves for illustration (Ps. cxlvii. 16). Yet dyeing of it was then understood by the Hebrews. A garment of linen and woollen was not to be worn (Deut. xxii. 11). This was a warning against incongruous mixtures, and had a spiritual meaning doubtless. But it is also said that such garments were worn by idolatrous priests.

Worm. The general name in Scripture for little creeping insects.

Wormwood (Deut. xxix. 18, etc.) In the Septuagint the original word is variously rendered for what is offensive, odious or deleterious. From the passages of Scripture something more than the bitterness of its qualities seems to be intimated. The Chaldee paraphrase gives it even the character of "the wormwood of death." It may therefore mean a plant allied, perhaps, to the absinthium in appearance and in taste, but possessing more nauseous, hurtful and formidable properties.

Writing. There is no account in the Bible of the origin of writing. Throughout the book of Genesis there is not a single allusion, direct or indirect, either to its practice or existence. That the Egyptians in the time of Joseph were acquainted with writing of a certain kind there is evidence to prove, but there is nothing to show that up to this period the knowledge extended to the Hebrew family. At the same time there is no evidence against it. Writing is first distinctly mentioned in Ex. xvii. 14, and the connection clearly implies that it was not then employed for the first time, but was so familiar as to be used for historic records. Moses is commanded to preserve the memory of Amalek's onslaught in the desert by committing it to writing. The tables of the testimony are said to be "written by the finger of God" (Ex. xxxi. 18) on both sides, and "the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables" (Ex. xxxii. 15).

"TIMREL," OR "TABRET."

from the alphabetic Psalms and poems; Ps. xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., exi., cxii., cxix., cxlv.; Prov. xxxi. 10-31; Lam. i.-iv. From these we ascertain that the number of the letters was twenty-two, as at present. The Arabic alphabet originally consisted of the same number. It has been argued by many that the alphabet of the Phœnicians at first consisted only of sixteen letters. The legend, as told by Pliny (vii. 56), is as follows: Cadmus brought with him into Greece sixteen letters; at the time of the Trojan war Palamedes added four others, Θ, Ξ, Φ, Χ, and Simonides of Melos four more, Ζ, Η, Ψ, Ω. Writing-materials, etc.—The oldest documents which contain the writing of a Semitic race are probably the bricks of Nineveh and Babylon, on which are impressed the cuneiform Assyrian inscriptions. There is, however, no evidence that they were ever employed by the Hebrews. Wood was used upon some occasions (Num. xvii. 3), and writing tablets of box-wood are mentioned in 2 Esdr. xiv. 24. The "lead" to which allusion is made in Job xix. 24 is supposed to have been poured when melted into the cavities of the stone made by the letters of an inscription, in order to render it durable. It is most probable that the ancient as well as the most common material which the Hebrews used for writing was dressed skin in some form or other. We know that the dressing of skins was practiced by the Hebrews (Ex. xxv. 5; Lev. xiii. 48), and they may have acquired the knowledge of the art from the Egyptians, among whom it had attained great perfection, the leather-cutters constituting one of the principal subdivisions of the third caste. Perhaps the Hebrews may have borrowed, among their other acquirements, the use of papyrus from the Egyptians, but of this we have no positive evidence. In the Bible the only allusions to the use of papyrus are in 2 John 12, where chartes (A. V. "paper") occurs, which refers specially to papyrus paper, and 3 Macc. iv. 20, where chartaria is found in the same sense. Herodotus, after telling us that the Ionians learnt the art of writing from the Phœnicians, adds that they called their books skins, because they made use of sheep-skins and goat-skins when short of paper. Parchment was used for the MSS. of the Pentateuch in the time of Josephus, and the membranæ of 2 Tim. iv. 13 were skins of parchment. It was one of the provisions in the Talmud that the Law should be written on the skins of clean animals, tame or wild, or even of clean birds. The skins when written upon were formed into rolls (mēgillōth, Ps. xl. 8; comp. Isa. xxxiv. 4; Jer. xxxvi. 14; Ezek. ii. 9; Zech. v. 1). They were rolled upon one or two sticks and fastened with a thread, the ends of which were sealed (Isa. xxix. 11; Dan. xii. 4; Rev. v. 1, etc.) The rolls were generally written on one side only, except in Ezek. ii. 9; Rev. v. 1. They were divided into columns (A. V. "leaves," Jer. xxxvi. 23); the upper margin was to be not less than three fingers broad, the lower not less than four, and a space of two fingers' breadth was to be left between every two columns. But besides skins, which were used for the more permanent kinds of writing, tablets of wood covered with wax (Luke i. 63) served for the ordinary purposes of life. Several of these were fastened together and formed volumes. They were written upon with a pointed style (Job xix. 24), sometimes of iron (Ps. xlv. 2; Jer. viii. 8; xvii. 1). For harder materials a graver (Ex. xxxii. 4; Isa. viii. 1) was employed. For parchment or skins a reed was used (3 John 13; 3 Macc. v. 20). The ink (Jer. xxxvi. 18), literally "black," like the Greek μέλαν (2 Cor. iii. 3; 2 John 12; 3 John 13), was to be of lamp-black dissolved in gall-juice. It was carried in an inkstand, which was suspended at the girdle (Ezek. ix. 2, 3), as is done at the present day in the East. To professional scribes there are allusions in Ps. xlv. 1; Ezra vii. 6; 2 Esdr. xiv. 24.

X.

Xanthicus [Zan'the-kus] (L. fr. Gr.) One of the Macedonian months; (so Josephus) Heb. Nisan, Month.

Xerxes. This monarch is not mentioned in Scripture by the name by which he was known to the Greeks. But there can hardly be a doubt that he was the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther. The book of Xerxes is referred to in Dan. xi. 2.

Y.

Yarn, Linen. "And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price" (1 Kings x. 28). There is a diversity of opinion as to the meaning of this term. There is very strong reason to doubt the correctness of the rendering in our translation. The Hebrew term here employed is not thus translated in any other place. Some make it a proper name of some district in Egypt. Others, with more probability, suppose it to refer to the horses mentioned in the same verse, and to denote "strings of horses," an assemblage of those animals collected in Egypt, and carried in bands to the royal studs in Palestine.

Year. The highest ordinary division of time. Two years were known to, and apparently used by, the Hebrews: 1. A year of three hundred and sixty days appears to have been in use in Noah's time, or at least in the time of the writer of the narrative of the Flood, for in that narrative the interval from the seventeenth day of the second month to the seventeenth day of the seventh of the same year appears to be stated to be a period of one hundred and fifty days (Gen. vii. 11, 24; viii. 3, 4; comp. 13), and, as the first, second, seventh and tenth months of one year are mentioned (viii. 13, 14; vii. 11; viii. 4, 5), the first day of the tenth month of this year being separated from the first day of the first month of the next year by an interval of at least fifty-four days (viii. 5, 6, 10, 12, 13), we can only infer a year of twelve months. A year of three hundred and sixty days is the rudest known. It is formed of twelve spurious lunar months, and was probably the parent of the lunar year of three hundred and fifty-four days, and the vague year of three hundred and sixty-five. The Hebrew year, from the time of the Exodus, was evidently lunar, though in some manner rendered virtually solar, and we may therefore infer that the lunar year is as old as the date of the Exodus. 2. The year used by the Hebrews from the time of the Exodus may be said to have been then instituted, since a current month, Abib, on the fourteenth day of which the first passover was kept, was then made the first month of the year. The essential characteristic of this year can be clearly determined, though we cannot fix those of any single year. It was essentially solar, for the offering of productions of the earth, first-fruits, harvest produce and ingathered fruits, was fixed to certain days of the year, two of which were in the periods of great feasts, the third itself a feast reckoned from one of the former days. But it is certain that the months were lunar, each commencing with a new moon. There must therefore have been some method of adjustment. The first point to be decided is how the commencement of each year was fixed. Probably the Hebrews determined their new year's day by the observation of heliacal or other star-risings or settings known to mark the right time of the solar year. It follows, from the determination of the proper new moon of the first month, whether by observation of a stellar phenomenon or of the forwardness of the crops, that the method of intercalation can only have been that in use after the captivity, the addition of a thirteenth month whenever the twelfth ended too long before the equinox for the offering of the first-fruits to be made at the time fixed. The later Jews had two commencements of the year, whence it is commonly but inaccurately said that they had two years—the sacred year and the civil. We prefer to speak of the sacred and civil reckonings. The sacred reckoning was that instituted at the Exodus, according to which the first month was Abib: by the civil reckoning the first month was the seventh. The interval between the two commencements was thus exactly half a year. It has been supposed that the institution at the time of the Exodus was a change of commencement, not the introduction of a new year, and that thenceforward the year had two beginnings, respectively at about the vernal and the autumnal equinoxes. The year was divided into—1. Seasons. Two seasons are mentioned in the Bible, "summer" and "winter." The former properly means the time of cutting fruits, the latter, that of gathering fruits; they are therefore originally rather summer and autumn than summer and winter. But that they signify ordinarily the two grand divisions of the year, the warm and the cold seasons, is evident from their use for the whole year in the expression "summer and winter" (Ps. lxxiv. 17; Zech. xiv. 8). 2. Months. [See MONTH.] 3. Weeks. [See WEEK.] Yes'terday. Is a term used to denote past time, as to-morrow is to denote time future. Where our translation has "for ever," the original word in several places is to-morrow. What is rendered in Ex. xxi. 29 "time past," is, in Hebrew, yesterday (Heb. xiii. 8; Job viii. 9).

Year, Sabbatical. [See SABBATICAL YEAR.]

Year of Jubilee. [See JUBILEE, YEAR OF.]

Yoke. It appears that yokes were of two kinds, as two words are used to denote them in Hebrew: one refers to such yokes as were put upon the necks of cattle, and in which they laboured (Num. xix. 2; Deut. xxi. 3). The subjects of Solomon complain that he had made his yoke heavy to them (1 Kings xii. 10), and they use the same word, but Jeremiah (xxvii. 2) made him bonds and yokes of another construction and fitted to the human neck, which he expresses by another word: most probably they were such as slaves used to wear to labour; however, they were the sign of service. We read of yokes of iron (Deut. xxviii. 48; Jer. xxviii. 13). The ceremonies of the Mosaic ritual are called a yoke (Acts xv. 10; Gal. v. 1), as also tyrannical authority; but Christ says his yoke is easy and his burden is light (Matt. xi. 29).

Z.

Zaan'aim, the Plain of; or, more accurately, "the Oak by Zaan'aim." A tree mentioned as marking the spot near which Heber the Kenite was encamped when Sisera took refuge in his tent (Judg. iv. 11). Its situation is defined as "near Kedesh," i. e., Kedesh-naphtali, the name of which still lingers on the high ground north of Safed and west of the lake of el Huleh. The Keri, or correction, of Judg. iv. 11, substitutes Zaanannim for Zaanaim, and the same form is found in Josh. xix. 33.

Zaan'an. [See ZENAN.]

Za'avan, or Za'van. A Horite chief, son of Ezer the son of Seir (Gen. xxxvi. 27; 1 Chron. i. 42).

Zabade'ans. An Arab tribe who were attacked and spoiled by Jonathan on his way back to Damascus from his fruitless pursuit of the army of Demetrius (1 Macc. xii. 31). Their name probably survives in the village Zebdāny, standing at the upper end of a plain of the same name, which is the very centre of Antilibanus.

Za'bud. Son of Nathan (1 Kings iv. 5), is described as a priest ("principal officer"), and as holding at the court of Solomon the confidential post of "king's friend," which had been occupied by Hushai the Archite during the reign of David (2 Sam. xv. 37; xvi. 16; 1 Chron. xxvii. 33).

Zab'ulon. The Greek form of the name Zebulun (Matt. iv. 13, 15; Rev. vii. 8).

Zacche'us. A tax-collector near Jericho, who being short in stature climbed up into a sycamore tree, in order to obtain a sight of Jesus as he passed through that place (Luke xix. 1-10). Zaccheus was a Jew, as may be inferred from his name, and from the fact that the Saviour speaks of him expressly as "a son of Abraham." The term which designates his office—"the chief among the publicans"—is unusual, but describes him, no doubt, as the superintendent of customs or tribute in the district of Jericho, where he lived. The office must have been a lucrative one in such a region, and it is not strange that Zaccheus is mentioned by the Evangelists as a rich man.

Zachari'ah. 1. Or properly Zechariah, was son of Jeroboam II., fourteenth king of Israel, and the last of the house of Jehu. There is a difficulty about the date of his reign. Most chronologers assume an interregnum of eleven years between Jeroboam's death and Zachariah's accession, during which the kingdom was suffering from the anarchy of a disputed succession, but this seems unlikely after the reign of a resolute ruler like Jeroboam, and does not solve the difference between 2 Kings xiv. 17 and xv. 1. We are reduced to suppose that our present MSS. have here incorrect numbers, to substitute fifteen for twenty-seven in 2 Kings xv. 1, and to believe that Jeroboam II. reigned fifty-two or fifty-three years. But whether we assume an interregnum or an error in the MSS., we must place Zachariah's accession B. C. 771-772. His reign lasted only six months. He was killed in a conspiracy, of which Shallum was the head, and by which the prophecy in 2 Kings x. 30 was accomplished. 2. The father of Abi, or Abijah, Hezekiah's mother (2 Kings xviii. 2).

Zachari'as. 1. Father of John the Baptist (Luke i. 5, etc.). 2. Son of Barachias, who, our Lord says, was slain by the Jews between the altar and the temple (Matt. xxiii. 35; Luke xi. 51). There has been much dispute who this Zacharias was. Many of the Greek Fathers have maintained that the father of John the Baptist is the person to whom our Lord alludes; but there can be little or no doubt that the allusion is to Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada (2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21). The joined David at Hebron after Saul's death (1 Chron. xii. 28), and henceforth his fidelity to David was inviolable. When Absalom revolted and David fled from Jerusalem, Zadok and all the Levites bearing the ark accompanied him, and it was only at the king's express command that they returned to Jerusalem and became the medium of communication between the king and Hushai the Archite (2 Sam. xv.-xvii.). When Absalom was dead, Zadok and Abiathar were the persons who persuaded the elders of Judah to invite David to return (2 Sam. xix. 11). When Adonijah, in David's old age, set up for king, and had persuaded Joab and

MARSH TORTOISE OF EUROPE AND PALESTINE.

Abiathar the priest to join his party, Zadok was unmoved, and was employed by David to anoint Solomon to be king in his room (1 Kings i.). And for this fidelity he was rewarded by Solomon, who "thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the Lord," and "put in Zadok the priest" in his room (1 Kings ii. 27, 35). From this time, however, we hear little of him. It is said in general terms, in the enumeration of Solomon's officers of state, that Zadok was the priest (1 Kings iv. 4; 1 Chron. xxix. 22), but no single act of his is mentioned. Zadok and Abiathar were of nearly equal dignity (2 Sam. xv. 35, 36; xix. 11). The duties of the office were divided. Zadok ministered before the tabernacle at Gibeon (1 Chron. xvi. 39); Abiathar had the care of the ark at Jerusalem. Not, however, exclusively, as appears from 1 Chron. xv. 11; 2 Sam. xv. 24, 25, 29.

Za'ir. A place named in 2 Kings viii. 21 only, in the account of Joram's expedition against the Edomites. The parallel account in Chronicles (2 Chron. xxi. 9) agrees with this, except that the words "to Zair" are omitted.

Zal'mon, Mount. A wooded eminence in the immediate neighbourhood of Shechem (Judg. ix. 48). The name of Dalmanutha has been supposed to be a corruption of that of Zalmon.

Zal'monah. A desert-station of the Israelites (Num. xxxiii. 41), lies on the east side of Edom.

Zal'munna. [See ZEBAH.]

Zam'zummims. The Ammonite name for the people who by others were called Rephaim (Deut. ii. 20, only). They are described as having originally been a powerful and numerous nation of giants. From a slight similarity between the two names, and from the mention of the Emim in connection with each, it is conjectured that the Zam-zummim are identical with the Zuzim.

Zano'ah. 1. A town of Judah in the Shefelah or plain (Josh. xv. 34; Neh. iii. 13; xi. 30), possibly identical with Zand'a. 2. A town of Judah in the highland district (Josh. xv. 56), not improbably identical with Sanite, about ten miles south of Hebron.

Zaph'nath-paane'ah. A name given by Pharaoh to Joseph (Gen. xli. 45). As the name must have been Egyptian, it has been explained from the Coptic as meaning "the preserver of the age."

Za'phon. A place mentioned in the enumeration of the allotment of the tribe of Gad (Josh. xiii. 27).

Za'red, the Valley of. [See ZERED.]

Zar'ephath. The residence of the prophet Elijah during the latter part of the drought (1 Kings xvii. 9, 10). Beyond stating that it was near to, or dependent on, Zidon, the Bible gives no clue to its position. It is mentioned by Obadiah (ver. 20), but merely as a Canaanite (that is, Phœnician) city. It is presented by the modern village of Sûra-fend. In the New Testament, Zarephath appears under the Greek form of Sarepta (Luke iv. 26).

Zar'etan. Zarthan (Josh. iii. 16).

Za'reth-sha'har. A place mentioned only in Josh. xiii. 19, in the catalogue of the towns allotted to Reuben.

Zar'hites, the. A branch of the tribe of Judah, descended from Zerah, the son of Judah (Num. xxvi. 13, 20; Josh. vii. 17; 1 Chron. xxvii. 11, 13).

Zart'anah (1 Kings iv. 12).

Zar'than. 1. A place in the circle of Jordan, mentioned in connection with Succoth (1 Kings vii. 46). 2. It is also named in the account of the passage of the Jordan by the Israelites (Josh. iii. 16), where the Authorized Version has Zaretan. 3. A place with the similar name of Zartanah (1 Kings iv. 12). 4. Further, in Chronicles (2 Chron. iv. 17), Zeredathah is substituted for Zarthan; and this again is not improbably identical with the Zererath of the story of Gideon (Judg. vii. 22). All these spots agree in proximity to the Jordan, but beyond this we are absolutely at fault as to their position.

Za'van. [See ZAAVAN.]

Za'bah and Zal'munna. The two "kings" of Midian who commanded the great invasion of Palestine, and who finally fell by the hand of Gideon himself (Judg. viii. 5-21; Ps. lxxxiii. 11).

Ze'baim. Mentioned in the catalogue of the families of "Solomon's slaves," who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra ii. 57; Neh. vii. 59).

Zeb'edee. A fisherman of Galilee, the father of the apostles James the Great and John (Matt. iv. 21), and the husband of Salome (Matt. xxvii. 56; Mark xv. 40). He probably lived either at Bethsaida or in its immediate neighbourhood. It has been inferred, from the mention of his "hired servants" (Mark i. 20), and from the acquaintance between the apostle John and Annas the high priest (John xviii. 15), that the family of Zebedee were in easy circumstances (comp. xix. 27), although not above manual labour (Matt. iv. 21). He appears only once in the Gospel narrative—namely, in Matt. iv. 21, 22; Mark i. 19, 20—where he is seen in his boat with his two sons mending their nets.

Ze'boim. 1. One of the five cities of the "plain" or circle of Jordan. It is mentioned in Gen. x. 19; xiv. 2, 8; Deut. xxix. 23 and Hos. xi. 8, in each of which passages it is either coupled with Admah, or placed next it in the lists. Perhaps represented by Talda Sebân, a name attached to extensive ruins on the high ground between the name of the father of Zacharias is not mentioned by St. Luke; and we may suppose that the name of Barachias crept into the text of St. Matthew from a marginal gloss, a confusion having been made between Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, and Zacharias, the son of Barachias (Berechiah) the prophet.

TERRESTRIAL MONITOR, OR SKINK OF EGYPT.

Dead Sea and Kerak. In Gen. xiv. 2, 8 the name is given more correctly in the Authorized Version, Zeboim. 2. The Valley of Zeboim, a ravine or gorge, apparently east of Michmash, mentioned only in 1 Sam. xiii. 18. The road running from Michmash to the east is specified as "the road of the border that looketh to the ravine of Zeboim toward the wilderness." The wilderness is no doubt the district of uncultivated mountain tops and sides which lies between the central district of Benjamin and the Jordan valley. In that very district there is a wild gorge, bearing the name of Shuk ed-Dubba, "ravine of the hyena," the exact equivalent of Ge-hat-tso'im.

FAÇADE OF HEROD'S TOMBS, OR TOMBS OF THE KINGS.

Za'dok (just). Son of Ahitub, and one of the two chief priests in the time of David, Abiathar being the other. Zadok was of the house of Eleazar, the son of Aaron (1 Chron. xxiv. 3), and eleventh in descent from Aaron (1 Chron. xii. 28). He Zebu'dah. Wife of Josiah and mother of King Jehoiakim (2 Kings xxiii. 36).

Ze'bul. Chief man (A. V. "ruler") of the city of Shechem at the time of the contest between Abimelech and the native Canaanites (Judg. ix. 28, 30, 36, 38, 41).

Zeb'ulonite. A member of the tribe of Zebulun (Judg. xii. 11, 12).

Zeb'ulon (a habitation). The tenth of the sons of Jacob, according to the order in which their births are enumerated, the sixth and last of Leah (Gen. xxx. 20; xxxv. 23; xli. 14; 1 Chron. ii.

only Iddo, that Berechiah had died early, and that there was now no intervening link between the grandfather and the grandson. Zechariah, like Jeremiah and Ezekiel before him, was priest as well as prophet. He seems to have entered upon his office while yet young (Zech. ii. 4), and must have been born in Babylon, whence he returned with the first caravan of exiles under Zerubbabel and Jeshua. It was in the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, that he first publicly discharged his office. In this he acted in concert with Haggai. Both prophets had the same great object stoned in the court of the temple. He is probably the same as the "Zacharias, son of Barachias," who was slain between the temple and the altar (Matt. xxiii. 35). 3. The son of Jeberechiah, who was taken by the prophet Isaiah as one of the "faithful witnesses to record," when he wrote concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz (Isa. viii. 2). He may have been the Levite of the same name who in the reign of Hezekiah assisted in the purification of the temple (2 Chron. xxix. 13). Another conjecture is that he is the same Zechariah, the father of Abijah, the queen of Ahaz.

Ze'dad. One of the landmarks on the northern border of the land of Israel, as promised by Moses (Num. xxxiv. 8), and as restored by Ezekiel (xlvii. 15). A place named Südad exists to the east of the northern extremity of the chain of Antilibanus, about fifty miles east-north-east of Baalbec. This may be identical with Zedad.

Zedeki'ah. 1. The last king of Judah and Jerusalem. He was the son of Josiah by his wife Hamutal, and therefore own brother to Jehoahaz (2 Kings xxiv. 18; comp. xxiii. 31). His original name had been Mattaniah, which was changed to Zedekiah by Nebuchadnezzar when he carried off his nephew Jehoiachin to Babylon, and left him on the throne of Jerusalem. Zedekiah was but twenty-one years old when he was thus placed in charge of an impoverished kingdom (B. C. 597). His history is contained in a short sketch of the events of his reign given in 2 Kings xxiv. 17-xxv. 7, and with some trifling variations in Jer. xxxix. 1-7; lii. 1-11, together with the still shorter summary in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10, etc.; and also in Jer. xx., xxiv., xxvii., xxviii., xxix., xxxii., xxxiii., xxxiv., xxxvii., xxxviii., and Ezek. xvi. 11-21. From these it is evident that Zedekiah was a man not so much bad at heart as weak in will. It is evident from Jer. xxvii. and xxviii. that the earlier portion of Zedekiah's reign was marked by an agitation throughout the whole of Syria against the Babylonian yoke. Jerusalem seems to have taken the lead, since in the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign we find ambassadors from all the neighbouring kingdoms—Tyre, Sidon, Edom and Moab—at his court, to consult as to the steps to be taken. This happened either during the king's absence or immediately after his return from Babylon, whither he went on some errand, the nature of which is not named, but which may have been an attempt to blind the eyes of Nebuchadnezzar to his contem-

1). His birth is recorded in Gen. xxx. 19, 20. Of the individual Zebulun nothing is recorded. The list of Gen. xlv. ascribes to him three sons, founders of the chief families of the tribe (comp. Num. xxvi. 26) at the time of the migration to Egypt. The head of the tribe at Sinai was Eliab, son of Helon (Num. vii. 24); at Shiloh, Elizaphan, son of Parnach (xxxiv. 25). Its representative among the spies was Gaddiel, son of Sodi (xiii. 10). The tribe is not recorded to have taken part, for evil or good, in any of the events of the wandering or the conquest. Judah, Joseph, Benjamin had acquired the south and the centre of the country. To Zebulun fell one of the fairest of the remaining portions. It is perhaps impossible, in the present state of our knowledge, exactly to define its limits; but the statement of Josephus is probably in the main correct, that it reached on the one side to the Lake of Gennesaret, and on the other to Carmel and the Mediterranean. On the south it was bounded by Issachar, who lay in the great plain or valley of the Kishon; on the north it had Naphtali and Asher. The fact recognized by Josephus that Zebulun extended to the Mediterranean, though not mentioned or implied, as far as we can discern, in the lists of Joshua and Judges, is alluded to in the Blessing of Jacob (Gen. xlix. 13). Situated so far from the centre of government, Zebulun remains throughout the history, with one exception, in the obscurity which envelops the whole of the northern tribes. That exception, however, is a remarkable one. The conduct of the tribe during the struggle with Sisera, when they fought with desperate valour side by side with their brethren of Naphtali, was such as to draw down the especial praise of Deborah, who singles them out from all the other tribes (Judg. v. 18). A similar reputation is alluded to in the mention of the tribe among those who attended the inauguration of David's reign at Hebron (1 Chron. xii. 33). The same passage, however, shows that they did not neglect the arts of peace (ver. 40). We are nowhere directly told that the people of Zebulun were carried off to Assyria.

Zechari'ah. 1. The eleventh in order of the twelve minor prophets. He is called in his prophecy the son of Berechiah and the grandson of Iddo, whereas in the book of Ezra (v. 1; vi. 14) he is said to have been the son of Iddo. It is natural to suppose, as the prophet himself mentions his father's name, whereas the book of Ezra mentions before them; both directed all their energies to the building of the second temple. To their influence we find the rebuilding of the temple in a great measure ascribed. "And the elders of the Jews builded," it is said, "and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo" (Ezra vi. 14). If the latter Jewish accounts may be trusted, Zachariah, as well as Haggai, was a member of the Great Synagogue. The book of Zechariah, in its existing form, consists of three principal parts, chaps. i.-viii., ix.-xi., xii.-xiv. 1st. The first of these divisions is allowed by all critics to be the genuine work of Zechariah, the son of Iddo. It consists, first, of a short introduction or preface, in which the prophet announces his commission; then of a series of visions, descriptive of all those hopes and anticipations of which the building of the temple was the pledge and sure foundation; and finally of a discourse, delivered two years later, in reply to questions respecting the observance of certain established fasts. 2d. The remainder of the book consists of two sections of about equal length, ix.-xi. and xii.-xiv., each of which has an inscription. 1. In the first section he threatens Damascus and the sea-coast of Palestine with misfortune, but declares that Jerusalem shall be protected. The Jews who are still in captivity shall return to their land. 2. The second section, xii.-xiv., is entitled "the burden of the word of Jehovah for Israel." But Israel is here used of the nation at large, not of Israel as distinct from Judah. Indeed, the prophecy which follows concerns Judah and Jerusalem. In this the prophet beholds the near approach of troublous times, when Jerusalem should be hard pressed by enemies. But in that day Jehovah shall come to save them, and all nations which gather themselves against Jerusalem shall be destroyed. Many modern critics maintain that the later chapters, from the ninth to the fourteenth, were written by some other prophet, who lived before the exile. We have not sufficient space here for an account of the arguments both for and against the genuineness of the later chapters. 2. Son of the high priest Jehoiada, in the reign of Joash, king of Judah (2 Chron. xxiv. 20), and therefore the king's cousin. After the death of Jehoiada, Zechariah probably succeeded to his office, and in attempting to check the reaction in favour of idolatry which immediately followed, he fell a victim to a conspiracy formed against him by the king, and was plated revolt (Jer. li. 59). The first act of overt rebellion of which any record survives was the formation of an alliance with Egypt, of itself equivalent to a declaration of enmity with Babylon. As a natural consequence it brought on Jerusalem an immediate invasion of the Chaldeans. The mention of this event in the Bible, though sure, is extremely slight, and occurs only in Jer. xxxvii. 5-11; xxxiv. 21 and Ezek. xvii. 15-20; but Josephus (x. 7, §3) relates it more fully, and gives the date of its occurrence, namely the eighth year of Zedekiah. It appears that Nebuchadnezzar, being made aware of Zedekiah's defection, either by the non-payment of the tribute or by other means, at once sent an army to ravage Judea. This was done, and the whole country reduced, except Jerusalem and two strong places in the western plain, Lachish and Azekah, which still held out (Jer. xxxiv. 7). In the mean time, Pharaoh had moved to the assistance of his ally. On hearing of his approach the Chaldeans at once raised the siege and advanced to meet him. The nobles seized the moment of respite to reassert their power over the king. How long the Babylonians were absent from Jerusalem we are not told. All we certainly know is that on the tenth day of the tenth month of Zedekiah's ninth year the Chaldeans were again before the walls (Jer. lii. 4). From this time forward the siege progressed slowly but surely to its consummation. Zedekiah again interfered to preserve the life of Jeremiah from the vengeance of the princes (xxxviii. 7-13), and then occurred the interview between the king and the prophet which affords so good a clue to the condition of abject dependence into which a long course of opposition had brought the weak-minded monarch. While the king was hesitating the end was rapidly coming nearer. The city was indeed reduced to the last extremity. The bread had for long been consumed (Jer. xxxviii. 9), and all the terrible expedients had been tried to which the wretched inhabitants of a besieged town are forced to resort in such cases. At last, after sixteen dreadful months, the catastrophe arrived. The wretched remnants of the army quitted the city in the dead of night; and as the Chaldean army entered the city at one end, the king and his wives fled from it by the opposite gate. They took the road toward the Jordan, but were overtaken near Jericho, and carried to Nebuchadnezzar, who was then at Riblah, at the upper end of the valley of Lebanon. Nebuchadnezzar, with a refinement of cruelty characteristic of those cruel times, ordered the sons of Zedekiah to be killed before him, and lastly his own eyes to be thrust out (b. c. 586). He was then loaded with brazen fetters, and at a later period taken to Babylon, where he died. 2. Son of Chenanah, a prophet at the court of Ahab, head, or, if not head, virtual leader, of the college. He appears but once, viz.: as spokesman when the prophets are consulted by Ahab on the result of his proposed expedition to Ramoth-gilead (1 Kings xxii.; 2 Chron. xviii.) 3. The son of Maaseiah, a false prophet in Babylon (Jer. xxix. 21, 22). 4. The son of Hananiah, one of the princes of Judah in the time of Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvi. 12).

Zeeb. [See OREB.]

Ze'lah. A city in the allotment of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 23), contained the family tomb of Kish, the father of Saul (2 Sam. xxi. 14).

Zel'ek. An Ammonite, one of David's guard (2 Sam. xxiii. 37; 1 Chron. xi. 39).

Zelo'phehad. Son of Hopher, son of Gilead, son of Machir, son of Manasseh (Josh. xvii. 3). He was apparently the second son of his father, Hopher (1 Chron. vii. 15). Zelophehad came out of Egypt with Moses, but died in the wilderness, as did the whole of that generation (Num. xiv. 35; xxvii. 3). On his death without male heirs, his five daughters, just after the second numbering in the wilderness, came before Moses and Eleazar to claim the inheritance of their father in the tribe of Manasseh. The claim was admitted by divine direction (Num. xxvi. 33; xxvii. 1-11).

Zelo'tes, or Zea'lots. A sect often mentioned in Jewish history. Lamy is of opinion that the just men sent to entangle Christ in his conversation were of this class (Luke xx. 20). Gill says that they were a set of men who (in imitation of Phinehas, who slew Zimri and Cozbi in the act of uncleanness) would immediately kill any person whom they found committing adultery, idolatry, blasphemy or theft. He quotes various Jewish authors who regarded their conduct as highly laudable. Their conduct, however, cannot be justified. The name was probably given to Simon from the circumstance of his having been one of these persons. He is called also Canaanite, probably for the same reason; the word Kana, in Hebrew, having the same meaning as Zelotes (Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13).

Zel'zah. A place named once only (1 Sam. x. 2) as on the boundary of Benjamin, close to Rachel's sepulchre.

Zemara'im. A town in the allotment of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 22), perhaps identical with Mount Zemaraim, which was "in Mount Ephraim;" that is to say, within the general district of the highlands of that great tribe (2 Chron. xiii. 4).

Zem'arite, the. One of the Hamite tribes who in the genealogical table of Gen. x. (ver. 18) and 1 Chron. i. (ver. 16) are presented as "sons of Canaan." Nothing is certainly known of this ancient tribe. The old interpreters place them at Emessa, the modern Hums.

Ze'nan. A town in the allotment of Judah, situated in the district of the Shefelah (Josh. xv. 37). It is probably identical with Zaanan (Mic. i. 11).

Ze'nas. A believer, and, as may be inferred from the context, a preacher, of the Gospel, who is mentioned in Tit. iii. 13 in connection with Apollos. He is further described as "the lawyer." It is impossible to determine whether Zenas was a Roman juriconsult or a Jewish doctor.

Zephani'ah. 1. The ninth in order of the twelve minor prophets. His pedigree is traced to his fourth ancestor, Hezekiah (i. 1), supposed to be the celebrated king of that name. In chap. i. the utter desolation of Judea is predicted as a judgment for idolatry and neglect of the Lord, the luxury of the princes, and the violence and deceit of their dependants (3-9). The prosperity, se-this book are the unity and harmony of the composition, the grace, energy, and dignity of its style, and the rapid and effective alternations of threats and promises. The general tone of the last portion is Messianic, but without any specific reference to the person of our Lord. The date of the book is given in the inscription, viz.: the reign of Josiah, from 642 to 611 B. C. It is most probable, moreover, that the prophecy was delivered before the eighteenth year of Josiah. 2. The son of Maaseiah

ASSYRIAN KING PUTTING OUT THE EYES OF CAPTIVES.

(Jer. xxi. 1), and sagan or second priest in the reign of Zedekiah. He succeeded Jehoiada (Jer. xxix. 25, 26), and was probably a ruler of the temple, whose office it was among others to punish pretenders to the gift of prophecy. In this capacity he was appealed to by Shemaiah the Nehelamite to punish Jeremiah (Jer. xxix. 29). Twice was he sent from Zedekiah to inquire of Jeremiah the issue of the siege of the city by the Chaldeans (Jer. xxi. 1), and to implore him to intercede for the people (Jer. xxxvii. 3). On the capture of Jerusalem he was taken and slain at Riblah (Jer. lii. 24, 27; 2 Kings xxv. 18, 21). 3. Father of Josiah II. (Zech. vi. 10), and of Hen, according to the reading of the received text of Zech. vi. 14.

Ze'phath. [See HORMAN.]

Zeph'athah, the Valley of. The spot in which Asa joined battle with Zerah the Ethiopian (2 Chron. xiv. 10, only).

Ze'pho. Son of Eliphaz, son of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 11), and one of the "dukes" or phylarchs of the Edomites (ver. 15). In 1 Chron. i. 36 he is called Zephi.

Zer. A fortified town in the allotment of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 35, only), probably in the neighbourhood of the south-west side of the Lake of Genesareth.

Ze'rah. A son of Reuel, son of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 13; 1 Chron. i. 37), and one of the "dukes" or phylarchs of the Edomites (Gen. xxxvi. 17).

Ze'rah. 1. Less properly, Zarah, twin son, with his elder brother Pharez, of Judah and Tamar (Gen. xxxviii. 30; 1 Chron. ii. 6; Matt. i. 3). His descendants were called Zarhites, Ezrahites and Izrahites (Num. xxvi. 20; 1 Kings iv. 31; 1 Chron. xxvii. 8, 11). 2. Son of Simeon (1 Chron. iv. 24), called Zohar in Gen. xlvii. 10. 3. The Ethiopian or Cushite, an invader of Judah, defeated by Asa about B. C. 941. [See ASA.] Zerah is probably the Hebrew name of Usarken I., second king of the Egyptian twenty-second dynasty; or perhaps more probably Usarken II., his second successor.

Ze'red (Deut. ii. 13, 14), or Zar'ed (Num. xxi. 12). A brook or valley running into the Dead Sea near its south-east corner, which Dr. Robinson with some probability suggests as identical with the Wady el-Ahsy. It lay between Moab and Edom, and is the limit of the proper term of the Israelites' wandering (Deut. ii. 14).

Zer'eda. The native place of Jeroboam (1 Kings xi. 26). Zeredah has been supposed to be identical with Zeredathah and Zarthan or Zartanah. But the two last were in the valley of the curity and insolence of the people is contrasted with the horrors of the day of wrath (10-18). (Ch. ii. contains a call to repentance (1-3), with prediction of the ruin of the cities of the Philistines, and the restoration of the house of Judah after the visitation (4-7). Other enemies of Judah, Moab and Ammon, are threatened with perpetual destruction (8-15). In chap. iii. the prophet addresses Jerusalem, which he reproves sharply for vice and disobedience (1-7). He then concludes with a series of promises (8-20). The chief characteristics of

Zer'erath (Judg. vii. 22). [See ZARTHAN.]

Zerub'abel (born at Babel, i. e., Babylon). The head of the tribe of Judah at the time of the return from the Babylonish captivity, in the first year of Cyrus. He was appointed by the Persian king to the office of governor of Judea. On arriving at Jerusalem, Zerubbabel's great work, which he set about immediately, was the rebuilding of the temple. After much opposition [see NEHEMIAH] and many hindrances and delays, the temple was at length finished, in the sixth year of Darius, and was dedicated with much pomp and rejoicing. [See TEMPLE.] The only other works of Zerubbabel which we learn from Scripture are the restoration of the courses of priests and Levites, and of the provision for their maintenance, according to the institution of David (Ezra vi. 18; Neh. xii. 47); the registering the returned captives according to their genealogies (Neh. vii. 5); and the keeping of a passover in the seventh year of Darius, with which last event ends all that we know of the life of Zerubbabel. His apocryphal history is told in 1 Esdr. iii.-vii. The exact parentage of Zerubbabel is a little obscure, from his being always called the son of Shealtiel (Ezra iii. 2, 8; v. 2, etc.; Hag. i. 1, 12, 14, etc.), and appearing as such in the genealogies of Christ (Matt. i. 12; Luke iii. 27), whereas in 1 Chron. iii. 19 he is represented as the son of Pedaiiah, Shealtiel's or Salathiel's brother, and consequently as Salathiel's nephew. It is of more moment to remark that, while St. Matthew deduces his line from Jeconiah and Solomon, St. Luke deduces it through Neri and Nathan. Zerubbabel was the legal successor and heir of Jeconiah's royal estate, the grandson of Neri, and the lineal descendant of Nathan, the son of David. In the New Testament the name appears in the Greek form of Zorobabel.

Zeru'iah. The mother of the three leading heroes of David's army—Abishai, Joab and Asahel—known as the "sons of Zeruiah." She and Abigail are specified in 1 Chron. ii. 13-17 as "sisters of the sons of Jesse" (v. 16). The expression is in itself enough to raise a suspicion that she was not a daughter of Jesse, a suspicion which is corroborated by the statement of 2 Sam. xvii. 25, that Abigail was the daughter of Nahash. [See NAHASH.] Of Zeruiah's husband there is no mention in the Bible.

Zi'ba. A person who plays a prominent part, though with no credit to himself, in one of the episodes of David's history (2 Sam. ix. 2-12; xvi. 1-4; xix. 17, 29). [See MEPIBOSHETH.]

Zib'eon. Father of Anah, whose daughter, Aholibamah, was Esau's wife (Gen. xxxvi. 2). Although called a Hivite, he is probably the same as Zibeon, the son of Seir the Horite (ver. 20, 24, 29; 1 Chron. i. 38, 40).

Zid'dim. A fortified town in the allotment of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 35).

Zi'don (fr. Heb. Tsidôn, fishing or fishery, Ges.), or Si'don (Gr. and Lat., fr. Heb. Gen. x. 19, 15; Josh. xi. 8; xix. 28; Judg. i. 31; xviii. 28; 1 Chron. i. 13; Isa. xxiii. 2, 4, 12; Jer. xxv. 22; xxvii. 3; Ezek. xxviii. 21, 22; Joel iii. 4 [iv. 4]; Zech. ix. 2; 2 Esdr. i. 11; Jud. ii. 28; 1 Macc. v. 15; Matt. xi. 21, 22; xv. 21; Mark iii. 8, vii. 24, 31; Luke iv. 26; vi. 17; x. 13, 14; Acts xii. 20; xxvii. 3). An ancient and wealthy city of Phœnicia, on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea, in latitude 30° 34' 05" north, less than twenty English miles north of Tyre. Its modern name is Saida. It is situated in the narrow plain between Lebanon and the sea. From a biblical point of view, this city is inferior in interest to its neighbour Tyre, with which its name is so often associated. Justin says that the inhabitants of Sidon, when their city had been reduced by the king of Ascalon, founded Tyre the year before the capture of Troy. But Justin is a weak authority for any disputed historical fact (so Mr. Twissleton, original author of this article), and in contradiction of his statement it has been insisted on that the relation between a colony and the mother-city among the Phœnicians was sacred, and that as the Tyrians never acknowledged this relation toward Zidon, the supposed connection between Tyre and Zidon is morally impossible. There is otherwise nothing improbable in Zidonians having founded Tyre, as the Tyrians are called Zidonians, but the Zidonians are never called Tyrians. And this circumstance tends to show that in early times Zidon was the more influential of the two cities. This is shadowed forth by the statement that Zidon was the first-born of Canaan (Gen. x. 15; 1 Chron. i. 13), and is implied in the name of "great Zidon," or "the metropolis Zidon" (Josh. xi. 8 [margin "Zidon-rabbah"]; xix. 28). It is confirmed, likewise, by the use of "Sidonians" as = Phœnicians or Canaanites (xiii. 6; Judg. xviii. 7); and by the reason assigned for there being none to deliver the people of Laish from massacre, that "they were far from the Zidonians," though the Tyrians were much nearer and of substantially the same religion (xviii. 28). From the time of Solomon to the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, Zidon is not often directly mentioned in the Bible, and it appears to have been subordinate to Tyre. When the people called "Zidonians" is mentioned, it sometimes seems that the Phœnicians of the plain of Zidon are meant (1 Kings v. 6; xi. 1, 5, 33; xvi. 31; 2 Kings xxiii. 13). And this seems to be equally true of "merchants of Zidon," "Zidon," and "daughter of Zidon," in Isa. xxiii. There is no doubt, however, that Zidon itself, the city properly so called, was threatened by Joel (iii. 4) and Jeremiah (xxvii. 3). Still, all that is known respecting it during the epoch is very scanty, amounting to scarcely more than that one of its sources of gain was trade in slaves [see SERVANT], the Zidonians selling inhabitants of Palestine; that the city was governed by kings (Jer. xxvii. 3; xxv. 22); that, previous to Nebuchadnezzar's invasion, it had furnished mariners to Tyre (Ezek. xxvii. 8); that at one period it was subject, in some sense, to Tyre; and that when Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, invaded Phœnicia, Zidon seized the opportunity to revolt. During the Persian domination, Zidon seems to have attained its highest prosperity; and it is recorded that toward the close of that period it far excelled all other Phœnician cities in wealth and importance. Very probably the long siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar had tended to enrich Zidon at the expense of Tyre. In the expedition of Xerxes against Greece, the Sidonians were a pre-eminently important element of his naval power. But while the Persians in the time of Artaxerxes Ochus were making preparations in Phœnicia to put down the revolt in Egypt, some Persian satraps and generals behaved oppressively and insolently to Sidonians in the Sidonian division of Tripolis. On this the Sidonian people projected a revolt; and having first concerted arrangements with other Phœnician cities, and made a treaty with the Egyptian king, they seized and put to death the insolent Persians, expelled the satraps from Phœnicia, strengthened their defences, equipped a fleet of one thousand triremes, and prepared for a desperate resistance. But their king, Tennes, betrayed into the power of the Persian king one hundred of the most distinguished citizens of Sidon, who were all shot to death with javelins. Five hundred other citizens, who went out to the king with ensigns of supplication, shared the same fate; the Persian troops were treacherously admitted within the gates and occupied the city walls. The Sidonians, before the arrival of Ochus, had burnt their vessels to prevent any one's leaving the town; and when they saw themselves surrounded by the Persian troops, they shut themselves up with their families and set fire, each man to his own house (B. C. 351). Forty thousand persons are said to have perished in the flames; Tennes was put to death by Ochus, and the privilege of searching the ruins was sold for money. After this dismal tragedy, Sidon gradually recovered from the blow. The battle of Issus was fought B. C. 333, and then the inhabitants of the restored city, from hatred of Darius and the Persians, opened their gates to Alexander the Great of their own accord. The Sidonian fleet in joining Alexander was an essential element of his success against Tyre. From this time Sidon, dependent on the fortunes of war in the contests between the successors of Alexander, ceases to play any important political part in history. It became, however, again a flourishing town. Strabo, in his account of Phœnicia, says of Tyre and Sidon, "Both were illustrious and splendid formerly, and now, but which should be called the capital of Phœnicia is a matter of dispute between the inhabitants." According to Strabo, it was on the mainland, on a fine, naturally-formed harbour; its inhabitants cultivated arithmetic and astronomy, and had the best opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of these and of all other branches of philosophy. Strabo mentions distinguished philosophers, natives of Sidon, as Boëthius, with whom he studied the philosophy of Aristotle, and his brother Diodotus. The names of both these are Greek, and probably in Strabo's time Greek was the language of the educated class at least, both in Tyre and Sidon. A few years after Strabo wrote Sidon was visited by Christ. It is about fifty miles from Nazareth, and is the most northern city mentioned in connection with his journeys. Pliny notes the manufacture of glass here. In later ages Sidon has shared generally the fortunes of Tyre, except that it was several times taken and retaken during the Crusades, and suffered, accordingly, more than Tyre previous to its being abandoned to the Mohammedans in 1291. Since that time it never seems to have fallen quite so low as Tyre. Through Fakhr od-Din, emir of the Druzes, 1594-1634, and the establishment at Sidon of French commercial houses, it had a revival of trade in the seventeenth and part of the eighteenth century, and became the principal city on the Syrian coast for commerce between the East and the West. This was terminated in 1791 by oppression and violence. The town still shows signs of former wealth. Its ancient harbour was filled up with stones and earth by Fakhr ed-Din, so that only small boats can now enter it. The trade between Syria and Europe now mainly passes through Beirut. At the base of the mountains east of Sidon are numerous sepulchres in the rock, and there are likewise sepulchral caves in the adjoining plain. In January, 1855, a sarcophagus of black syenite was discovered in one of these caves, its lid hewn in the form of a mummy with the face bare, upon the lid a perfect Phœnician inscription in twenty-two lines, and on the head of the sarcophagus another almost as long. This sarcophagus is now in the Louvre in Paris. [See ZIDONIANS.]

Zif (1 Kings vi. 37). [See MONTH.]

Zik'lag. Is the first mentioned in the catalogue of the towns of Judah in Josh. xv., and occurs in the same connection among the places which were allotted out of the territory of Judah to Simeon (xix. 5). We next encounter it in the possession of the Philistines (1 Sam. xxvii. 6), when it was, at David's request, bestowed upon him by Achish, king of Gath. He resided there for a year and four months (ibid. 7; 1 Sam. xxxi. 14, 26; 1 Chron. xii. 1, 20). It was there he received the news of Saul's death (2 Sam. i. 1; iv. 10). He then relinquished it for Hebron (ii. 1). Ziklag is finally mentioned as being reinhabited by the people of Judah after their return from the captivity (Neh. xi. 28). The situation of the town is difficult to determine, and we only know for certain that it was in the south country.

Zil'lah. [See LAMECH.]

Zil'pah. A Syrian given by Laban to his daughter Leah as an attendant (Gen. xxix. 24), and by Leah to Jacob as a concubine. She was the mother of Gad and Asher (Gen. xxx. 9-13; xxxv. 26; xxxvii. 2; xlv. 18).

Zim'ran. The eldest son of Keturah (Gen. xxv. 2; 1 Chron. i. 32). His descendants are not mentioned, nor is any hint given that he was the founder of a tribe.

Zim'ri. 1. The son of Salu, a Simeonite chief-tain, slain by Phinehas with the Midianitish prin-against Tirzah, and took the city. Zimri retreated into the innermost part of the late king's palace, set it on fire and perished in the ruins (1 Kings xvi. 9-20).

Zin. A part of the Arabian desert on the southern frontier of Palestine (Num. xiii. 21, 22; xxxiv. 3), adjoining the territory of Judah (Josh. xv. i. 3), and on the west of Idumea, wherein Kadesh lay (Num. xx. 1; xxvii. 14; xxxiii. 36). But Kadesh was in the wilderness of Paran (xiii. 26), which extended to the Elanitic Gulf; consequently Zin was a part (the northern part) of Paran, the district stretching from the Ghor south-westward in high masses of rock, but sinking down toward Jebel el-Helal. It must be distinguished from the wilderness of Sin. Mr. Wilton considers Zin the eastern portion of Wady Murreh.

Zi'on, or Si'on. 1. Part of the range of mountains in the north of Canaan, called Anti-Libanus (Deut. iv. 58). 2. Part of the site of Jerusalem, but which of the several hills on which it stood was so called is not now absolutely certain, the whole city having early taken that name, and the temple itself especially (Ps. lxxv. 1; lxxxiv. 7.) That which is now called Mount Zion by the inhabitants of Jerusalem lies south of the city, and outside of the present walls. Part of it is occupied as a burial-place for Christians, and part by a convent of Armenians, but the principal portion is arable land laid out in fields. See the prophecy (Mic. iii. 12; Jer. xxvi. 18). The worshippers at the temple, if not the whole inhabitants of Jerusalem, are called Zion (Ps. xevii. 8). It is thought that the temple stood on Mount Moriah, where Abraham offered his son (1 Kings viii. 1; Ps. xlviii. 2). The Church is called Zion (Ps. cii. 13; Isa. ii. 3; Heb. xii. 22). The name is applied to heaven (Rev. xiv. 1).

Zi'or. A town in the mountain district of Judah (Josh. xv. 54). It belongs to the same group with Hebron.

Ziph. The name of two towns in Judah: 1. In the south, named between Ithnan and Telem (Josh. xv. 24). It does not appear again in the history, nor has any trace of it been met with. 2. In the highland district, named between Carmel and Jutta (Josh. xv. 55). The place is immortalized by its connection with David (1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 15, 24; xxvi. 2). These passages show that at that time it had near it a wilderness (i. e., a waste pasture-ground) and a wood. The latter has disappeared, but the former remains. The name of Zif is found about three miles south of Hebron, attached to a rounded hill of some one hundred feet in height, which is called Tell Zif. In the Authorized Version its inhabitants are called in one passage the Ziphims (Ps. liv.), but more usually the Ziphites (1 Sam. xxiii. 19; xxvi. 1).

Ziph'ron. A point in the north boundary of the Promised Land, as specified by Moses (Num. xxxiv. 9).

Zip'por. Father of Balak, king of Moab (Num. xxii. 2, 4, 10, 16; xxiii. 18; Josh. xxiv. 9; Judg. xi. 25).

Zip'porah. Daughter of Reuel or Jethro, the priest of Midian, wife of Moses, and mother of his two sons, Gershom and Eliezer (Ex. ii. 21; iv. 25; xviii. 2; comp. 6). The only incident recorded in her life is that of the circumcision of Gershom (iv. 24-26).

Ziz, the Cliff of. The pass by which the horde of Moabites, Ammonites and Meunim made their way up from the shores of the Dead Sea to the wilderness of Judah near Tekoa (2 Chron. xx. 16, only; comp. 20). It was the pass of Ain Jidy—the very same route which is taken by the Arabs in their marauding expeditions at the present day.

Zo'an (Heb. Ts'ōan; Gr. and L. Tanis; both from Egyptian = low region, Ges., Fū.; but see below). An ancient city of Lower Egypt, near the eastern border. Its Shemitic name (so Mr. R. S. Poole, original author of this article) indicates a place of departure from a country. The Egyptian name Ha-awar, or Pa-awar (= Avaris), means the abode (or house) of going out (or departure). Zoan, or Tanis, is situate in north latitude 31°, east longitude 31° 55', on the east bank of the canal which was formerly the Tanitic branch of the Nile. Anciently a rich plain—then known as the "Fields," or "Plain," or "Marshes," or "Pasture-lands," and watered by four of the seven branches of the Nile, but now almost covered by the great lake Menzeh—extended due east as far as Pelusium [see SIN], about thirty miles distant, gradually narrowing toward the east. Tanis, while Egypt was ruled by native kings, was the chief town of this territory, and an important post toward the eastern frontier. It is said to have been rebuilt, strongly walled, and garrisoned with two hundred and forty thousand men, by Salatis, the first of the Shepherd kings. Manetho explicitly states Avaris to have been older than the time of the Shepherds, but there are reasons for questioning his accuracy in this matter. The name is more likely to be of foreign than of Egyptian origin, for Zoan distinctly indicates the place of departure of a migratory people, whereas Avaris has the simple signification abode of departure. A remarkable passage in Num. xiii. 22—"Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt"—seems to determine the question. Hebron was already built in Abraham's time, and the Shepherd invasion may be dated about the same period. Whether some older village or city were succeeded by Avaris matters little: its history begins in the reign of Salatis. What the Egyptian records tell us of this city may be briefly stated. Apepee, probably Apophis of the fifteenth dynasty, a Shepherd king who reigned shortly before the eighteenth dynasty, built a temple here to Set, the Egyptian Baal, and worshipped no other god. According to Manetho, the Shepherds, after five hundred and eleven years of rule, were expelled from all Egypt and shut up in Avaris, whence they were allowed to depart by capitulation about B. C. 1500. Ramesses II. embellished the great temple of Tanis, and was followed by his son Menptah. Mr. Poole believes that the Pharaoh of Joseph as well as the oppressors were Shepherds, the former ruling at Memphis and Zoan, the latter probably at Zoan only. Zoan is mentioned in connection with the plagues in such a manner as to leave no doubt that it is the city spoken of in the narrative in Exodus as that where Pharaoh dwelt (Ps. lxxviii. 42, 43). After the fall of the empire the first dynasty is the twenty-first, called by Manetho that of Tanites. Its history is obscure. The twenty-third dynasty is called Tanite, and its last king is probably Sethos, the contemporary of Tirhakah, mentioned by Herodotus. At this time Tanis once more appears in sacred history as a place to which came ambassadors of Hoshea, or Ahaz, or possibly of Hezekiah (Isa. xxx. 4). As mentioned with the frontier town Taphanhes, Tanis is not necessarily the capital. But the same prophet perhaps more distinctly points to a Tanite line—"the princes of Zoan" (xix. 13). The doom of Zoan is foretold by Ezekiel, "I will set fire in Zoan" (xxx. 14), where it occurs among the cities to be taken by Nebuchadnezzar. The "field of Zoan," now the plain of Sân, has become a barren waste; and one of the principal abodes of the Pharaohs is now the habitation of fishermen, the resort of wild beasts, and infested with reptiles and malignant fevers. It is remarkable for the height and extent of its mounds, which are upward of a mile from north to south, and nearly three-quarters of a mile from east to west. The area in which the sacred enclosure of the temple stood is about one thousand five hundred feet by one thousand two hundred and fifty, surrounded by mounds of fallen houses. The temple was adorned by Ramesses II. with numerous obelisks and most of its sculptures. It cess Cozbi (Num. xxv. 14). 2. Fifth sovereign of the separate kingdom of Israel, of which he occupied the throne for the brief period of seven days in the year B. C. 930 or 929. Originally in command of half the chariots in the royal army, he gained the crown by the murder of King Elah, son of Baasha. But the army which at that time was besieging the Philistine town of Gibbethon, when they heard of Elah's murder, proclaimed their general Omri king. He immediately marched is very ruinous, but its remains prove its former grandeur.

Zo'ar. One of the most ancient cities of the land of Canaan. Its original name was Bela (Gen. xiv. 2, 8). It was in intimate connection with the cities of the "plain of Jordan"—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim (see also xiii. 10; but not x. 19). In the general destruction of the cities of the plain, Zoar was spared to afford shelter to Lot (xix. 22, 23, 30). It is mentioned in the account of the death of Moses as one of the landmarks which bounded his view from Pisgah (Deut. xxxiv. 3), and it appears to have been known in the time both of Isaiah (xv. 5) and Jeremiah (xlviii. 34). These are all the notices of Zoar contained in the Bible. It was situated in the same district with the four cities already mentioned, viz.: in the "plain" or "circle" "of the Jordan," and the narrative of Gen. xix. evidently implies that it was very near to Sodom (ver. 15, 23, 27). The definite position of Sodom is, and probably will always be, a mystery, but there can be little doubt that the plain of the Jordan was at the north side of the Dead Sea, and that the cities of the plain must therefore have been situated there, instead of at the southern end of the lake, as it is generally taken for granted they were. [See SODOM.]

Zo'ba, or Zo'bah. The name of a portion of Syria, which formed a separate kingdom in the time of the Jewish monarchs—Saul, David and Solomon. It probably was eastward of Coele-Syria, and extended thence north-east and east, toward, if not even to, the Euphrates. We first hear of Zobah in the time of Saul, when we find it mentioned as a separate country, governed apparently by a number of kings, who owned no common head or chief (1 Sam. xiv. 47). Some forty years later than this we find Zobah under a single ruler, Hadadezer, son of Rehob. He had wars with Toi, king of Hamath (2 Sam. viii. 10), and held various petty Syrian princes as vassals under his yoke (2 Sam. x. 19). David (2 Sam. viii. 3) attacked Hadadezer in the early part of his reign, defeated his army, and took from him a thousand chariots, seven hundred (seven thousand, 1 Chron. xviii. 4) horsemen and twenty thousand footmen. Hadadezer's allies, the Syrians of Damascus, were defeated in a great battle. The wealth of Zobah is very apparent in the narrative of this campaign. It is not clear whether the Syrians of Zobah submitted and became tributary on this occasion, or whether, although defeated, they were able to maintain their independence. At any rate, a few years later they were again in arms against David. The war was provoked by the Ammonites, who hired the services of the Syrians of Zobah. The allies were defeated adversary to Israel all through the reign of Solomon (1 Kings xi. 23–25). Solomon also was, it would seem, engaged in a war with Zobah itself (2 Chron. viii. 3). This is the last that we hear of Zobah in Scripture. The name, however, is found at a later date in the inscriptions of Assyria, where the kingdom of Zobah seems to intervene between Hamath and Damascus.

Zo'har. 1. Father of Ephron the Hittite (Gen. xxiii. 8; xxv. 9). 2. One of the sons of Simeon (Gen. xlv. 10; Ex. vi. 15); called Zerah in 1 Chron. iv. 24.

Zohel'eth, the Stone. This was "by En Rogel" (1 Kings i. 9); and therefore, if En Rogel be the modern Um-ed-Deraaj, this stone, "where Adonijah slew sheep and oxen," was in all likelihood not far from the well of the Virgin.

Zo'phar. One of the three friends of Job (Job ii. 11; xi. 1; xx. 1; xlii. 9).

Zo'phim, the Field of. A spot on or near the top of Pisgah, from which Balaam had his second view of the encampment of Israel (Num. xxiii. 14). The position of the field of Zophim is not defined. May it not be the same place which later in the history is mentioned as Mizpah-moab?

Zo'rah. At own in the allotment of the tribe of Dan (Josh. xix. 41). It is previously mentioned (xv. 33), in the catalog of Judah, among the places in the district of the Shefelah (A. V. Zoreah). It was the residence of Manoah and the native place of Samson. It is mentioned among the places fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chron. xi. 10). It is perhaps identical with the modern village of Sira'h.

Zo'reah. [See ZORAH.]

Zorob'abel. [See ZERUBABEL.]

Zu'ar. Father of Nethaneel, the chief of the tribe of Issachar at the time of the Exodus (Num. i. 8; ii. 5; vii. 18, 23; x. 15).

Zuph, the Land of. A district at which Saul and his servant arrived after passing through those of Shalisha, of Shalim and of the Benjamites (1 Sam. ix. 5, only). It may perhaps be identified with Soba, a well-known place about seven miles due west of Jerusalem.

Zurishadda'i. Father of Shelumiel, the chief of the tribe of Simeon at the time of the Exodus (Num. i. 6; ii. 12; vii. 36, 41; x. 19).

MODERN CITY OF SAIDA—ZID'ON OR SIDON.

in a great battle by Joab, who engaged the Syrians in person (2 Sam. x. 9). Hadadezer, upon this, made a last effort (1 Chron. xix. 16). A battle was fought near Helam, where the Syrians of Zobah and their new allies were defeated with great slaughter. Zobah, however, though subdued, continued to cause trouble to the Jewish kings. A man of Zobah, Rezon, son of Eliadah, made himself master of Damascus, where he proved a fierce CHAPTER I.

¹ The creation of heaven and earth. ¹⁴ Of the sun, moon, and stars.
²⁶ Of man in the image of God. ²⁹ Also the appointment of food.

IN the "beginning" God created the heaven and the earth.

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

3 ¶ And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.

4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided † the light from the darkness.

5 And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night: † and the evening and the morning were the first day.

6 ¶ And God said, Let there be a † firmament in the midst of the waters: and let it divide the waters from the waters.

7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament: and it was so.

8 And God called the firmament Heaven: and the evening and the morning were the second day.

9 ¶ And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

10 And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good.

11 And God said, Let the earth bring forth † grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so.

12 And the earth brought forth grass, and herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 ¶ And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide † the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years.

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so.

16 And God made two great lights; the greater light † to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. he made the stars also.

17 And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, 18 And to rule over the day, and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

20 ¶ And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath † life, and † fowl that may fly above the earth in the † open firmament of heaven.

21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

22 And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

24 ¶ And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so.

25 And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

26 ¶ And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

28 And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that † moveth upon the earth.

29 ¶ And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb † bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat.

30 And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is † life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so.

31 And God saw every thing that he had made: and behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

CHAP. II.

1 The first sabbath. The manner of the creation. 19, 20 The naming of the creatures. 21 The making of woman, and institution of marriage.

THUS the heavens and the earth were finished, and "all the host of them.

2 "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.

3 And God "blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God † created and made.

4 ¶ "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens,

5 And every "plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew: for the LORD God had not "caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man "to till the ground.

6 But ¶ there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

7 And the LORD God formed man † of the "dust of the ground, and "breathed into his "nostrils the breath of life; and "man became a living soul.

8 ¶ And the LORD God planted "a garden "eastward in "Eden; and there "he put the man whom he had formed.

9 And out of the ground made the LORD God to grow "every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; "the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, "and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 ¶ And a river went out of Eden to water the garden: and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth "the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold;

12 And the gold of that land is good: "there is bdellium and the onyx-stone.

13 And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of † Ethiopia.

14 And the name of the third river is "Hiddekel: that is it which goeth ¶ toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river is Euphrates.

15 ¶ And the LORD God took ¶ the man, and "put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it.

16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden † thou mayest freely eat:

17 "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, "thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof "† thou shalt surely die.

18 ¶ And the LORD God said, It is not good that the man should be alone: "I will make him an help † meet for him.

19 "And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and "brought them unto ¶ Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof.

20 And Adam † gave names to all eatable, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field: but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him.

21 ¶ And the LORD God caused a "deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof:

22 And the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, † made he a woman, and "brought her unto the man.

CHAP. III.

1 The serpent deceiveth Eve. 6 Man's shameful fall. 15 The punishment of mankind. 22 Their casting out of paradise.

NOW "the serpent was "more subtle than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made: and he said unto the woman, † Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?

2 And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:

3 "But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.

4 "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die:

5 For God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then "your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

6 ¶ And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was † pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise; she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat; and gave also unto her husband with her, "and he did eat.

7 And "the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked: and they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves ¶ aprons.

8 And they heard "the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the † cool of the day: and Adam and his wife "hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden.

9 ¶ And the LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?

10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden: "and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself.

11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee, that thou shouldest not eat?

12 And the man said, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the LORD God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

14 ¶ And the LORD God said "unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and "dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life:

15 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between "thy seed and "her seed: "it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

16 Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; "in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children: "and thy desire shall be ¶ to thy husband, and he shall "rule over thee.

17 And unto Adam he said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, "and hast eaten of the tree "of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: "cursed is the ground for thy sake; "in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

18 ^aThorns also and thistles shall it †bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field:

19 ^aIn the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: ^afor dust thou art, and ^aunto dust shalt thou return.

20 And Adam called his wife's name †|| Eve, because she was the mother of all living.

21 Unto Adam also and to his wife did the LORD God make coats of skins, and clothed them.

22 ¶ And the LORD God said, 'Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, ^aand take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever:

23 Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, ^ato till the ground from whence he was taken.

24 So he drove out the man: and he placed ^aat the east of the garden of Eden ^aCherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

1 The birth, trade, and religion of Cain and Abel. 8 The murder of Abel.
11 The curse of Cain.

AND Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare || Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the LORD.

2 And she again bare his brother †Abel: and Abel was †a keeper of sheep, but Cain was ^aa tiller of the ground.

3 And †in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought ^aof the fruit of the ground an offering unto the LORD.

4 And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his †flock, and of the fat thereof. And the LORD had ^arespect unto Abel, and to his offering:

5 But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect: and Cain was very wroth, ^aand his countenance fell.

6 And the LORD said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen?

7 If thou doest well, shalt thou not || be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door: and || unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.

8 And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and ^aslew him.

9 ¶ And the LORD said unto Cain, ^aWhere is Abel thy brother? And he said, ^aI know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's †blood ^acrieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

12 When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength: A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, || My punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 ^aBehold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and ^afrom thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, ^athat every one that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him ^aseven-fold. And the LORD ^aset a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 ¶ And Cain ^awent out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived, and bare †Enoch: and he builded a city, ^aand called the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch.

18 And unto Enoch was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and Mehujael begat Methusael, and Methusael begat †Lamech.

19 ¶ And Lamech took unto him two wives: the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah.

20 And Adah bare Jabal: he was the father of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the ^afather of all such as handle the harp and organ.

22 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an ^ainstructor of every artificer in brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.

23 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for || I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man || to my hurt.

24 ^aIf Cain shall be avenged seven-fold, truly Lamech seventy and seven-fold.

25 ¶ And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and ^acalled his name †|| Seth: For God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

26 And to Seth, ^ato him also there was born a son; and he called his name †Enos: then began men || ^ato call upon the name of the LORD.

CHAP. V.

1 The genealogy, age, and death of the patriarchs from Adam unto Noah.
24 The godliness and translation of Enoch.

THIS is the ^abook of the generations of Adam: In the day that God created man, in ^athe likeness of God made he him:

2 ^aMale and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

3 And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image; and ^acalled his name Seth:

4 ^aAnd the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: ^aand he begat sons and daughters:

5 And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: ^aand he died.

6 And Seth lived an hundred and five years, and ^abegat Enos:

7 And Seth lived after he begat Enos eight hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters:

8 And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years; and he died.

9 ¶ And Enos lived ninety years, and begat †Cainan:

10 And Enos lived after he begat Cainan eight hundred and fifteen years, and begat sons and daughters:

11 And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years; and he died.

12 ¶ And Cainan lived seventy years, and begat †Mahalaleel:

13 And Cainan lived after he begat Mahalaleel eight hundred and forty years, and begat sons and daughters:

14 And all the days of Cainan were nine hundred and ten years; and he died.

15 ¶ And Mahalaleel lived sixty and five years, and begat †Jared:

16 And Mahalaleel lived after he begat Jared eight hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters:

17 And all the days of Mahalaleel were eight hundred ninety and five years; and he died.

18 ¶ And Jared lived an hundred sixty and two years, and he begat Enoch:

19 And Jared lived after he begat Enoch eight hundred years, and begat sons and daughters:

20 And all the days of Jared were nine hundred sixty and two years; and he died.

21 ¶ And Enoch lived sixty and five years, and begat Methuselah:

22 And Enoch walked with God after he begat Methuselah three hundred years, and begat sons and daughters:

23 And all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years:

24 And Enoch walked with God, and he was not: for God took him.

25 And Methuselah lived an hundred eighty and seven years, and begat Lamech:

26 And Methuselah lived after he begat Lamech seven hundred eighty and two years, and begat sons and daughters:

27 And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years; and he died.

28 ¶ And Lamech lived an hundred eighty and two years, and begat a son.

29 And he called his name ¶ Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, because of the ground which the LORD hath cursed.

30 And Lamech lived after he begat Noah five hundred ninety and five years, and begat sons and daughters:

31 And all the days of Lamech were seven hundred seventy and seven years; and he died.

32 ¶ And Noah was five hundred years old: and Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

CHAP. VI.

1 The wickedness of the world, which provoked God's wrath, and caused the flood. 14 The order and form of the ark.

AND it came to pass, "when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them,

2 That the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose.

3 And the LORD said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, "for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

4 There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them: the same became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown.

5 ¶ And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.

6 And it repented the LORD that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.

7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them.

8 But Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD.

a just man, and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God.

10 And Noah begat three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

11 The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence.

12 And God looked upon the earth, and behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.

13 And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them: and behold, I will destroy them with the earth.

14 ¶ Make thee an ark of gopher-wood: rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch.

15 And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of: The length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits.

16 A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above; and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof: with lower, second, and third stories shalt thou make it.

17 And behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven: and every thing that is in the earth shall die.

18 But with thee will I establish my covenant: and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee.

19 And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee: they shall be male and female.

20 Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind; two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep them alive.

21 And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee, and for them.

22 Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

CHAP. VII.

1 Noah, with his family, and the living creatures, enter the ark. 17 The beginning and continuance of the flood.

AND the LORD said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark: for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation.

2 Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female: and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female.

3 Of fowls also of the air by sevens, the male and the female; to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth.

4 For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights: and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth.

5 And Noah did according unto all that the LORD commanded him.

6 And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

7 ¶ And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the flood.

8 Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth,

9 There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah.

10 And it came to pass, || after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth.

11 ¶ In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all ^athe fountains of the great deep broken up, and || ^athe windows of heaven were opened.

12 ^aAnd the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

13 In the self-same day ^aentered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark:

14 ^aThey, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every ^asort.

15 And they ^awent in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein ^ais the breath of life.

16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, ^aas God had commanded him: and the LORD shut him in.

17 ^aAnd the flood was forty days upon the earth: and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lift up above the earth.

18 And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth: ^aand the ark went upon the face of the waters.

19 And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth: ^aand all the high hills that ^awere under the whole heaven were covered.

20 Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail: and the mountains were covered.

21 ^aAnd all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man:

22 All in ^awhose nostrils ^awas ^athe breath of life, of all that ^awas in the dry ^aland, died.

23 And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and ^aNoah only remained ^aalive, and they that ^awere with him in the ark.

24 ^aAnd the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The waters assuage. 4 The ark resteth on Ararat. 18 Noah goeth forth of the ark. 20 He buildeth an altar, and offereth sacrifice.

AND God ^aremembered Noah, and every living thing, and all the cattle that ^awas with him in the ark: ^aand God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged.

2 ^aThe fountains also of the deep, and the windows of heaven were stopped, and ^athe rain from heaven was restrained.

3 And the waters returned from off the earth ^acontinually: and after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.

4 ¶ And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat.

5 And the waters ^adecreased continually, until the tenth month: in the tenth ^amonth, on the first ^aday of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

6 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened ^athe window of the ark which he had made:

7 And he sent forth a raven, which went forth ^ato and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

8 Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground.

9 But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot, and she returned unto him into the ark; for the waters ^awere on the face of the whole earth. Then he put forth his hand, and took her, and ^ahe pulled her in unto him into the ark.

10 And he stayed yet other seven days; and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark.

11 And the dove came in to him in the evening, and lo, in her mouth ^awas an olive-leaf, pluckt off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth.

12 And he stayed yet other seven days, and sent forth the dove; which returned not again unto him any more.

13 ¶ And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year, in the first ^amonth, the first ^aday of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth: and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and behold, the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the second month, on the seventh and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, saying,

16 Go forth of the ark, ^athou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee.

17 Bring forth with thee ^aevery living thing that ^ais with thee, of all flesh, ^aboth of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that they may breed abundantly in the earth, and ^abe fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.

18 And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:

19 Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, ^aand whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their ^akinds, went forth out of the ark.

20 ¶ And Noah builded an altar unto the LORD, and took of ^aevery clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar.

21 And the LORD smelled ^aa ^asweet savour; and the LORD said in his heart, I will not again ^acurse the ground any more for man's sake; || for the ^aimagination of man's heart ^ais evil from his youth: ^aneither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done.

22 ^a¶ While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and ^aday and night, shall not cease.

CHAP. IX.

1 God blesseth Noah. 4 Blood and murder are forbidden. 8 God's covenant, 13 signified by the rainbow. 18 Noah replenisheth the world, 21 is drunken, and mocked of his son, 25 curseth Canaan, 29 and dieth.

AND God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, ^aBe fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth.

2 ^aAnd the fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth ^aupon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered.

3 ^aEvery moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the ^agreen herb have I given you ^aall things.

CHAP. X.

1 The generations of Noah. 8 Nimrod the first monarch.

NOW these are the generations of the sons of Noah; Shem, Ham, and Japheth: "and unto them were sons born after the flood.

2 "The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Mesheeh, and Tiras.

3 And the sons of Gomer; Ashkenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah.

4 And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim.

5 By these were the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations.

6 ¶ And the sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim, and Phut, and Canaan.

7 And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah, and Sabtecha: and the sons of Raamah; Sheba, and Dedan.

8 And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be a mighty one in the earth.

9 He was a mighty hunter before the LORD: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the LORD.

10 ¶ And the beginning of his kingdom was †Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar.

11 Out of that land ¶ went forth Asshur, and builded Nineveh, and the city Rehoboth, and Calah, 12 And Resen between Nineveh and Calah: the same is a great city.

13 And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Anamim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, 14 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (out of whom came Philistim,) and Caphtorim.

15 ¶ And Canaan begat †Sidon his first-born, and Heth,

16 And the Jebusite, and the Amorite, and the Girgasite,

17 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite, 18 And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite: and afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad.

19 ¶ And the border of the Canaanites was from Sidon, as thou comest to Gerar, unto †Gaza; as thou goest unto Sodom and Gomorrah, and Admah, and Zeboim, even unto Lasha.

20 These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.

21 ¶ Unto Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder, even to him were children born.

22 The children of Shem; Elam, and Asshur, and †Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram.

23 And the children of Aram; Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Mash.

24 And Arphaxad begat †Salah; and Salah begat Eber.

25 ¶ And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of one was ¶ Peleg, for in his days was the earth divided; and his brother's name was Joktan.

26 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jeralah, 27 And Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah, 28 And Obal, and Abimael, and Sheba, 29 And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab: all these were the sons of Joktan.

4 But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat.

5 And surely your blood of your lives will I require: "at the hand of every beast will I require it, and "at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man.

6 "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: "for in the image of God made he man.

7 And you, "be ye fruitful, and multiply; bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein.

8 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying,

9 And I, "behold, I establish "my covenant with you, and with your seed after you;

10 "And with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth.

11 And ¶ I will establish my covenant with you; neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth.

12 And God said, "This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations.

13 I do set "my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

14 And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud:

15 And ¶ I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and every living creature of all flesh; and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh.

16 And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember "the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth.

17 And God said unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant which I have established between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

18 ¶ And the sons of Noah that went forth of the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: "and Ham is the father of †Canaan.

19 ¶ These are the three sons of Noah: "and of them was the whole earth overspread.

20 And Noah began to be "a husbandman, and he planted a vineyard:

21 And he drank of the wine, "and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent.

22 And Ham, the father of Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told his two brethren without.

23 ¶ And Shem and Japheth took a garment, and laid it upon both their shoulders, and went backward, and covered the nakedness of their father: and their faces were backward, and they saw not their father's nakedness.

24 And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him.

25 And he said, "Cursed be Canaan: "a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.

26 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Shem; and Canaan shall be ¶ his servant.

27 God shall ¶ enlarge Japheth, "and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant.

28 ¶ And Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years.

29 And all the days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years: and he died.

30 And their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east.

31 These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations.

32 These are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations: and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood.

CHAP. XI.

1 One language in the world. 3 The building of Babel. 5 The confusion of tongues.

AND the whole earth was of one † language, and of one † speech.

2 And it came to pass, as they journeyed || from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there.

3 And † they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick, and † burn them thoroughly. And they had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar.

4 And they said, Go to, let us build us a city, and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth.

5 And the LORD came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded.

6 And the LORD said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do.

7 Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech.

8 So the LORD scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city.

9 Therefore is the name of it called || Babel, because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.

10 ¶ These are the generations of Shem: Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood:

11 And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah:

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

14 And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber:

15 And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

16 And Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat Peleg:

17 And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters.

18 And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat Reu:

19 And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters.

20 And Reu lived two and thirty years, and begat Serug:

21 And Reu lived after he begat Serug two hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters.

22 And Serug lived thirty years, and begat Nahor:

23 And Serug lived after he begat Nahor two hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

24 And Nahor lived nine and twenty years, and begat Terah:

25 And Nahor lived after he begat Terah an hundred and nineteen years, and begat sons and daughters.

26 And Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

27 ¶ Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran: and Haran begat Lot.

28 And Haran died before his father Terah in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife Mileah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Mileah, and the father of Iseah.

30 But Sarai was barren; she had no child.

31 And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

CHAP. XII.

1 God calleth Abram, and blesseth him with a promise of Christ. 6 He journeyeth through Canaan. 10 He is driven by a famine into Egypt.

NOW the LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee:

2 And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing:

3 And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

4 So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him, and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 ¶ And Abram passed through the land unto the place of Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the Canaanite was then in the land.

7 And the LORD appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.

8 And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Hai on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the LORD, and called upon the name of the LORD.

9 And Abram journeyed, going on still toward the south.

10 ¶ And there was a famine in the land: and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon:

12 Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This is his wife: and they will kill me, but they will save thee alive.

13 Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee.

14 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld the woman that she was very fair.

15 The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before Pharaoh: and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.

16 And he entreated Abram well for her sake: and he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the LORD plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai, Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, What is this that thou hast done unto me? why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now therefore behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him: and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Abram and Lot return out of Egypt. 14 God reneweth the promise to Abram. 18 He removeth to Hebron, and there buildeth an altar.

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the south.

2 And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold.

3 And he went on his journeys from the south even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai;

4 Unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first: and there Abram called on the name of the LORD.

5 ¶ And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents.

6 And the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together.

7 And there was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.

8 And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren.

9 Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

10 And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto Zoar.

11 Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and they separated themselves the one from the other.

12 Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom.

13 But the men of Sodom were wicked, and sinners before the LORD exceedingly.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward:

17 Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee.

18 Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the LORD.

CHAP. XIV.

1 The battle of the kings. 12 Lot is taken prisoner. 18 Melchizedek blesseth Abram. 20 Abram giveth him tithe.

AND it came to pass, in the days of Amraphel king of Shinar, Arioch king of Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and Tidal king of nations;

2 That these made war with Bera king of Sodom, and with Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinab king of Admah, and Shemeber king of Zebaiim, and the king of Bela, which is Zoar.

3 All these were joined together in the vale of Siddim, which is the salt sea.

4 Twelve years they served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled.

5 And in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and the kings that were with him, and smote the Rephaims in Ashteroth Karnaim, and the Zuzims in Ham, and the Emims in Shaveh Kiriathaim,

6 And the Horites in their mount Seir, unto El-paran, which is by the wilderness.

7 And they returned, and came to En-mishpat, which is Kadesh, and smote all the country of the Amalekites, and also the Amorites, that dwelt in Hazezon-tamar.

8 And there went out the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrah, and the king of Admah, and the king of Zebaiim, and the king of Bela, (the same is Zoar;) and they joined battle with them in the vale of Siddim;

9 With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and with Tidal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellasar; four kings with five.

10 And the vale of Siddim was full of slime-pits; and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled, and fell there: and they that remained fled to the mountain.

11 And they took all the goods of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their victuals, and went their way.

12 And they took Lot, Abram's brother's son, who dwelt in Sodom, and his goods, and departed.

13 ¶ And there came one that had escaped, and told Abram the Hebrew; for he dwelt in the plain of Mamre the Amorite, brother of Eshcol, and brother of Aner: and these were confederate with Abram.

14 And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan.

15 And he divided himself against them, he and his servants, by night, and smote them, and pursued them unto Hobah, which is on the left hand of Damascus.

16 And he brought back all the goods, and also brought again his brother Lot, and his goods, and the women also, and the people.

17 ¶ And the king of Sodom went out to meet him, (after his return from the slaughter of Chedorlaomer, and of the kings that were with him,) at the valley of Shaveh, which is the king's dale.

18 And ^aMelchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God.

19 And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, ^apossessor of heaven and earth:

20 And ^ablessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all.

21 And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the [†]persons, and take the goods to thyself.

22 And Abram said to the king of Sodom, I ^ahave lifted up my hand unto the LORD, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth,

23 That ^aI will not take from a thread even to a shoe-latchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich:

24 Save only that which the young men have eaten, and the portion of the men ^awhich went with me, Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre; let them take their portion.

CHAP. XV.

¹ God encourageth Abram, ⁴ promiseth him a son, and a multiplying of his seed. ⁶ Abram is justified by faith. ⁷ Canaan is promised, and confirmed by a vision.

AFTER these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram ^ain a vision, saying, ^aFear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding ^agreat reward.

2 And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me. ^aseeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damaseus?

3 And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed: and lo, ^aone born in my house is mine heir.

4 And behold, the word of the LORD came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that ^ashall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and ^atell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, ^aSo shall thy seed be.

6 And he ^abelieved in the LORD; and he ^acounted it to him for righteousness.

7 And he said unto him, I am the LORD that ^abrought thee out of ^aUr of the Chaldees, ^ato give thee this land to inherit it.

8 And he said, Lord God, ^awhereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?

9 And he said unto him, Take me a heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon.

10 And he took unto him all these, and ^adivided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but ^athe birds divided he not.

11 And when the fowls came down upon the carcasses, Abram drove them away.

12 And when the sun was going down, ^aa deep sleep fell upon Abram; and lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him.

13 And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety ^athat thy seed shall be a stranger in a land ^athat is not theirs, and shall serve them; and ^athey shall afflict them four hundred years;

14 And also that nation whom they shall serve, ^awill I judge: and afterward ^ashall they come out with great substance.

15 And ^athou shalt go ^ato thy fathers in peace; ^athou shalt be buried in a good old age.

16 But ^ain the fourth generation they shall come hither again: for the iniquity ^aof the Amorites ^ais not yet full.

17 And it came to pass, that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and ^aa burning lamp that ^apassed between those pieces.

18 In that same day the LORD ^amade a covenant with Abram, saying, ^aUnto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates:

19 The Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites,

20 And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims, 21 And the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Sarai being barren giveth Hagar to Abram. 15 Ishmael is born.

NOW Sarai, Abram's wife, ^abare him no children: and she had an handmaid, ^aan Egyptian, whose name was Hagar.

2 ^aAnd Sarai said unto Abram, Behold now, the LORD ^ahath restrained me from bearing: I pray ^athee go in unto my maid; it may be that I may [†]obtain children by her. And Abram ^ahearkened to the voice of Sarai.

3 And Sarai, Abram's wife, took Hagar her maid the Egyptian, after Abram ^ahad dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife.

4 ^aAnd he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived: and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was ^adespised in her eyes.

5 And Sarai said unto Abram, My wrong be upon thee: I have given my maid into thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes: ^athe LORD judge between me and thee.

6 ^aBut Abram said unto Sarai, ^aBehold, thy maid is in thy hand; do to her [†]as it pleaseth thee. And when Sarai [†]dealt hardly with her, ^ashe fled from her face.

7 ^aAnd the angel of the LORD found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, ^aby the fountain in the way to ^aShur.

8 And he said, Hagar, Sarai's maid, whence camest thou? and whither wilt thou go? And she said, I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai.

9 And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Return to thy mistress, and ^asubmit thyself under her hands.

10 And the angel of the LORD said unto her, ^aI will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude.

11 And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, ^aand shalt call his name ^aIshmael; because the LORD hath heard thy affliction.

12 ^aAnd he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him; ^aand he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren.

13 And she called the name of the LORD that spake unto her, Thou God seest me: for she said, Have I also here looked after him ^athat seeth me?

14 Wherefore the well was called ^aBeer-lahai-roi; behold, it is between Kadesh and Bered.

15 ^aAnd Hagar bare Abram a son: and Abram called his son's name, which Hagar bare, ^aIshmael.

16 And Abram was fourscore and six years old, when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram.

CHAP. XVII.

1 God reneweth the covenant. 16 Circumcision is instituted. 10 Isaac is promised. 23 Abraham and Ishmael are circumcised.

AND when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

2 And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly.

3 And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying,

4 As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations.

5 Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name shall be Abraham: for a father of many nations have I made thee.

6 And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee; and kings shall come out of thee.

7 And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee.

8 And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.

9 And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations.

10 This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee; Every man-child among you shall be circumcised.

11 And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you.

12 And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed.

13 He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant.

14 And the uncircumcised man-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

15 And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be.

16 And I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and she shall be a mother of nations; kings of people shall be of her.

17 Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

18 And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!

19 And God said, Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him.

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly: twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation.

22 And he left off talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

23 And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house; and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin, in the self-same day, as God had said unto him.

24 And Abraham was ninety years old and nine, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

25 And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

26 In the self-same day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son;

27 And all the men of his house, born in the house, and bought with money of the stranger, were circumcised with him.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Abraham entertaineth three angels. 17 The destruction of Sodom is revealed to Abraham.

AND the LORD appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent-door in the heat of the day;

2 And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him: and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent-door, and bowed himself toward the ground,

3 And said, My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant:

4 Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree:

5 And I will fetch a morsel of bread, and comfort ye your hearts; after that ye shall pass on: for therefore are ye come to your servant. And they said, So do, as thou hast said.

6 And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.

7 And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hasted to dress it.

8 And he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent.

10 And he said, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and lo, Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent-door, which was behind him.

11 Now Abraham and Sarah were old and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women.

12 Therefore Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also?

13 And the LORD said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 Is any thing too hard for the LORD? At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son.

15 Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. And he said, Nay; but thou didst laugh.

16 ¶ And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way.

17 And the LORD said, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be "blessed in him?

19 For I know him, "that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment, that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.

20 And the LORD said, Because "the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, 21 "I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, "I will know.

22 And the men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom: but Abraham "stood yet before the LORD.

23 ¶ And Abraham "drew near, and said, "Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?

24 "Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?

25 That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and "that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

26 And the LORD said, "If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes.

27 And Abraham answered and said, "Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD, which am "but dust and ashes:

28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? And he said, If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it.

29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And he said, I will not do it for forty's sake.

30 And he said unto him, Oh, let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And he said, I will not do it if I find thirty there.

31 And he said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake.

32 And he said, "Oh, let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. "And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.

33 And the LORD went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place.

2 And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and "wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, "Nay; but we will abide in the street all night.

3 And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

4 ¶ But before they lay down, the men of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter:

5 "And they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this night? "bring them out unto us, that we "may know them.

6 And "Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him,

7 And said, I pray you, brethren, do not so wickedly.

8 Behold now, I have two daughters which have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out unto you, and do ye to them as is good in your eyes: only unto these men do nothing; "for therefore came they under the shadow of my roof.

9 And they said, Stand back. And they said again, This one fellow "came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge: now will we deal worse with thee than with them. And they pressed sore upon the man, even Lot, and came near to break the door.

10 But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut to the door.

11 And they smote the men "that were at the door of the house with blindness, both small and great; so that they wearied themselves to find the door.

12 ¶ And the men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, "bring them out of this place:

13 For we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD; and "the LORD hath sent us to destroy it.

14 And Lot went out, and spake unto his sons-in-law, which married his daughters, and said, "Up, get you out of this place; for the LORD will destroy this city: "but he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law.

15 ¶ And when the morning arose, then the angels hastened Lot, saying, "Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters which "are here, lest thou be consumed in the "iniquity of the city.

16 And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; "the LORD being merciful unto him; and they brought him forth, and set him without the city.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, "Escape for thy life; "look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

18 And Lot said unto them, Oh, not so, my Lord:

19 Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast showed unto me in saving my life: and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die:

20 Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh, let me escape thither! (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live.

21 And he said unto him, See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken.

22 Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither: therefore the name of the city was called Zoar.

23 The sun was risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar.

24 Then the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the LORD out of heaven;

25 And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground.

26 But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt.

27 And Abraham gat up early in the morning to the place where he stood before the LORD:

28 And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

29 And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelt.

30 And Lot went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountain, and his two daughters with him; for he feared to dwell in Zoar: and he dwelt in a cave, he, and his two daughters.

31 And the first-born said unto the younger, Our father is old, and there is not a man in the earth to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth:

32 Come, let us make our father drink wine, and we will lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

33 And they made their father drink wine that night: and the first-born went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

34 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the first-born said unto the younger, Behold, I lay yesternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

35 And they made their father drink wine that night also: and the younger arose, and lay with him; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

36 Thus were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father.

37 And the first-born bare a son, and called his name Moab: the same is the father of the Moabites unto this day.

38 And the younger she also bare a son, and called his name Ben-ammi: the same is the father of the children of Ammon unto this day.

CHAP. XX.

1 Abraham sojourneth at Gerar. 2 He denieth his wife, and loseth her.

AND Abraham journeyed from thence toward the south country, and dwelled between Kadesh and Shur, and sojourned in Gerar.

2 And Abraham said of Sarah his wife, She is my sister: and Abimelech king of Gerar sent and took Sarah.

3 But God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and said to him, Behold, thou art but a dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken: for she is a man's wife.

4 But Abimelech had not come near her: and he said, LORD, wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself said, He is my brother: in the integrity of my heart and innocency of my hands have I done this.

6 And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for I also withheld thee from sinning against me: therefore suffered I thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live: and if thou restore her not, know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou, and all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid.

9 Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, What hast thou done unto us? and what have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me and on my kingdom a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me that ought not to be done.

10 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing?

11 And Abraham said, Because I thought, Surely the fear of God is not in this place; and they will slay me for my wife's sake.

12 And yet indeed she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother: and she became my wife.

13 And it came to pass, when God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto her, This is thy kindness which thou shalt shew unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother.

14 And Abimelech took sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and women-servants, and gave them unto Abraham, and restored him Sarah his wife.

15 And Abimelech said, Behold, my land is before thee: dwell where it pleaseth thee.

16 And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes unto all that are with thee, and with all other: thus she was reproved.

17 So Abraham prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his maid-servants; and they bare children.

18 For the LORD had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah, Abraham's wife.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Isaac is born. 4 He is circumcised. 9 Hagar and Ishmael are cast forth.

AND the LORD visited Sarah as he had said, and the LORD did unto Sarah as he had spoken.

2 For Sarah conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time of which God had spoken to him.

3 And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, Isaac.

4 And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac, being eight days old, as God had commanded him.

5 And Abraham was an hundred years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him.

6 And Sarah said, God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me.

THE DEPARTURE OF MOSES

29 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What mean these seven ewe-lambs, which thou hast set by themselves?

16 And said, 'By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son:

17 That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed 'as the stars of the heaven, 'and as the sand which is upon the sea-†shore; and 'thy seed shall possess "the gate of his enemies;

18 "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; "because thou hast obeyed my voice.

19 So Abraham returned unto his young men, and they rose up, and went together to "Beer-sheba; and Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba.

20 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that it was told Abraham, saying, Behold, 'Milcah, she hath also borne children unto thy brother Nahor;

21 'Huz his first-born, and Buz his brother, and Kemuel the father 'of Aram, 22 And Chesed, and Hazo, and Pildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel.

23 And 'Bethuel begat "Rebekah: these eight Milcah did bear to Nahor, Abraham's brother.

24 And his concubine, whose name was Reumah, she bare also Tebah, and Gaham, and Thahash, and Maachah.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 The age and death of Sarah. 3 The purchase of Machpelah.

AND Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old: these were the years of the life of Sarah.

2 And Sarah died in 'Kirjath-arba; the same is 'Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

3 ¶ And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying,

4 'I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: 'give me a possession of a burying-place with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

5 And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him,

6 Hear us, my lord; thou art †a mighty prince among us: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead: none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

7 And Abraham stood up and bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and entreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar, 9 That he may give me the cave of Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for †as much money as it is worth he shall give it me, for a possession of a burying-place among you.

10 And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth. And Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the †audience of the children of Heth, even of all that 'went in at the gate of his city, saying, 11 'Nay, my lord, hear me: the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee, hear me: I will give thee money for the field: take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred 'shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron, and Abraham 'weighed to Ephron the silver which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

17 ¶ And 'the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure 18 Unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

20 And the field, and the cave that is therein 'were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a burying-place, by the sons of Heth.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Abraham sweareth his servant; 12 his prayer; 14 his sign. Rebekah meeteth him, 18 and fulfilleth his sign. 34 The servant sheweth his message. 50 Laban and Bethuel approve it. 58 Rebekah consenteth to go.

AND Abraham 'was old and †well stricken in age: and the LORD 'had blessed Abraham in all things.

2 And Abraham said 'unto his eldest servant of his house, that 'ruled over all that he had, 'Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh:

3 And I will make thee 'swear by the LORD, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that 'thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I dwell:

4 'But thou shalt go 'unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

5 And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

6 And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou, that thou bring not my son thither again.

7 ¶ The LORD God of heaven, which 'took me from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, 'Unto thy seed will I give this land: "he shall send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence.

8 And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then 'thou shalt be clear from this mine oath; only bring not my son thither again.

9 And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

10 ¶ And the servant took ten camels, of the camels of his master, and departed; "¶ (for all the goods of his master were in his hand;) and he arose, and went to Mesopotamia, unto 'the city of Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to kneel down without the city by a well of water, at the time of the evening, even the time †that women go out to draw water:

12 And he said, 'O LORD, God of my master

Abraham, I pray thee, send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master Abraham.

13 Behold, I stand here by the well of water; and "the daughters of the men of the city come out to draw water:

14 And let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and "thereby shall I know that thou hast shewed kindness unto my master.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder.

16 And the damsel was† very fair to look upon, a virgin; neither had any man known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me, I pray thee, drink a little water of thy pitcher.

18 And she said, Drink, my lord: and she hastened, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hastened, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

21 And the man, wondering at her, held his peace, to wit whether "the LORD had made his journey prosperous, or not.

22 And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden ear-ring, of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels weight of gold, 23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, I am the daughter of Bethuel the son of Milcah, which she bare unto Nahor.

25 She said, moreover, unto him, We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in.

26 And the man bowed down his head, and worshipped the LORD.

27 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master of "his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, the LORD led me to the house of my master's brethren.

28 And the damsel ran, and told them of her mother's house these things.

29 ¶ And Rebekah had a brother, and his name was Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man, unto the well.

30 And it came to pass, when he saw the ear-ring, and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me; that he came unto the man, and behold, he stood by the camels at the well.

31 And he said, Come in, thou blessed of the LORD, wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels.

32 ¶ And the man came into the house: and he ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him.

33 And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, I will not eat until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on.

34 And he said, I am Abraham's servant.

35 And the LORD "hath blessed my master greatly, and he is become great: and he hath given him flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and camels, and asses.

36 And Sarah, my master's wife, "bare a son to my master when she was old: and "unto him hath he given all that he hath.

37 And my master "made me swear, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife to my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell:

38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son.

39 And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me.

40 And he said unto me, The LORD, before whom I walk, will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way; and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house.

41 Then shalt thou be clear from this mine oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath.

42 And I came this day unto the well, and said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou do prosper my way which I go:

43 Behold, I stand by the well of water; and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink;

44 And she say to me, Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be the woman whom the LORD hath appointed out for my master's son.

45 And before I had done speaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder; and she went down unto the well, and drew water: and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: so I drank, and she made the camels drink also.

47 And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him: and I put the ear-ring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands.

48 And I bowed down my head, and worshipped the LORD, and blessed the LORD God of my master Abraham, which had led me in the right way to take my master's brother's daughter unto his son.

49 And now if ye will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me: and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left.

50 Then Laban and Bethuel answered, and said, The thing proceedeth from the LORD: we cannot speak unto thee bad or good.

51 Behold, Rebekah is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the LORD hath spoken.

52 And it came to pass, that, when Abraham's servant heard their words, he worshipped the LORD, bowing himself to the earth.

53 And the servant brought forth † jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah. He gave also to her brother and to her mother precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night; and they rose up in the morning, and he said, 'Send me away unto my master.

55 And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us a few days, at the least ten; after that she shall go.

56 And he said unto them, Hinder me not, seeing the LORD hath prospered my way: send me away, that I may go to my master.

57 And they said, We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.

58 And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go.

59 And they sent away Rebekah their sister, and her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his men.

60 And they blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Thou art our sister; be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them.

61 ¶ And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the servant took Rebekah, and went his way.

62 And Isaac came from the way of the well Lahai-roi; for he dwelt in the south country.

63 And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at the even-tide: and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, she lighted off the camel.

65 For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, It is my master: therefore she took a vail and covered herself.

66 And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.

67 And Isaac brought her into his mother Sarah's tent, and took Rebekah, and she became his wife; and he loved her: and Isaac was comforted after his mother's death.

8 Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was gathered to his people.

9 And this sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Maehpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre;

10 The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth: there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife.

11 ¶ And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that God blessed his son Isaac: and Isaac dwelt by the well Lahai-roi.

12 ¶ Now these are the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son, whom Hagar the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham.

13 And these are the names of the sons of Ishmael, by their names, according to their generations: the first-born of Ishmael, Nebajoth; and Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam,

14 And Mishma, and Dumah, and Massa,

15 ¶ Hadar, and Tema, Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah:

16 These are the sons of Ishmael, and these are their names, by their towns, and by their castles: twelve princes according to their nations.

17 And these are the years of the life of Ishmael: an hundred and thirty and seven years: and he gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered unto his people.

18 And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt, as thou goest toward Assyria: and he died in the presence of all his brethren.

19 ¶ And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son: Abraham begat Isaac:

20 And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebekah to wife, the daughter of Bethuel the Syrian of Padan-aram, the sister to Laban the Syrian.

21 And Isaac entreated the LORD for his wife, because she was barren: and the LORD was entreated of him, and Rebekah his wife conceived.

22 And the children struggled together within her: and she said, If it be so, why am I thus? And she went to inquire of the LORD.

23 And the LORD said unto her, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger.

24 ¶ And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

25 And the first came out red, all over like an hairy garment: and they called his name Esau.

26 And after that came his brother out, and his hand took hold on Esau's heel; and his name was called Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old when she bare them.

27 And the boys grew: and Esau was a cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents.

28 And Isaac loved Esau, because † he did eat of his venison: but Rebekah loved Jacob.

29 ¶ And Jacob sod pottage: and Esau came from the field, and he was faint.

30 And Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, † with that same red pottage; for I am faint: therefore was his name called Edom.

31 And Jacob said, Sell me this day thy birth-right.

32 And Esau said, Behold, I am † at the point to die: and what profit shall this birthright do to me?

33 And Jacob said, Swear to me this day; and he sware unto him: and ^ahe sold his birthright unto Jacob.

34 Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles; and he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birthright.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 Isaac because of famine goeth to Gerar, 26 Abimelech's covenant with him at Beer-sheba.

AND there was a famine in the land, besides ^athe first famine that was in the days of Abraham. And Isaac went unto ^bAbimelech king of the Philistines unto Gerar.

2 And the LORD appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt: dwell in ^athe land which I shall tell thee of.

3 ^aSojourn in this land, and ^aI will be with thee, and ^awill bless thee: for unto thee, and unto thy seed ^aI will give all these countries, and I will perform ^athe oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father;

4 And ^aI will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: ^aand in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed:

5 ^aBecause that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.

6 ¶ And Isaac dwelt in Gerar:

7 And the men of the place asked him of his wife; and ^ahe said, She is my sister: for ^ahe feared to say, She is my wife; lest, said he, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah; because she ^awas fair to look upon.

8 And it came to pass when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philistines looked out at a window, and saw, and behold, Isaac was sporting with Rebekah his wife.

9 And Abimelech called Isaac, and said, Behold, of a surety she is thy wife: and how saidst thou, She is my sister? And Isaac said unto him, Because I said, Lest I die for her.

10 And Abimelech said, What is this thou hast done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife, and ^athou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us.

11 And Abimelech charged all his people, saying, He that ^atoucheth this man or his wife shall surely be put to death.

12 Then Isaac sowed in that land, and † received in the same year ^aan hundred-fold: and the LORD ^ablessed him:

13 And the man ^awaxed great, and † went forward, and grew until he became very great.

14 For he had possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of ^aservants: and the Philistines ^aenvied him.

15 For all the wells ^awhich his father's servants had digged in the days of Abraham his father, the Philistines had stopped them, and filled them with earth.

16 And Abimelech said unto Isaac, Go from us: for ^athou art much mightier than we.

17 ¶ And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there.

18 And Isaac digged again the wells of water which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: ^aand he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

19 And Isaac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of † springing water.

20 And the herdmen of Gerar ^adid strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well ^aEsek; because they strove with him.

21 And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it ^aSitnah.

22 And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it ^aRehoboth; and he said, For now the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall ^abe fruitful in the land.

23 And he went up from thence to Beer-sheba.

24 And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, ^aI am the God of Abraham thy father: ^afear not, for ^aI am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake.

25 And he ^abuilded an altar there, and ^acalled upon the name of the LORD, and pitched his tent there: and there Isaac's servants digged a well.

26 ¶ Then Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath one of his friends, ^aand Phichol the chief captain of his army.

27 And Isaac said unto them, Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ^aye hate me, and have ^asent me away from you?

28 And they said, † We saw certainly that the LORD ^awas with thee: and we said, Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee:

29 † That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good, and have sent thee away in peace: ^athou art now the blessed of the LORD.

30 ^aAnd he made them a feast, and they did eat and drink.

31 And they rose up betimes in the morning, and ^asware one to another: and Isaac sent them away, and they departed from him in peace.

32 And it came to pass the same day, that Isaac's servants came and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water.

33 And he called it ^aShebah: ^atherefore the name of the city is ^aBeer-sheba unto this day.

34 ¶ ^aAnd Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith the daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite:

CHAP. XXVII.

1 Isaac sendeth Esau for venison. 6 Rebekah instructeth Jacob to obtain the blessing. 34 Esau complaineth, and by importunity obtaineth a blessing.

AND it came to pass, that when Isaac was old, and ^ahis eyes were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: and he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, I ^aknow not the day of my death:

3 ^aNow therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and † take me some venison;

4 And make me savoury meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul ^amay bless thee before I die.

5 And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son: and Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring it.

6 ¶ And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying,

7 Bring me venison, and make me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee before the LORD, before my death.

8 Now therefore, my son, obey my voice, according to that which I command thee.

9 Go now to the flock, and fetch me from thence two good kids of the goats; and I will make them savoury meat for thy father, such as he loveth:

10 And thou shalt bring it to thy father, that he may eat, and that he ^amay bless thee before his death.

11 And Jacob said to Rebekah his mother, Behold, ^aEsau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a smooth man:

12 My father peradventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver; and I shall bring ^aa curse upon me, and not a blessing.

13 And his mother said unto him, Upon me be thy curse, my son; only obey my voice, and go fetch me them.

14 And he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother: and his mother ^amade savoury meat, such as his father loved.

15 And Rebekah took [†]goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son:

16 And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck:

17 And she gave the savoury meat and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

18 ¶ And he came unto his father, and said, My father. And he said, Here am I; who art thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said unto his father, I am Esau thy first-born; I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, ^athat thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said unto his son, How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son? And he said, Because the LORD thy God brought it [†]to me.

21 And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I ^amay feel thee, my son, whether thou be my very son Esau, or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

23 And he discerned him not, because ^ahis hands were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands: so he blessed him.

24 And he said, Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, I am.

25 And he said, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, ^athat my soul may bless thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son.

27 And he came near, and kissed him: and he smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, See, ^athe smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the LORD hath blessed:

28 Therefore God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine:

29 ¶ Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: ^acursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he also had made savoury meat, and brought it unto his father; and said unto his father, Let my father arise, and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy first-born, Esau.

33 And Isaac [†]trembled very exceedingly, and said, Who? where is he that hath [†]taken venison, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou eamest, and have blessed him? yea, ^aand he shall be blessed.

34 And when Esau heard the words of his father, ^ahe cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O my father!

35 And he said, Thy brother came with subtilty, and hath taken away thy blessing.

36 And he said, Is not he rightly named [¶]Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times: ^ahe took away my birth-right; and behold, now he hath taken away my blessing. And he said, Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?

37 And Isaac answered and said unto Esau, Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants; and ^awith corn and wine have I [¶]sustained him: and what shall I do now unto thee, my son?

38 And Esau said unto his father, Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father? And Esau lifted up his voice, and wept.

39 And Isaac his father answered, and said unto him, Behold, ^athy dwelling shall be [¶]the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above;

40 And by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother: and ^ait shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

41 ¶ And Esau ^ahated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand, ^athen will I slay my brother Jacob.

42 And these words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebekah: and she sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him, Behold, thy brother Esau, as touching thee, doth ^acomfort himself, purposing to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my son, obey my voice: and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother to Haran.

44 And tarry with him a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away;

45 Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou hast done to him: then I will send, and fetch thee from thence. Why should I be deprived also of you both in one day?

46 And Rebekah said to Isaac, I am weary of my life, because of the daughters of Heth: if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these which are of the daughters of the land, what good shall my life do me?

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Isaac blesseth Jacob, and sendeth him to Padan-aram. 12 The vision of Jacob's ladder. 18 The stone of Beth-el. 20 Jacob's vow.

AND Isaac called Jacob, and ^ablessed him, and ^acharged him, and said unto him, ^bThou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan.

2 ^aArise, go to ^aPadan-aram, to the house of ^aBethuel thy mother's father; and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of ^aLaban thy mother's brother.

3 ^aAnd God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be ^amultitude of people;

4 And give thee ^athe blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land ^awherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham.

5 And Isaac sent away Jacob: and he went to Padan-aram unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebekah, Jacob's and Esau's mother.

6 ^aWhen Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob, and sent him away to Padan-aram, to take him a wife from thence; and that as he blessed him, he gave him a charge, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan;

7 And that Jacob obeyed his father, and his mother, and was gone to Padan-aram;

8 And Esau seeing ^athat the daughters of Canaan ^apleased not Isaac his father;

9 Then went Esau unto Ishmael, and took unto the wives which he had, ^aMahalath the daughter of Ishmael, Abraham's son, ^athe sister of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

10 ^aAnd Jacob ^awent out from Beer-sheba, and went toward ^aHaran.

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set: and he took of the stones of that place, and put ^athem for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.

12 And he ^adreamed, and behold, a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold, ^athe angels of God ascending and descending on it.

13 ^aAnd behold, the LORD stood above it, and said, ^aI am the LORD God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: ^athe land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed.

14 And ^athy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt ^aspread abroad ^ato the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and ^ain thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.

15 And behold, ^aI am with thee, and will ^akeep thee in all ^aplaces whither thou goest, and will ^abring thee again into this land: for ^aI will not leave thee, ^auntil I have done ^athat which I have spoken to thee of.

16 ^aAnd Jacob awoke out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in ^athis place; and I knew ^ait not.

17 And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

18 And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put ^afor his pillows, and ^aset it up ^afor a pillar, ^aand poured oil upon the top of it.

19 And he called the name of ^athat place ^aBeth-el: but the name of that city was called Luz at the first.

20 ^aAnd Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If ^aGod will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me ^abread to eat, and raiment to put on,

21 So that ^aI come again to my father's house in peace; ^athen shall the LORD be my God:

22 And this stone, which I have set ^afor a pillar, ^ashall be God's house: ^aand of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

CHAP. XXIX.

1 Jacob cometh to the well of Haran: 18 He covenanteth for Rachel; 23 He is deceived with Leah: 23 He marrieth also Rachel, and serveth for her seven years more.

THEN Jacob ^awent on his journey, ^aand came into the land of the ^apeople of the east.

2 And he looked, and behold, a well in the field, and lo, there ^awere three flocks of sheep lying by it; for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great stone ^awas upon the well's mouth.

3 And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth and watered the sheep, and put the stone again upon the well's mouth in his place.

4 And Jacob said unto them, My brethren, whence ^abe ye? And they said, Of Haran ^aare we.

5 And he said unto them, Know ye Laban the son of Nahor? And they said, We know ^ahim.

6 And he said unto them, ^aIs he well? And they said, ^aHe is well: and behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep.

7 And he said, Lo, ^ait is yet high day, neither is ^ait time that the cattle should be gathered together: water ye the sheep, and go ^aand feed them.

8 And they said, We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and ^atill they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

9 ^aAnd while he yet spake with them, ^aRachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them.

10 And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, and ^arolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob ^akissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he ^awas her father's brother, and that he ^awas Rebekah's son; ^aand she ran and told her father.

13 And it came to pass when Laban heard the ^atidings of Jacob his sister's son, that ^ahe ran to meet him, and embraced him, and kissed him, and brought him to his house. And he told Laban all these things.

14 And Laban said to him, ^aSurely thou ^aart my bone and my flesh: and he abode with him ^athe space of a month.

15 ^aAnd Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou ^aart my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought? tell me, what ^ashall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder ^awas Leah, and the name of the younger ^awas Rachel.

17 Leah ^awas tender-eyed, but Rachel was beautiful and well-favoured.

18 And Jacob loved Rachel; and said, ^aI will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban said, ^aIt is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob 'served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.

21 ¶ And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife (for my days are fulfilled) that I may go in unto her.

22 And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and made a feast.

23 And it came to pass in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him; and he went in unto her.

24 And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah, Zilpah his maid, for an handmaid.

25 And it came to pass, that in the morning, behold, it was Leah: and he said to Laban, What is this thou hast done unto me? did not I serve with thee for Rachel? wherefore then hast thou beguiled me?

26 And Laban said, It must not be so done in our country, † to give the younger before the first-born.

27 'Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years.

28 And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also.

29 And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter, Bilhah his handmaid, to be her maid.

30 And he went in also unto Rachel, and he loved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him yet seven other years.

31 ¶ And when the LORD saw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb: but Rachel was barren.

32 And Leah conceived, and bare a son; and she called his name || Reuben: for she said, Surely the LORD hath 'looked upon my affliction; now therefore my husband will love me.

33 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Because the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this son also: and she called his name || Simeon.

34 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Now this time will my husband be joined unto me, because I have borne him three sons: therefore was his name called || Levi.

35 And she conceived again, and bare a son: and she said, Now will I praise the LORD: therefore she called his name || Judah, and † left bearing.

CHAP. XXX.

1 Rachel's grief for her barrenness. 5 Bilhah beareth Dan and Naphtali. 9 Leah beareth Gad and Asher. 14 Reuben findeth mandrakes. 17 Leah beareth Issachar, Zebulun, and Dinah. 22 Rachel beareth Joseph. 25 Jacob desireth to depart. 37 His policy, whereby he becometh rich.

AND when Rachel saw that she bare Jacob no children, Rachel envied her sister; and said unto Jacob, Give me children, or else I die.

2 And Jacob's anger was kindled against Rachel; and he said, Am I in God's stead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?

3 And she said, Behold my maid Bilhah, go in unto her; 'and she shall bear upon my knees, 'that I may also † have children by her.

4 And she gave him Bilhah her handmaid 'to wife: and Jacob went in unto her.

5 And Bilhah conceived, and bare Jacob a son.

6 And Rachel said, God hath 'judged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son: therefore called she his name || Dan.

7 And Bilhah, Rachel's maid, conceived again, and bare Jacob a second son.

8 And Rachel said, With † great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and I have prevailed: and she called his name || Naphtali.

9 When Leah saw that she had left bearing, she took Zilpah, her maid, and 'gave her Jacob to wife.

10 And Zilpah, Leah's maid, bare Jacob a son.

11 And Leah said, A troop cometh: and she called his name || Gad.

12 And Zilpah, Leah's maid, bare Jacob a second son.

13 And Leah said, † Happy am I, for the daughters 'will call me blessed: and she called his name || Asher.

14 ¶ And Reuben went in the days of wheat-harvest, and found mandrakes in the field, and brought them unto his mother Leah. Then Rachel said to Leah, 'Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes.

15 And she said unto her, 'Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? and wouldest thou take away my son's mandrakes also? And Rachel said, Therefore he shall lie with thee to-night for thy son's mandrakes.

16 And Jacob came out of the field in the evening, and Leah went out to meet him, and said, Thou must come in unto me; for surely I have hired thee with my son's mandrakes. And he lay with her that night.

17 And God hearkened unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare Jacob the fifth son.

18 And Leah said, God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband: and she called his name || Issachar.

19 And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the sixth son.

20 And Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry; now will my husband dwell with me, because I have borne him six sons: and she called his name || Zebulun.

21 And afterwards she bare a daughter, and called her name || Dinah.

22 ¶ And God 'remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, and 'opened her womb.

23 And she conceived, and bare a son; and said, God hath taken away 'my reproach:

24 And she called his name || Joseph; and said, 'The LORD shall add to me another son.

25 ¶ And it came to pass, when Rachel had borne Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, 'Send me away, that I may go unto 'mine own place, and to my country.

26 Give me my wives and my children, 'for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for thou knowest my service which I have done thee.

27 And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have found favour in thine eyes, tarry: for 'I have learned by experience that the LORD hath blessed me 'for thy sake.

28 And he said, 'Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

29 And he said unto him, 'Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now † increased unto a multitude; and the LORD hath blessed thee † since my coming: and now, when shall I 'provide for mine own house also?

31 And he said, What shall I give thee? And Jacob said, Thou shalt not give me any thing. If thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock :

32 I will pass through all thy flock to-day, removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats : and of such shall be my hire.

33 So shall my righteousness answer for me [†]in time to come, when it shall come for my hire before thy face : every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

34 And Laban said, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

35 And he removed that day the he-goats that were ring-streaked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into the hands of his sons.

36 And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob : and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks.

37 ¶ And [¶]Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chesnut-tree ; and pilled white streaks in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering-troughs when the flocks came to drink ; that they should conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks conceived before the rods, and brought forth cattle ring-streaked, speckled, and spotted.

40 And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ring-streaked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban : and he put his own flocks by themselves, and put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to pass whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in : so the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's.

43 And the man ^hincreased exceedingly, and ^hhad much cattle, and maid-servants, and men-servants, and camels, and asses.

AND he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's ; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this ^gglory.

2 And Jacob beheld ^bthe countenance of Laban, and behold, it was not toward him [†]as before.

3 And the LORD said unto Jacob, [¶]"Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred ; and I will be with thee.

4 And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock,

5 And said unto them, [¶]"I see your father's countenance, that it is not toward me as before : but the God of my father ^hhath been with me.

7 And your father hath deceived me, and ^hchanged my wages [†]ten times : but God ^hsuffered him not to hurt me.

8 If he said thus, [¶]"The speckled shall be thy wages ; then all the cattle bare speckled : and if he said thus, The ring-streaked shall be thy hire ; then bare all the cattle ring-streaked.

9 Thus God hath [¶]taken away the cattle of your father, and given them to me.

10 And it came to pass at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and saw in a dream, and behold, the [¶]rams which leaped upon the cattle were ring-streaked, speckled, and grizzled.

11 And [¶]the angel of God spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob : And I said, Here am I.

12 And he said, Lift up now thine eyes and see, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ring-streaked, speckled, and grizzled : for [¶]"I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee.

13 I am the God of Beth-el, [¶]"where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto me : now [¶]arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred.

14 And Rachel and Leah answered, and said unto him, [¶]"Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house ?

15 Are we not counted of him strangers ? for [¶]he hath sold us, and hath quite devoured also our money.

16 For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that is ours, and our children's : now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do.

17 ¶ Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives upon camels ;

18 And he carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram ; for to go to Isaac his father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to shear his sheep : and Rachel had stolen the [†]images that were her father's.

20 And Jacob stole away [†]unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had ; and he rose up, and passed over the river, and [¶]set his face toward the mount Gilead.

22 And it was told Laban on the third day, that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took [¶]his brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days' journey : and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.

24 And God [¶]came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night, and said unto him, Take heed that thou [¶]speak not to Jacob [†]either good or bad.

25 ¶ Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mount : and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban said to Jacob, What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and [¶]carried away my daughters, as captives taken with the sword ?

27 Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and [†]steal away from me, and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and with songs, with tabret, and with harp ?

28 And hast not suffered me [¶]to kiss my sons, and my daughters ? [¶]thou hast now done foolishly in so doing.

29 It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt : but the [¶]God of your father spake unto me [¶]yesternight, saying, Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now, though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house; yet wherefore hast thou 'stolen my gods?

31 And Jacob answered and said to Laban, Because I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, 'let him not live: before our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee: for Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maid-servants' tents; but he found them not. Then he went out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

34 Now Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them. And Laban *†*searched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot 'rise up before thee; for the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not the images.

36 ¶ And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob answered, and said to Laban, What is my trespass? what is my sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued after me?

37 Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household-stuff? set it here before my brethren, and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both.

38 This twenty years have I been with thee; thy ewes and thy she-goats have not cast their young, and the rams of thy flock have I not eaten.

39 'That which was torn of beasts, I brought not unto thee; I bare the loss of it; of 'my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, or stolen by night.

40 Thus I was; in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night; and my sleep departed from mine eyes.

41 Thus have I been twenty years in thy house: I 'served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle: and 'thou hast changed my wages ten times.

42 'Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and 'the Fear of Isaac had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. 'God hath seen mine affliction, and the labour of my hands, and 'rebuked thee yesternight.

43 ¶ And Laban answered, and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine; and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have borne?

44 Now therefore come thou, 'let us make a covenant, I and thou; 'and let it be for a witness between me and thee.

45 And Jacob 'took a stone, and set it up for a pillar.

46 And Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones, and made an heap: and they did eat there upon the heap.

47 And Laban called it *¶*Jegar-sahadutha: but Jacob called it *¶*Galeed:

48 And Laban said, "This heap is a witness between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed:

49 And *"¶*Mizpah; for he said, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.

50 If thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou shalt take other wives besides my daughters; no man is with us; see, God is witness betwixt me and thee.

51 And Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee;

52 This heap be witness, and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over this heap to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over this heap and this pillar unto me, for harm.

53 The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their father, 'judge betwixt us. And Jacob 'sware by "the Fear of his father Isaac.

54 Then Jacob *¶*offered sacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread: and they did eat bread, and tarried all night in the mount.

55 And early in the morning Laban rose up, and kissed his sons and his daughters, and 'blessed them: and Laban departed, and 'returned unto his place.

CHAP. XXXII.

3 Jacob's message to Esau. 9 He prayeth for his deliverance. 13 He sendeth a present to Esau. 24 He wrestleth with an angel at Peniel, where he is called Israel. 31 He halteth.

AND Jacob went on his way, and "the angels of God met him.

2 And when Jacob saw them, he said, This is God's 'host: and he called the name of that place *¶*Mahanaim.

3 And Jacob sent messengers before him to Esau his brother, 'unto the land of Seir, "the *†*country of Edom.

4 And he commanded them, saying, 'Thus shall ye speak unto my lord Esau; Thy servant Jacob saith thus, I have sojourned with Laban, and stayed there until now:

5 And 'I have oxen, and asses, flocks, and men-servants, and women-servants: and I have sent to tell my lord, that 'I may find grace in thy sight.

6 ¶ And the messengers returned to Jacob, saying, We came to thy brother Esau, and also 'he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him.

7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid, and 'distressed: and he divided the people that was with him, and the flocks, and herds, and the camels into two bands;

8 And said, If Esau come to the one company, and smite it, then the other company which is left shall escape.

9 ¶ "And Jacob said, O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac, the LORD "which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

10 *†*I am not worthy of the least of all the *"mer-*cies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant: for with 'my staff have I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands.

11 'Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and "the mother *†*with the children.

12 And 'thou saidst, I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 ¶ And he lodged there that same night, and took of that which came to his hand ^a a present for Esau his brother;

14 Two hundred she-goats and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes and twenty rams, 15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine and ten bulls, twenty she-asses and ten foals.

16 And he delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by themselves; and said unto his servants, Pass over before me, and put a space betwixt drove and drove.

17 And he commanded the foremost, saying, When Esau my brother meeteth thee, and asketh thee, saying, Whose art thou? and whither goest thou? and whose are these before thee?

18 Then thou shalt say, They be thy servant Jacob's: it is a present sent unto my lord Esau: and behold also he is behind us.

19 And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the drives, saying, On this manner shall ye speak unto Esau, when ye find him.

20 And say ye moreover, Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us. For he said, I will ^a appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept [†] of me.

21 So went the present over before him; and himself lodged that night in the company.

22 And he rose up that night, and took his two wives, and his two women-servants, and his eleven sons, ^a and passed over the ford Jabbok.

23 And he took them, and [†] sent them over the brook, and sent over that he had.

24 ¶ And Jacob was left alone; and there ^a wrestled a man with him, until the [†] breaking of the day.

25 And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh: and ^a the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him.

26 And ^a he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh: and he said, ^a I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

27 And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

28 And he said, ^a Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but ^a Israel: for as a prince hast thou ^a power with God, and ^a with men, and hast prevailed.

29 And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name: and he said, ^a Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.

30 And Jacob called the name of the place ^a Peniel: for ^a I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

31 And as he passed over Peniel, the sun rose upon him, and he halted upon his thigh.

32 Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day; because he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh in the sinew that shrank.

2 And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindmost.

3 And he passed over before them, and ^a bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother.

4 ^a And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, ^a and fell on his neck, and kissed him: and they wept.

5 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children, and said, Who are those [†] with thee? And he said, The children ^a which God hath graciously given thy servant.

6 Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves.

7 And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves; and after came Joseph near and Rachel, and they bowed themselves.

8 And he said, [†] What meanest thou by ^a all this drove which I met? And he said, These are ^a to find grace in the sight of my lord.

9 And Esau said, I have enough, my brother; [†] keep that thou hast unto thyself.

10 And Jacob said, Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy sight, then receive my present at my hand: for therefore I ^a have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me.

11 Take, I pray thee, ^a my blessing that is brought to thee; because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have [†] enough: ^a and he urged him, and he took it.

12 And he said, Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go before thee.

13 And he said unto him, My lord knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me, and if men should overdrive them one day, all the flock will die.

14 Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant: and I will lead on softly, according [†] as the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure; until I come unto my lord ^a unto Seir.

15 And Esau said, Let me now [†] leave with thee some of the folk that are with me: And he said, [†] What needeth it? ^a Let me find grace in the sight of my lord.

16 ¶ So Esau returned that day on his way unto Seir.

17 And Jacob journeyed to ^a Succoth, and built him an house, and made booths for his cattle: therefore the name of the place is called ^a Succoth.

18 ¶ And Jacob came to ^a Shalem, a city of ^a Shechem, which is in the land of Canaan, when he came from Padan-aram; and pitched his tent before the city.

19 And ^a he bought a parcel of a field, where he had spread his tent, at the hand of the children of ^a Hamor, Shechem's father, for an hundred ^a pieces of money.

20 And he erected there an altar, and ^a called it ^a El-Elohe-Israel.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1 Dinah is ravished by Shechem. 4 He sueth to marry her. 13 The sons of Jacob offer the condition of circumcision to the Shechemites. 30 Jacob reproveth Simeon and Levi.

AND ^a Dinah the daughter of Leah, which she ^a bare unto Jacob, ^a went out to see the daughters of the land.

2 And when Shechem the son of Hamor the Hivite, prince of the country, ^a saw her, he ^a took her, and lay with her, and [†] defiled her.

3 And his soul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob, and he loved the damsel, and spake †kindly unto the damsel.

4 And Shechem 'spake unto his father Hamor, saying, Get me this damsel to wife.

5 And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his daughter: (now his sons were with his cattle in the field: and Jacob 'held his peace until they were come.)

6 ¶ And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob to commune with him.

7 And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were grieved, and they 'were very wroth, because he 'had wrought folly in Israel, in lying with Jacob's daughter; 'which thing ought not to be done.

8 And Hamor communed with them, saying, The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

9 And make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you.

10 And ye shall dwell with us: and ^kthe land shall be before you; dwell and 'trade ye therein, and ^mget you possessions therein.

11 And Shechem said unto her father, and unto her brethren, Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me, I will give.

12 Ask me never so much 'dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife.

13 And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father 'deceitfully, and said, Because he had defiled Dinah their sister:

14 And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is uncircumcised: for ⁿthat were a reproach unto us:

15 But in this will we consent unto you: If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumcised;

16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if ye will not hearken unto us, to be circumcised; then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

18 And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem, Hamor's son.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, because he had delight in Jacob's daughter: and he was 'more honorable than all the house of his father.

20 ¶ And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, 21 These men are peaceable with us, therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein: for the land, behold, it is large enough for them: let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only herein will the men consent unto us for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumcised, as they are circumcised.

23 Shall not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of theirs be ours? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor, and unto Shechem his son, hearkened all that 'went out of the gate of his city: and every male was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day, when they were sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, 26 And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the †edge of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out.

27 The sons of Jacob came upon the slain, and spoiled the city; because they had defiled their sister.

28 They took their sheep, and their oxen, and their asses, and that which was in the city, and that which was in the field.

29 And all their wealth and all their little ones, and their wives took they captive, and spoiled even all that was in the house.

30 And Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, 'Ye have 'troubled me 'to make me to stink among the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites, and the Perizzites: 'and I being few in number, they shall gather themselves together against me, and slay me, and I shall be destroyed, I and my house.

31 And they said, Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?

CHAP. XXXV.

1 God sendeth Jacob to Beth-el. 2 He purgeth his house of Idols. 9 God blesseth Jacob at Beth-el. 16 Rachel travaileth of Benjamin, and dieth in the way to Edar. 23 The sons of Jacob. 28 The age, death, and burial of Isaac.

AND God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to 'Beth-el, and dwell there: and make there an altar unto God, 'that appeared unto thee 'when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother.

2 Then Jacob said unto his 'household, and to all that were with him, Put away 'the strange gods that are among you, and 'be clean and change your garments:

3 And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I will make there an altar unto God, 'who answered me in the day of my distress, 'and was with me in the way which I went.

4 And they gave unto Jacob all the strange gods which were in their hand, and all their 'ear-rings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under 'the oak which was by Shechem.

5 And they journeyed: and 'the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, and they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob.

6 ¶ So Jacob came to 'Luz, which is in the land of Canaan (that is Beth-el), he and all the people that were with him.

7 And he 'built there an altar, and called the place 'El-beth-el; because 'there God appeared unto him, when he fled from the face of his brother.

8 But 'Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died, and she was buried beneath Beth-el, under an oak: and the name of it was called 'Allon-bachuth.

9 ¶ And 'God appeared unto Jacob again when he came out of Padan-aram; and blessed him.

10 And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: 'thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, 'but Israel shall be thy name; and he called his name Israel.

11 And God said unto him, 'I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; 'a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins.

12 And the land 'which I gave Abraham and Isaac, to thee I will give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land.

13 And God 'went up from him, in the place where he talked with him.

14 And Jacob ^{set up} a pillar in the place where he talked with him, even a pillar of stone: and he poured a drink-offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon.

15 And Jacob called the name of the place where God spake with him, ^{Beth-el}.

16 ¶ And they journeyed from Beth-el; and there was but [†] a little way to come to Ephrath: and Rachel travailed, and she had hard labour.

17 And it came to pass when she was in hard labour, that the midwife said unto her, Fear not; ^{thou shalt have this son also}.

18 And it came to pass as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name ^{Ben-oni}: but his father called him ^{Benjamin}.

19 And ^{Rachel} died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem.

20 And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave ^{unto this day}.

21 ¶ And Israel journeyed, and spread his tent beyond the tower of Edar.

22 And it came to pass, when Israel dwelt in that land, that Reuben went and lay with Bilhah his father's concubine: and Israel heard it. Now the sons of Jacob were twelve:

23 The sons of Leah; ^{Reuben}, Jacob's first-born, and Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulun:

24 The sons of Rachel; Joseph, and Benjamin:

25 And the sons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid; Dan, and Naphtali:

26 And the sons of Zilpah, Leah's hand-maid; Gad, and Asher. These are the sons of Jacob, which were born to him in Padan-aram.

27 ¶ And Jacob came unto Isaac his father unto ^{Mamre}, unto the ^{city} of Arbah (which is Hebron) where Abraham and Isaac sojourned.

28 And the days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore years.

29 And Isaac gave up the ghost and died, and ^{was gathered unto his people}, being old and full of days; and ^{his sons} Esau and Jacob buried him.

3 And ^{Bashemath}, Ishmael's daughter, sister of Nebajoth.

4 And ^{Adah} bare to Esau, Eliphaz; and ^{Bashemath} bare Reuel;

5 And Aholibamah bare Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah: these are the sons of Esau, which were born unto him in the land of Canaan.

6 And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the [†] persons of his house, and his cattle, and all his beasts, and all his substance which he had got in the land of Canaan; and went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob.

7 ^{For} their riches were more than that they might dwell together: and ^{the} land wherein they were strangers could not bear them, because of their cattle.

8 Thus dwelt Esau in ^{mount Seir}: Esau is Edom.

9 ¶ And these are the generations of Esau the father of the [†] Edomites, in mount Seir:

10 These are the names of Esau's sons; ^{Eliphaz} the son of Adah the wife of Esau; Reuel the son of ^{Bashemath} the wife of Esau.

11 And the sons of Eliphaz were, Teman, Omar, ^{Zepho}, and Gatam, and Kenaz.

12 And Timna was concubine to Eliphaz, Esau's son; and she bare to Eliphaz, ^{Amalek}: these were the sons of Adah, Esau's wife.

13 And these are the sons of Reuel; Nahath, and Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah: these were the sons of ^{Bashemath}, Esau's wife.

14 ¶ And these were the sons of Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon, Esau's wife: and she bare to Esau, Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

15 ¶ These were dukes of the sons of Esau: the sons of Eliphaz, the first-born son of Esau; duke Teman, duke Omar, duke Zepho, duke Kenaz, 16 Duke Korah, duke Gatam, and duke Amalek: these are the dukes that came of Eliphaz, in the land of Edom: these were the sons of Adah.

17 ¶ And these are the sons of Reuel, Esau's son; duke Nahath, duke Zerah, duke Shammah, duke Mizzah: these are the dukes that came of Reuel, in the land of Edom: these are the sons of ^{Bashemath}, Esau's wife.

18 ¶ And these are the sons of Aholibamah, Esau's wife; duke Jeush, duke Jaalam, duke Korah: these were the dukes that came of Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, Esau's wife.

19 These are the sons of Esau (who is Edom) and these are their dukes.

20 ¶ ^{These} are the sons of Seir ^{the} Horite, who inhabited the land; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, 21 And Dishon, and Ezer, and Dishan: these are the dukes of the Horites, the children of Seir in the land of Edom.

22 And the children of Lotan were Hori, and ^{Heman}: and Lotan's sister was Timna.

23 And the children of Shobal were these; ^{Alvan}, and Manahath, and Ebal, ^{Shepho}, and Onam.

24 And these are the children of Zibeon; both Ajah, and Anah: this was that Anah that found ^{the} mules in the wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father.

25 And the children of Anah were these; Dishon, and Aholibamah the daughter of Anah.

26 And these are the children of Dishon; ^{Hemdan}, and Eshban, and Ithran, and Cheran.

27 The children of Ezer are these; Bilhan, and Zaavan, and ^{Akan}.

28 The children of Dishan are these; Uz, and Aran.

29 These are the dukes that came of the Horites; duke Lotan, duke Shobal, duke Zibeon, duke Anah, 30 Duke Dishon, duke Ezer, duke Dishan: these are the dukes that came of Hori, among their dukes in the land of Seir.

31 ¶ And ^{these} are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel.

32 And Bela the son of Beor reigned in Edom: and the name of his city was Dinhabah.

33 And Bela died, and Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead.

34 And Jobab died, and Husham of the land of Temani reigned in his stead.

35 And Husham died, and Hadad the son of Bedad (who smote Midian in the field of Moab) reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith.

36 And Hadad died, and Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead.

37 And Samlah died, and Saul of Rehoboth by the river reigned in his stead.

38 And Saul died, and Baal-hanan the son of Achbor reigned in his stead.

39 And Baal-hanan the son of Achbor died, and [†]Hadar reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Pau; and his wife's name was Mehetabel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab.

2 Joseph is hated of his brethren. 5 His two dreams. 18 His brethren conspire his death. 21 Reuben saveth him. 26 They sell him to the Ishmaelites. 36 He is sold to Potiphar in Egypt.

AND Jacob dwelt in the land [†]wherein his father was a stranger, in the land of Canaan.

2 These are the generations of Jacob: Joseph being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren, and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah, and with the sons of Zilpah, his father's wives: and Joseph brought unto his father [†]their evil report.

3 Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was [†]the son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many ^{||}colours.

4 And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they [†]hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.

5 [†]And Joseph dreamed a dream, and he told it his brethren: and they hated him yet the more.

6 And he said unto them, Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed:

7 For [†]behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf.

8 And his brethren said to him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams and for his words.

9 [†]And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more: and behold, [†]the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me.

10 And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I and thy mother and [†]thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?

11 And [†]his brethren envied him; but his father [†]observed the saying.

12 [†]And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem.

13 And Israel said unto Joseph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? Come, and I will send thee unto them. And he said to him, Here am I.

14 And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, [†]see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of [†]Hebron, and he came to Shechem.

15 [†]And a certain man found him, and behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, What seekest thou?

16 And he said, I seek my brethren: [†]tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks.

17 And the man said, They are departed hence: for I heard them say, Let us go to Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in [†]Dothan.

18 And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, [†]they conspired against him to slay him.

19 And they said one to another, Behold this [†]dreamer cometh.

20 [†]Come now therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit; and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him; and we shall see what will become of his dreams.

21 And [†]Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

23 [†]And it came to pass when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they stript Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many ^{||}colours that was on him.

24 And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 [†]And they sat down to eat bread: and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and behold, a company of [†]Ishmaelites came from Gilead, with their camels bearing spicery, and [†]balm, and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah said unto his brethren, What profit is it if we slay our brother, and [†]conceal his blood?

27 Come, and let us sell him to the Ishmaelites, and [†]let not our hand be upon him; for he is [†]our brother, and [†]our flesh: and his brethren [†]were content.

28 Then there passed by [†]Midianites, merchantmen; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, and sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites for [†]twenty pieces of silver: and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

29 [†]And Reuben returned unto the pit; and behold, Joseph was not in the pit: and he [†]rent his clothes.

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and said, The child [†]is not: and I, whither shall I go?

31 And they took [†]Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood:

32 And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no.

33 And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat; an [†]evil beast hath devoured him: Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces.

34 And Jacob [†]rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days.

35 And all his sons and all his daughters [†]rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted, and he said, For [†]I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him.

6 Er marrieth Tamar. 13 She deceiveth Judah. 27 She beareth twins, Pharez and Zarah.

AND it came to pass at that time, that Judah went down from his brethren, and turned in to a certain Adullamite, whose name was Hirah.

2 And Judah saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was Shuah; and he took her, and went in unto her.

3 And she conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name Er.

4 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name Onan.

5 And she yet again conceived and bare a son; and called his name Shelah: and he was at Chezib, when she bare him.

6 And Judah took a wife for Er his first-born, whose name was Tamar.

7 And Er, Judah's first-born, was wicked in the sight of the LORD; and the LORD slew him.

8 And Judah said unto Onan, Go in unto thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother.

9 And Onan knew that the seed should not be his: and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, lest that he should give seed to his brother.

10 And the thing which he did displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew him also.

11 Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter-in-law, Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shelah my son be grown; (for he said, Lest peradventure he die also as his brethren did:) and Tamar went and dwelt in her father's house.

12 And in process of time, the daughter of Shuah, Judah's wife, died: and Judah was comforted, and went up unto his sheep-shearers to Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite.

13 And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold, thy father-in-law goeth up to Timnath, to shear his sheep.

14 And she put her widow's garments off from her, and covered her with a vail, and wrapped herself, and sat in an open place, which is by the way to Timnath: for she saw that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot: because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee; (for he knew not that she was his daughter-in-law:) and she said, What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, I will send thee a kid from the flock: and she said, Wilt thou give me a pledge, till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thy hand: and he gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him.

19 And she arose and went away and laid by her vail from her, and put on the garments of her widowhood.

20 And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand: but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying,

Where is the harlot that was openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest we be shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter-in-law hath played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom. And Judah said, Bring her forth, and let her be burnt.

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, By the man whose these are, am I with child: and she said, Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, the signet, and bracelets, and staff.

26 And Judah acknowledged them, and said, She hath been more righteous than I; because that I gave her not to Shelah my son: and he knew her again no more.

27 And it came to pass in the time of her travail, that behold, twins were in her womb.

28 And it came to pass when she travailed, that the one put out his hand; and the midwife took and bound upon his hand a scarlet thread, saying, this came out first.

29 And it came to pass as he drew back his hand, that behold, his brother came out; and she said, How hast thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee: therefore his name was called Pharez.

30 And afterward came out his brother that had the scarlet thread upon his hand; and his name was called Zarah.

CHAP. XXXIX.

1 Joseph advanced in Potiphar's house. 7 He resisteth his mistress's temptation. 20 He is cast into prison.

AND Joseph was brought down to Egypt: and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Ishmaelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And the LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man: and he was in the house of his master the Egyptian.

3 And his master saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD made all that he did to prosper in his hand.

4 And Joseph found grace in his sight, and he served him: and he made him overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand.

5 And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field.

6 And he left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not aught he had, save the bread which he did eat: and Joseph was a goodly person, and well-favoured.

7 And it came to pass after these things, that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph: and she said, Lie with me.

8 But he refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand;

9 There is none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me, but thee, because thou art his wife: how then can I do this great wickedness, and 'sin against God?

10 And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her.

11 And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was none of the men of the house there within.

12 And she caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth,

14 That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to mock us: he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a loud voice:

15 And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And she laid up his garment by her, until his lord came home.

17 And she spake unto him according to these words, saying, The Hebrew servant which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me:

18 And it came to pass as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out.

19 And it came to pass, when his master heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that his wrath was kindled.

20 And Joseph's master took him, and put him into the prison, a place where the king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison.

21 But the LORD was with Joseph, and shewed him mercy, and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison.

22 And the keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did there, he was the doer of it.

23 The keeper of the prison looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because the LORD was with him: and that which he did, the LORD made it to prosper.

CHAP. XL.

1 The butler and baker of Pharaoh in prison. 5 He interpreteth their dreams. 23 The ingratitude of the butler.

AND it came to pass after these things, that the butler of the king of Egypt and his baker had offended their lord the king of Egypt.

2 And Pharaoh was wroth against two of his officers, against the chief of the butlers, and against the chief of the bakers.

3 And he put them in ward in the house of the captain of the guard, into the prison, the place where Joseph was bound.

4 And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them; and they continued a season in ward.

5 And they dreamed a dream both of them, each man his dream in one night, each man according to the interpretation of his dream; the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, which were bound in the prison.

6 And Joseph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, and behold, they were sad.

him in the ward of his lord's house, saying, Wherefore look ye so sadly to-day?

8 And they said unto him, We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joseph said unto them, Do not interpretations belong to God? Tell me them, I pray you.

9 And the chief butler told his dream to Joseph, and said unto him, In my dream, behold, a vine was before me;

10 And in the vine were three branches: and it was as though it budded, and her blossoms shot forth; and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes:

11 And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand.

12 And Joseph said unto him, This is the interpretation of it: The three branches are three days:

13 Yet within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thy head, and restore thee unto thy place: and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler.

14 But think on me when it shall be well with thee, and shew kindness, I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house:

15 For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews: and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon.

16 When the chief baker saw that the interpretation was good, he said unto Joseph, I also was in my dream, and behold, I had three white baskets on my head:

17 And in the uppermost basket there was of all manner of bake-meats for Pharaoh: and the birds did eat them out of the basket upon my head.

18 And Joseph answered, and said, This is the interpretation thereof: The three baskets are three days:

19 Yet within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thy head from off thee, and shall hang thee on a tree; and the birds shall eat thy flesh from off thee.

20 And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's birth-day, that he made a feast unto all his servants: and he lifted up the head of the chief butler and of the chief baker among his servants.

21 And he restored the chief butler unto his butler-ship again; and he gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand:

22 But he hanged the chief baker, as Joseph had interpreted to them.

23 Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgat him.

CHAP. XLI.

1 Pharaoh's two dreams. 25 Joseph interpreteth them. 33 He giveth Pharaoh counsel. 38 Joseph is advanced. 50 He begetteth Manasseh and Ephraim. 54 The famine beginneth.

AND it came to pass at the end of two full years, that Pharaoh dreamed: and behold, he stood by the river.

2 And behold, there came up out of the river seven well-favoured kine and fat-fleshed; and they fed in a meadow.

3 And behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed; and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river.

4 And the ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

5 And he slept and dreamed the second time: and behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, [†]frank and good.

6 And behold, seven thin ears and blasted with the east wind sprung up after them.

7 And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and behold, it was a dream.

8 And it came to pass in the morning, [†]that his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all [†]the magicians of Egypt, and all the [†]wise men thereof: and Pharaoh told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

9 ¶ Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, I do remember my faults this day:

10 Pharaoh was [†]wroth with his servants, [†]and put me in ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me, and the chief baker:

11 And [†]we dreamed a dream in one night, I and he: we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, [†]servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he [†]interpreted to us our dreams; to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

13 And it came to pass, [†]as he interpreted to us, so it was: me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 ¶ Then Pharaoh sent and called Joseph, and they [†]brought him hastily [†]out of the dungeon: and he shaved himself, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

15 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: [†]and I have heard say of thee, that [†]thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.

16 And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, [†]It is not in me: [†]God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, [†]In my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the river:

18 And behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, fat-fleshed, and well-favoured; and they fed in a meadow:

19 And behold, seven other kine came up after them, poor, and very ill-favoured, and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness:

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine:

21 And when they had [†]eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were still ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I saw in my dream, and behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good:

23 And behold, seven ears, [†]withered, thin, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them:

24 And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears: and [†]I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

25 ¶ And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: [†]God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to do.

26 The seven good kine are seven years; and the seven good ears are seven years: the dream is one.

27 And the seven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them are seven years; and the seven empty ears blasted with the east wind shall be [†]seven years of famine.

28 ¶ This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: what God is about to do he sheweth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, there come [†]seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt:

30 And there shall [†]arise after them seven years of famine; and all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt; and the famine [†]shall consume the land:

31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following: for it shall be very [†]grievous.

32 And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice; it is because the [†]thing is [†]established by God, [†]and God will shortly bring it to pass.

33 Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt.

34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint [†]officers over the land, and [†]take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years.

35 And [†]let them gather all the food of those good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh; and let them keep food in the cities.

36 And that food shall be for store to the land against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; that the land [†]perish not through the famine.

37 ¶ And [†]the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants.

38 And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man [†]in whom the spirit of God is?

39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art:

40 ¶ Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people [†]be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou.

41 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have [†]set thee over all the land of Egypt.

42 And Pharaoh [†]took off his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and [†]arrayed him in vestures of [†]fine linen, [†]and put a gold chain about his neck;

43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had: [†]and they cried before him, [†]¶ Bow the knee: and he made him ruler [†]over all the land of Egypt.

44 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name [†]Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah [†]priest of On: and Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.

46 ¶ And Joseph was thirty years old when he [†]stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt: and Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

47 And in the seven plenteous years the earth brought forth by handfuls.

48 And he gathered up all the food of the seven years which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field which was round about every city, laid he up in the same.

49 And Joseph gathered corn [†]as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering; for it was without number.

50 And unto Joseph were born two sons before the years of famine came: which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah $\parallel$ priest of On bare unto him.

51 And Joseph called the name of the first-born $\parallel$ Manasseh; For God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house.

52 And the name of the second called he $\parallel$ Ephraim: For God hath caused me to be fruitful in the land of my affliction.

53 And the seven years of plenteousness that was in the land of Egypt, were ended.

54 And the seven years of dearth began to come, according as Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.

55 And when all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do.

56 And the famine was over all the face of the earth: and Joseph opened $\dagger$ all the store-houses, and sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt.

57 And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn; because that the famine was so sore in all lands.

CHAP. XLII.

1 Jacob sendeth his ten sons to buy corn in Egypt. 16 They are imprisoned by Joseph for spies. 24 Simeon is kept for a pledge. 36 Jacob refuseth to send Benjamin.

NOW when Jacob saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Wry do ye look one upon another?

2 And he said, Behold I have heard that there is corn in Egypt: get you down thither, and buy for us from thence; that we may live, and not die.

3 And Joseph's ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt.

4 But Benjamin, Joseph's brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren: for he said, Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

5 And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: for the famine was in the land of Canaan.

6 And Joseph was the governor over the land, and he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth.

7 And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake $\dagger$ roughly unto them; and he said unto them, Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him.

9 And Joseph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

10 And they said unto him, Nay, my lord, but to buy food are thy servants come.

11 We are all one man's sons; we are true men; thy servants are no spies.

12 And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

13 And they said, Thy servants are twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Canaan:

and behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one is not.

14 And Joseph said unto them, That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies:

15 Hereby ye shall be proved: By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be $\dagger$ kept in prison, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else, by the life of Pharaoh, surely ye are spies.

17 And he $\dagger$ put them all together into ward three days.

18 And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live; for I fear God:

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the house of your prison: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houses:

20 But bring your youngest brother unto me; so shall your words be verified, and ye shall not die. And they did so.

21 And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.

22 And Reuben answered them, saying, Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore behold also his blood is required.

23 And they knew not that Joseph understood them; for $\dagger$ he spake unto them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himself about from them, and wept; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's money into his sack, and to give them provision for the way: and thus did he unto them.

26 And they laded their asses with the corn, and departed thence.

27 And as one of them opened his sack to give his ass provender in the inn, he espied his money: for behold, it was in his sack's mouth.

28 And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored; and lo, it is even in my sack: and their heart $\dagger$ failed them, and they were afraid, saying one to another, What is this that God hath done unto us?

29 And they came unto Jacob their father unto the land of Canaan, and told him all that befell unto them, saying, 30 The man who is the lord of the land, spake $\dagger$ roughly to us, and took us for spies of the country.

31 And we said unto him, We are true men; we are no spies:

32 We be twelve brethren, sons of our father: one is not, and the youngest is this day with our father in the land of Canaan.

33 And the man, the lord of the country, said unto us, Hereby shall I know that ye are true men: leave one of your brethren here with me, and take food for the famine of your households, and be gone:

34 And bring your youngest brother unto me: then shall I know that ye are no spies, but that ye are true men: so will I deliver you your brother, and ye shall traffick in the land.

35 And it came to pass as they emptied their sacks, that behold, "every man's bundle of money was in his sack; and when both they and their father saw the bundles of money, they were afraid.

36 And Jacob their father said unto them; Me have ye ^{bereaved of my children}: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me.

37 And Reuben spake unto his father, saying, Slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee: deliver him into my hand, and I will bring him to thee again.

38 And he said, My son shall not go down with you; for ^{his} brother is dead, and he is left alone: "if mischief befall him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye ^{bring down} my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

CHAP. XLIII.

1 Jacob is hardly persuaded to send Benjamin. 15 Joseph entertaineth his brethren. 31 He maketh them a feast.

AND the famine was "sore in the land.

2 And it came to pass, when they had eaten up the corn which they had brought out of Egypt, their father said unto them, Go again, buy us a little food.

3 And Judah spake unto him, saying, The man ^{did} solemnly protest unto us, saying, Ye shall not see my face, except your ^{brother} be with you.

4 If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food:

5 But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down: for the man said unto us, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you.

6 And Israel said, Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, as to tell the man whether ye had yet a brother?

7 And they said, The man ^{tasked} us straitly of our state, and of our kindred, saying, Is your father yet alive? have ye another brother? and we told him according to the ^{tenor} of these words: ^{Could} we certainly know that he would say, Bring your brother down?

8 And Judah said unto Israel his father, Send the lad with me, and we will arise and go; that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, and also our little ones.

9 I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him: "if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever:

10 For except we had lingered, surely now we had returned ^{this} second time.

11 And their father Israel said unto them, If it must be so now, do this; take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and ^{carry down} the man a present, a little ^{balm}, and a little honey, spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds:

12 And take double money in your hand; and the money ^{that was brought again} in the mouth of your sacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an oversight:

13 Take also your brother, and arise, go again unto the man:

14 And God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin: ^{If I be bereaved of my children}, I am bereaved.

15 ¶ And the men took that present, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin; and rose up, and went down to Egypt, and stood before Joseph.

16 And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them, he said to the ^{ruler} of his house, Bring these men home, and [†]slay, and make ready: for these men shall [†]dine with me at noon.

17 And the man did as Joseph bade: and the man brought the men into Joseph's house.

18 And the men were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house; and they said, Because of the money that was returned in our sacks at the first time, are we brought in; that he may [†]seek occasion against us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our asses.

19 And they came near to the steward of Joseph's house, and they communed with him at the door of the house,

20 And said, O sir, [†]we came indeed down at the first time to buy food:

21 And ^{it} came to pass, when we came to the inn, that we opened our sacks, and behold, every man's money was in the mouth of his sack, our money in full weight: and we have brought it again in our hand.

22 And other money have we brought down in our hands to buy food: we cannot tell where put our money in our sacks.

23 And he said, Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks: [†]I had your money. And he brought Simeon out unto them.

24 And the man brought the men into Joseph's house, and ^{gave them} water, and they washed their feet; and he gave their asses provender.

25 And they made ready the present against Joseph came at noon: for they heard that they should eat bread there.

26 ¶ And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and ^wbowed themselves to him to the earth.

27 And he asked them of their [†]welfare, and said, [†]Is your father well, the old man ^{of} whom ye spake? Is he yet alive?

28 And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive: "and they bowed down their heads, and made obeisance.

29 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, ^{his} mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, ^{of} whom ye spake unto me? And he said, God be gracious unto thee, my son.

30 And Joseph made haste; for ^{his} bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep; and he entered into his chamber, and ^{wept} there.

31 And he washed his face, and went out, and refrained himself, and said, Set on ^{bread}.

32 And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians which did eat with him, by themselves: because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is "an abomination unto the Egyptians.

33 And they sat before him, the first-born according to his birth-right, and the youngest according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

34 And he took and sent messes unto them from before him: but Benjamin's mess was ^{five} times so much as any of theirs. And they drank, and [†]were merry with him.

CHAP. XLIV.

1 Joseph's policy to stay his brethren. 14 Judah's humble supplication to Joseph.

AND he commanded [†]the steward of his house, saying, Fill the men's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth.

2 And put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn-money: and he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

3 As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they, and their asses.

4 And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?

5 Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth? ye have done evil in so doing.

6 ¶ And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words.

7 And they said unto him, Wherefore saith my lord these words? God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing:

8 Behold, the money which we found in our sacks' mouths, we brought again unto thee out of the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?

9 With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, both let him die, and we also will be my lord's bondmen.

10 And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: he with whom it is found shall be my servant; and ye shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack.

12 And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

13 Then they rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

14 ¶ And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house, (for he was yet there:) and they fell before him on the ground.

15 And Joseph said unto them, What deed is this that ye have done? wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly divine?

16 And Judah said, What shall we say unto my lord? what shall we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants: behold we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found.

17 And he said, God forbid that I should do so: but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father.

18 ¶ Then Judah came near unto him, and said, O my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ears, and let not thine anger burn against thy servant: for thou art even as Pharaoh.

19 My lord asked his servants, saying, Have ye a father, or a brother?

20 And we said unto my lord, We have a father, an old man, and a child of his old age, a little one: and his brother is dead, and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him.

21 And thou saidst unto thy servants, Bring him down unto me, that I may set mine eyes upon him.

22 And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father: for if he should leave his father, his father would die.

23 And thou saidst unto thy servants, Except your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more.

24 And it came to pass, when we came up unto thy servant my father, we told him the words of my lord.

25 And our father said, Go again, and buy us a little food.

26 And we said, We cannot go down: if our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down; for we may not see the man's face, except our youngest brother be with us.

27 And thy servant my father said unto us, Ye know that my wife bare me two sons:

28 And the one went out from me, and I said, Surely he is torn in pieces; and I saw him not since:

29 And if ye take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

30 Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; (seeing that his life is bound up in the lad's life;)

31 It shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die: and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave.

32 For thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever.

33 Now therefore, I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.

34 For how shall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me? lest peradventure I see the evil that shall come on my father.

CHAP. XLV.

1 Joseph maketh himself known to his brethren. 9 He sendeth for his father. 25 Jacob is revived by the news.

THEN Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me: and there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren.

2 And he wept aloud; and the Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard.

3 And Joseph said unto his brethren, I am Joseph; doth my father yet live? And his brethren could not answer him; for they were troubled at his presence.

4 And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you: and they came near: and he said, I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt.

5 Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life.

6 For these two years hath the famine been in the land: and yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest.

7 And God sent me before you, to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance.

8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

9 Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not:

10 And thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen, and thou shalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast:

11 And there will I nourish thee, (for yet there are five years of famine;) lest thou, and thy household, and all that thou hast, come to poverty.

12 And behold, your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is my mouth that speaketh unto you.

13 And ye shall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt, and of all that ye have seen: and ye shall haste, and ^hbring down my father hither.

14 And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck.

15 Moreover, he kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

16 ¶ And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's house, saying, Joseph's brethren are come: and it [†]pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Say unto thy brethren, This do ye; lade your beasts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan;

18 And take your father, and your households, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye shall eat [†]the fat of the land.

19 Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take you wagons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come.

20 Also [†]regard not your stuff: for the good of all the land of Egypt is yours.

21 And the children of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them wagons, according to the [†]commandment of Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way.

22 To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment: but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver, and ^hfive changes of raiment.

23 And to his father he sent after this manner; ten asses [†]laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten she-asses laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way.

24 So he sent his brethren away, and they departed: and he said unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way.

25 ¶ And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father, 26 And told him, saying, Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt. [†]And [†]Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not.

27 And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them: and when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived:

28 And Israel said, It is enough: Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die.

CHAP. XLVI.

1 Jacob is comforted by God at Beer-sheba. 5 Thence he with his company goeth into Egypt.

AND Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices ^hunto the God of his father Isaac.

2 And God spake unto Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob! and he said, Here am I.

3 And he said, I am God, ^hthe God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there ^hmake of thee a great nation:

4 I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely ^hbring thee up again: and ^hJoseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes.

5 And ^hJacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, in the wagons ^hwhich Pharaoh had sent to carry him.

6 And they took their cattle, and their goods which they had gotten in the land of Canaan, and came into Egypt, ^hJacob, and all his seed with him;

7 His sons, and his sons' sons with him, his daughters, and his sons' daughters, and all his seed brought he with him into Egypt.

8 ¶ And ^mthese are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt, Jacob and his sons: ^hReuben, Jacob's first-born.

9 And the sons of Reuben; Hanoch, and Phallu, and Hezron, and Carmi.

10 ¶ And ^hthe sons of Simeon; ¶Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and ¶Jachin, and ¶Zohah, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman.

11 ¶ And the sons of ^hLevi; ¶Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

12 ¶ And the sons of ^hJudah; Er, and Onan, and Shelah, and Pharez, and Zarah: but ^hEr and Onan died in the land of Canaan. And ^hthe sons of Pharez were Hezron, and Hamul.

13 ¶ And the sons of Issachar; Tola, and ¶Phuah, and Job, and Shimron.

14 ¶ And the sons of Zebulun; Sered, and Elon, and Jahleel.

15 These be the sons of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-aram, with his daughter Dinah: all the souls of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three.

16 ¶ And the sons of Gad; ^hZiphion, and Haggi, Shuni, and ¶Ezbon, Eri, and ¶Arodi, and Areli.

17 ¶ And the sons of Asher; Jimnah, and Ishuah, and Isui, and Beriah, and Serah their sister. And the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel.

18 ^hThese are the sons of Zilpah, ^hwhom Laban gave to Leah his daughter: and these she bare unto Jacob, even sixteen souls.

19 The sons of Rachel, ^hJacob's wife; Joseph, and Benjamin.

20 ¶ And unto Joseph in the land of Egypt were born Manasseh and Ephraim, which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah ¶priest of On bare unto him.

21 ¶ And the sons of Benjamin were Belah, and Becher, and Ashbel, Gera, and Naaman, ^hEhi, and Rosh, ^hMuppim, and ¶Huphim, and Ard.

22 These are the sons of Rachel, which were born to Jacob; all the souls were fourteen.

23 ¶ And the sons of Dan; ¶Hushim.

24 ¶ And the sons of Naphtali; Jahzeel, and Guni, and Jezer, and Shillem.

25 ^hThese are the sons of Bilhah, ^hwhich Laban gave unto Rachel his daughter, and she bare these unto Jacob: all the souls were seven.

26 ^hAll the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his [†]loins, besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six;

27 And the sons of Joseph which were born him in Egypt, were two souls: ^hall the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten.

28 ¶ And he sent Judah before him unto Joseph, ^mto direct his face unto Goshen; and they came ⁿinto the land of Goshen.

29 And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel his father to Goshen; and presented himself unto him: and he fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a good while.

30 And Israel said unto Joseph, "Now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive."

31 And Joseph said unto his brethren, and unto his father's house, "I will go up, and shew Pharaoh, and say unto him, My brethren, and my father's house, which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me:

32 And the men are shepherds, for †their trade hath been to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have.

33 And it shall come to pass, when Pharaoh shall call you, and shall say, "What is your occupation?"

34 That ye shall say, Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle from our youth even until now, both we, and also our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen; for every shepherd is "an abomination unto the Egyptians."

CHAP. XLVII.

1 Joseph presenteth five of his brethren, and his father, before Pharaoh.
28 Jacob's age. 29 He sweareth Joseph to bury him with his fathers.

THEN Joseph came and told Pharaoh, and said, "My father and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have, are come out of the land of Canaan; and behold, they are in the land of Goshen."

2 And he took some of his brethren, even five men, and presented them unto Pharaoh.

3 And Pharaoh said unto his brethren, "What is your occupation? And they said unto Pharaoh, "Thy servants are shepherds, both we, and also our fathers."

4 They said moreover unto Pharaoh, "For to sojourn in the land are we come: for thy servants have no pasture for their flocks, for the famine is sore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants dwell in the land of Goshen."

5 And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee:

6 "The land of Egypt is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell; and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them rulers over my cattle."

7 And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and set him before Pharaoh: and Jacob blessed Pharaoh.

8 And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, "How old art thou?"

9 And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage."

10 And Jacob blessed Pharaoh, and went out from before Pharaoh.

11 ¶ And Joseph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land, in the land of Ramesses, as Pharaoh had commanded.

12 And Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread according to their families.

13 ¶ And there was no bread in all the land; for the famine was very sore, so that the land of Egypt, and all the land of Canaan, fainted by reason of the famine.

14 And Joseph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

15 And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

16 And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

17 And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses; and he fed them with bread, for all their cattle, for that year.

18 When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle: there is not aught left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies and our lands:

19 Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed, that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate.

20 And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

21 And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof.

22 Only the land of the priests bought he not; for the priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them; wherefore they sold not their lands.

23 Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

24 And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones.

25 And they said, Thou hast saved our lives: let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

26 And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; except the land of the priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

27 ¶ And Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and grew, and multiplied exceedingly.

28 And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seven-teen years: so the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years.

29 And the time drew nigh that Israel must die: and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me; bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt:

30 But I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place. And he said, I will do as thou hast said.

31 And he said, Swear unto me: and he swore unto him. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.

CHAP. XLVIII.

1 Joseph with his sons visiteth his sick father. 2 Jacob strengtheneth himself to bless them. 3 He repeateth the promise. 21 He prophesieth their return to Canaan.

AND it came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick: and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim.

2 And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.

3 And Jacob said unto Joseph, God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me,

4 And said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee, for an everlasting possession.

5 ¶ And now, thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine: as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.

6 And thy issue, which thou begetteth after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance.

7 And as for me, when I came from Padan, Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan, in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath, the same is Beth-lehem.

8 And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these?

9 And Joseph said unto his father, They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will bless them.

10 (Now the eyes of Israel were dim for age, so that he could not see:) and he brought them near unto him; and he kissed them, and embraced them.

11 And Israel said unto Joseph, I had not thought to see thy face: and lo, God hath shewed me also thy seed.

12 And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himself with his face to the earth.

13 And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him.

14 And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the first-born.

15 ¶ And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, 16 The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac: and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth.

17 And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head.

18 And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father: for this is the first-born; put thy right hand upon his head.

19 And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.

20 And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

21 And Israel said unto Joseph, Behold, I die; but God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers.

22 Moreover I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

CHAP. XLIX.

1 Jacob calleth his sons to bless them. 3 Their blessings in particular. 29 He chargeth them about his burial. 33 He dieth.

AND Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days.

2 Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken unto Israel your father.

3 ¶ Reuben, thou art my first-born, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power:

4 Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel; because thou wentest up to thy father's bed; then defiledst thou it: he went up to my couch.

5 ¶ Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

6 O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united! for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall.

7 Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce: and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.

8 ¶ Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise; thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee.

9 Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion: who shall rouse him up?

10 The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come: and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.

11 Binding his foal unto the vine, and his ass's colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes:

12 His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk.

13 ¶ Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea; and he shall be for an haven of ships; and his border shall be unto Zidon.

14 Issachar is a strong ass, couching down between two burdens:

15 And he saw that rest was good, and the land that it was pleasant; and bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant unto tribute.

16 ¶ Dan shall judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel.

17 Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horse-heels, so that his rider shall fall backward.

18 I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord!

19 ¶ Gad, a troop shall overcome him: but he shall overcome at the last.

20 Out of Asher his bread shall be fat, and he shall yield royal dainties.

21 ¶^mNaphtali is a hind let loose: he giveth goodly words.

22 ¶ Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose †branches run over the wall:

23 The archers have "sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him:

24 But his "bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of "the mighty God of Jacob: ("from thence "is the shepherd, "the stone of Israel:)

25 'Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee, "and by the Almighty, "who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb:

26 The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors, "unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills; "they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.

27 ¶ Benjamin shall "raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, "and at night he shall divide the spoil.

28 ¶ All these are the twelve tribes of Israel: and this is it that their father spake unto them, and blessed them: every one according to his blessing he blessed them.

29 And he charged them, and said unto them, I 'am to be gathered unto my people: "bury me with my fathers "in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite, 30 In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, 'which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite, for a possession of a burying-place.

31 ("There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; "there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah.)

32 The purchase of the field and of the cave that is therein, was from the children of Heth.

33 And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and 'was gathered unto his people.

¹ The mourning for Jacob. ⁴ Joseph getteth leave of Pharaoh to go to bury him. ²⁴ He prophesieth unto his brethren of their return. ²⁵ He taketh an oath of them for his bones. ²⁶ He dieth.

AND Joseph "fell upon his father's face, and 'wept upon him, and kissed him.

2 And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to 'embalm his father: and the physicians embalmed Israel.

3 And forty days were fulfilled for him; for so are fulfilled the days of those which are embalmed: and the Egyptians †"mourned for him threescore and ten days.

4 And when the days of his mourning were past, Joseph spake unto "the house of Pharaoh, saying, If now I have found grace in your eyes, speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying,

5 'My father made me swear saying, Lo, I die: in my grave "which I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me. Now therefore let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again.

6 And Pharaoh said, Go up, and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear.

7 ¶ And Joseph went up to bury his father: and with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt,

8 And all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house: only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen.

9 And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen: and it was a very great company.

10 And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, which is beyond Jordan, and there they 'mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: "and he made a mourning for his father seven days.

11 And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians: wherefore the name of it was called †Abel-mizraim, which is beyond Jordan.

12 And his sons did unto him according as he commanded them:

13 For "his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham 'bought with the field for a possession of a burying-place of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre.

14 ¶ And Joseph returned into Egypt, he and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father.

15 ¶ And when Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, "they said, Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him.

16 And they †sent a messenger unto Joseph, saying, Thy father did command before he died, saying, 17 So shall ye say unto Joseph, Forgive, I pray thee now, the trespass of thy brethren, and their sin; "for they did unto thee evil: and now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of "the God of thy father. And Joseph wept when they spake unto him.

18 And his brethren also went and "fell down before his face: and they said, Behold, we be thy servants.

19 And Joseph said unto them, 'Fear not: "for am I in the place of God?

20 "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but 'God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive.

21 Now therefore fear ye not: "I will nourish you, and your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake †kindly unto them.

22 ¶ And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his father's house: and Joseph lived an hundred and ten years.

23 And Joseph saw Ephraim's children "of the third generation: "the children also of Machir, the son of Manasseh, "were †brought up upon Joseph's knees.

24 And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die; and "God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land, unto the land "which he sware to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.

25 And 'Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence.

26 So Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they 'embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt.

¶ The SECOND Book of Moses, called EXODUS.

CHAP. I.

22 Pharaoh commandeth the male children to be cast into the river.

NOW ^athese are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt; every man and his household came with Jacob.

2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah,

3 Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin,

4 Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

5 And all the souls that came out of the †loins of Jacob were ^bseventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.

6 And Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.

7 ¶ And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 Now there ^carose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we.

10 ^aCome on, let us ^bdeal wisely with them, lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them task-masters, ^cto afflict them with their ^bburdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure-cities, Pithom, and Raamses.

12 †But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour.

14 And they ^mmade their lives bitter with hard bondage, ⁿin mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service wherein they made them serve was with rigour.

15 ¶ And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives (of which the name of one was Shiprah, and the name of the other Puah;)

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him; but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives ^afeared God, and did not ^aas the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men-children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men-children alive?

19 And ^athe midwives said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 ^aTherefore God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, ^athat he made them houses.

22 And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, ^aEvery son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

CHAP. II.

2 Moses is born, 3 and in an ark cast into the flags. 11 He slayeth an Egyptian. 21 He marrieth Zipporah.

AND there went a ^aman of the house of Levi, and took to wife a daughter of Levi.

^r Gen. 21. 54. & 43. 25.

2 And the woman conceived and bare a son: and ^bwhen she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months.

3 And when she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 ^cAnd his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 ¶ And the ^ddaughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side: and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go, and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child and nursed it.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became ^eher son. And she called his name ¶Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

11 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, ^fwhen Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their ^gburdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he ^hslew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 And ⁱwhen he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said, ^jWho made thee ^ka prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by ^la well.

16 ^mNow the ⁿpriest of Midian had seven daughters: ^oand they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

17 And the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and ^pwatered their flock.

18 And when they came to ^qReuel their father, he said, How is it that ye are come so soon to-day?

19 And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

20 And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? why is it that ye have left the man? call him, that he may ^reat bread.

21 And Moses was content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moses, ^sZipporah his daughter.

22 And she bare him a son, and he called his name

¶Gershom: for he said, I have been "a stranger in a strange land.

23 ¶And it came to pass, "in process of time, that the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel "sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried; and "their cry came up unto God, by reason of the bondage.

24 And God "heard their groaning, and God "remembered his "covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob.

25 And God "looked upon the children of Israel, and God †"had respect unto them.

CHAP. III.

2 God appeareth to Moses in a burning bush. 9 He sendeth him to deliver Israel. 14 The name of God. 15 His message to Israel.

NOW Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, "the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to "the mountain of God, even to Horeb.

2 And "the Angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush; and he looked, and behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this "great sight, why the bush is not burnt.

4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called "unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses! And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, Draw not nigh hither: "put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover he said, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for "he was afraid to look upon God.

7 ¶And the LORD said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and "have heard their cry "by reason of their taskmasters; for "I know their sorrows:

8 And "I am come down to "deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, "unto a good land, and a large, unto a land "flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of "the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, "the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the "oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt.

11 ¶And Moses said unto God, "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children out of Egypt?

12 And he said, "Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: And he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, "I AM hath sent me unto you.

15 And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus

22 "But every woman shall borrow of her neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and yeshall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and "ye shall spoil ||the Egyptians.

CHAP. IV.

1 Moses' rod is turned into a serpent. 14 Aaron is appointed to assist him. 21 God's message to Pharaoh. 24 Zipporah circumciseth her son. 27 Aaron is sent to meet Moses.

AND Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

2 And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he said, "A rod.

3 And he said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent: and Moses fled from before it.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand:

5 That they may "believe that "the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 ¶And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous "as snow.

7 And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom again. And he put his hand into his bosom again, and plucked it out of his bosom, and behold, "it was turned again as his other flesh.

8 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and the water which thou takest out of the river †shall become blood upon the dry land.

10 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not †eloquent, neither †theretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

11 And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

12 Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

13 And he said, O my Lord, send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.

14 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do.

16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God.

17 And thou shalt take this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

18 ¶ And Moses went, and returned to †Jethro his father-in-law, and said unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, Go in peace.

19 And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for all the men are dead which sought thy life.

20 And Moses took his wife, and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and he returned to the land of Egypt. And Moses took the rod of God in his hand.

21 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh which I have put in thine hand: but I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go.

22 And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, Israel is my son, even my first-born.

23 And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay thy son, even thy first-born.

24 ¶ And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the LORD met him, and sought to kill him.

25 Then Zipporah took a sharp †stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son, and †cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

27 ¶ And the LORD said to Aaron, Go into the wilderness to meet Moses. And he went, and met him in the mount of God, and kissed him.

28 And Moses told Aaron all the words of the LORD who had sent him, and all the signs which he had commanded him.

29 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went, and gathered together all the elders of the children of Israel.

30 And Aaron spake all the words which the LORD had spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of the people.

31 And the people believed: and when they heard that the LORD had visited the children of Israel, and

CHAP. V.

1 Pharaoh chideth Moses and Aaron for their message. 5 He increaseth the Israelites' task.

AND afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness.

2 And Pharaoh said, Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said, The God of the Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

4 And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your burdens.

5 And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

6 And Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying,

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

8 And the tale of the bricks which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

9 †Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein: and let them not regard vain words.

10 ¶ And the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

11 Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: yet not ought of your work shall be diminished.

12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble instead of straw.

13 And the taskmasters hasted them, saying, Fulfil your works, your †daily tasks, as when there was straw.

14 And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick, both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 ¶ Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

16 There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

17 But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye say, Let us go, and do sacrifice to the LORD.

18 Go therefore now, and work: for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not diminish ought from your bricks of your daily task.

20 ¶ And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh:

21 And they said unto them, The LORD look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our savour

†to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.

22 And Moses returned unto the LORD, and said, Lord, wherefore hast thou so evil-entreated this people? why is it that thou hast sent me?

23 For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people: †neither hast thou delivered thy people at all.

CHAP. VI.

1 God reneweth his promise by his name JEHOVAH.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh: for "with a strong hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand shall he drive them out of his land.

2 And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the LORD:

3 And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob by the name of "God Almighty, but by my name "JEHOVAH was I not known to them.

4 "And I have also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers.

5 And "I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage: and I have remembered my covenant.

6 Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, "I am the LORD, and "I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will "redeem you with a stretched-out arm, and with great judgments:

7 And I will "take you to me for a people, and "I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out "from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

8 And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did †"swear to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for an heritage: I am the LORD.

9 "And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: "but they hearkened not unto Moses, for †anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage.

10 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Go in, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

12 And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, the children of Israel have "not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, "who am of uncircumcised lips?

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

14 "These be the heads of their fathers' houses: "The sons of Reuben the first-born of Israel; Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi: these be the families of Reuben.

15 "And the sons of Simeon; Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman: these are the families of Simeon.

19 And "the sons of Merari; Mahali and Mushi: these are the families of Levi, according to their generations.

20 And "Amram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife; and she bare him Aaron and Moses. And the years of the life of Amram were an hundred and thirty and seven years.

21 "And "the sons of Izhar; Korah, and Nepheg, and Zichri.

22 And the "sons of Uzziel; Mishael, and Elzaphan, and Zithri.

23 And Aaron took him Elisheba daughter of "Amminadab, sister of Naashon, to wife; and she bare him "Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

24 And the "sons of Korah; Assir, and Elkanah, and Abiasaph: these are the families of the Korhites.

25 And Eleazar, Aaron's son, took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife; and "she bare him Phinehas: these are the heads of the fathers of the Levites, according to their families.

26 These are that Aaron and Moses, "to whom the LORD said, Bring out the children of Israel from the land of Egypt according to their "armies.

27 These are they which "spake to Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring out the children of Israel from Egypt: these are that Moses and Aaron.

28 "And it came to pass on the day when the LORD spake unto Moses in the land of Egypt, 29 That the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, "I am the LORD: "speak thou unto Pharaoh king of Egypt all that I say unto thee.

30 And Moses said before the LORD, Behold, "I am of uncircumcised lips, and how shall Pharaoh hearken unto me?

CHAP. VII.

1 Moses is encouraged to go to Pharaoh. 7 His age. 8 His rod is turned into a serpent. 13 Pharaoh's heart is hardened. 19 The river is turned into blood.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, See, I have made thee "a god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be "thy prophet.

2 Thou shalt speak all that I command thee: and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the children of Israel out of his land.

3 And "I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and "multiply my "signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt.

4 But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, "that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine armies, and my people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt, "by great judgments.

5 And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD, when I "stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel from among them.

6 And Moses and Aaron "did as the LORD commanded them, so did they.

7 And Moses was "fourscore years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

8 "And the LORD spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying,

9 When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, "Shew a miracle for you: then thou shalt say unto Aaron, "Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent.

10 "And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh.

and they did so as the LORD had commanded: and Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and it became a serpent.

11 Then Pharaoh also called the wise men, and the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also did in like manner with their enchantments.

12 For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.

13 And he hardened Pharaoh's heart that he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuseth to let the people go.

15 Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, he goeth out unto the water, and thou shalt stand by the river's brink against he come: and the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thine hand.

16 And thou shalt say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, Let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness: and behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear.

17 Thus saith the LORD, In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in my hand upon the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood.

18 And the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink: and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water of the river.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water, that they may become blood: and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.

20 And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded; and he lifted up the rod and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned into blood.

21 And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 And the magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; as the LORD had said.

23 And Pharaoh turned and went into his house, neither did he set his heart to this also.

24 And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river.

25 And seven days were fulfilled after that the LORD had smitten the river.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Frogs are sent. 25 Pharaoh inclineth to let the people go, 32 but yet is hardened.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 And if thou refuse to let them go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with frogs:

3 And the rivers shall bring forth frogs abundantly, which shall go up and come into thine house, and into thy bed-chamber, and upon thy bed, and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thine ovens, and into thy kneading-troughs:

Or, augh.

4 And the frogs shall come up both on thee, and upon thy people, and upon all thy servants.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt.

6 And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.

7 And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 ¶ Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Entreat the LORD that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people: and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, ¶ Glory over me: ¶ when shall I entreat for thee and for thy servants, and for thy people, to destroy the frogs from thee, and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only?

10 And he said, ¶ To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word: that thou mayest know that there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

12 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses cried unto the LORD, because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses: and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps: and the land stank.

15 But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice in man and in beast: all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast.

19 Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

20 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; (lo, he cometh forth to the water;) and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me:

21 Else, if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will sever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth.

23 And I will put † a division between my people and thy people: ‖to-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the LORD did so: and there came a grievous swarm of flies into the house of Pharaoh, and into his servants' houses, and into all the land of Egypt: the land was ‖ corrupted by reason of the swarms of flies.

25 ¶ And Pharaoh called for Moses, and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land.

26 And Moses said, It is not meet so to do; for we shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: Lo, shall we sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us?

27 We will go three days' journey into the wilderness, and sacrifice to the LORD our God, as he shall command us.

28 And Pharaoh said, I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderness; only ye shall not go very far away: entreat for me.

29 And Moses said, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will entreat the LORD that the swarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people, to-morrow: but let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD:

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one.

32 And Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go.

CHAP. IX.

1 The murrain of beasts. 27 Pharaoh sueth to Moses, 35 but yet is hardened.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still,

3 Behold, the hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain.

4 And the LORD shall sever between the cattle of Israel, and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel.

5 And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To-morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land.

6 And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Israel died not one.

7 And Pharaoh sent, and behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh.

9 And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt.

10 And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh; and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven: and it became a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast.

11 And the magicians could not stand before Moses, because of the boils: for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had spoken unto Moses.

13 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

14 For I will at this time send all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people: that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence; and thou shalt be cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, to-morrow about this time I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field: for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses:

21 And he that regarded not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven, and the LORD sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground: and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation.

25 And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast, and the hail smote every herb of the field and brake every tree of the field.

26 Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

27 ¶ And Pharaoh sent and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, I have sinned this time: the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

28 Entreat the LORD (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer.

29 And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will spread abroad my hands unto the LORD; and the thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know how that the earth is the LORD's.

30 But as for thee and thy servants, I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.

CHAP. X.

7 Pharaoh, moved by his servants, inclineth to let the Israelites go. 12 The plague of the locusts. 16 Pharaoh sueth to Moses.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh: ^afor I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants; ^bthat I might shew these my signs before him:

2 And that thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son, and of thy son's son, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my signs which I have done among them; that ye may know how that I am the LORD.

3 And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, How long wilt thou refuse to ^ahumble thyself before me? Let my people go, that they may serve me.

4 Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast:

5 And they shall cover the †face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and ^athey shall eat the residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field:

6 And they ^ashall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be ^aa snare unto us? Let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: Knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: ^abut †who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go: for ^awe must hold a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it; for evil is before you.

11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, ^aStretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and ^aeat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night: and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts.

15 For they ^acovered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they ^adid eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 ¶ Then Pharaoh †called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, ^aI have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.

22 And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven: and there was a ^athick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days:

23 They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days: ^abut all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

24 ¶ And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and ^asaid, Go ye, serve the LORD: only let your flocks and your herds be stayed: let your ^alittle ones also go with you.

25 And Moses said, Thou must give †us also sacrifices, and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 Our cattle also shall go with us; there shall not an hoof be left behind; for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; and we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

27 ¶ But the LORD ^ahardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh said unto him, Get thee from me, take heed to thyself, see my face no more: for in that day thou seest my face, thou shalt die.

29 And Moses said, Thou hast spoken well, ^aI will see thy face again no more.

CHAP. XI.

1 God's message to the Israelites to borrow jewels of their neighbours.

4 Moses threateneth Pharaoh with the death of the first-born.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Yet will I bring ^aone plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; afterwards he will let you go hence: ^awhen he shall let you go, he shall surely thrust you out hence altogether.

2 Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, ^ajewels of silver, and jewels of gold.

3 ^aAnd the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man ^aMoses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD, ^aAbout midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt:

5 And 'all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill; and all the first-born of beasts.

6 And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more.

7 But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or beast: that ye may know how that the LORD doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

8 And 'all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people that follow thee; and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in a great anger.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, 'Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that "my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh; and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

CHAP. XII.

1 The beginning of the year is changed. 3 The passover is instituted. 29 The first-born are slain. 31 The Israelites are driven out of the land. 43 The ordinance of the passover.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying,

2 This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

3 ¶ Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house:

4 And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls: every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats:

6 And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening.

7 And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side-posts, and on the upper door-post of the houses, wherein they shall eat it.

8 And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it.

9 Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

10 And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning: and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.

11 ¶ And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand: and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the LORD's passover.

12 For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast: and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD.

13 And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood,

I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

15 Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

16 And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you: no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance for ever.

18 ¶ In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even.

19 Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land.

20 Ye shall eat nothing leavened: in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 ¶ Then Moses called for all the elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out, and take you a lamb, according to your families, and kill the passover.

22 And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side-posts with the blood that is in the basin: and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.

23 For the LORD will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two side-posts, the LORD will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.

24 And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons for ever.

25 And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the LORD will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service.

26 And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service?

27 That ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the LORD's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people bowed the head and worshipped.

28 And the children of Israel went away, and did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, that at midnight the LORD smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the first-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt: for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

31 ¶ And he called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel: and go, serve the LORD, as ye have said.

32 Also take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone: and bless me also.

33 And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, We be all dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders.

35 And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses: and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment.

36 And the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required: and they spoiled the Egyptians.

37 ¶ And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children.

38 And a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened: because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual.

40 ¶ Now the sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.

41 And it came to pass, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is a night to be much observed unto the LORD, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.

43 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the passover: there shall no stranger eat thereof:

44 But every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house: neither shall ye break a bone thereof.

47 All the congregation of Israel shall keep it.

48 And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 One law shall be to him that is home-born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 And it came to pass the self-same day, that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their armies.

ever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 This day came ye out, in the month Abib.

5 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey; that thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 ¶ And thou shalt shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the LORD did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes; that the LORD's law may be in thy mouth: for with a strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year.

11 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee;

12 That thou shalt set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the matrix; and every firstling that cometh of a beast which thou hast, the males shall be the LORD's.

13 And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the first-born of man among thy children shalt thou redeem.

14 ¶ And it shall be when thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, What is this? that thou shalt say unto him, By strength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the house of bondage:

15 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, that the LORD slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man, and the first-born of beast: therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the first-born of my children I redeem.

16 And it shall be for a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes: for by strength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return to Egypt:

18 But God led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red sea: and the children of Israel went up harnessed out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him: for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you; and ye shall carry up my bones away hence with you.

20 ¶ And they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness.

21 And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light: to go by day and night.

22 He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people.

CHAP. XIV.

1 God instructeth the Israelites in their journey. 5 Pharaoh pursueth after them. 21 The Israelites pass through the Red sea, 23 which drowneth the Egyptians.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, "that they turn and encamp before ^bPi-hahiroth, between ^cMigdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon: before it shall ye encamp by the sea.

3 For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, "They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; ^athat the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

5 ¶ And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and ^bthe heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him:

7 And he took ^csix hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 And the LORD ^ahardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and ^bthe children of Israel went out with an high hand.

9 But the ^mEgyptians pursued after them (all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army) and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon.

10 ¶ And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were sore afraid: and the children of Israel ⁿcried out unto the LORD.

11 "And they said unto Moses, Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? Wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 "Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD, which he will shew to you to-day: ^{||}for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 "The LORD shall fight for you, and ye shall ^ahold your peace.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward:

16 But lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it: and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

17 And I, behold, I will ^aharden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: and I will ^aget me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians ^ashall know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 ¶ And the angel of God ^awhich went before the camp of Israel, removed, and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them:

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and "it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 And Moses ^bstretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and ^amade the sea dry land, and the waters were ^adivided.

22 And ^athe children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were ^aa wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

23 ¶ And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them, to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 And it came to pass, that in the morning-watch ^athe LORD looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians,

25 And took off their chariot-wheels, ^{||}that they drave them heavily: so that the Egyptians said, Let us flee from the face of Israel; for the LORD ^afighteth for them against the Egyptians.

26 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, "Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea ^areturned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it; and the LORD ^aoverthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And ^mthe waters returned, and ⁿcovered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them: there remained not so much as one of them.

29 "But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD ^asaved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians: and Israel ^asaw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore.

31 And Israel saw that great [†]work which the LORD did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the LORD, and ^abelieved the LORD, and his servant Moses.

CHAP. XV.

1 Moses' song. 23 The waters at Marah are bitter.

THEN sang ^aMoses and the children of Israel this song unto the LORD, and spake, saying, I will ^bsing unto the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

2 The LORD is my strength and ^asong, and he is become my salvation: he is my God, and I will prepare him ^aan habitation; my ^afather's God, and I will exalt him.

3 The LORD is a man of ^awar: the LORD is his ^aname.

4 Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea: ⁴his chosen captains also are drowned in the Red sea.

5 The depths have covered them: ^mthey sank into the bottom as a stone.

6 Thy right hand, O LORD, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O LORD, hath dashed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the greatness of thine ^eexcellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which ^pconsumed them ^aas stubble.

8 And ^wwith the blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together, ^tthe floods stood upright as an heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the sea.

9 The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will ^ddivide the spoil: my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, mine hand shall ^ddestroy them.

10 Thou didst ^bblow with thy wind, ^tthe sea covered them: they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like unto thee, O LORD, among the ^gods? who is like thee, ^gglorious in holiness, fearful in praises, ^ddoing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst out ^tthy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast ^lled forth the people which thou hast redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto ^tthy holy habitation.

14 The people shall hear, and be afraid: ^ssorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestina.

15 Then ^tthe dukes of Edom shall be amazed; ^tthe mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold upon them; ^aall the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away.

16 Fear and dread shall fall upon them; by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still ^aas a stone; till thy people pass over, O LORD, till the people pass over, which thou hast purchased.

17 Thou shalt bring them in, and ^pplant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the ^ssanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.

19 For the ^hhorse of Pharaoh went in with his chariots and with his horsemen into the sea, and ^tthe LORD brought again the waters of the sea upon them: but the children of Israel went on dry land in the midst of the sea.

20 ¶ And Miriam ^tthe prophetess, ^tthe sister of Aaron, ^ttook a timbrel in her hand; and all the women went out after her, ^wwith timbrels, and with dances.

21 And Miriam ^aanswered them, ^sSing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

22 So Moses brought Israel from the Red sea, and they went out into the wilderness of Shur; and they went three days in the wilderness, and found no water.

23 ¶ And when they came to ^aMarah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah; for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called ¶Marah.

24 And the people ^mmurmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink?

25 And he ^ccried unto the LORD; and the LORD shewed him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: there he ^mmade for them a statute and an ordinance, and there ^hhe proved them,

26 And said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these ^mdiseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the LORD ^tthat healeth thee

27 ¶ And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees, and they encamped there by the waters.

CHAP. XVI.

2 The Israelites murmur for want of bread. 4 God promiseth them bread from heaven. 11 Quails are sent, 14 and manna.

AND they ^ttook their journey from Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of ^sSin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel ^mmurmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness:

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, ^aWould to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, ^wwhen we sat by the flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full: for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD unto Moses, Behold, I will rain ^bbread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather [†]a certain rate every day, that I may ^pprove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and ^tit shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, ^aAt even, then ye shall know that the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt:

7 And in the morning, then ye shall see ^tthe glory of the LORD: for that he heareth your murmurings against the LORD: and ^wwhat are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be when the LORD shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: and ^wwhat are we? your murmurings are not against us, but ^aagainst the LORD.

9 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, ^cCome near before the LORD: for he hath heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, that they looked toward the wilderness, and behold, the glory of the LORD ^aappeared in the cloud.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel; speak unto them, saying, ^aAt even ye shall eat flesh, and ⁱn the morning ye shall be filled with bread: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 And it came to pass, that at even ^tthe quails came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning ^tthe dew lay round about the host.

14 And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay ^aa small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground:

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, ¶ It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, ¶ This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

16 ¶ This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating: ¶ an omer † for every man according to the number of your † persons, take ye every man for them which are in his tents.

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less.

18 And when they did mete it with an omer, ¶ he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack: they gathered every man according to his eating.

19 And Moses said, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding, they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank: and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot it melted.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the LORD: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a sabbath unto the LORD; to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the LORD hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

30 So the people rested on the seventh day.

31 And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander-seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 ¶ And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commandeth, Fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations.

34 As the LORD commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it up before the Testimony, to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel did eat manna forty

CHAP. XVII.

1 The people murmur for water at Rephidim. 8 Amalek is overcome.
15 Moses buildeth the altar JEHOVAH-nissi.

AND all the congregation of the children of Israel journeyed from the wilderness of Sin, after their journeys, according to the commandment of the LORD, and pitched in Rephidim: and there was no water for the people to drink.

2 Wherefore the people did chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? wherefore do ye tempt the LORD?

3 And the people thirsted there for water; and the people murmured against Moses, and said, Wherefore is this that thou hast brought us up out of Egypt to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?

4 And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to stone me.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel: and thy rod, wherewith thou smotest the river, take in thine hand, and go.

6 Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place ¶ Massah, and ¶ Meribah, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD, saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 ¶ Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

9 And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in mine hand.

10 So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill.

11 And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed.

12 But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon: and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

13 And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.

14 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.

15 And Moses built an altar, and called the name of it ¶ JEHOVAH-nissi:

16 For he said, ¶ Because † the LORD hath sworn that the LORD will have war with Amalek from generation to generation.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Jethro bringeth to Moses his wife and two sons. 7 Moses entertaineth him.

WHEN Jethro the priest of Midian, Moses' father-in-law, heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for Israel his people, and that the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt:

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took Zipporah, Moses' wife, 'after he had sent her back,

3 And her 'two sons; of which the 'name of the one was Gershom; (for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land:)

4 And the name of the other was Eliezer; (for the God of my father, said he, was mine help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:)

5 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came with his sons and his wife unto Moses into the wilderness, where he encamped at 'the mount of God:

6 And he said unto Moses, I thy father-in-law Jethro am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 ¶ And Moses 'went out to meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and 'kissed him: and they asked each other of 'their 'welfare; and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses told his father-in-law all that the LORD had done unto Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had 'come upon them by the way, and how the LORD 'delivered them.

9 And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the LORD had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, 'Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now I know that the LORD is 'greater than all gods: 'for in the thing wherein they dealt 'proudly, he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took a burnt-offering and sacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law, 'before God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

14 And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? Why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moses said unto his father-in-law, Because 'the people come unto me to inquire of God:

16 When they have 'a matter, they come unto me, and I judge between 'one and another, and I do 'make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.

17 And Moses' father-in-law said unto him, The thing that thou doest is not good.

18 'Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; 'thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

19 Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counsel, and 'God shall be with thee: Be thou 'for the people to God-ward, that thou mayest 'bring the causes unto God:

20 And thou shalt 'teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt shew them 'the way wherein they must walk, and 'the work that they must do.

21 Moreover, thou shalt provide out of all the people, 'able men, such as 'fear God, 'men of truth, 'hating covetousness; and place such over them to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens:

14 ¶ And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, and ¹sanctified the people; and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, ²Be ready against the third day: ³come not at your wives.

16 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were ⁴thunders and lightnings, and a ⁵thick cloud upon the mount, and the ⁶voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp ⁷trembled.

17 And ⁸Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And ⁹mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the LORD descended upon it ¹⁰in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and ¹¹the whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And ¹²when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, ¹³Moses spake, and ¹⁴God answered him by a voice.

20 And the LORD came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the LORD called Moses ¹⁵up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go down, ¹⁶†charge the people, lest they break through unto the LORD ¹⁷to gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let the priests also which come near to the LORD, ¹⁸sanctify themselves, lest the LORD ¹⁹break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, ²⁰Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the LORD said unto him, Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee: but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

CHAP. XX.

1 The ten commandments. 22 Idolatry is forbidden. 24 Of what sort the altar should be.

AND God spake ¹all these words, saying,
2 ²I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, ³out of the house of ⁴†bondage.

3 ⁵Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

4 ⁶Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth:

5 ⁷Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am ⁸a jealous God, ⁹visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me;

6 And ¹⁰showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

7 ¹¹Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD ¹²'will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 ¹³Remember the sabbath-day to keep it holy.

9 ¹⁴Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work:

10 But the ¹⁵seventh day is the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, ¹⁶nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

11 For ¹in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath-day, and hallowed it.

13 ²Thou shalt not kill.

14 ³Thou shalt not commit adultery.

15 ⁴Thou shalt not steal.

16 ⁵Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

17 ⁶Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, ⁷thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

18 ¶ And ⁸all the people ⁹saw the thunders, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain ¹⁰smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off.

19 And they said unto Moses, ¹¹Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but ¹²let not God speak with us, lest we die.

CHAP. XXI.

Sundry laws for men-servants, &c.

NOW these are the judgments which thou shalt ¹set before them.

2 ²If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

3 If he came in ³†by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.

4 If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters, the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 ⁴And if the servant ⁵†shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto the ⁶judges: he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the doorpost; and his master shall ⁷bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever.

7 ¶ And if a man ⁸sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out ⁹as the men-servants do.

8 If she ¹⁰†please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife; her food, her raiment, ^aand her duty of marriage shall he not diminish.

11 And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free without money.

12 ¶ He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

13 And ^aif a man lie not in wait, but God ^adeliver him into his hand; then ^mI will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

14 But if a man come ^apresumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; ^athou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

15 ¶ And he that smiteth his father, or his mother, shall be surely put to death.

16 ¶ And ^ahe that stealeth a man and ^aselleth him, or if he be ^afound in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

17 ¶ And ^ahe that ^acurseth his father or his mother, shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And if men strive together, and one smite ^aanother with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed:

19 If he rise again, and walk abroad ^aupon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay ^afor [†]the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

20 ¶ And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely [†]punished.

21 Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for ^ahe is his money.

22 ¶ If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow: he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him; and he shall ^apay as the judges determine.

23 And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life,

24 ^aEye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot,

25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 ¶ And if a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go free for his eye's sake.

27 And if he smite out his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake.

28 ¶ If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then ^athe ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

30 If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for ^athe ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a man-servant, or a maid-servant; he shall give unto their master ^athirty shekels of silver, and the ^aox shall be stoned.

33 ¶ And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 ¶ And if one man's ox hurt another's that he die, then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it, and the dead ox also they shall divide.

36 Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox, and the dead shall be his own.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Of theft and other offences. 29 Of the first fruits.

¶ If a man shall steal an ox, or a ^asheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and ^afour sheep for a sheep.

2 ¶ If a thief be found ^abreaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall ^ano blood be shed for him.

3 If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him: for he should make full restitution; if he have nothing, then he shall be ^asold for his theft.

4 If the theft be certainly ^afound in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall ^arestore double.

5 ¶ If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field: of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard shall he make restitution.

6 ¶ If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

7 ¶ If a man shall deliver unto his neighbour money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; ^aif the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the ^ajudges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing which another challengeth to be his: the ^acause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

11 Then shall an ^aoath of the LORD be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And ^aif it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces; then let him bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 ¶ And if a man borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it, he shall surely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be an hired thing, it came for his hire.

16 ¶ And ^aif a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

17 If her father utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall [†]pay money according to the dowry of virgins.

18 ¶ Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.

19 ¶ Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.

20 ¶ He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

21 ¶ Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.

23 If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry;

24 And my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

25 ¶ If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

26 ¶ If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? and it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me, that I will hear; for I am gracious.

28 ¶ Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people.

29 ¶ Thou shalt not delay to offer [†]the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy [†]liquors: [†]the first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me.

30 Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: seven days it shall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it me.

31 ¶ And ye shall be holy men unto me: neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Of slander and false witness. 3, 6 Of justice. 4 Of charitableness. 10 Of the year of rest. 12 Of the Sabbath. 13. Of idolatry. 14 Of the three feasts. 18 Of the blood and the fat of the sacrifice. 20 An Angel is promised.

THOU shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

2 ¶ Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment:

3 ¶ Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 ¶ If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 ¶ If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldest forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.

6 ¶ Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 ¶ Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

8 ¶ And thou shalt take no gift; for the gift blindeth [†]the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 ¶ Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof:

11 But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy oliveyard.

12 Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed.

13 And in all things that I have said unto you, be circumspect: and make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.

14 ¶ Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.

15 ¶ Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib; for in it thou camest out from Egypt: and none shall appear before me empty:)

16 And the feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labours, which thou hast sown in the field: and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field.

17 Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the LORD God.

18 ¶ Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread: neither shall the fat of my sacrifice remain until the morning.

19 The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the LORD thy God. ¶ Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

20 ¶ Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared.

21 Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him.

22 But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries.

23 For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I will cut them off.

24 Thou shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do after their works: but thou shalt utterly overthrow them, and quite break down their images.

25 And ye shall serve the LORD your God, and he shall bless thy bread, and thy water; and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee.

26 ¶ There shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren, in thy land: the number of thy days I will fulfil.

27 I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come, and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee.

28 And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee.

29 I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

32 Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

33 They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, it will surely be a snare unto thee.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Moses is called up into the mountain. 4 Moses buildeth an altar, and twelve pillars. 6 He sprinkleth the blood of the covenant. 9 The glory of God appeareth. 15 Moses continueth forty days and forty nights in the mount.

AND he said unto Moses, Come up unto the LORD, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye afar off.

2 And Moses alone shall come near the LORD: but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people go up with him.

3 And Moses came and told the people all the words of the LORD, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the LORD hath said will we do.

4 And Moses wrote all the words of the LORD, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar.

7 And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the LORD hath said will we do, and be obedient.

8 And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel:

10 And they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire-stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness.

11 And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.

12 And the LORD said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

13 And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua: and Moses went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.

15 And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount.

16 And the glory of the LORD abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the LORD was

CHAP. XXV.

1 What the Israelites must offer for the making of the tabernacle. 10 The form of the ark. 17 The mercy-seat with the cherubims. 23 The table with the furniture thereof.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering.

3 And this is the offering which ye shall take of them; gold, and silver, and brass,

4 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair,

5 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood,

6 Oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, and for sweet incense,

7 Onyx-stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breast-plate.

8 And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them.

9 According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

10 And they shall make an ark of shittim-wood: two eubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a eubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a eubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, within and without shalt thou overlay it; and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about.

12 And thou shalt cast four rings of gold for it, and put them in the four corners thereof; and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it.

13 And thou shalt make staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them.

15 The staves shall be in the rings of the ark: they shall not be taken from it.

16 And thou shalt put into the ark the testimony which I shall give thee.

17 And thou shalt make a mercy-seat of pure gold: two eubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a eubit and a half the breadth thereof.

18 And thou shalt make two cherubims of gold, of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy-seat.

19 And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end: even of the mercy-seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof.

20 And the cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be.

21 And thou shalt put the mercy-seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee.

22 And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel.

23 ¶ Thou shalt also make a table of shittim-wood: two cubits shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

24 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, and make thereto a crown of gold round about.

25 And thou shalt make unto it a border of an hand-breadth round about, and thou shalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about.

26 And thou shalt make for it four rings of gold, and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof.

27 Over against the border shall the rings be for places of the staves to bear the table.

28 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, that the table may be borne with them.

29 And thou shalt make the dishes thereof, and spoons thereof, and covers thereof, and bowls thereof, to cover withal: of pure gold shalt thou make them.

30 And thou shalt set upon the table shew-bread before me alway.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make a candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work shall the candlestick be made: his shaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, shall be of the same.

32 And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side:

33 Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch; and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch, with a knop and a flower: so in the six branches that come out of the candlestick.

34 And in the candlestick shall be four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers.

35 And there shall be a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches that proceed out of the candlestick.

36 Their knops and their branches shall be of the same: all of it shall be one beaten work of pure gold.

37 And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof: and they shall light the lamps thereof, that they may give light over against it.

38 And the tongs thereof, and the snuff-dishes thereof, shall be of pure gold.

39 Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels.

40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount.

CHAP. XXVI.

Directions for the Tabernacle.

MOREOVER, thou shalt make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubims of cunning work shalt thou make them.

2 The length of one curtain shall be eight and twenty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and every one of the curtains shall have one measure.

3 The five curtains shall be coupled together one to another; and other five curtains shall be coupled one to another.

4 And thou shalt make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvedge in the coupling; and likewise shalt thou make in the uttermost edge of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

5 Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second; that the loops may take hold one of another.

6 And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches: and it shall be one tabernacle.

7 ¶ And thou shalt make curtains of goats' hair to be a covering upon the tabernacle: eleven curtains shalt thou make.

8 The length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure.

9 And thou shalt couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the fore-front of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

11 And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, shall hang over the back-side of the tabernacle.

13 And a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other side of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle on this side and on that side, to cover it.

14 And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make boards for the tabernacle of shittim-wood standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another: thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward.

19 And thou shalt make forty sockets of silver under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle on the north side there shall be twenty boards.

21 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward thou shalt make six boards.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make bars of shittim-wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle.

27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof which was shewed thee in the mount.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of cunning work: with cherubims shall it be made.

32 And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold upon the four sockets of silver.

33 ¶ And thou shalt hang up the vail under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the vail the ark of the testimony: and the vail shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy.

34 And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place.

35 And thou shalt set the table without the vail, and the candlestick over against the table on the side of the tabernacle toward the south: and thou shalt put the table on the north side.

36 And thou shalt make an hanging for the door of the tent, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needle-work.

37 And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them.

CHAP. XXVII.

The altar of burnt-offering, with the vessels thereof, &c.

AND thou shalt make an altar of shittim-wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad; the altar shall be four-square: and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

2 And thou shalt make the horns of it upon the four corners thereof: his horns shall be of the same: and thou shalt overlay it with brass.

3 And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, and his shovels, and his basins, and his flesh-hooks, and his fire-pans: all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass.

4 And thou shalt make for it a grate of net-work of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brazen rings in the four corners thereof.

5 And thou shalt put it under the compass of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6 And thou shalt make staves for the altar, staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with brass.

7 And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to bear it.

8 Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: as it was shewed thee in the mount, so shall they make it.

9 ¶ And thou shalt make the court of the tabernacle: for the south side southward there shall be hangings for the court of fine twined linen of an hundred cubits long for one side:

10 And the twenty pillars thereof and their twenty sockets shall be of brass: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets shall be of silver.

11 And likewise for the north side in length there shall be hangings of an hundred cubits long, and his twenty pillars and their twenty sockets of brass: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

12 ¶ And for the breadth of the court on the west side shall be hangings of fifty cubits: their pillars ten, and their sockets ten.

13 And the breadth of the court on the east side eastward shall be fifty cubits.

14 The hangings on one side of the gate shall be fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And on the other side shall be hangings, fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 ¶ And for the gate of the court shall be an hanging of twenty cubits, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needle-work: and their pillars shall be four, and their sockets four.

17 All the pillars round about the court shall be filleted with silver: their hooks shall be of silver, and their sockets of brass.

18 ¶ The length of the court shall be an hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty every where, and the height five cubits of fine twined linen, and their sockets of brass.

19 All the vessels of the tabernacle in all the service thereof, and all the pins thereof, and all the pins of the court, shall be of brass.

20 ¶ And thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring thee pure oil-olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always.

21 In the tabernacle of the congregation without the vail, which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall order it from evening to morning before the LORD: It shall be a statute for ever unto their generations on the behalf of the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Aaron and his sons are set apart for the priest's office. 2 Holy garments are appointed. 30 The Urim and Thummim. 31 The robe of the ephod. 40 The garments for Aaron's sons.

AND take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons.

2 And thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty.

3 And thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the garments which they shall make; a breast-plate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

6 ¶ And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the two shoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And the curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou shalt take two onyx-stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel:

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, according to their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold.

12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel: and 'Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD upon his two shoulders "for a memorial.

13 ¶ And thou shalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends; of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 ¶ And "thou shalt make the breast-plate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen shalt thou make it.

16 Four-square it shall be, being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof.

17 °And thou shalt †set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones; the first row shall be a ¶sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this shall be the first row.

18 And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

19 And the third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

20 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their †inclosings.

21 And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes.

22 ¶ And thou shalt make upon the breast-plate chains at the ends of wreathen work of pure gold.

23 And thou shalt make upon the breast-plate two rings of gold, and shalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breast-plate.

24 And thou shalt put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings which are on the ends of the breast-plate.

25 And the other two ends of the two wreathen chains thou shalt fasten in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breast-plate in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the fore-part thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

28 And they shall bind the breast-plate by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breast-plate be not loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breast-plate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, "for a memorial before the LORD continually.

30 ¶ And "thou shalt put in the breast-plate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the LORD continually.

31 ¶ And "thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be an hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be not rent.

33 ¶ And beneath, upon the ¶hem of it thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about:

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron, to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out, that he die not.

36 ¶ And "thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon the fore-front of the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may "bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be "accepted before the LORD.

39 ¶ And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of needle-work.

40 ¶ And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him: and shalt "anooint them, and †consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

42 And thou shalt make them "linen breeches to cover †their nakedness: from the loins even unto the thighs they shall †reach:

43 And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon

5 ^aAnd thou shalt take the garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breast-plate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod:

6 ^cAnd thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

7 Then shalt thou take the anointing ^ooil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him.

8 And ^hthou shalt bring his sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles (Aaron and his sons) and [†]put the bonnets on them; and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt [†]consecrate Aaron and his sons.

10 And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation; and [†]Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And thou shalt kill the bullock before the LORD, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou ^mshalt take of the blood of the bullock, and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

13 And ⁿthou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and [¶]the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar.

14 But ⁿthe flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering.

15 [¶]Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

16 And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and [¶]unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the LORD: it is a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

19 [¶]And thou shalt take the other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

20 Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And thou shalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of ⁿthe anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and ⁿhe shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

22 Also thou shalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder: for it is a ram of consecration:

23 ⁿAnd one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread, that is before the LORD.

24 And thou shalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his sons; and shalt [†]wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 ⁿAnd thou shalt receive them of their hands,

30 And [†]that son that is priest in his stead shall put them on ⁿseven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation to minister in the holy place.

31 [¶]And thou shalt take the ram of the consecration, and ^kseethe his flesh in the holy place.

32 And Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram, and the ⁿbread that is in the basket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

33 And ^mthey shall eat those things wherewith the atonement was made, to consecrate and to sanctify them: ⁿbut a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy.

34 And if aught of the flesh of the consecrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then ⁿthou shalt burn the remainder with fire: it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.

35 And thus shalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: ⁿseven days shalt thou consecrate them.

36 And thou shalt offer every day a bullock for a sin-offering for atonement; and thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, ⁿand thou shalt anoint it, to sanctify it.

37 Seven days thou shalt make an atonement for the altar, and sanctify it; ⁿand it shall be an altar most holy: ⁿwhatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy.

38 [¶]Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; ⁿtwo lambs of the first year ⁿday by day continually.

39 The one lamb thou shalt offer ⁿin the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even:

40 And with the one lamb a tenth-deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil: and the fourth part of an hin of wine for a drink-offering.

41 And the other lamb thou shalt offer at even, and shalt do thereto according to the meat-offering of the morning, and according to the drink-offering thereof, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

42 This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD: ⁿwhere I will meet you to speak there unto thee.

43 And there I will meet with the children of Israel; and [¶]the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory.

44 And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office.

45 ¶ And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and I will be their God.

46 And they shall know that I am the LORD their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the LORD their God.

CHAP. XXX.

¹ The altar of incense. 11 The ransom of souls. 17 The brazen laver
22 The holy anointing oil. 34 The composition of the perfume.

AND thou shalt make an altar ^ato burn incense upon: of shittim-wood shalt thou make it.

2 A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof; four-square shall it be; and two cubits shall be the height thereof: the horns thereof shall be of the same.

3 And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, the top thereof, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns thereof; and thou shalt make unto it a crown of gold round about.

4 And two golden rings shalt thou make to it under the crown of it, by the two corners thereof, upon the two sides of it shalt thou make it; and they shall be for places for the staves to bear it withal.

5 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold.

6 And thou shalt put it before the vail that is by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy-seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with thee.

7 And Aaron shall burn thereon [†] sweet incense every morning: when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it.

8 And when Aaron ^{||} lighteth the lamps [†] at even, he shall burn incense upon it; a perpetual incense before the LORD, throughout your generations.

9 Ye shall offer no [†] strange incense thereon, nor burnt-sacrifice, nor meat-offering; neither shall ye pour drink-offering thereon.

10 And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year, with the blood of the sin-offering of atonements: once in the year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the LORD.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after [†] their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul unto the LORD, when thou numberest them: that there be no [†] plague among them when thou numberest them.

13 This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary: (^a a shekel is twenty gerahs:) an half shekel shall be the offering of the LORD.

14 Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD to make an atonement for your souls.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement-money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein.

19 For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands with their feet thereat:

20 When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not: or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD:

21 So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not: and it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations.

22 Moreover, the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Take thou also unto thee principal spices, of pure myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty shekels,

24 And of cassia five hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil-olive an hin:

25 And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the apothecary: it shall be an holy anointing oil.

26 And thou shalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony,

27 And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense, 28 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy: whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy.

30 And thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

31 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be an holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations.

32 Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured, neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you.

33 Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, shall even be cut off from his people.

34 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum; these sweet spices, with pure frankincense: of each shall there be a like weight:

35 And thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy:

36 And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before the testimony in the tabernacle of the congregation, where I will meet with thee: it shall be unto you most holy.

37 And as for the perfume which thou shalt make, ye shall not make to yourselves according to the composition thereof: it shall be unto thee holy for the LORD.

38 Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall even be cut off from his people.

CHAP. XXXI.

2 Bezaleel and Aholiab are called, and made meet for the work of the tabernacle.
12 The observation of the sabbath is again commanded. 18 Moses receiveth the two tables.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah:

3 And I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship,

4 To devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass,

5 And in cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship.

6 And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan; and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom; that they may make all that I have commanded thee:

7 The tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle,

8 And the table and his furniture, and the pure candlestick with all his furniture, and the altar of incense,

9 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, and the laver and his foot,

10 And the clothes of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office, 11 And the anointing oil, and sweet incense for the holy place: according to all that I have commanded thee shall they do.

12 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

13 Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the LORD that doth sanctify you.

14 Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore: for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

15 Six days may work be done, but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the LORD: whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day he shall surely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

17 It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed.

18 And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.

CHAP. XXXII.

1 The people, in the absence of Moses, cause Aaron to make a calf. 15 Moses cometh down with the tables. 19 He breaketh them. 20 He destroyeth the calf. 30 He prayeth for the people.

AND when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden ear-rings which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me.

3 And all the people brake off the golden ear-rings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron.

4 And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf: and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the LORD.

6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

7 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go, get thee down: for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves:

8 They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people:

10 Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation.

11 And Moses besought the LORD his God, and said, LORD, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 Wherefore should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

15 And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

17 And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

19 And it came to pass as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

20 And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

21 And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?

22 And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief.

23 For they said unto me, "Make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf.

25 ¶ And when Moses saw that the people were naked, (for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame among † their enemies,)

26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the LORD's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

27 And he said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.

29 ¶ For Moses had said, † Consecrate yourselves to-day to the LORD, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the LORD; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses returned unto the LORD, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold.

32 Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin: and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written.

33 And the LORD said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: Behold, mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them.

35 And the LORD plagued the people, because they made the calf which Aaron made.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1 The Lord refuseth to go, as he had promised, with the people. 9 The Lord talketh familiarly with Moses. 12 Moses desireth to see the glory of God.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Depart and go up hence, thou and the people which thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt, unto the land which I swear unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, Unto thy seed will I give it:

2 And I will send an angel before thee; and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite:

3 Unto a land flowing with milk and honey: for I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiff-necked people: lest I consume thee in the way.

4 ¶ And when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned: and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people: I will come up into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb.

Ps. 139, 23.

7 And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp afar off from the camp, and called it the Tabernacle of the Congregation. And it came to pass, that every one which sought the LORD, went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp.

8 And it came to pass when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, and stood every man at his tent-door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle.

9 And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the LORD talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent-door.

11 And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp; but his servant Joshua the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, See, thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, shew me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people.

14 And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.

15 And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence the morning unto mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me in the top of the mount.

3 And no man shall come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount: neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

4 And he hewed two tables of stone, like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

5 And the LORD descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD passed by before him, and proclaimed, The LORD, The LORD God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth,

7 Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 And Moses made haste, and bowed his head toward the earth, and worshipped.

9 And he said, If I now have found grace in thy sight, O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go among us (for it is a stiff-necked people), and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thine inheritance.

10 And he said, Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among which thou art shall see the work of the LORD: for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 Observe thou that which I command thee this day: Behold, I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite.

12 Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, lest it be for a snare in the midst of thee:

13 But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves:

14 For thou shalt worship no other god: for the LORD, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God:

15 Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice;

16 And thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods.

17 Thou shalt make thee no molten gods.

18 The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.

19 All that openeth the matrix is mine: and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male.

20 But the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All the first-born of thy sons thou shalt redeem. And none shall appear before me empty.

21 Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing-time and in harvest thou shalt rest.

22 And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the year's end.

23 Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the Lord God, the God of Israel.

24 For I will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall any man desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God thrice in the year.

25 Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven, neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left until the morning.

26 The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

27 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee, and with Israel.

28 And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.

29 And it came to pass when Moses came down from mount Sinai (with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount) that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone, while he talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a vail on his face.

34 But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the vail off, until he came out. And he came out and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with Him.

CHAP. XXXV.

1 The sabbath. 4 The free gifts for the tabernacle. 30 Bezaceel and Aholiab are called to the work.

AND Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should do them.

2 Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day.

4 And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair;

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood,

8 And oil for the light, and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breast-plate.

10 And every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the LORD hath commanded;

11 The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets;

12 The ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the vail of the covering;

13 The table, and his staves, and all his vessels, and the shew-bread;

14 The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light;

15 And the incense-altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle;

16 The altar of burnt-offering, with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

17 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court;

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords;

19 The clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

20 And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And every man with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought the LORD's offering: and every man with whom was found shittim-wood for any work of the service, brought it.

25 And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' hair.

27 And the rulers brought onyx-stones, and stones to be set, for the ephod, and for the breast-plate;

28 And spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.

29 The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring, for all manner of work which the LORD had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.

30 And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;

31 And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship;

32 And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, 33 And in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan.

35 Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work.

CHAP. XXXVI.

The offerings are delivered to the workmen.

THEN wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the LORD put wisdom and understanding to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the sanctuary, according to all that the LORD had commanded.

2 And Moses called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom, even every one whose heart stirred him up to come unto the work to do it:

3 And they received of Moses all the offering which the children of Israel had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free-offerings every morning.

4 And all the wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made;

5 And they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.

8 And every wise-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he coupled the five curtains one unto another: and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain from the selvedge in the coupling: likewise he made in the uttermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

12 Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second: the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches. So it became one tabernacle.

14 And he made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle: eleven curtains he made them.

wood: the length of it was a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit; it was four-square; and two cubits was the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the staves of shittim-wood and overlaid them with gold.

29 ¶ And he made ^athe holy anointing oil, and the pure incense of sweet spices, according to the work of the apothecary.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

¹ The altar of burnt-offering. ⁸ The laver of brass.

AND ^ahe made the altar of burnt-offering of shittim-wood: five cubits was the length thereof, and five cubits the breadth thereof; it was four-square; and three cubits the height thereof.

2 And he made the horns thereof on the four corners of it; the horns thereof were of the same: and he overlaid it with brass.

3 And he made all the vessels of the altar, the pots, and the shovels, and the basins, and the flesh-hooks, and the fire-pans: all the vessels thereof made he of brass.

4 And he made for the altar a brazen grate of net-work under the compass thereof beneath unto the midst of it.

5 And he cast four rings for the four ends of the grate of brass, to be places for the staves.

6 And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with brass.

7 And he put the staves into the rings on the sides of the altar, to bear it withal; he made the altar hollow with boards.

8 ¶ And he made ^athe laver of brass, and the foot of it of brass, of the ^blooking-glasses of the women ^cassembling, which assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

9 ¶ And he made ^athe court: on the south side southward the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, an hundred cubits:

10 Their pillars were twenty, and their brazen sockets twenty; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, were of silver.

11 And for the north side, the hangings were an hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty: the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver.

12 And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver.

13 And for the east side eastward fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of the one side of the gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And for the other side of the court-gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 All the hangings of the court round about were of fine twined linen.

17 And the sockets for the pillars were of brass; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver; and the overlaying of their chapiters of silver; and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver.

18 And the hanging for the gate of the court was needle-work, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: and twenty cubits was the length, and the height in the breadth was five cubits, answerable to the hangings of the court.

19 And their pillars were four, and their sockets of brass four; their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their chapiters and their fillets of silver.

20 And all the ^apins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of brass.

21 ¶ This is the sum of the tabernacle, even of the tabernacle of testimony, as it was counted, according to the commandment of Moses, for the service of the Levites, ^aby the hand of Ithamar, son to Aaron the priest.

22 And ^aBezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the LORD commanded Moses.

23 And with him was Aholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, an engraver, and a cunning workman, and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and fine linen.

24 All the gold that was occupied for the work in all the work of the holy place, even the gold of the offering, was twenty and nine talents, and seven hundred and thirty shekels, after ^athe shekel of the sanctuary.

25 And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation was an hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred and threescore and fifteen shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary:

26 ^aA bekah for [†]every man, that is, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for every one that went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upward, for ^asix hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty men.

27 And of the hundred talents of silver were cast ^athe sockets of the sanctuary, and the sockets of the vail; an hundred sockets of the hundred talents, a talent for a socket.

28 And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them.

29 And the brass of the offering was seventy talents, and two thousand and four hundred shekels.

30 And therewith he made the sockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the brazen altar, and the brazen grate for it, and all the vessels of the altar,

31 And the sockets of the court round about, and the sockets of the court-gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

CHAP. XXXIX.

The clothes of service, and holy garments, viewed and approved by Moses.

AND of ^athe blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made ^aclothes of service, to do service in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; ^aas the LORD commanded Moses.

2 ^aAnd he made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

3 And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in the scarlet, and in the fine linen, with cunning work.

4 They made shoulder-pieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod, that was upon it, was of the same, according to the work thereof; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the LORD commanded Moses.

6 ¶ And they wrought onyx-stones inclosed in ouches of gold, graven as signets are graven, with the names of the children of Israel.

7 And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a memorial to the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses.

8 ¶ And he made the breast-plate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was four-square; they made the breast-plate double: a span was the length thereof, and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled.

10 And they set it in four rows of stones: the first row was a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the first row.

11 And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper: they were inclosed in ouches of gold in their inclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

15 And they made upon the breast-plate chains at the ends, of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings, and put the two rings in the two ends of the breast-plate.

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breast-plate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breast-plate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod:

21 And they did bind the breast-plate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breast-plate might not be loosed from the ephod; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was the midst of the robe, as the hole of an habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates;

26 A bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in; as the LORD commanded Moses.

27 ¶ And they made coats of fine lincn, of woven work, for Aaron and for his sons,

28 And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine twined linen,

29 And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needle-work; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 ¶ And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 ¶ Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

33 ¶ And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, the tent, and all his furniture, his taches, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets;

34 And the covering of rams' skins dyed red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the vail of the covering;

35 The ark of the testimony, and the staves thereof, and the mercy-seat;

36 The table, and all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread;

37 The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order, and all the vessels thereof, and the oil for light;

38 And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the tabernacle-door;

39 The brazen altar, and his grate of brass, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

40 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and his sockets, and the hanging for the court-gate, his cords, and his pins, and all the vessels of the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation;

41 The clothes of service to do service in the holy place, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office.

42 According to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work.

43 And Moses did look upon all the work, and behold, they had done it as the LORD had commanded, even so had they done it: and Moses blessed them.

CHAP. XL.

1 The tabernacle is commanded to be reared. 13 Aaron and his sons to be sanctified. 34 A cloud covereth the tabernacle.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

3 And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the vail.

4 And thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order the things that are to be set in order upon it; and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof.

5 And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

6 And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt-offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

7 And thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein.

8 And thou shalt set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court-gate.

9 And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and shalt hallow it, and all the vessels thereof: and it shall be holy.

10 And thou shalt anoint the altar of the burnt-offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and it shall be an altar most holy.

11 And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it.

12 And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water.

13 And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

14 And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office: for their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

16 Thus did Moses; according to all that the LORD commanded him, so did he.

17 And it came to pass in the first month, in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the LORD commanded Moses.

20 And he took and put the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the mercy-seat above upon the ark:

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the vail.

33 And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court-gate: so Moses finished the work.

34 Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys:

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

CHAP. I.

1 The burnt-offerings. 3 Of the herd, 10 of the flocks, 14 of the fowls.

AND the LORD called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you bring an offering unto the LORD, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

3 If his offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a male without blemish: he shall offer it of his own voluntary will at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD.

4 And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him.

5 And he shall kill the bullock before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

CHAP. II.

The meat-offering of flour with oil and incense.

AND when any will offer ⁴a meat-offering unto the LORD, his offering shall be of fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon:

2 And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests: and he shall take thereout his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof, and the priest shall burn ⁵the memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD:

3 And ⁶the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

4 ¶ And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baken in the oven, it shall be unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers ⁷anointed with oil.

5 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken ⁸in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil.

6 Thou shalt part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon: it is a meat-offering.

7 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken in the frying-pan, it shall be made of fine flour with oil.

8 And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the LORD: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar.

9 And the priest shall take from the meat-offering a memorial ⁹thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And ¹⁰that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy, of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

11 No meat-offering which ye shall bring unto the LORD shall be made with ¹¹leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the LORD made by fire.

12 ¶ As for the oblation of the first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the LORD: but they shall not ¹²be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour.

13 And every oblation of thy meat-offering ¹³shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer ¹⁴the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: ¹⁵with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

fruits unto the LORD, ¹⁶thou shalt offer for the meat-offering of thy first-fruits, green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of ¹⁷full ears.

15 And ¹⁸thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering.

16 And the priest shall burn ¹⁹the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

CHAP. III.

1 The peace-offering of the herd. 6 of the flock.

AND if his oblation be a ²⁰sacrifice of peace-offering, if he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female; he shall offer it ²¹without blemish before the LORD.

2 And ²²he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons the priests shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

3 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering, an offering made by fire unto the LORD; ²³the ²⁴fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the ²⁵caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

5 And Aaron's sons shall burn it on the altar, upon the burnt-sacrifice, which is upon the wood that is on the fire: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And if his offering for a sacrifice of peace-offering unto the LORD be of the flock, male or female; ²⁶he shall offer it without blemish.

7 If he offer a lamb for his offering, then shall he offer it before the LORD.

8 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons shall sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

9 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering an offering made by fire unto the LORD: the fat thereof, and the whole rump, (it shall he take off hard by the backbone;) and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

10 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

11 And the priest shall burn it upon the altar: it is ²⁷the food of the offering made by fire unto the LORD.

12 ¶ And if his offering be a goat, then ²⁸he shall offer it before the LORD.

13 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of it, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and the sons of Aaron shall sprinkle the blood thereof upon the altar round about.

14 And he shall offer thereof his offering, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

15 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

16 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire for a sweet savour: ²⁹all the fat is the LORD's.

17 It shall be a ³⁰perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither ³¹fat nor ³²blood.

CHAP. IV.

1 The sin-offering of ignorance. 3 for the priest. 27 for any of the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, 'If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them:

3 'If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people; then let him bring for his sin which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto the LORD for a sin-offering.

4 And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the LORD.

5 And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation:

6 And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the LORD, before the vail of the sanctuary.

7 And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the LORD, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And he shall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the sin-offering; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

9 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away,

10 As it was taken off from the bullock of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of the burnt-offering.

11 And the skin of the bullock, and all his flesh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung;

12 Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn him on the wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall he be burnt.

13 And if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty;

14 When the sin which they have sinned against it is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the LORD: and the bullock shall be killed before the LORD.

16 And the priest that is anointed shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation:

17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, even before the vail.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

21 And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

22 ¶ When a ruler hath sinned, and done somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD his God concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty;

23 Or if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish:

25 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 ¶ And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, while he doeth somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty;

28 Or if his sin which he hath sinned come to his knowledge: then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

29 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay the sin-offering in the place of the burnt-offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

31 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour unto the LORD; and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish.

33 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay it for a sin-offering in the place where they kill the burnt-offering.

34 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar:

35 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the sacrifice of the peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn them upon the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: and the priest shall make an atonement for his sin that he hath committed, and it shall be forgiven him.

CHAP. V.

14 The trespass-offering in sacrilege, 17 and in sins of ignorance.

AND if a soul sin, "and hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it: if he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity.

2 Or if a soul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcass of an unclean beast, or a carcass of unclean cattle, or the carcass of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he also shall be unclean, and "guilty.

3 Or if he touch the uncleanness of man, whatsoever uncleanness it be that a man shall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty.

4 Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.

5 And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing:

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

7 And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD; one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder:

9 And he shall sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the manner: and the priest shall make an atonement for him for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 ¶ But if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; then he that sinned shall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a sin-offering; he shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon: for it is a sin-offering.

12 Then shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

13 And the priest shall make an atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him: and the remnant shall be the priest's, as a meat-offering.

14 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

15 ¶ If a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, in the holy things of the LORD; then he shall bring for his trespass unto the LORD a ram without blemish out of the flocks, with thy estimation by shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass-offering:

he hath done in the holy thing, and shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering, and it shall be forgiven him.

17 ¶ And if a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity.

18 And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred and wist it not, and it shall be forgiven him.

19 It is a trespass-offering: he hath certainly trespassed against the LORD.

CHAP. VI.

1 The trespass-offering for sins done wittingly. 19 The offering at the consecration of a priest. 24 The law of the sin-offering.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the LORD, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour;

3 Or have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and sweareth falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein:

4 Then it shall be, because he hath sinned and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found,

5 Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely; he shall even restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his trespass-offering.

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering, unto the priest:

7 And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it shall be forgiven him for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: it is the burnt-offering, because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.

10 And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he shall put them beside the altar.

11 And he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar shall be burning in it; it shall not be put out: and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it; and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out.

14 ¶ And this is the law of the meat-offering.

The sons of Aaron shall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he shall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it, unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be baken with leaven. I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire. It is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it. It shall be a statute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

22 And the priest of his sons that is anointed in his stead shall offer it: It is a statute for ever unto the LORD; it shall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

24 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is most holy.

26 The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

29 All the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy.

30 And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

CHAP. VII.

1 The law of the trespass-offering, 11 and of the peace-offerings. 22 The fat, 26 and the blood, are forbidden. 23 The priest's portion in the peace-offerings.

LIKEWISE this is the law of the trespass-offering: it is most holy.

2 In the place where they kill the burnt-offering shall they kill the trespass-offering: and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away:

5 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a trespass-offering.

6 Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy.

7 As the sin-offering is, so is the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying-pan, and in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the LORD.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering, leavened bread, with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for an heave-offering unto the LORD, and it shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten:

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

22 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in no wise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people.

26 ^aMoreover, ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, "He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD, shall bring his oblation unto the LORD of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 ^bHis own hands shall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that ^cthe breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 ^dAnd the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: ^e'but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.

32 And ^fthe right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an heave-offering of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part.

34 For ^gthe wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 ¶ This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office;

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, ^hin the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations.

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, ⁱof the meat-offering, ^jand of the sin-offering, ^kand of the trespass-offering, ^land of the consecrations, and ^mof the sacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the LORD commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel ⁿto offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Moses consecrateth Aaron and his sons. 31 The place and time of their consecration.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 ^aTake Aaron and his sons with him, and ^bthe garments, and ^cthe anointing oil, and a bullock ^dfor the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread;

3 And gather thou all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And Moses did as the LORD commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

5 And Moses said unto the congregation, ^e"This is the thing which the LORD commanded to be done.

6 And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water.

7 ^fAnd he put upon him the ^gcoat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it upon him therewith.

8 And he put the breast-plate upon him: also he ^{ak}put in the breast-plate the Urim and the Thummim.

9 ^{al}And he put the mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even upon his forefront, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD ^{am}commanded Moses.

10 ^{an}And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them.

11 And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.

12 And he ^{ao}poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him.

13 ^{ap}And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and ^{aq}put bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moses.

14 ^{ar}And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons ^{as}laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.

15 And he slew it; ^{at}and Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 ^{au}And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul ^{av}above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock, and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD ^{aw}commanded Moses.

18 ¶ And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces; and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; ^{ax}as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And ^{ay}he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 ^{az}And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul ^{ba}above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder:

26 ^{bb}And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the LORD, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder:

27 And he put all ^{bc}upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

28 ^{bd}And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt-offering:

they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

29 And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the LORD: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' part; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his sons' garments with him.

31 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron and to his sons, Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days shall he consecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, so the LORD hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night seven days, and keep the charge of the LORD, that ye die not: for so I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his sons did all things which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

CHAP. IX.

1 The first offerings of Aaron for himself and the people. 23 Moses and Aaron bless the people. 24 Fire cometh from the Lord upon the altar.

AND it came to pass on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; and a meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you.

5 ¶ And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the LORD.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the LORD shall appear unto you.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 ¶ Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar:

10 But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the sin-offering, he burnt upon the altar; as the LORD commanded Moses.

11 And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.

12 And he slew the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar.

15 ¶ And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat, which was the sin-offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

16 And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it according to the manner.

17 And he brought the meat-offering, and took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, besides the burnt-sacrifice of the morning.

18 He slew also the bullock and the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which was for the people: and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled upon the altar round about,

19 And the fat of the bullock, and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver:

20 And they put the fat upon the breasts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved for a wave-offering before the LORD; as Moses commanded.

22 And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them; and came down from offering of the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and blessed the people: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the people.

24 And there came a fire out from before the LORD, and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering and the fat: which when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces.

CHAP. X.

1 Nadab and Abihu, for offering of strange fire, are burnt by fire. 8 The priests are forbidden wine when they are to go into the tabernacle.

AND Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the LORD, which he commanded them not.

2 And there went out fire from the LORD, and devoured them, and they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said.

6 And Moses said unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his sons, Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; lest ye die, and lest wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which the LORD hath kindled.

7 ^mAnd ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: ⁿfor the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, saying,

9 ⁿDo not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations:

10 And that ye may ⁿput difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean;

11 ⁿAnd that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the LORD hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

12 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take ⁿthe meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: for it is most holy:

13 And ye shall eat it in the holy place, because it is thy due, and thy sons' due, of the sacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for ⁿso I am commanded.

14 And ⁿthe wave-breast and heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Israel.

15 ⁿThe heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 ¶ And Moses diligently sought ⁿthe goat of the sin-offering, and behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying,

17 ⁿWherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, ⁿthe blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, ⁿas I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, ⁿthis day have they offered their sin-offering, and their burnt-offering before the LORD; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, ⁿshould it have been accepted in the sight of the LORD?

20 And when Moses heard that, he was content.

CHAP. XI.

2 What beasts may, 4 and what may not be eaten. 9 What fishes. 13 What fowls. 29 The creeping things which are unclean.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying unto them,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, ⁿThese are the beasts which ye shall eat among all the beasts that are on the earth.

3 Whatsoever parteth the hoof, and is cloven-footed, and cheweth the cud among the beasts, that shall ye eat.

4 Nevertheless, these shall ye not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: as the camel, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.

8 Of their flesh shall ye not eat, and their carcass shall ye not touch; they are unclean to you.

9 ¶ These shall ye eat, of all that are in the waters; whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat.

10 And all that have not fins nor scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, they shall be an ⁿabomination unto you:

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcasses in abomination.

12 Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you.

13 ¶ And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls; they shall not be eaten, they are an abomination: the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray,

14 And the vulture, and the kite after his kind;

15 Every raven after his kind;

16 And the owl, and the night-hawk, and the cuckoo, and the hawk after his kind,

17 And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl,

18 And the swan, and the pelican, and the gier-eagle, 19 And the stork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

20 All fowls that creep, going upon all four, shall be an abomination unto you.

21 Yet these may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth;

22 Even these of them ye may eat; ⁿthe locust after his kind, and the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, shall be an abomination unto you.

27 And whatsoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beasts that go on all four, those are unclean unto you: whoso toucheth their carcass shall be unclean until the even.

28 And he that beareth the carcass of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

29 ¶ These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and ⁿthe mouse, and the tortoise after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole.

31 These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they be dead, shall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, 'it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed.

33 And every earthen vessel, whereinto any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and ye shall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel, shall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcass fall upon any sowing-seed which is to be sown, it shall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the seed, and any part of their carcass fall thereon, it shall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beast, of which ye may eat, die; he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcass of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even; he also that beareth the carcass of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever †hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye shall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth;

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten and the beast that may not be eaten.

4 And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

5 But if she bear a maid-child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying three-score and six days.

6 And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb †of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle-dove, for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest:

7 Who shall offer it before the LORD, and make an atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath borne a male or a female.

8 And if †she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: and the priest shall make an atone- ment for her, and she shall be clean.

CHAP. XIII.

The laws and tokens whereby the priest is to be guided in discerning the leprosy.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying,

2 When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh a †rising, †a scab, or bright spot, and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests:

3 And the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him, and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days:

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more:

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is but a scab: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing, he shall be seen of the priest again:

8 And if the priest see, that behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprosy.

9 †When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest:

10 And the priest shall see him: and behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be †quick raw flesh in the rising:

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up: for he is unclean.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his foot, wheresoever the priest looketh;

13 Then the priest shall consider: and behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy.

16 Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be changed into white, he shall come unto the priest;

17 And the priest shall see him: and behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 ¶ The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a 'boil, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be shewed to the priest;

20 And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the priest look on it, and behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague.

23 But if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

24 ¶ Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is †a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish, or white;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it: and behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning: wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

27 And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day: and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 ¶ If a man or woman have a plague upon the head or the beard;

30 Then the priest shall see the plague: and behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and behold, it be not in sight deeper than the skin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days:

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin;

33 He shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more:

34 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight at a stay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 ¶ If a man also or a woman have in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white; it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 And the man whose †hair is fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald; yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh;

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall 'put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, 'Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone, 'without the camp shall his habitation be.

47 ¶ The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment;

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof, of linen, or of woollen: whether in a skin, or in any †thing made of skin:

49 And if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any †thing of skin; it is a plague of leprosy, and shall be shewed unto the priest:

50 And the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up it that hath the plague seven days:

51 And he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin; the plague is 'a fretting leprosy; it is unclean.

52 He shall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burnt in the fire.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

29 And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand, he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he shall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get;

31 Even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed, before the LORD.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, whose hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house:

36 Then the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean; and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house:

37 And he shall look on the plague, and behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house, with hollow streaks, greenish, or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days:

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look; and behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house;

40 Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city:

41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city into an unclean place:

42 And they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

44 Then the priest shall come and look; and behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean.

45 And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house: and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover, he that goeth into the house all the while that it is shut up, shall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes: and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes.

48 And if the priest shall come in, and look upon it, and behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered: then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed.

49 And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop:

50 And he shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel, over running water:

51 And he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip

CHAP. XV.

1 The uncleanness of men in their issues. 19 The uncleanness of women in their issues.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue, he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

4 Every bed whereon he lieth that hath the issue, is unclean: and every *†*thing whereon he sitteth, shall be unclean.

5 And whosoever toucheth his bed, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

6 And he that sitteth on any thing whereon he sat that hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

7 And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

8 And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean; then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

9 And what saddle soever he rideth upon that hath the issue, shall be unclean.

10 And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him, shall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of those things, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

11 And whomsoever he toucheth that hath the issue (and hath not rinsed his hands in water) he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the vessel of earth that he toucheth which hath the issue, shall be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water.

13 And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue; then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the priest:

15 And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD for his issue.

16 And if any man's seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall wash all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every skin whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The woman also with whom man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 ¶ And if a woman have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be put apart seven days: and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even.

20 And every thing that she lieth upon in her separation shall be unclean: every thing also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean.

21 And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sat upon shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it he shall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days: and all the bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days out of the time of her separation, or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation; she shall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation: and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the LORD for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness: that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith;

33 And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her that is unclean.

Luke 1. 10.

Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat.

3 Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering.

4 He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with a linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his house.

7 And he shall take the two goats, and present them before the LORD at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the scape-goat.

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the LORD's lot fell, and offer him for a sin-offering.

10 But the goat on which the lot fell to be the scape-goat, shall be presented alive before the LORD to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself:

12 And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail:

13 And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony that he die not.

14 And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward; and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.

15 Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat:

16 And he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness.

17 And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.

18 And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the LORD, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

20 ¶ And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness:

22 And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness.

23 And Aaron shall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there:

24 And he shall wash his flesh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himself, and for the people.

25 And the fat of the sin-offering shall he burn upon the altar.

26 And he that let go the goat for the scape-goat shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward come into the camp.

27 And the bullock for the sin-offering, and the goat for the sin-offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, shall one carry forth without the camp; and they shall burn in the fire their skins, and their flesh, and their dung.

28 And he that burneth them shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp.

29 ¶ And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you:

30 For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the LORD.

31 It shall be a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls by a statute for ever.

32 And the priest whom he shall anoint, and whom he shall consecrate to minister in the priest's office in his father's stead, shall make the atonement, and shall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments:

33 And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar: and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation.

34 And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year. And he did as the LORD commanded Moses.

¶ Heb. 9.7, 25.

This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, saying,

3 What man soever there be of the house of Israel, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp,

4 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the LORD before the tabernacle of the LORD: blood shall be imputed unto that man, he hath shed blood, and that man shall be cut off from among his people:

5 To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices which they offer in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest, and offer them for peace-offerings unto the LORD.

6 And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the LORD at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and burn the fat for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

7 And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils, after whom they have gone a whoring: This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 ¶ And thou shalt say unto them, Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, that offereth a burnt-offering or sacrifice, 9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 For it is the life of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.

15 And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, (whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger,) he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh; then he shall bear his iniquity.

1 Unlawful marriages. 19 Unlawful lusts.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, I am the LORD your God.

3 After the doings of the land of Egypt wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do: and after the doings of the land of Canaan whither I bring you, shall ye not do: neither shall ye walk in their ordinances.

4 "Ye shall do my judgments, and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein: I am the LORD your God.

5 Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments: which if a man do, he shall live in them: I am the LORD.

6 ¶None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

7 "The nakedness of thy father, or the nakedness of thy mother, shalt thou not uncover: she is thy mother, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

8 "The nakedness of thy father's wife shalt thou not uncover: it is thy father's nakedness.

9 "The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or daughter of thy mother, whether she be born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover.

10 The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for theirs is thine own nakedness.

11 The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, (she is thy sister) thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

12 "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman.

13 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman.

14 "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt.

15 "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law: she is thy son's wife, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

16 "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: it is thy brother's nakedness.

17 "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen: it is wickedness.

18 Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, besides the other in her life-time.

19 "Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness.

20 Moreover, thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her.

21 And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

22 "Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 "Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith: neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is confusion.

24 "Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you:

25 And the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 "Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abomi-

CHAP. XIX.

A repetition of sundry laws.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, "Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 ¶Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my sabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 ¶Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 ¶And if ye offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, ye shall offer it at your own will.

6 It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if aught remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable; it shall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

9 ¶And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to "defile my sanctuary, and "to profane my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and "kill him not;

5 Then I will set my face against that man, and "against his family, and will cut him off, and all that "go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 ¶ And "the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people.

7 ¶ Sanctify yourselves therefore and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God.

8 "And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: "I am the LORD which sanctify you.

9 ¶ For every one that curseth his father or his mother, shall be surely put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother: "his blood shall be upon him.

10 ¶ And "the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

11 "And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death: their blood shall be upon them.

12 "And if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought confusion; their blood shall be upon them.

13 "If a man also lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

14 "And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they: that there be no wickedness among you.

15 "And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman and the beast; they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

17 "And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness: it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity.

18 "And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness; he hath † discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people.

19 "And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister: "for he uncovereth his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.

20 "And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin; they shall die childless.

21 "And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is † an unclean thing: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness; they shall be childless.

22 ¶ Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein, spue you not out.

23 ^a And ye shall not walk in the manners of the nations which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But ^a I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the LORD your God, which have separated you from other people.

25 ^m Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean: ^a and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean.

26 And ye shall be holy unto me: ^a for I the LORD am holy, and ^a have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine.

27 ¶ A man also, or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones: their blood shall be upon them.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Of the priest's mourning. 7, 13 Of their marriages.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none be defiled for the dead, among his people:

2 But for his kin, that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother,

3 And for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband: for her may he be defiled.

4 But he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people, to profane himself.

5 ^a They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh.

6 They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and the bread of their God they do offer: therefore they shall be holy.

7 ^a They shall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God.

8 Thou shalt sanctify him therefore, for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the LORD, which sanctify you, am holy.

9 ¶ And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire.

10 ^a And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes;

11 Neither shall he ^m go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother;

12 ^a Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the LORD.

13 And ^a he shall take a wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or an harlot, these shall he not take: but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither shall he profane his seed among his people: for ^a I the LORD do sanctify him.

19 Or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed,

20 Or crook-backed, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or be scurvy, or scabbed, or hath his stones broken;

21 No man that hath a blemish of the seed of Aaron the priest shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire; he hath a blemish, he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God.

22 He shall eat the bread of his God, both of the most holy, and of the holy.

23 Only he shall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that ^a he profane not my sanctuaries: for I the LORD do sanctify them.

24 And Moses told it unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXII.

The priests in their uncleanness must abstain from the holy things.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that they profane not my holy name in those things which they hallow unto me: I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, Whosoever he be of all your seed among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from my presence: I am the LORD.

4 What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running issue; he shall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And ^a whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or ^a a man whose seed goeth from him;

5 Or whosoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or ^a a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath:

6 The soul which hath touched any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he wash his flesh with water.

7 And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things, because ^m it is his food.

8 ^a That which dieth of itself, or is torn with beasts, he shall not eat to defile himself therewith: I am the LORD.

9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the LORD do sanctify them.

10 ^a There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest buy any soul with his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house: ^a they shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also be married unto ^a a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's house, 'as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat; but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 ¶ And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest, with the holy thing.

15 And 'they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel which they offer unto the LORD:

16 Or 'suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things: for I the LORD do sanctify them.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, 'Whatsoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering:

19 'Ye shall offer at your own will a male without blemish of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 'But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you.

21 And 'whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD to accomplish his vow, or a free-will-offering in beeves, or 'sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted: there shall be no blemish therein.

22 'Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make 'an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock, or a 'lamb that hath any thing 'superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer for a free-will-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted.

24 Ye shall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut; neither shall ye make any offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither 'from a stranger's hand shall ye offer 'the bread of your God of any of these; because their 'corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them: they shall not be accepted for you.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 'When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day and thenceforth it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And whether it be cow, or 'ewe, ye shall not kill it 'and her young both in one day.

29 And when ye will 'offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving unto the LORD, offer it at your own will.

30 On the same day it shall be eaten up, ye shall leave 'none of it until the morrow: I am the LORD.

31 'Therefore shall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the LORD.

32 'Neither shall ye profane my holy name; but 'I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the LORD which 'hallow you, 33 'That brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD.

3 Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, an holy convocation: ye shall do no work therein: it is the sabbath of the LORD in all your dwellings.

4 ¶ These are the feasts of the LORD, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

5 'In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the LORD's passover.

6 And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread.

7 'In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

8 But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD seven days: in the seventh day is an holy convocation, ye shall do no servile work therein.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, 'When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a 'sheaf of 'the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest:

11 And he shall 'wave the sheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it.

12 And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf, an he-lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

13 'And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour: and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin.

14 And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

15 ¶ And 'ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete:

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number 'fifty days; and ye shall offer 'a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth-deals: they shall be of fine flour, they shall be baked with leaven, they are 'the first-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire of sweet savour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye shall sacrifice 'one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of 'peace-offerings.

20 And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: 'they shall be holy to the LORD for the priest.

21 And ye shall proclaim on the self-same day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 ¶ And 'when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, 'neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them unto the poor, and to the stranger: I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the "seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, "a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 "Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement; it shall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye shall do no work in that same day; for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

29 For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, "he shall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, "the same soul will I destroy from among his people.

31 Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye †celebrate your sabbath.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, "The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the LORD.

35 On the first day shall be an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD; "on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a †solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein.

37 "These are the feasts of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Besides the sabbaths of the LORD, and besides your gifts, and besides all your vows, and besides all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have "gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath.

40 And "ye shall take you on the first day the †boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; "and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days.

41 "And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month.

42 "Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths:

brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

44 And Moses "declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the LORD.

CHAP. XXIV.

13 The law of blasphemy. 17 Of murder.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 "Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure oil-olive beaten for the light, †to cause the lamps to burn continually.

3 Without the vail of the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning before the LORD continually: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations.

4 He shall order the lamps upon "the pure candlestick before the LORD continually.

5 ¶ And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth-deals shall be in one cake.

6 And thou shalt set them in two rows, six on a row, "upon the pure table before the LORD.

7 And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

8 "Every sabbath he shall set it in order before the LORD continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant.

9 And "it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; "and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the LORD made by fire by a perpetual statute.

10 ¶ And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp;

11 And the Israelitish woman's son "blasphemed the name of the LORD, and "cursed; and they "brought him unto Moses: (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan:)

12 And they "put him in ward, †"that the mind of the LORD might be shewed them.

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

14 Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him "lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth his God "shall bear his sin.

16 And he that "blasphemeth the name of the LORD, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the LORD, shall be put to death.

17 ¶ And he that †killeth any man shall surely be put to death.

18 "And he that killeth a beast shall make it good; †beast for beast.

19 And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as "he hath done, so shall it be done unto him:

20 Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.

21 "And he that killeth a beast, he shall restore it: "and he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death.

22 Ye shall have "one manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for one of your own country: for I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And Moses spake to the children of Israel, that they should bring forth him that had cursed out of the camp, and stone him with stones: and the children of Israel did as the LORD commanded Moses.

CHAP. XXV.

35 Compassion of the poor. 39 The usage of bondmen. 47 The redemption of servants.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in mount Sinai, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land [†]keep a sabbath unto the LORD.

3 Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof;

4 But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the LORD: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 That which groweth of its own accord of thy harvest, thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes [†]of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land.

6 And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for thy stranger that sojourneth with thee,

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beast that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

8 ¶ And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years.

9 Then shalt thou cause the trumpet [†]of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

10 And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and ^aproclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 And if thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another:

15 According to the number of years after the jubilee, thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Yeshall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God: for I am the LORD your God.

18 ¶ Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.

20 And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow nor gather in our increase:

21 Then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years.

22 And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

23 ¶ The land shall not be sold ^{††}for ever; for the land is mine, for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

25 ¶ If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and [†]himself be able to redeem it;

27 Then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; that he may return unto his possession.

28 But if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.

29 And if a man sell a dwelling-house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold: within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be established for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubilee.

31 But the houses of the villages which have no walls round about them, shall be counted as the fields of the country: they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithstanding the cities of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession shall go out in the year of jubilee; for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold, for it is their perpetual possession.

35 ¶ And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou shalt [†]relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no usury of him, or increase; but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

38 I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 ¶ And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant:

40 But as an hired servant, and as a sojourner he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubilee:

41 And then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and "unto the possession of his fathers shall he return.

42 For they are "my servants which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; they shall not be sold †as bond-men.

43 "Thou shalt not rule over him "with rigour, but "shalt fear thy God.

44 Both thy bond-men, and thy bond-maids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bond-men and bond-maids.

45 Moreover, of "the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession.

46 And "ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession, †they shall be your bond-men for ever: but over your brethren the children of Israel, "ye shall not rule one over another with rigour.

47 ¶ And if a sojourner or a stranger †wax rich by thee, and "thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family:

48 After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may "redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if "he be able, he may redeem himself.

50 And he shall reckon with him that bought him, from the year that he was sold to him, unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years, "according to the time of an hired servant shall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he shall give again the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him: and the other shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight.

54 And if he be not redeemed ¶in these years, then "he shall go out in the year of jubilee, both he, and his children with him.

55 For "unto me the children of Israel are servants, they are my servants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 Of idolatry. 3 A blessing to them that keep the commandments. 14 A curse to those that break them.

YE shall make you "no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a ¶standing image, neither shall ye set up any ¶image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the LORD your God.

2 ¶Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the LORD.

3 ¶If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments, and do them;

4 "Then I will give you rain in due season, "and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit:

5 And "your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing-time; and "ye shall eat your bread to the full, and "dwell in your land safely.

23 And if ye "will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me;

24 "Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

25 And "I will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, "I will send the pestilence among you: and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 "And when I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight: and "ye shall eat and not be satisfied.

27 And "if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me;

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you also "in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

29 And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

30 And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.

31 And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

32 And I will bring the land into desolation: and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it.

33 And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you, I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall, when none pursueth.

37 And they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

38 And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

42 Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God.

45 But I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the LORD.

46 These are the statutes, and judgments, and laws, which the LORD made between him and the children of Israel in mount Sinai by the hand of Moses.

4 And if it be a female, then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels.

5 And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

6 And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver.

7 And if it be from sixty years old and above; if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

9 And if it be a beast whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD, all that any man giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy.

10 He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy.

11 And if it be any unclean beast, of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the LORD, then he shall present the beast before the priest:

The FOURTH Book of Moses, called NUMBERS.

CHAP. I.

1 God commandeth Moses to number the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses "in the wilderness of Sinai, "in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 [†]Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their polls:

3 From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel; thou and Aaron shall number them by their armies.

4 And with you there shall be a man of every tribe; every one head of the house of his fathers.

5 ¶ And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: of the tribe of Reuben; Elizur the son of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

7 Of Judah; Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

8 Of Issachar; Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

9 Of Zebulun; Eliab the son of Helon.

10 Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim; Elishama the son of Ammihud: of Manasseh; Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin; Abidan the son of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan; Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

13 Of Asher; Pagiel the son of Ocran.

14 Of Gad; Eliasaph the son of [†]Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali; Ahira the son of Enan.

16 [†]These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, [†]heads of thousands in Israel.

17 ¶ And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names:

18 And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls.

19 As the LORD commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Israel's eldest son, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

21 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

22 ¶ Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, those that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

23 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

24 ¶ Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thousand six hundred and fifty.

26 ¶ Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

27 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

28 ¶ Of the children of Issachar, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

29 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

30 ¶ Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 ¶ Of the children of Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred.

34 ¶ Of the children of Manasseh, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

35 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Manasseh, were thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

36 ¶ Of the children of Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

37 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Benjamin, were thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

38 ¶ Of the children of Dan, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

39 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

40 ¶ Of the children of Asher, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

41 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Asher, were forty and one thousand and five hundred.

42 ¶ Of the children of Naphtali, throughout their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

43 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

44 ¶ These are those that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men: each one was for the house of his fathers.

45 So were all those that were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Israel;

46 Even all they that were numbered, were ^ⁱsix hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

47 ¶ But the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were not numbered among them.

48 For the LORD had spoken unto Moses, saying,
49 ¶ Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel:

53 ¶ But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony; that there be no ^ⁱwrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: ^ⁱand the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony.

54 And the children of Israel did according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

CHAP. II.

The order of the tribes in their tents.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 ¶ Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of their father's house: † ^ⁱfar off about the tabernacle of the congregation shall they pitch.

3 And on the east side toward the rising of the sun shall they of the standard of the camp of Judah pitch throughout their armies: and Nahshon the son of Amminadab shall be captain of the children of Judah.

4 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

5 And those that do pitch next unto him shall be the tribe of Issachar: and Nethaneel the son of Zuar shall be captain of the children of Issachar.

6 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

7 ¶ Then the tribe of Zebulun: and Eliab the son of Helon shall be captain of the children of Zebulun.

8 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

9 All that were numbered in the camp of Judah were an hundred thousand and fourscore thousand and six thousand and four hundred throughout their armies: ^ⁱthese shall first set forth.

10 ¶ On the south side shall be the standard of the camp of Reuben, according to their armies: and the captain of the children of Reuben shall be Elizur the son of Shedeur.

11 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

12 And those which pitch by him shall be the tribe of Simeon: and the captain of the children of Simeon shall be Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

13 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

14 ¶ Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the sons of Gad shall be Eliasaph the son of Reuel.

15 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and five thousand and six hundred and fifty.

16 All that were numbered in the camp of Reuben were an hundred thousand and fifty and one thousand and four hundred and fifty, throughout their armies: and they shall set forth in the second rank.

17 ¶ Then the tabernacle of the congregation shall set forward with the camp of the Levites, in the midst of the camp: as they encamp, so shall they set forward, every man in his place by their standards.

18 ¶ On the west side shall be the standard of the camp of Ephraim, according to their armies: and the captain of the sons of Ephraim shall be Elishama the son of Ammihud.

19 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty thousand and five hundred.

20 And by him shall be the tribe of Manasseh: and the captain of the children of Manasseh shall be Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

21 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

22 Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the sons of Benjamin shall be Abidan the son of Gideoni.

23 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

24 All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim were an hundred thousand and eight thousand and an hundred, throughout their armies: and they shall go forward in the third rank.

25 ¶ The standard of the camp of Dan shall be on the north side by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan shall be Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

26 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

27 And those that encamp by him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the captain of the children of Asher shall be Pagiel the son of Ocran.

28 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and one thousand and five hundred.

29 ¶ Then the tribe of Naphtali: and the captain of the children of Naphtali shall be Ahira the son of Enan.

30 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and threethousand and four hundred.

31 All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan were an hundred thousand and fifty and seven thousand and six hundred: they shall go hindmost with their standards.

32 ¶ These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel by the house of their fathers: all those that were numbered of the camps throughout their hosts, were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

33 But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did according to all that the LORD commanded Moses: so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

CHAP. III.

5 The Levites are given to the priests for the service of the tabernacle.

THESE also are the generations of Aaron and Moses, in the day that the LORD spake with Moses in mount Sinai.

4 And Nadab and Abihu died before the LORD, when they offered strange fire before the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the sight of Aaron their father.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him.

7 And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the service of the tabernacle.

8 And they shall keep all the instruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle.

9 And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10 And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel, instead of all the first-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites shall be mine;

13 Because all the first-born are mine; for on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the first-born in Israel, both man and beast: mine they shall be: I am the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15 Number the children of Levi after the house of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them.

16 And Moses numbered them according to the *†*word of the LORD, as he was commanded.

17 And these were the sons of Levi, by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18 And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families; Libni, and Shimei.

19 And the sons of Kohath by their families; Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Uzziel.

20 And the sons of Merari by their families; Mahli, and Mushi: these are the families of the Levites, according to the house of their fathers.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them, were seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the tabernacle westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And the charge of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation shall be the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, 26 And the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it, for all the service thereof.

27 ¶ And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28 In the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary.

29 "The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle southward.

30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel.

31 And "their charge shall be "the ark, and "the table, and "the candlestick, and "the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and "the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 ¶ Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihail: "these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward.

36 And † "under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, 37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ "But those that encamp before the tabernacle toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall be Moses, and Aaron and his sons, "keeping the charge of the sanctuary, "for the charge of the children of Israel; and "the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

39 "All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the LORD, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

40 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, "Number all the first-born of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 "And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the LORD) instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbered, as the LORD commanded him, all the first-born among the children of Israel.

43 And all the first-born males by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

45 "Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine: I am the LORD.

46 And for those that are to be "redeemed of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen, of the

CHAP. IV.

1 The age and time of the Levites' service. 17 The office of the priests.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying;

2 Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers;

3 "From thirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 "This shall be the service of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the most holy things.

5 ¶ And when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall come, and his sons, and they shall take down "the covering vail, and cover the "ark of testimony with it:

6 And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it a cloth wholly of blue, and shall put in "the staves thereof.

7 And upon the "table of shew-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to || cover withal: and the continual bread shall be thereon:

8 And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

9 And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the "candlestick of the light, "and his lamps, and his tongs, and his snuff-dishes, and all the oil-vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it:

10 And they shall put it, and all the vessels thereof, within a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon "the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put to the staves thereof:

12 And they shall take all the instruments of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put them on a bar.

13 And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon:

14 And they shall put upon it all the vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, even the censers, the flesh-hooks, and the shovels, and the || basins, all the vessels of the altar; and they shall spread upon it a covering of badgers' skins, and put to the staves of it.

15 And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the vessels of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; after that, 'the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: "but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die. "These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 ¶ And to the office of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest pertaineth "the oil for the light, and the "sweet incense, and "the daily meat-offering, and the "anointing oil, and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

18 Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto "the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden:

20 But they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

21 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

22 Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families;

23 "From thirty years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all that enter in † to perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for ‖ burdens:

25 And "they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and all that is made for them: so shall they serve.

27 At the † appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

28 This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

29 ¶ As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers;

30 "From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the † service, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And "this is the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation; "the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and sockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name ye shall "reckon the instruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

CHAP. V.

5 Restitution is to be made in trespasses. 11 The trial of jealous

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every "leper, and every one that hath an "issue, and whosoever is defiled by the "dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, "in the midst whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, 'When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the LORD, and that person be guilty;

7 ¶ Then they shall confess their sin which they have done: and he shall recompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the LORD, even to the priest; besides ^{the} ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every || offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, shall be his.

10 And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be ^{his} his.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, ^{bringing} iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the LORD:

17 And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water:

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the LORD, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse:

19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness || ^{with} another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse:

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee besides thy husband:

21 Then the priest shall ^{charge} the woman with an oath of cursing, and the priest shall say unto the woman, 'The LORD make thee a curse and an oath among thy people, when the LORD doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to swell;

22 And this water that causeth the curse ^{shall} go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot. ^{And} the woman shall say, Amen, amen:

CHAP. VI.

1 The law of the Nazarites. 22 The form of blessing the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall || ^{separate} themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the LORD:

3 * He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his || separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the † vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his separation there shall no razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he separateth himself unto the LORD, ^{he shall} come at no dead body.

7 * He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die: because the † consecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his separation he is holy unto the LORD.

9 And if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration; then he shall ^{shave} his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it.

10 And ^{on} the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

11 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he sinned by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day.

12 And he shall consecrate unto the LORD the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year ^{for} a trespass-offering: but the days that were before shall [†]be lost, because his separation was defiled.

13 ¶ And this is the law of the Nazarite: 'When the days of his separation are fulfilled, he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

14 And he shall offer his offering unto the LORD, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish ^{for} a sin-offering, and one ram without blemish ^{for} peace-offerings, 15 And a basket of unleavened bread, ^mcakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread ^{anointed} with oil, and their meat-offering and their ^odrink-offerings.

16 And the priest shall bring them before the LORD, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering:

17 And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

18 ^pAnd the Nazarite shall shave the head of his separation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put it in the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace-offerings.

19 And the priest shall take the ^ssodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and ^{shall} put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his separation is shaven:

20 And the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD: this is holy for the priest, with the wave-breast, and heave-shoulder: and after that, the Nazarite may drink wine.

21 This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the LORD for his separation, besides that that his hand shall get: according to the vow which he vowed, so he must do after the law of his separation.

22 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ^{'ye} shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them,

24 The LORD bless thee, and [']keep thee:

25 The LORD [']make his face shine upon thee, and [']be gracious unto thee:

26 [']The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and [']give thee peace.

27 [']And they shall put my name upon the children of Israel, and [']I will bless them.

who stood.

LORD, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle.

4 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

5 Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites:

7 Two wagons and four oxen ^{he} gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service:

8 [']And four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, [']under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: because [']the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them ^{'was} that they should bear upon their shoulders.

10 ¶ And the princes offered [']for [']dedicating of the altar in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

11 And the LORD said unto Moses, They shall offer their offering, each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 ¶ And he that offered his offering the first day was [']Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah:

13 And his offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after [']the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil for a [']meat-offering:

14 One spoon of ten shekels of gold, full of [']incense:

15 [']One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

16 One kid of the goats for a [']sin-offering:

17 And for [']a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18 ¶ On the second day Nethaneel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer:

19 He offered for his offering one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering:

20 One spoon of gold of ten shekels, full of incense:
